TO THE RIGHT HONOVRABLE

Syr Thomas Bromley Knight, Lord Chauncelour of England, one of her Maiesties most honourable priuie Counsell, his singular good Lord, health, prosperitie, and increase of Honour.

Eing desirous to testifie my duetifull minde towardes your good Lordship, I thought there could be no better meane in all respects, than the dedication of this present worke; which containeth a large exposition of the whole Lawe of God, and of the practise thereof in the Commonweale of Israel: whereof the onely reading with due consideration, may iustly commend it many wayes, euen to such as are of greatest learning, wisedome, authoritie and vertue. For if we haue an eye to the author of the groundworke thereof; it is God and not man. If to the Lawemaker; it is the Lawe of the Iudge of the whole world, the lampe of light, the welspring of wisdome, the touchstone of truth, the rule of right, the ground of goodnesse, the bond of blessednesse, the loadstarre to life, the opener of our vnderstanding, and the gouernour of our wits: the faithfull following whereof is the way to welfare, the procurer of peace, the path of true pleasure, the entrie of immortalitie, and the harbourer of happinesse. Or, if we haue an eye to the maner of the deliuering thereof; it is most woonderful, accompanied with many great myracles, signes, and tokens, and honoured with the glorie and maiestie of Gods owne presence. If to the intent of the Lawegiuer; it is the repayring and reforming of man according to the Image of his maker, in true holinesse and righteousnesse. If to the end of the Lawe, it is to driue vs vnto Christ, that by him wee might be saued. If to the obedience which it requireth; it is altogether spirituall, holie & euerlasting. All which things are not onelie great, but the greatest that can be, and fuller of maiestie and glorie than can be expressed or conceiued by man. Againe, if we haue an eye to the partie by whose seruice and ministery this law was published; hee was a man peculiarlie chosen of God, indued with most excellent giftes, ful of the holy Ghost, such a prophet as neuer had his like, (Christ onlie excepted) a figure of Christ, familiar with God, a perfect paterne of a good gouernour, and a verie father of his Commonweale. Or if we haue an eye to the parties to whom it was deliuered; they were a people whom God had purposely chosen, redeemed, and deliuered from most miserable thraldome, to the intent to be their King, and to dwell among them, and that they should be vnto him a holie people and a royall Priesthoode for euer: which things are surelie most excellent and singular prerogatiues. And as for the Preacher of these Sermons, by whom the sayde things are laide foorth, and expounded to the better vnderstanding of the Reader: it is well knowen, that for the manifold talents and excellent gifts which God had bestowed vpon him, and for his diligent and most painfull imploying of the same to the beating downe of Idolatrie and superstition, to the winning of folke vnto God, and to the edifying of Christs flocke: he was in his lifetime, and yet still is, a man of great reputation and renowme. As for mine owne trauell in translating this worke, I humbly submit the iudgement and censure thereof to your Lordships fauourable acceptation, the obtainement whereof shall greatlie increase my gladnesse in that I haue done any thing whereby the Church of GOD is or may bee any whit edified. Written the xxj. of December, 1582.

Your good Lordships most humble

To the Christian Reader, Grace and Peace from GOD, &c.

IT is no small fauour that wee daily receiue from the hands of our God, partly by the publike ministerie of his word, and partlie by the priuate reading of such good workes as by the meanes of manie his faithfull seruants he hath published and spread abroad in this last age of the world. But as the beholding of this doth make manie Godly mindes to reioyce in that they see Gods great goodnes striuing continuallie to ouercome the malice and frowardnesse of mans minde: So on the otherside it pincheth them at the heart when they perceiue not only what slender entertainment Gods graces haue amongst vs, but euen what manifest contempt is offered vnto them, while men notwithstanding the woonderful sunshine of Gods holie trueth, remaine in as great darkenesse almost, in respect of iudgement, and be as dissolute and carelesse in their conuersation as euer they were, in the time of the most grosse and palpable blindnes. Would to God that the miserable experience of our dayes were not too plaine a proofe of this point: And yet this is not spoken either as in dislike of our state with some discontented people, or to the discrediting and defacing of Gods religion which we professe, with the practising Papists (who with one blow at the Gospel, would if they could, craftilie cut the throate both of Religion and policie,) but in all holie loue and affection, to make this carelesse generation more studious to labour to abound both in sound knowledge of the trueth, and in all holie obedience to the same. In which respect, not onelie are these few lines written at this present, but this notable worke of Master Caluins Sermons vpon Deuteronomie published, & that in our owne natiue Language: wherein what paine and cost hath beene bestowed, that they might come foorth as beneficiall to the Christian Reader as might be, though I my selfe may speake much in trueth as an argument of some weight, to induce the godly brethren to the buying and reading thereof; yet letting that point passe as a matter not much to be stoode vpon, I minde onely to presse those things, and that also in very fewe words, which shalbe most material. And that is, that as all states and conditions of men may out of the same fetch many profitable points for their instruction both in faith and obedience towards God and man: so particularly if a man would ouerthrow Atheists, or confute Papists, and other Heretikes, or wound the wicked, or encourage the faintharted, or comfort the afflicted conscience cast downe with the sight of sinne, or performe any other seruice towards God, himselfe, or other men, he shall haue matter, and that in great store plentifully ministred vnto him for the performance of these and all other duetes whatsoeuer. Wherefore I would aduise thee (good Reader) to get it speedilie, to reade it diligentlie, to remember it faithfullie, and to expresse it fruitfullie in thy conuersation, to the glorie of God, the profite of his people, and the saluation of thine owne soule through Christ. In whom I rest alwaies

Thine vnfayned, T. W. the Lord his vnworthie Seruaunt.

To all the faithfull which hold the holie faith of the true Catholike Church, and generallie to all Christian Readers: Greeting in Iesus Christ our Lord and GOD. Amen.

IT is not without cause, that the psalme speaking of the great benefits which GOD had bestowed vpon the Iewes, among whom was his Church at that time, doth cheefly magnifie the grace which he had vttered towards them in deliuering vnto them the sure rule of his seruice, the true maner of good life, & the right way of saluation, aswell by the writings of Moses and other his seruants, as also by the liuely voyce of them agreeing with their writings. For without that all the abundance and prosperitie which they could haue had, had beene but as records against them to haue increased stil the measure of their condemnation. Therefore hauing spoken of Gods defending of the gates of the holy citie Ierusalem, of his blessing vpon the inhabiters thereof, of the peace and quietnesse that was in all coasts about it, and of his carefulnesse in furnishing it with all things necessarie for the maintenance of the whole people: finally he setteth downe the principal point whereon the sweetnesse and assurance of all the rest hung, saying: He hath giuen forth his word vnto Iacob, & his statutes and iudgements vnto Israell. And this benefite was at that time peculiar to the citie of Ierusalem, and to the people that came of Abraham, according as it is said expresly in the same text, that God had not delt so with any other nation, nor giuen them knowledge of his iudgements. But we know that Iesus Christ hath by his comming made the same grace to extend to al nations of the earth, and that looke whatsoeuer he had promised by his Prophets in the holy scriptures, he hath performed it by his holy Apostles, who haue preached the Gospell faithfully, as their writings do autentikely, fully, and sufficiently witnesse. This aduertisement therefore belongeth as now to all churches of our lord Iesus Christ, in what countries soeuer they be, so as they ought to acknowledge Gods mercie in that he teacheth them familiarly and in such language as they may vnderstand, by the reading and preaching of his worde. For so little ought the long interceassing of so great a benefite (inforced through the tyrannie of Antichrist) to make vs to holde scorne of it, now that God renueth the course thereof againe: that contrariwise wee should thinke it the more sweete and amiable, praysing God for restoring vs the thing through his great mercie, which Satans vnderlings had wickedly bereft vs of: acknowledging that God had beene too sore prouoked by the sinnes of the worlde, when he punished it in such sort: and seruing him with such obedience according to his worde, as we may not prouoke him hereafter, to vse the like vengeance against vs or our children after vs. And no doubt but this lesson is told vs throughout the whole Scripture, from the beginning to the end of it, and specially in the bookes of the New Testament, wherin the perfection of all learning is throughly comprised, wel written, and faithfully inrolled. Neuertheless, forasmuchas the books of Moses the seruant of god are as the fountain from whence all aftercomers, that is to wit both the Prophets and the Apostles, haue drawne water: you will not beleeue how greatly it is to the benefit and behoofe of the Church, to confer them with the other books of holy writ. And for the same cause hath God by his prouidence preserued them so woonderfully, from so many dangers through so long a race of so many hundred yeares. For there, besides other things, we see the antiquity of our faith, and that the substance of true religion hath alwaies been one, yea and that the very forme of it hath euer tended to the perfection that is fully and infallibly shewed vs in the holy writings of the New Testament. And in very deede whereas S. Peter saith generally of all the Prophets, that the faithfull do well to take heede to their wordes, that they may go foreward in Chriſtianitie: it is full certaine that therin he comprehendeth Moſes as the foremoſt of them al. And in aſmuch as he wrote of Ieſus Chriſt, as Chriſt himſelf auoucheth in expreſſe words in ỹ fifth Chapter of S. Iohn: it may well be concluded (according alſo as ſaith the Apoſtle to the Hebrues) that his ſpeaking and writing was to beare record of the things that were to be ſpoken afterward, namely by the ſon of God & his Apoſtles, as we reade them written in the new Teſtament. Now among the books of Moſes, al ſuch as can skil of thē wil eaſily grant, that as Deuteronomie is the laſt, ſo it teacheth whereto the other books tend, ſhewing the meane how to fare the better by them, yea and conteining as it were the ſumme of thē. Therfore it is very likely, that that was the cauſe which moued our welbeloued brother or rather good father Maſter Iohn Caluin, that moſt faithfull miniſter of the Goſpell of Ieſus Chriſt, to preach and expound the ſame in the Church, bicauſe that by his ſetting forth therof, he ſhould after a ſort cōprehend the other next three alſo, ſo farre forth as the vnderſtanding of them ſhould be needfull for the people. His ſermons therfore were faithfully gathered in order, like as his ſermons were which he preached vpon other bookes of ỹ ſcripture, wherof many haue beene printed here already. And in the meane time til all the reſt of his ſermons may by Gods helpe be brought to light, it hath ſeemed good that theſe ſame ſhould be put forth firſt in the meane while: the impreſſion wherof ſhould not neede any commendation or preface, but that the long continuance of cuſtome requireth it. For as many as haue heard true report of the perſon and skil of that good man Maſter Iohn Caluin, wil be ſufficiently drawne to the reading of his ſermons, by finding his name here ſet vnto them: aſſuring themſelues that they ſhal not finde any thing in them, but ſuch as agree with Gods ſpirite, that is to ſay profitable, good, and holy things. As touching the principall and notableſt points that are to be found here, there might very well be made a rehearſall of them, to giue the readers ſome taſt of the whole booke of the ſaid ſermōs, at their firſt entry. But foraſmuch as it is better that euery man ſhould hie him to the reading of them, and to heare the preacher himſelf ſpeake as it were in his owne perſon, we purpoſe not to enter into ſuch diſcourſe, which might peraduenture be ſomewhat with the longeſt. Onely we will touch one point, wherof ſome word hath beene caſt forth already heretofore: that is to wit, that this booke of Moſes beeing well read and vnderſtoode, doth ſhew ſufficiently who they be that holde the true religion, and reſolueth a queſtion wherof men ſeeme partly to doubt yet at this day, and partly to determine ouer boldly after their owne fancie, againſt the expreſſe word of God. We ſpeake not here of Turks, Iewes, Saraſins, and ſuch other, which are commonly called Miſcreants, or Infidels as they be in deede: but we ſpeake of the nations which haue long time borne the renowne of Chriſtianitie, bicauſe that through Gods gracious goodnes ſome ſigne of holy baptiſme hath continued amongſt them, and Ieſus Chriſt is profeſſed there in name. We ſee then that there is great variance nowadaies. The one ſaith, that Chriſtianitie requireth, that in ſeruing God, men ſhould, or at leaſtwiſe may haue images, & ſet them vp in churches for Chriſtian people: the other ſide vpholdeth on the contrary part, that it is a vilanous defiling of religion, and an vtter forſaking of the true Chriſtianitie, and a taking in of a baſtard religion in ſteede of it. If men can finde in their hearts to heare Moſes ſpeake in this booke (as they needes muſt, or elſe be conuicted of renouncing God the Father and his ſonne our Lord Ieſus Chriſt who is very God and euerlaſting life, and of reſiſting the holie Ghoſt:) he ſheweth the thing which he forgetteth not in his other bookes alſo, namelie that God could neuer away to be ſerued after that faſhion, but euermore expreſſelie forbade images in caſe of Religion, and threatened his owne people with horrible puniſhments, if they held not themſelues contented with that ſingle order, to reſt thereupon without attempting any further. Were there no more but the onely text of the ſecond commandement, it were ynough and ſufficient. For (as Moſes wrote in the twentith of Exodus, and hath rehearſed againe at large in the fifth of this preſent booke,) God ſaith, Thou ſhalt not make to thy ſelfe any grauen image. And to the intent that no man ſhould vſe any wrangling by ſtanding vpon the particular, he addeth, nor the likeneſſe of any thing that is in heauen aboue, or in earth beneath, or in the waters vnder the earth. Moreouer, to ſhew that he will not haue men to yeelde them any part of his ſeruice, how little ſoeuer it be: he addeth, Thou ſhalt not bowe downe to them, nor worſhip them. Laſt of all he addeth a horrible and dreadefull threate, that he will take vengeance vpon the tranſgreſſors and their children, to the thirde and fourth generation. This commaundement then is ſet downe in ſo expreſſe termes, that the matter is as manifeſt as may be. And therefore the luſty laddes that haue helde the people in error, perceyuing the great gaine which they and their bellies reaped, by this meane or occaſion of mingling Images with religion, haue ouerleapt this ſecond commaundement, and diuided the laſt commaundement into two, that the full number of tenne might be found there ſtill. But beſides this, Moſes deliuereth ſo often expoſitions of it euen in this ſelfeſame booke, and ſetteth forth ſo liuely and preciſe diſcourſes therof: that if any man will not giue place thereunto in theſe dayes, this prouerbe may well be verified of him, that none is ſo deafe as he that will not heare: and that he is ouerpreached vnto, which hath no care to doe well. For as touching the arguments which ſome haue alledged for that purpoſe in theſe latter yeres, although they haue beene oftentimes chafed and rechafed, yet are they ſo ſtarke and ſtiffe for colde, that they haue no force nor might to giue any holineſſe to Images in the Temples of the Chriſtians, as hath beene well ſhewed to the forementioned gaineſayers in due time and place, and ſhall ſtill hereafter whenſoeuer they liſt to giue eare. And as for vs, we haue on the one ſide, to continue in praying vnto God, that he vouchſafe to touch the heartes of the people and of their leaders and gouernours, effectually by his holy ſpirite, ſo as they may well vnderſtande this point, which would be a good meane to appeaſe Gods wrath, and to open a great gappe to the reformation that might inſue from better to better. And on the other ſide it ſtandeth vs on hand to ſtrengthen our ſelues in the infallible certaintie of the holy Chriſtian religion and true Apoſtolike faith, which we holde with the other holy Churches that are reformed. And as concerning this point, no doubt but it is an inuincible fortreſſe vnto vs, that we are able to ſhewe forth this thing from age to age: namely, firſt of all that the true Apoſtolike and Primatiue Church had no Images at all in their holy meetings, whether it were in Temples or elſewhere, ne willed the people to kneele downe to them, or to ſet them vp before them. That likewiſe aforetimes when the Church was gouerned by the Iewes, both after their returne from Babylon, and euen in the captiuitie it ſelfe, the good and faithfull ſort did warily keepe themſelues from it: that if yee mount vp yet higher, the true Prophetes were commended for crying out againſt Images and the manner of worſhipping of Images, and the holy Kinges were well liked of God for pulling downe, razing out, and rooting vp the occaſions of ſuch ſuperſtitions among their people: that the good Iudges and gouernours had doone likewiſe before the kings: and that euen Moſes himſelfe (who was auncienter than any others that haue left any bookes of long time) ſpake of them after the ſame manner, and dealt accordingly thereto, bicauſe he had both the adminiſtration of the doctrine and the gouernement of the common weale together, which was not ordinarie afterwarde in others. Yee ſee then, yee ſee howe the true Catholike Church is on their ſide which follow the Goſpell, whatſoeuer men liſt to ſay to the contrarie. And nowe that we be deliuered from outwarde Idolatrie, it ſtandeth vs on hande to looke necrely to our ſelues, that our life bee agreeable to the pureneſſe of Gods ſeruice, ſo as wee ſhunne Couetouſneſſe (which alſo is named Idolatrie) ambition, exceſſe and vanitie of the worlde, taking good heede (as much as is poſſible for vs to doe) that no man bee withdrawne from the Goſpell and the loue thereof through our vndiſcreete dealing: to the ende it may appeare that whereas the diſobedient doe ſeeke excuſes and take occaſion of ſtumbling, they doe it without any cauſe giuen on our behalfe. Furthermore the ſtrange blindneſſe or ratherwilfull ſtubbornneſſe which is to be ſeene nowadaies in a number of them that cal themſelues Chriſtians, ought to make vs ſo much the earneſter in praying, to the end aforeſaid, that is to wit, that our good God may vouchſafe to worke ſo effectually in the hearts of all men, as well great as ſmall, Kings, Princes, and other gouernors, as their ſubiects: as the wretched world may not alwais continue at the A.B.C of Chriſtianitie, without learning any further. We terme the ſecond commandement an A.B.C, bicauſe it is and euer hath been one of the firſt and ſureſt groundes of the true religion, and is (as ye would ſay) a neceſſary appurtenance to the firſt commandement. For whoſoeuer mingleth the worſhipping of Images with the ſeruing of God, doth as much as in him lyeth, to ſet forth other gods than the true God. And it is a maruelous thing, that the world becommeth neuer the wiſer for all the great number of puniſhments which God hath powred out, and ſtil powreth out to warne vs to come to repentance. For within theſe fiftie yeres, ſince which time God of his grace hath ſet vp the preaching of the goſpell in diuers places: beſides his ſufficient ſmiting of the people of the earth with his roddes in former yeres, he hath alſo made them feele his ſcourges diuers wayes, in puniſhing their contempt of his holy doctrine. Yet notwithſtanding we hope that God (conditionally that we continue in prayer) wil one day ſhew by more aboundant effect, that he hath heard the prayers of his ſillie faithfull ones, euen in this behalfe, and draw the reſt of his churches out of the miſerable deſolation, which hath laſted now too long by reaſon of our ſinnes. And hereof we haue good hanſel in the furtherance that he hath giuen already to the goſpell, notwithſtanding that Satan hath ſpit out his ſpite againſt it on all ſides. For albeeit that the holy doctrine doe ſounde in the eares of the poore people in diuers places, the ſacraments of Baptiſme and of the Lords ſupper be miniſtred purely, the praiſes of God do ring ſhirlely to mens vnderſtanding in the pſalms and ſongs, and the father is woorſhipped in the name of Ieſus Chriſt our hope and the onely aduocate of wretched ſinners: yet are there a number which hope, or at leaſtwiſe wiſh, that as the ſunne hath been eclipſed this yere, ſo there might be an euerlaſting eclips of the preaching of the goſpell: but by the helpe of God and of our great dayſunne Ieſus Chriſt, they ſhalbe deceaued. And in the meane time while Gods kingdome may inlarge it ſelfe ſtil further out here below, we pray al ſuch as are deſirous to haue the vnderſtanding and vſe of the doctrine of this godlie booke of Moſes, to take the paine to reade theſe preſent Sermons of the faithfull ſeruaunt of God Maſter Iohn Caluin: of whom like as the ſpeeche and pen ſerued the Church as long as he liued, (whatſoeuer ſome Balaams bable to the contrarie:) ſo we beleeue ỳ his writings wil by Gods help edifie al men continuallie hereafter. Moreouer it were a needles thing to warne men, and to pray them to take heede that they make not the Printer to loſe the fruite of his labour, and his coſt which he was faine to be at in the printing of this preſent worke, were it not for the greedie and vnſatiable couetouſneſſe that reigneth nowadaies in men of that trade, by reaſon whereof diuerſe times they ouerrun one another without any honeſtie or conſcience. Surelie we had forborne to giue this warning, and had leuer to haue let the Printers alone to deale with their owne peculiar caſes, as they liſted among themſelues, if it were not for one reaſon which inforceth vs to fall purpoſelie into that matter: which is, that in ſome places they not onelie print againe in ſuch haſt the bookes of that excellent teacher Maſter Iohn Caluin that were erſt printed here, as it is pitifull to ſee the workemanſhip of the imprinting ſo ill corrected: but alſo moreouer, ſome haue gone ſo farre, as to print in Maſter Caluins name the vnperfect copies which they haue gotten by peecemeale or ſtealth where they could come by them. We knowe not what they meane by it: but ſurelie they doe wrong both to the author, and to the Church of God. Yea and they open a gappe which may be dangerous in time to come, whenſoeuer any man will foyſt in bookes ſtained with wicked doctrine, to make them paſſe foorth vnder the name of a faithful ſeruant of God, as euery man knoweth hath bin done to diuerſe ancient doctors of the Church: Inſomuch that euen S. Paul warneth the Theſſalonians to beware of letters & Epiſtles that were made to run abrode in the Churches [vnder his name], as though he had been the very author of them. Truely, ſo long as it ſhall pleaſe our good God to preſerue vs & the Church wherein he of his grace hath made vs ſhepeherds: it is our duetie to find fault with ſuch as wil needs father any other bookes vpon Caluin than his owne, or by their falſe additions corrupt thoſe which he hath made truelie. But yet is it much better to preuent ŷ danger aforehand, & to eſchew the occaſions thereof as neere as may be. Wherefore, in Gods name we beſeech all ſuch as haue any written copies, ſpecially of the ſaid authors ſermons, not yet printed: to forbeare the putting of them forth, vntil they haue firſt bin duely conferred with the originals, which are here in ŷ keeping of one of the Deacons. And as touching them that are minded to print againe any worke of ŷ ſaid author that is printed alreadie, we pray them to haue regard to the common profit & edifying of the Church, rather than to the furtherance of their owne peculiar gaine. And herewithal we commend you all to the grace of God. The Lorde Ieſus be with you, who is of ŷ ſeed of Dauid according to the fleſh, the verie ſon of the holy virgin Marie, the very Chriſt, & God bleſſed for euermore as S. Paul hath expreſſie written, and ſo haue we alwayes beleeued & do beleeue all of vs. Amen. Deare brethren, we commend our ſelues to your prayers. From Geneua this moneth of Ianuarie, 1567.

Your humble brethren, the Miniſters of Gods word.

The Deacons and diſpoſers of the goods that are giuen in almes to the poore ſtrangers that are come hither into the citie of Geneua for Gods words ſake: to all faithfull and true Chriſtians, helth and peace from our Lord Ieſus.

FOraſmuch as our good & faithfull ſhepherds the miniſters of this church, peradnenture fearing to be ouerlong or tedious to their readers, do in the end of their preface made to theſe ſermons, but (as it were glauncinglie) touch one point, which notwithſtanding is of great importance for the poore ſtraungers that are come into this towne: to our ſeeming it would be thought neither amiſſe nor ſtrange, if we for our dueties ſake, declared the thing ſomewhat more at large, which they ſpake in one word, concerning the printing of the ſermons of our late good father M. Iohn Caluin. Nowe then, for the better vnderſtanding of the whole, you muſt conſider that from the yere of our Lord 1549 forth on, the late M. Dennis Raguenean being fled hither, gaue himſelfe to the gathering of the Sermons word for word, which M. Iohn Caluin did ordinarilie make: and that with ſuch ſwiftnes and cunning, through the vſe of certain notes & ſhapes, as few words eſcaped him euen from the beginning. Which thing when they ſaw which had the charge of the poore ſtrangers at that time, although they had not any great ſum of money wherwith to relieue the preſent needs: yet failed they not to take ſuch order, that ŷ ſaid writer was intertained after a ſpare wich ſome part of the ſame money, to the intent he might haue wherewith to maintaine himſelfe and his ſmall familie, while he gaue himſelfe wholly to the gathering of theſe ſermons, & to the ingroſſing of them faire againe afterward, becauſe he ſhoulde ſpare no time to any other buſineſſe than that. He vndertooke the charge, with condition that he ſhould copie out all the Sermons faire, into bookes of a certain ſcantling or ſyſe whereby they ſhould be made, which he ſhould deliuer to one of the Deacons to be faithfully kept, as a peculiar benefite belonging to the poore ſtraungers, at whoſe charges the ſaide writer was intertained. And forasmuch as afterward the nombes of the faithfull increaſed dailie in the realme of France, and many that could not heare the liuely voice of this good ſeruant of God in the pulpit, were deſirous at leaſtwiſe to ſee the things in writing, which he preached openly, and praied to be made partakers of them: in that onelie reſpect and none other, the writer had leaue giuen him to deliuer copies of whatſoeuer ſermons were demaunded of him, to the end that ſuch as receiued them at his hand, might profite themſelues by the doctrine of them, howbeit vppon condition that the ſame ſhould not afterward in any wiſe preiudice or hinder the poore, for whom the originall copies were carefully preſerued (as hath beene ſaid), that they might be printed to the common benefite of them all, whenſoeuer it ſhould pleaſe God to giue them abilitie, as was done afterward. By reaſon hereof ſome which had gotten out copies that came to whole books, taking oportunity of the liberty which our Lord of his infinite goodneſſe and mercie gaue to the realme of Fraunce, ſticked not to cauſe ſome of them to be printed, not onely to the great hinderance of the poore, who by ỳ meanes were bereft of the thing that belonged vnto them: but alſo to the diſaduantage of all the faithfull, inaſmuch as thoſe copies were neuer ouerlooked & conferred with the originals, which are kept diligently here: which is ſuch a deede as we know not how to name in one word, and therefore do willingly leaue the iudgement therof to ſuch as ſee whereto it tendeth, and what ſequele may inſue of it. For if euerie man may haue libertie to print at his pleaſure, al the ſermons which he can pretend to haue bin ſo gathered, whereas notwithſtanding they haue not bin conferred with the originall copies which we haue here: who ſhall let them to falſifie the moſt part of the true ſermons by adding or diminiſhing, and by mangling or nipping of them after their owne fancie? It is well knowen that the abuſing of the names of Gods good and faithfull ſeruants, is no new thing. If ſuch libertie be giuen, & men deale as they haue begun, in this caſe: what wil come of it, but that ỳ doctrine of ſaluation ſhall ſtand as it were at the courteſie of ſuch as will make their owne deuices flie through the whole world, vnder pretence of ſetting the name of this good man to the titles of them? For ſufficient proofe whereof, and to the end it ſhould not be thought that we do wrongfully & without cauſe giue inkling of the things aforeſaid: we will briefly touch what hath bin doone herein a fewe yeares ſince; namely that there haue bin certaine men, who without any forecaſt, haue bin ſo bolde as to cauſe certain ſermons vpon the Prophet Danyel to be printed, without vouchſafing to ſee the originall copie, or to be aduertiſed thereof from hence. And to couer their whole doings the better, they alledge that their ſo doing was for the glorie of God. Yea marie: but that ſhould haue beene done without the hinderance of other men. And it is a wonder to ſee how ſuch folke dare boaſt themſelues to be of the reformed religion. For to thinke that Papiſts are the doers thereof, there is no likelihood at all, conſidering the hatred that they beare to that good man. Therefore it is not to be doubted, but that they be of that ſort which crowd themſelues into the number of the faithfull, and of the reformed Churches, and will needs ſeeme to be great Chriſtians. But let all men iudge whether it be a dealing meete for them that feare God, ſo to filch away ỳ things that belong to the poore members of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt. And this thing bringeth vs to the remembrance of another deede, whereof we be conſtrained to make our moane likewiſe to the whole world, to the end that ſuch as wittingly withhold the goods of our poore folke, may aduiſe themſelues better than they haue done hitherto, and make amends as they ought to do. The matter concerneth them that print or daylie cauſe to be printed, or which haue heretofore printed the Pſalmes made into meeter by M. Beza. There is none of them all but he knoweth right wel, that he cannot with good conſcience, ne ought alſo to print them, without paying to our poore folke the thing that was promiſed and agreed vpon before they were euer once put in print, as all of them can well ynough tell. Yet notwithſtanding the moſt part, and in maner all that haue had to do with that matter, would neuer yet pay aught of that which they ought to haue doone, for any thing that could be tolde them of it. But let them vaunt themſelues to be good and faithfull Chriſtians as much as they liſt: they ſhall not eaſilie make men beleeue that they haue ſo much conſcience as the Papiſts had in that behalfe? For how ignorant ſo euer the Papiſtes were, yet would they neither take away nor withholde the things which they knew to belong to the poore. And therefore it is a great ſhame, that they which profeſſe the Goſpell, which reſort to the Chriſtian congregations, which receiue the holie ſupper of our Lord Ieſus, and (to be ſhort) which will needs be muſtered in the aray of the faithfull, do no better bethinke themſelues of the diſcharging of their dueties. Surely we marueil how they dare preaſe to the open Sermons, where they be ſo often con-

ten condemned,at leaſtwiſe in generalitie. But it is ſeene by experience, that they be no whit mooued with them, but doe fall aſleepe, inſomuch that they thinke not that the great number of threatnings which are vttered againſt all ſuch as behaue not themſelues truſtilie towards their neighbours,and againſt ſuch as withhold other mens goods,ſpecially the goods that are appointed to the poore,do concerne themſelues. Yet notwithſtanding,howſoeuer any of them both doe take the matter, they ſhall one day be faine to feele to their coſt, that whatſoeuer is doone to the poore members of the ſonne of God,he taketh it to be done to his owne ſelfe,ſo great ſtore doth he ſet by them. Wherefore it were nowe high time that all ſuch folke ſhoulde looke more neerely to themſelues and to their duetie, and not ſuffer themſelues to be ſo caried away by their vnruly fancies and affections,which hinder them to make any conſcience in withholding the poore folkes goods, and in turning them to their owne priuate vſe.As touching ſome other ſort of Printers, which ſticke not to print againe immediatlie the copies that others haue printed at their great charges afore, and by that meanes doe bring to paſſe, that many good men dare not aduenture to print (among other things), a great number of the ſame authors ſermons which are here,and belong to our poore folks: the warning that is giuen thereof in the preface of the ſaid miniſters, (notwithſtanding that it be verie ſhort) ought well to reſtraine them,and to make it ſeeme to the world, that there is at leaſtwiſe as much modeſtie & honeſtie in them,as there appeareth to be in the wretched Papiſts that deale with the Art of printing.For they would be aſhamed to haue it caſt in their teeth,that they had incroched one vpon another. Thus much haue we thought good to adde in this behalfe,aſſuring our ſelues that none of the faithfull and of ſuch as feare God will thinke amiſſe of this warning,which we haue bin driuen to make in diſcharge of our duetie,which ought alone to be a ſufficient excuſe for vs if any man ſhould think that the things which we haue vttered are not material.But we hope that al men of good diſcretion & ſound vnderſtanding,will iudge that we neither could nor ſhould haue let ſlip ſo good an occaſion as this, to warne ſuch as print or cauſe things to be printed,to do their dueties towards the poore. At Geneua the 12.of Februarie, 1567.

The ſame Deacons.

IT falleth out well to the purpoſe,that when the former warning was ended,there remained a voide roome to put in this addition, which ſhall ſerue for a confirmation of the things that were ſpoken concerning the former maner of dealing, vſed in the printing of the ſermons vpon Danyel. For immediatly vpon the getting of a copie printed at Rochell by Bartilmew Berton,in the yeare of our Lord 1565, he that nameth himſelfe the firſt author of the putting of them abroade, gaue forth that they had bin kept as it were in priſon by the ſpace of twelue years or thereabouts, & that the Author of them had ſuppreſſed them and held them faſt locked vp, with ſuch other like ſayings deuiſed of his owne braine. But therein he ſheweth ſufficientlie by what meanes he came by thoſe copies, which were neuer kept backe from any that were deſirous to haue them,ſo it were but to reade them ,albeit that they were kept from ſuch as would copie them out to defraud our poore folke of the benefite that was lawfully gotten for them. And whereas he reporteth that the copie which he cauſed to be imprinted, fell into the hands of a friend of his: he ſhoulde at leaſtwiſe haue inquired how that came to paſſe, and by what title his friend made it his owne, ſo as he durſt cauſe it to be printed.But it is apparant how great his fault was againſt our poore folk: and what pretence ſo euer he make,no man can doubt what zeale or affection draue him to do that thing. By the way, God grant that the Readers be not diſappointed of the profit which they ſhould reape of thoſe ſermons,& that they be put forth according as they were gathered,wherof we neither can nor wil iudge,vntill we haue read them throughly,& conferred them with the originall copies which we haue heere,which thing we will by Gods helpe doe ere it be long, that we may faithfully warne the readers thereof,againſt the next imprinting of them againe.

THE SERMONS of Master Iohn Caluin

vpon the fifth booke of Moses called Deuteronomie.

On Wednesday the xx. of March. 1555.

The first Sermon vpon the first Chapter.

HEre followe the wordes which Moses spake to all Israell beyond Iordan, in the wildernesse, in the plaine against the red sea, betweene Pharan and Tophell, and Laban, and Hazerot, and Dizahab.

2 There are eleuen iourneyes from Horeb by the way of Mount Seir, to Cades barne.

3 And it came to passe, that in the fortith yeere, the first day of the eleuenth moneth, Moses spake to the children of Israell, according to all that euer the Lorde had commanded him to say vnto them.

WHen God caused his lawe to be publisht in mount Horeb, after his obeying of the people out of the thral dome of Egypt, there by he shewed to what ende and purpose he had had pitie of his people in deliuering them: that is to wit, to be glorifyed thereby, as the marke whereunto we also must referre all the gracious giftes which he bestoweth vpon vs. Zacharie the father of S. Iohn Baptist, speaking of the great and soueraigne deliuerance that was made in the person of our Lord Iesus Christ, saith, that Gods discharging of vs from the hand and tyranny of our enemies, was to the end that we should serue him in holinesse and righteousnesse all our life long. And this is a doctrine very common throughout the whole holy scripture. And for the same cause also is it sayd by the prophet Esay, that God hath created a people to set foorth his prayse. Seeing then that the Lawe was giuen to the people, to make them perceiue why they had bin deliuered from the bondage of Egypt: it was good reason that they should yeelde themselues to the obeying of God, which had shewed himselfe their redeemer in such wise. Neuertheless the people were vntoward, and could not finde in their hartes to yeelde themselues pliable, in hearkening to the things that were tolde them in the name of their God. Yet ought they of right to haue done it, seeing they had receiued so great & so inestimable a benefit. For God had vttered the mightie strength of his arme in deliuering the people. Therefore ought they to haue considered thus: Behold, our God hath magnified himselfe towardes vs after a wonderfull fashion, we haue had as it were a visible presence of his maiestie, if the heauens had opened and God had shewed himselfe to our eyes, we should not haue had a greater and more vndoubted assurance of his neerenesse vnto vs, to warrant vs that he was our leader. Seeing then that God is so come downe vnto vs, and that it hath pleased him to impart his goodnesse in such wise vnto vs: is it not reason that we should be wholy his? And seeing he hath reached out his hand to redeem vs, ought we not to be his heritage, inasmuch as he hath gotten vs by his owne mightie power? Had the people had one drop of wisedome, they should haue yeelded themselues with all humilitie, to receiue the doctrine that was preached to them by Moses. Yea and what authoritie deserued the Law, which was so confirmed with such store of miracles? For when God had chosen Moses to be his prophet: he not onely commanded him so speake, but also tooke him vp into the mountaine, and seperated him from the companie of men, to the ende that when he should come to set forth his Law, the people should accept him as an Angell, and not as a mortal creature. He was there fortie daies without eating or drinking, to shewe that he was exempted from the common sort of men, and that God had taken him vp as it were into his heauenly glorie. And when he came downe againe, his face shone as bright as it had beene another sunne. Where as men attribute hornes vnto him, it is saide that he had sunne beames rounde about him, that is to say, he had such a brightnesse as he was faine to weare a veyle before his face. And whereto serued that, but to ratifie and confirme the lawe which God had giuen and committed vnto him, and to make it knowen that it was not a doctrine deuised by a mortall man? Besides this, there was thundering and lightning and trumpets sounding [in the aire,] so as it seemed that all the worlde shoulde haue gone to wracke: and there was not any place either high or lowe, which did not shake & tremble when God went about to vtter his voice.

Seeing then that the lawe was so well sealed and with such maiestie: must it not needs be that the people were worse than blockes, when they hearkened not to their God speaking with such force? Yet for all that, the lawe was despised, & euen while God was preparing of his seruaunt Moses to set it forth, behold, the people coulde not abide to tarie the bringing of Gods wil vnto them, but made them a Calfe of golde, and fell flatly to setting vp of new superstitions, euen in spite of God, of whose power and fauour they had so often had experience. Againe, when the lawe was once giuen, the people trembled & quaked for a while, insomuch that they were inforced to say, if God speake any more vnto vs we be vtterly vndone: there is no way w^t vs but death: and therwithal they stood aloofe from y^e mountaine, according also as they were commanded. It shoulde seeme then that there was some reuerence. But the issue shewed that all was but hypocrisie, and it appeared well that they were not rightly touched in their hearts, nor had taken liuely roote to profit in the doctrine. We see then in effect, that when God did first of al publish his lawe, it had verie skant & slender hearing; & the people were not yet disposed to submit theselues to it as they should haue done. By reason wherof God was faine to returne to it againe, notwithstanding that the people deserued not that God shoulde cause Moses to serue still in that office. For was it not reason that they which had so despised the liuing God, should thenceforth haue ben left destitute of all truth? that y^e diuel might haue taken possession of them? that hee might haue made them starke blinde? that they might haue starued for want of liuely foode? and that they should haue ben poysoned with all the deceites and errors of Satan? Of a truth, y^e people were well worthy of such reward. But God had not an eye to the deserts of that wretched people. For he surmounted their sinnes with his infinite goodnes, & proceeded in teaching of the still, euen when they had shewed theselues most stubborne & rebellious, and had matched their vnthankfulnes with such wilfulnes, as there seemed to bee no way to come neere them to doe them good: & yet did God eu̅ then vse his mercie, and vouchsafed to assay whether the people would suffer themselues to be brought backe againe or no. And that is the cause why Moses did not onely set forth the Law in Horeb, but also vsed vehement exhortations therwithall, because he saw the lightnes and vnconstancy of the people, indeuoring and straining himselfe by all meanes to bring them backe againe vnto God.

Yet notwithstanding, God vouchsafed still, that in the end there should be an abridgement of the law, & that the same should be confirmed as it is conteined in this booke. And that is the cause why it is intituled Deuteronomie, which is as much to say as the Law repeated. Not that God bringeth in any newe thing here: but for that he blameth the people for their foresaid lewdnes, shewing that his doctrine had ben ill obserued, like as when children do not profit wel at schole, but play the grosse Asses, when they haue spent a whole yeare and are neuer the further forewarde, they must bee faine to returne againe to their Apcie. And why? For notwithstanding that they haue heard their schoolemaister, yet they be as ignorant as they were before, insomuch that instede of learning any thing, a man shall see them continue still alwayes at one staye. So then, our Lorde vpbraideth the people of Israel with their brutish dulnesse, in repeating his lawe vnto them the second time. As if hee should say, Ye be verie ill scholers: for I haue trained you sufficiently in my Lawe. The doctrine comprehended in the ten commandements conteineth the full perfection of all wisedome. Yet hath not all this beene ynough for you, because yee haue no eares at all, or else they be too long, so that of all this while nothing is entered into your harts, or rather yee haue not hearde what I saide vnto you. And therefore you must bee faine to turne back againe to your first lesson, and to your Apcie: I must be faine to open my Lawe againe vnto you, and to chawe your meate vnto you, that you may digest it the better. And because yee be so dull vpon the spurre, I must be faine to prick you forward, and to vse greater force to waken you, that the hardnes of heart which I see in you may be amended.

Thus we see in effect, what the groundworke of this Booke is: that is to wit, that God hauing erst alreadie giuen his law to the people of Israel, and warranted it as much as was requisite: vouchsafed because of their hardhartednesse & sturbornesse, to giue a larger declaration therof, than Moses had put in writing as yet. And hee hath not only opened the meaning of the Law, but also exhorted the people to keepe it better than they had done before, vpbraiding them with their lewdnesse in that they had beene so vnrulie and so ill disposed, to receiue the instruction of their maker and redeemer at the first time. Nowe, all the thinges that wee see in this people, belong vnto vs. And would GOD wee resembled not the Iewes in any thing, I meane as in these pointes. But if euer there were too much hardenesse of hearte in them, howe much more is it to bee founde in vs nowadayes? For our Lorde hath spoken more than once vnto vs. If the law were well warranted in the hand of Moses: hath the gospel bin lesse confirmed vnto vs in these daies? If the earth were shaken then, if the trumpets sounded, if the lightenings flewe abroade, if thunderclappes were heard: the Gospel also shaketh both heauen and earth as now, as it is saide by the Prophet Aggeus, and alleaged by the Apostle in the Epistle to the Hebrues. Also we heare what S. Paul speaketh of it in the third Chapter of the second Epistle to the Corinthians. The message of life and saluation (saith he) which is conteined in the Gospel, must needes bee glorified as much or more than the doctrine of the Lawe, which was dead of it selfe and coulde not giue men life.

Agge 2.7. Heb. 12.26. 2. Cor. 3.7.

Seeing then that God hath vttered so great maiestie in the Gospel, and his preaching of it vnto vs hath not bin for once and away, but wee haue our eares beaten with it euery day: let vs see if we be good scholers, and whether we beare in minde the things that haue beene tolde vs, so as God is honoured at our hands. Are we linked vnto him? Alas, it is nothing so. For continue God neuer so much in setting forth his doctrine vnto vs, wherin we do as it were see his heart laid open vnto vs: yet are we locked vp on our part, and we giue him no entrance, but rather wee be gadding and ful of vanitie, and we be so farre off from being touched with the doctrine, and from receiuing it to holde our selues wholly to it, & to set our minds vpon it, and to be setled in right obedience to it: that rather the cleane contrarie is to be seene. And so we see that the Iewes are as a loking glasse wherein we may behold our owne rudenesse, frowardnesse, vnthankfulnesse, & wilful stubbornnesse against God.

Yea and we be more blame worthie than the Iewes for giuing so slender eare to our God. For as I haue tolde you already, the people of olde time ought to haue thought themselues bounde vnto God, and to haue yeelded and giuen ouer themselues wholy to his seruice, bicause he had deliuered them from ỹ thraldome of Egypt. And what is it that God hath rid vs from now at this time? Is it but from the tyranny of a mortal man, or of some earthly people? No, but we know that he hath ransomed vs from the cheins of sin and of the diuel, he hath pulled vs out of the gulfe of death, he hath drawne vs out of the dungeon of hel, and he hath not onely promised vs the land of Chanaan for an inheritance, but also opened the heauens vnto vs in the person of our Lord Iesus Christ, who hath taken possession thereof for vs, to the end we might be sure that our abiding place & euerlasting rest is made ready for vs there. Seeing then that God hath bound vs in such wise vnto him, is not our vnthankefulnes double, yea or rather an hundredfolde more shamefull, than the vnthankfulnesse of the people of olde time?

Furthermore, whereas God hath vouchsafed to hold on in the office of instructing, to teache ỹ people which was so rude & rebellious: let vs assure our selues that he doeth the like towards vs nowadaies. Yea & it is requisite for vs ỹ he should so doe (as I haue saide already): or else what would become of it? But sith we see that God is so gracious as not to bee weary of teaching vs, though it boote vs not at the first day, nor at the first yeare: let vs assure our selues ỹ his dealing w̄ vs after that sorte from day to day, is no more than needeth. And it is a point well worth the marking. For men haue itching eares, and be desirous to heare alwaies new things: & if the doctrine of God be preached and set forth to them euery day, it becōmeth irksome to them & they wax weary of it. For to their seeming it is inough to speake of it once or twise, and they consider not how they forget the things which they ought to haue borne away. So then, to the end we wax not weary of the doctrine that is preached vnto vs: let vs marke that it is needful for vs that God should put vs still in minde of the things that he hath taught vs already: for our wits are short towardes him. And therefore let vs bethinke our selues well, & whensoeuer it is told vs that there is but one God in whom we be, & that he is not only our maker, but also our father, & hath adopted vs to be his children, and moreouer tied vs to him by a much streiter band, in that he hath redeemed vs with the bloud of his owne sonne: whensoeuer we be put in minde of these things: although we haue heard of them before, yet let vs not say, tush, these thinges haue beene preached to vs long ago: but let euery of vs enter into himselfe, & examine himselfe, & see whether ỹ things ỹ we haue heard heretofore, be wel printed in our harts. Let vs then enter into accompt after ỹ sort. And why? For if we remembred wel, ỹ we be set in this world to the end to glorifie our god: would we not be more mindful to discharge our dutie towards him? If we considered the fatherly kindenesse that hee vseth in calling vs his children, and which he hath shewed towards vs once alredy in adopting of vs in the person of his own sonne: & if we mark how dearly we cost our Lord Iesus Christ whē he did set vs free frō endlesse death: should we not be desirous to giue our selues wholy to our God? Should we not be moued to yeelde him another maner of reuerence than we do? Now therfore, whensoeuer we be vnruly, so as ỹ world carieth vs away, & we be intāgled in earthly lusts & affections: let vs assure our selues it is because we haue not giuen good eare to our God, when he spake to vs, nor taken heede to it when he warned vs of our duties. And therfore it is good for vs to be put in minde of it, and to haue God come backe againe to vs & to say vnto vs, yee wretched folke, what meane yee? When I haue once taught you the doctrine that is conteined in my word ought to soke throughly into you, and yet notwithstanding you be still like little babes. This is it (say I) which we haue to doe, to the end we may finde fauour in Gods worde, and be nourished therewith as with our ordinarie foode. We must assure our selues, that the appointing of this order that we should be preached vnto all the time of our life, and that wee shoulde haue our eares beaten continually with the things, which we ought to vnderstande in one or two monethes, is not in vaine.

Furthermore, if we doe not ſo, if we ſubdue not our ſelues to the hearing of our God, & ſuffer our ſelues to be taught by him all the time of our life: let vs be afraide leaſt he execute the vengeance vppon vs, which he threatned once to the people of Iſraell by his Prophet Eſay, ſaying that his lawe ſhould be to them as a booke ſhut vp and ſealed, ſo as if it were offered to men of ſkill, they ſhould ſay, the letters are not to be ſeene, there is a ſeale vpon then, I cannot tell what is within it: And if it were offered to ignorant and vnlearned men: they ſhoulde anſwere, we be not booke learned, we neuer went to ſchoole, we cannot reade. Loe how God puniſheth all ſuch as walke on in their bruitiſhneſſe, and wil neuer ſubmit themſelues vnto him. True it is, that God beareth with vs for a time, and that (as I ſaid afore) although we be worthy to be cut off from his houſe, & to be bereft of his truth, ſo as he ſhould giue vs vp into Sathans handes, to bee blinded with lies and to bee poyſoned by him: yet notwithſtanding, our God hauing pitie vppon vs, aſſayeth ſtill to winne vs to himſelfe. But if we continue ſtill in refuſing the good doctrine, and become neuer the better for it at the yeares ende, than we were at the firſt day: at length this threat muſt needes light vpon vs, namely that we ſhall take the holy ſcripture into our hands, and haue it preached vnto vs, and yet wee ſhall vnderſtande neuer a whitte of it, though we be neuer ſo witty: and that when as the vnlearned ſhall ſay, I wote not what it meaneth, it ſhall alſo bee as a letter folded vp and faſt ſealed, euen to them that are ſkilfulleſt and ſharpeſt witted. Wherefore let vs ſtande in feare of ſuch threatnings: and leaſt our light bee turned into darkeneſſe, let vs take holde of the opportunitie which God offereth vs nowadaies, that wee may fare the better by his continuall ſpeaking to vs after that ſort.

Iſa. 29. 11.

True it is that the thinges which are conteined here were ſpoken to the people of Iſrael, and might haue profited them in their time: but yet doe they alſo belong vnto vs at this day, and they be as a common treaſure whereof God will haue vs to bee partakers. For as wee ſhall ſee hereafter, the Lawe was not onely giuen as a rule whereby to liue well: but alſo grounded vpon the couenaunt which God had made with Abraham and his ofspring. And by vertue of that couenant, wee are become heires of the heauenly kingdome, as ſheweth Saint Paul. To ſeeke our ſaluation, wee muſt reſort to the promiſe that was made to our father Abraham: and to bee of the houſeholde of Gods Church and members of our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt, we muſt be of Abrahams ſpirituall linage. Hereby then wee ſee, that this doctrine not onely ſerued till the comming of the ſonne of God: but alſo ſerueth ſtill to our behoofe, and ſhall doe ſo ſtill to the worlds ende. For it is a building that is founded vpon the euerlaſting couenant, from whence as from the true fountaine thereof, our ſaluation ſpringeth as I ſaid afore.

Gal. 3. 29.

Wherefore let vs marke, that whenſoeuer God ſhall hencefoorth ſpeake to the Iewes, the ſame is ſpoken alſo vnto vs: and wee muſt receiue it in ſuch wiſe, as wee muſt vnderſtande that God hath ſhed forth his grace through the whole worlde by the comming of his onely ſonne, and builded vp the heauenly Ieruſalem, to the ende that we ſhoulde all be linked together in one holy brotherhood, to cal vpō him as our father all with one mouth. Sith it is ſo then, let vs vnderſtand that it is good reaſon that wee ſhoulde giue ouer our ſelues vnto him, and that he ſhould hold vs in awe, and enioy vs, & that like as he hath vouchſafed to giue himſelfe vnto vs, ſo we on our ſide ſhoulde bee wholly his, to yeelde him the duetie which children owe to their father: and that when we be negligent and ſlowe therein, we ſhould at leaſt wiſe be moued with the exhortations that are conteined in this booke: and that ſeeing God calleth vpon vs ſo earneſtly, we ſhold not ſtop our eares againſt him but euerie man awake, and one of vs rebuke another. Yea and that if we were wiſe, we ſhould not tarie till God quickened vs vp ſo ſharpely, but rather preuent him, howbeit that we ought to be moued to bee aſhamed of our lewdneſſe and to returne againe vnto God, at leaſtwiſe when hee falleth to correcting of vs by thundering out his threatnings againſt vs, and by vpbrayding of vs with our ſinnes. Thus yee ſee what wee haue to marke in generall vpon this booke.

Nowe let vs come to the text that I haue rehearſed afore. Theſe are the wordes which Moſes ſpake vnto the people in the wilderneſſe, in the plaine (or champion grounds) beyond Iordan, euen from Horeb vnto the places here before rehearſed. Herein we haue to note, that God intended to rebuke the people for their not keeping of the lawe, which had not onely bin preached to them by mouth, but alſo ſet downe in writing: as if a man ſhould make an inſtrument or conueyance of ſome bargaine betweene two parties. And God himſelfe vouchſafed to ingraue his Lawe (at leaſtwiſe the ten commaundements) in two tables, to the intent they might be remembred the better. For albeit that the doctrin was cleere ynough of itſelf, & god had prouided to preſerue it from forgetting: yet did not the people receiue it. Therefore as nowe he caſteth them in the teeth, as if it ſhould be ſaide vnto vs, Behold, the Goſpell of our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt hauing bin preached with ſuch power and maieſtie, is alſo left in writing. Wee haue had the Goſpel preached vnto vs nowe a long time, euen the ſame Goſpel which is ſet downe vnto vs in Bookes. Therefore are we too vnexcuſable, if we cannot tell what God ſaith to vs there. If a man ſhoulde ſpeake after that maner, it were a blaming of vs for our beaſtlineſſe. Againe, if it ſhoulde be ſaide that where as wee were baptiſed in the name of the ſonne of God, when we were babes, yet wee knowe him not: that being come to mans eſtate, we bee ſo brutiſh that after ſo often hearing of Gods truth, yet we be ſtill but nouices in it: and that we can ſcarſly tell what it is, or at leaſtwiſe haue neuer taken any taſt of it at al: ſuch maner of opening of the goſpel vnto vs, how it hath bin offered vs of long time & after diuers faſhions, were as a framing of an inditement againſt vs. So now likewiſe Moſes, to witneſſe openly to the people that they had ſhewed themſelues too vnthankefull towardes God, ſaieth expreſſely: Theſe are the wordes that I vttered and preached vnto you from time to time, not for a day or two, but euer ſince the publiſhing of the Lawe in the mountaine of Horeb. And becauſe you ſhewed your ſelues ſo ill diſpoſed, I haue not ceaſſed to put you ſtill in remembraunce of the things that you had heard before. Now let vs learne hereby, to bee the better quickened vp, and ſith wee ſee it hath bin Gods will, that euen from the beginning of the worlde, his trueth ſhould haue ſome certaine record among men, and that he hath not ceaſſed to ſet it forth ſtill, and to raiſe it vp againe when men haue gone about to burie it by their ſpitefulneſſe: let vs acknowledge his wonderfull goodnes in ſo doing, and be moued to receiue the things that ſhall be ſpoken vnto vs. Marke that for one poynt.

But to the end wee may bee the better diſpoſed: we muſt alſo weigh this ſaying which Moſes addeth, Euen according to all that God had commaunded him. Nowe by this preface he ſheweth, that he brought not any thing of his owne, ne meant to ſubdue the people to his owne dotages, nor to any thing that he could haue deuiſed of his owne reaſon and wiſedome as in reſpect of men, but that he did ſimply obey God, as a faithfull & truſtie meſſenger, without ſwarueing aſide either to the right hand or to the left. Deut. 34. 10. Nowe if Moſes who had ſo excellent a record as wee ſee, inſomuch that God neuer raiſed vp any Prophet equall or like vnto him: If Moſes ỹ prince of all Prophets next vnto Ieſus Chriſt, and the chiefe of all vnder the olde Lawe, doe neuertheleſſe proteſt that he putteth not forth any thing of his owne head: I pray you what ſhall others do? May they compare themſelues with him? No: but put the caſe that they be as highly aduanced and placed as he: yet notwithſtanding, the furtheſt that they ought to goe, is but to ſet forth the things that God hath commaunded them. And therefore let vs learne, that here all mens traditions are ſhut out of doores. And hereby it appeareth, that the Pope hath marred and corrupted the whole order of the Church, by his taking vpō him to be a Lawmaker, to deuiſe lawes & to lay them vpon mens necks at his owne pleaſure, to forge & contriue newe articles of faith, and to inforce men to receiue his inuentions as the holy ſcriptures. Was not this a turning of all things vpſide downe? Yes: for God neuer ment that men ſhould haue ſuch libertie and ſway in the Church, as to ſet forth any of their owne inuentions there, but he himſelfe onely will be heard there. Marke that for one point.

But there is yet more in it: for it is not onely ſaide that Moſes ſpake according to the charge that was giuen him: but according to all that euer the Lord had commaunded him. He ſheweth then, ỹ he did not as it were make a medlie, or ſeeke by any meanes to bring in what he himſelfe thought good, or to ſeparate himſelf from Gods worde: but that he followed Gods will from point to point to the vttermoſt. Ye ſee then that there was a great ſingleneſſe of heart in Moſes, inſomuch as he not only gaue forth the things that he had receiued at Gods hand: but alſo continued throughout in the ſame ſinglenes of keeping himſelfe within his boundes, ſo as he raunged not abroade to ſay, this is good, or that is good, thus or thus doe I thinke of this matter. Noe but in all points he ruled himſelfe according to the charge of his commiſſion, vttering his meſſage according as he had heard God ſpeake it. Marke that for the ſecond point.

Nowe herewithall wee be warned to receiue the doctrine here conteined, not as comming from a mortall man. In ſpeaking vnto vs, Moſes proteſteth that he himſelfe is not our ſchoolemaiſter though he rehearſeth our leſſon vnto vs; but that muſt alwayes be God and his holy ſpirit, that muſt be euen our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, in whoſe hand the Lawe was giuen, as S. Paul ſpeaketh of him. For he was the gouernour of ỹ Church at all times. Ye ſee then that the thing which we haue to conſider here, is that we muſt reuerently and carefully receiue the things that were giuē vs by the hand of Moſes. Not that wee may think that any thing came of himſelfe: but that God ſent him and ordeined him to be his inſtrument, ſo that when we receiue any thing that was ſpoken by Moſes, wee may warrant our ſelues that God guideth and gouerneth vs by his owne pure trueth, and that our faith reſteth not vpon men nor vpon any mortall creature, but that the liuing God is the author, and will alſo be the warranter thereof. Gal. 3. 19.

Now after he hath ſpoken ſo, he ſaith, That his rehearſing of all theſe things was in the fortieth yeere, the eleuenth moneth, and the firſt day of the moneth. As if it had bene ſaide, when the people drewe nigh to the land of promiſe and were readie to enter into it: then did he repeate the Lawe of God, and make an abridgement of it, and rehearſe all the exhortations and warnings which he had made to them before. Not that Moſes had helde his peace and kept ſilence euer ſince [the giuing of the Lawe in] Horeb: for as I haue tolde you alreadie, he ceaſſed not to call vpon the people continually, bicauſe he ſawe them ſo wilfull and ſtubborne, and ſo ſtiffenecked and hard to be bowed. But in the end, foraſmuch as he drewe neere to his long home, and had as good as finiſhed his race and ſhould anon after depart out of this world, (as wee ſhall ſee that he did in the end of this booke:) he made a rehearſall of all the doctrine that he had preached by the ſpace of fortie yeeres, of purpoſe to ratifie & confirme it in ſuch wiſe to the people, as their ſucceſſours might bee edified by it after his deceaſe, and the profit thereof redound vnto vs at this day, and wee be taught all the leſſons conteyned therein. Neuertheleſſe, we ſee moreouer, that the people ought ere that time to haue bin throughly ſubdued, and to haue ſubmitted themſelues better vnto God than they did. For fortie yeeres are a good reaſonable time to diſpoſe a man to goodneſſe if euer he will be good.

When we ſee a man hath bin let chawe vpon the bridle by the ſpace of fortie yeeres, and yet will giue eare to no counſell nor reaſon: it is then high time or neuer for him to bethinke himſelf, and to fall to better diſpoſition and ripeneſſe of diſcretion than he hath done afore, if he be told of his fault. God therefore perceiuing his people to be ſo wilde, gaue them time and reſpit to become tame, & led them about by ỹ ſpace of fortie yeeres, which thing he did to thẽ for their ſtubbornneſſe ſake, as we ſhall ſee hereafter. But ỹ thing that we haue to marke at this preſent, is no more but that the cauſe why Moſes ſpake now vnto the people, was for that he drew neere his ende, and God was at the point to take him out of the worlde, and alſo for that the people ſhould be as it were renewed at that time. For it had bin ſaide to them that had refuſed to enter into the land [of Chanaan,] Your carkeſſes ſhall rotte here in the wildnerneſſe, you be not worthy to poſſeſſe the inheritance which your God promiſed to his ſeruaunt Abraham. Ye ſee then that when the people were after a ſort renewed at the ende of fortie yeeres, then did Moſes ſet foorth the Lawe againe, and ſpeake to them according to Gods commaundement. Nowe muſt we alſo apply this to our inſtruction. That is to ſay, when ſoeuer we haue bin ſo farre ouerſeene, as not to profit in Gods ſchoole, ſo as we continue Aſſes ſtill, or at leaſtwiſe haue but pickled vpon the doctrine, without ſuffering it to worke any true liuelineſſe in vs: if God ſubdue vs and prepare vs better by continuance of time to hearke vnto him: let vs aduiſe our ſelues to make our profit therof, & let vs not be vnamendable. For what ſhal wee win by it in the end if we continue ſtill vnruly, and be ſo ſtubborne that God cannot ouermaiſter vs? Shall it not turne to our confuſion? Therefore as well publikely as priuately, let vs bethinke vs to profite our ſelues by this warning, & if wee haue ill receiued the doctrine that hath bin long preached vnto vs heretofore: let vs conſider that inaſmuch as God doth not yet giue vs ouer, but vſeth ſuch mercy towardes vs: his deſire is to drawe vs ſtill vnto him, and therefore let vs prepare our ſelues, that we become not ſtubborne againſt him, but rather let vs learne to bee meeke, and let vs giue way to the doctrine, that it may enter into our mindes and heartes. Thus ye ſee how we ought to behaue our ſelues.

Furthermore when God viſiteth vs and ſendeth vs any corrections, to humble vs and to abate our ouergreat vnthankfulnes and frowardnes: let vs turne ouer a newe leafe and returne againe vnto him. And when wee haue done ſo generally for the whole body of the Church: let euery of vs do the like priuately on his owne behalfe. If any man haue runne aſtray, and neuer knowen God aright, nor neuer ſubmitted himſelfe fully to the wholeſome doctrine: if God viſit him by ſicknes, pouertie, or otherwiſe howſoeuer it bee: let him bethinke himſelfe and ſay, Alas, the Goſpell hath bene preached vnto me, but howe haue I receiued it of all this while? I knew not my God, and although I profeſſed my ſelfe to bee one of his nombers, yet did it not touche me at the heart. Howe ſhall I nowe doe therefore? Sith it is Gods will to haue me to bee his ſcholler, it is good reaſon that I yeelde my ſelfe wholly to him, and that I reuerence him as I ought to doe my ſouereigne maiſter and teacher. Thus ye ſee that the thing whereof wee be warned in this text, is that when we ſee how our Lorde indeuoureth by all meanes to bring vs backe, and is minded to beate downe the rebelliouſneſſe that is in vs, by rebuking our vices: & that he gathereth vs home to him when he ſees vs go aſtry, to the intent to reforme vs: we muſt not kicke againſt the ſpurre as I ſaide, but rather meekely and mildely ſeeke to bee gouerned by him, & to profit more and more in his word.

Now let vs caſt our ſelues downe in the preſence of our good God, with acknowledgement of the innumerable faultes which we ceaſſe not to commit dayly againſt his Maieſtie: praying him to vouchſafe to wipe them out through his free goodnes, and therewithall to bring vs home againe to him, and to worke ſo in vs by his holy ſpirit, as our conſciences may be mortified from day to day, vntill we be ridde quite and cleane of all the corruptions of our fleſh, to be clothed againe with his righteouſnes. And ſo let vs all ſay, Almightie God heauenly father, &c.

On Munday the xxv. of March. 1555.

The ſecond Sermon vpon the firſt Chapter.

3 And it came to paſſe, that in the fortieth yeere, the firſt day of the eleuenth moneth, Moſes ſpake to the children of Iſrael, according to all the things that the Lord had commanded him to ſay vnto them:

4 After he had ouercome Sehon King of the Amorrhyts which dwelt in Heſebon, and Og King of Baſan which dwelt at Aſtaroth in Edrai.

5 And ſo Moſes began to declare the Lawe beyond Iordan in the lande of Moab, ſaying:

6 The Lord our God ſpake to vs in Mount Horeb, ſaying: you haue taryed long ynough at this mountaine.

7 Turne

7 Turne ye and depart, that ye may goe to the hill of the Amorrhytes, and to all the Countries there aboutes, in the plaine about the hill, and in the lowe places towards the South, and vpon the ſhore of the red ſea, in the land of Chanaan, and in Libanus vnto the Riuer, euen the great riuer of Euphrates.

8 Looke about ye, I haue ſet the land before you, enter into it and poſſeſſe the land which the Lord God hath ſworne to your fathers Abraham, Iſaac, and Iacob, to giue it to them and to their ſeede after them.

I Haue tolde you alreadie, that the doctrine which is conteined here, is not the beginning of a matter, as though it had bin new to the people, and that God had not taught it them before: but a confirmation of the things that Moſes had ſpoken in Horeb, becauſe the people had not profited ſo well by them as they ought to haue done. And it hath bin declared further, that God had ſpent the ſpace of fortie yeeres or thereaboutes in ſubduing ỹ people, which had bin ouerſtubborne euen at the very firſt, & could in no wiſe abide to take his yoke. For this cauſe is the time ſet out here, to the ende that wee might vnderſtand, ỹ the people ought to haue framed themſelues to ſome obedience, after ſo hard & ſo long a chaſtiſement as thy had endured. Beſides this, there is one other circumſtance: which is, that ỹ people had alreadie had ſome victorie againſt Og king of Baſan and his neighbours, wherein they had had experience of Gods fauour. And I told you ỹ thoſe things were worthy to be marked, bicauſe they bee the two meanes whereby God draweth men vnto him, to win them withal and to inioy them. On the one ſide he chaſtiſeth them, to ỹ ende they may learne to obey him as being vnder his hand & authoritie: and on the otherſide he vſeth gentleneſſe, to make men in loue with him, and to conſider that nothing is better for them, than to sticke to him at whoſe hand they looke for all welfare. And both of theſe are expreſſed here by Moſes: namely that ỹ people had lingered in the deſert fortie yeeres long, feeling Gods horrible puniſhmẽt for their ſhrinking away frõ him: & yet neuertheles, had ouercome Sehon & Og & ſuch like kings, howbeit not by their own power, but by Gods helpe.

Wherefore let vs learne to profite our ſelues, as well by Gods ſcourges when wee bee beaten with them for offending him, as alſo by his benefites whereby he witneſſeth that he is readie to receiue men to his mercie, and to haue pitie vpon them when they returne vnto him. And let ſuch knowledge make vs teachable. Whenſoeuer it pleaſeth God to preache his worde vnto vs, let vs haue our heartes open to receiue it: let vs be plyable to followe that which he commaundeth: & to be ſhort, let vs yeeld our ſelues wholly to his goodneſſe.

Now it is ſaid here, that Moſes expounded the Lawe, howbeit that in ỹ Hebrew there is a word which ſignifieth, that he vouchſafed, or liſted to declare the Lawe. And that ſerueth to ſhew ſtill that he performed his commiſſion with a free courage or willing minde. For it may bee that he whom God commandeth to teache his people, ſhall diſcharge himſelfe thereof, howbeit but as it were by force: & ſuch neceſſitie, if a man haue an eye vnto it, doth alwayes import a conſtraint, ſo that all that euer we can doe ſhall be nothing worth. And here the miniſters of Gods worde are exhorted, not onely to preach the word that is committed vnto them: but alſo to do it with a free and cheerefull courage, according alſo as S. Paul auoweth it to be requiſite, and proteſteth that he himſelfe did ſo. And therefore let the example as well of Moſes as of S. Paul, ſerue for our inſtruction. 1.Cor.9.17.

Moreouer, let vs marke alſo, that vnder this ſaying, of the Lawe, is comprehended the rehearſall of the things that Moſes intended to make, of the things that were come to paſſe. True it is that the word Law betokeneth teaching and inſtruction: and therefore a man might aske at the firſt bluſh, what inſtruction there is in the report of ſtories. It is not without cauſe, ỹ Moſes hath ſayde ſo. For when God putteth vs in remembrance of our ſinnes, and of the benefites ỹ he hath beſtowed vpon vs, and of the chaſtiſements which wee haue receiued at his hand: it ought to teache vs to our profit. Gods ſetting of ſuch things afore vs, is not to make vs paſtime: but to the end, that on the one ſide we ſhould be the better diſpoſed to ſerue him, and to continue in his feare: and on the other ſide be trained and allured to reſort vnto him, and to ſeeke all our welfare and all that euer belongeth to our ſaluation, at his hand. We ſee then howe it is not without cauſe, that Moſes giueth the name of Lawe or Doctrine, to the rehearſall of things that were come to paſſe, forſomuch as by ỹ meanes the people ought to haue bin led vnto God, & to haue bin the better edified. And therefore let vs marke, that when we reade the holy ſtories, it is not onely to know what hath bin done, to ỹ end we may be able to talke of it: but to the end we ſhould behold there the grace of God towardes ỹ faithful in deliuering them. Alſo we muſt conſider after what maner he hath exerciſed his children in patience, and made them to wade through many afflictions, that their faith might bee tryed: and conſequently how he neuer forſaketh them at the point of neede and neceſſitie. Againe we muſt conſider the iuſtice that he hath executed in puniſhing ſuch as haue done amiſſe and tranſgreſſed his will. If we haue ſuch regarde and diſcretion with vs, the Stories will bee as an inſtruction to vs. For wee ſhall bee better aſſured by them, than if GOD did but ſimply tell vs what he requireth at our handes and what our dueties is. That then is the thing which we haue to beare in minde: & it will be a good preparatiue for vs to the thinges that are to enſue. For otherwiſe it would be thought an vnprofitable thing, to knowe that Moſes choſe men to gouerne the people, & that on the other ſide the people followed not Gods commaundement in purſuing their enemies, and ſuch other like thinges. What haue wee to doe with thoſe things, will ſome men ſay? But foraſmuch as we be admoniſhed, that all theſe things concerne our inſtruction: we muſt put them to ſuch vſe as nothing may be vnoccupyed: aſſuring our ſelues that God procured our benefite & welfare, when he did ſet foorth to vs as it were in a painted table, the things that belong vnto vs at this day, and may be applyed to our inſtruction.

Whereas it is ſayde, That it is ynough that the people had taryed a certaine time at Mount Horeb: therein we ſee that Gods deliuering of the children out of the bondage of Egypt, was not to lay the brydle in their necke that they might go where they liſted: but to be their gouernour for euer. And that is a thing that ought to ſtand vs in good ſtead. For wee haue a preſident, that when God receiueth vs for his people, it is not only for a day or twaine, but of purpoſe to haue a continuall care of vs to the end, ſo as he will not leaue vs in the midde way, but proceede in guiding of vs ſtill, vntill wee bee come to our right marke. And this is a verie profitable doctrine: for what a thing were it, if God ſhoulde once giue vs his lawe, and ſet vs in a good trade: and afterwarde let vs alone without looking to vs? Wee ſee our owne frayltie, inſomuch that wee could not ſteppe one ſteppe but wee ſhould bee readie to ſtumble or to ſtart out of the way, and the incomberaunces are ſo manie and ſo great, as it would bee vnpoſſible for vs to ouercome them, if God aſſiſted vs not. And therefore let vs learne, that when God hath once adopted vs, and choſen vs to bee of his flocke: it is not to the end we ſhoulde but onely take a taſte of his grace for a day: but to the end that he will continue in doing vs good: and his taking of vs into his gouernment, is of purpoſe neuer to giue vs ouer, ſo as wee ſhall alwayes be vnder his protection, and he will neuer ceaſſe to increaſe the good turnes that wee haue felt and receiued of him, vntill we bee come to the full perfection. Foraſmuch then as wee ſee that he neuer leaueth his worke vnperfected, but goeth through with it, as it is ſayde in the Pſalme: it ought well to cauſe vs to magnifie his goodneſſe, and to incourage vs to giue ouer our ſelues wholly vnto him. And the ſame belongeth to the ſpirituall health of our ſoules, according to this ſaying of S. Paul in the firſt Chapter to the Philippians, that he which hath begun the good worke will goe through with it, euen vnto the day of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt. Wherefore let vs marke, that whereas God declareth here by the mouth of Moſes, that the people had taryed long ynough about mount Horeb, and that he would haue them to goe foreward: thereby he doth vs to vnderſtand, that ſeeing he hath deliuered vs from the dungeon of death, and from the bondage of the diuell and of ſinne: we ſhall haue him to be our guide for euer, ſo we hearken to his voyce, and doubt not but he thinketh vpon vs and will continually leade vs ſtill.

Moreouer he ſayeth, Let the people turne and draw towards the hill of the Amorrhytes, & from thence inuade and poſſeſſe the land of Chanaan, whether is be the playne Countries, or the downes, or the deſertes, or the ſeacoaſtes: for the land (ſaieth he) is before you: that is to ſay at your commaundement, I haue deliuered it into your handes, nothing ſhall keepe yee from the poſſeſſion of it, if it bee not long of your ſelues. Why ſo? For I haue ſworne (ſayeth he) to your fathers Abraham, Iſaac, and Iacob: I haue promiſed to giue it for an inheritaunce to them and to their ſeede after their deceaſſe. Here firſt of all wee muſt marke the order that is ſet downe: for God ſheweth the cauſe why he gaue that people the land [of Chanaan:] namely for his promiſe ſake. And thereby he betokeneth, that the lande belonged not to them as by way of conqueſt through their owne power, nor yet for any deſert of theirs, but onely of free gift. God then aſſigneth this title to the children of Iſrael, and telleth them that they ſhall bee as much bound to his meere goodneſſe when they bee brought into the land of Chanaan, [as they were before.] And in deede the othe that Moſes ſpeakes of here, was made foure hundred and thirtie yeeres afore, euen in the perſon of Abraham, before any of them was borne. Seeing then that GOD had promiſed them the land, euen before they had done eyther good or euill, and before they were borne: it may bee concluded therevpon, that their poſſeſſing of it was not for any worthineſſe of theirs, as though God had beene beholden to them for ſome ſeruice: but bicauſe he had made them heires of it, through his owne free goodneſſe. Nowe if this bee verified of the earthly heritage which the children of Iſrael had: what is to bee ſaide of the kingdome of heauen? Are wee able to compaſſe it? Can wee deſerue at Gods hand to bee partakers thereof? No: but contrariwiſe, it is of his meere goodneſſe that we be brought in thither, and ſhall haue fruition of it at the laſt day: for ſurely all that is ſpoken of the land of Chanaan, muſt ſerue vs for a figure and ſhadowe.

Phil. 1. 6.

Therefore when as God telleth the people that they gat it not by their owne power, and ſendeth them backe to the promiſe that he had made long ago: it is to ſhewe vs that whereas he is our father, whereas we bee mainteined by him in this world, and whereas wee looke for a better and more excellent life than this: we muſt not dreame vpon any deſert or power of our owne, but attribute all wholly to his meere free goodneſſe, in that he vttereth the infinite treaſures of his grace and loue towards vs. Thus much haue we to remember in the firſt place.

Furthermore whereas here is mention made of an othe: let vs note that God vouchſafed to ſtoope ſo lowe to the infirmitie of the people, as to put them out of all doubt, by ſwearing by his owne name: and ſo doeth he nowe likewiſe

towardes vs. For he is not contented to ſpeake onely, and to tel vs what he will haue vs to do: but he alſo confirmeth his promiſes with a ſolemne othe. And why? Forasmuch as wee be inclined to vnbeliefe, and would euer be wauering if we were not well vnderpropped: therefore doeth he ſweare to the ende to ſtabliſhe vs the better.

Seing then that God ſweareth to vpholde our weakeneſſe: let vs conſider, firſt that we be too vntoward, if wee cannot beleeue his ſingle worde: and ſecondly that his goodneſſe is ineſtimable, in that it pleaſeth him to beare with vs, and to ſweare for the confirming of our beliefe. And herewithall we haue to note alſo, that we muſt not ſeeke Gods will in the aire, but content our ſelues with his word; and that ſeeing it hath pleaſed him to ſhewe himſelfe vnto vs, and to giue vs warrant of his will, we muſt holde vs to it, and reſte wholy vppon it.

Now then, will wee bee ſure that God will neuer faile vs, neither in this lyfe, nor after we bee gone hence? Will wee haue an infallible hope of the heauenly lyfe? Let vs haue our eye vppon the promiſes: let vs not wander here and there as a nomber doe, which are caryed away with fonde curioſitie: but let it ſuffice vs that God hath certified and taught vs, that he wil not onely be a father to vs to guyde vs in this worlde, but alſo that hee will neuer leaue vs, ſo as wee ſhall alwayes be gouerned by him, and that when hee hath tryed our faith, wee ſhall haue full fruition of the thinges that are promiſed vs: and when wee bee once ridde of this mortall body, wee ſhall bee rayſed vp againe, and inioye an immortalitie which is hidde from vs as now. Let vs content our ſelues (ſay I) with this word of Gods mouth for all other things, & let vs not ſcan after our owne fooliſh fancies how the matter ſhall goe: but haue God once ſpoken the worde, let vs holde vs to it. And that is it which Moſes meant here, in ſaying, God ſware to your fathers.

Moreouer wee muſt note, that the doctrine which is ſet forth in the name of God, ſerueth not for one age onely, but for all euer, and keepeth his force and ſtrength continually. Abraham, Iſaak, and Iacob were dead and rotten in the earth when theſe thinges were ſpoken: but yet the promiſe that God had made to them was aliue ſtill. Although then that men bee mortall and tranſitorie: yet is Gods worde euerlaſting. And if it bee the ſeede of the vncorruptible lyfe, needes muſt it be endleſſe and exempted from all corruption.

Therefore let vs marke, that Gods ſpeaking in olde time, was not to the ende that his doctrine ſhould be buryed after an age or twaine: but that it ſhoulde be ſet before vs to the ende of the worlde, and we receiue it with all reuerence. Lykewiſe at this day, although the Prophets and Apoſtles be dead: yet doth GOD worke ſtill by them, & the word that is brought among vs in theſe dayes, not onely hath his liuely force, but alſo quickeneth vs, and maketh vs to receiue the food of our ſoules by it. Our ſaluation muſt needes goe forewarde, and wee muſt needes be ſtabliſhed in it, in ſuch wiſe, as wee may ouercomme the worlde and attaine to the kingdome of heauen. Thus yee ſee what we haue to beare in minde, when as mention is made here, of the promiſe that God ſware to the auncient fathers that were dead long time afore.

And it is ſayd expreſſely, that Abraham, Iſaak, and Iacob were their fathers: to the ende that they might knowe themſelues to bee the ſucceſſors of the bleſſing that had bin promiſed. And therefore he addeth, that God had ſworne to giue that land to Abraham, Iſaak, and Iacob, and to their offspring. As though Moſes ſhould ſay, that Gods promiſe is not diſanulled, but muſt now preſently take effect, and be accompliſhed in their perſons. Hath God ſaid ſo, ſaith he? Then muſt you conſider, that he ſpake it not onely to your fathers which heard the promiſe, but alſo to [you which are] their offspring. For it is expreſſely ſayd, that Abraham ſhould teach his children the wayes, rightes, iudgementes, and ſtatutes of the Lord. Then was it for the children of Iſrael, to haue receiued the promiſe that had bin made in olde time to their fathers, as if God had ſpoken it within freſh remembrance. And in deede wee ought to wey well this circumſtance. For it is not to thoſe only which were at the beginning of the Goſpell, that God ſayth, I receiue you for my people: but his wil is that ỹ ſame doctrine ſhould be preached ſtil, to the worlds end. Let vs note then, that we alſo are comprehended with them that heard the word of god at the beginning. And forasmuch as his grace reacheth out vnto all men, and is common to all ages: it becommeth vs to giue eare to it, ſeeing it is appointed and offered vnto vs [as well as to them.] And why? For it is not to S. Peter and to S. Paul onely, that God hath ſayd, I am your Sauiour: but he hath ordeyned them to be meſſengers of his goodnes, that we might be taught by their mouth, and we doubt not but God will doe the lyke to vs as he did to them. Thus ye ſee what we haue to conſider, when as it is ſayd that God promiſed the land of Chanaan for an inheritance to the whole linage of Abraham, and vnto them that ſhould deſcend of his race.

And in very deede it behoued the people alwayes to come back to this ſaying: I am thy God and the God of thine ofspring after thee. And againe vnto this, I am the Lord which ſheweth mercie to a thouſand generations: as we ſhall ſee hereafter. Now, this was not ſaid for that one tyme onely, it muſt be accompliſhed nowadayes alſo. Thē let vs conſider ỹ God hauing once plīted ỹ warrant of our ſaluation, will haue it goe foreward dayly, ſo as we ſhould knowe ỹ he calleth vs to the poſſeſſing of his kingdome, & that in vs he calleth them ỹ are to come after vs: Inſomuch that ỹ children which come of Chriſtians, are already choſen of God to be his flock & of his houſhold, & God hath takē thē to himſelfe already, euen before they come out of their mothers wombe. Is not ỹ knowledg of ſuch doctrine an exan excellent ſtrengthening to vs, when we ſee that God hath giuen our ſaluation a ground to build vppon, before we were borne or created? yes.

But here it might be demanded how the land was promiſed to the fathers which neuer had poſſeſſion of it? For wee knowe that Abraham, Iſaak, and Iacob acknowledged themſelues to be but ſoiourners there, and that they had not the Lordſhip of the land, but that they were as
Gen. 47. 9. poore wanderers, and were toſſed too and fro, inſomuch that euen their water was taken from them, ſo as they had not water to drinke, and not onely were kept from comming to the pits that had bin digged already, but alſo were put from water when they had digged pits by
Gen. 21. 25. and 26. 15. their owne labor and trauell. Where is then the promiſe of God which he made to Abrahã, concerning the giuing of the land vnto him? Hereby we be put in minde of that which the A-
Heb. 11. 13. poſtle ſayeth in the Epiſtle to the Hebrewes: that is to wit, that the auncient fathers had not an eye to the viſible land: but onely tooke it as a repreſentation of the euerlaſting dwelling place whereunto God calleth them: Inſomuch that although Abraham had not anie poſſeſſiõ in the land of Chanaan, yet was he Lord & maiſter of it neuertheleſſe, howbeit that he held himſelfe contented wᵗʰ the only ſight ẏ God gaue him thereof, to the end he might haue his heart lifted vp into heauen, and wayt to haue his euerlaſting abode there. Thus to be ſhorte, the Lordſhip which Abraham had of the viſible land, was ſpiritual. For although in mans opinion he had no whit at all of it, but was like to haue bin driuẽ out of it euery day: yet poſſeſſed he the thing that God had promiſed him.

But now if we make compariſon between Abraham and vs, haue we not greater cauſe to lift vp our hartes to the kingdome of heauen than he had, ſeeing we not onely haue a mirror or image of it ſet before vs by God, but alſo that Ieſus Chriſt hath in his owne perſon opened vs ſuch a way thither, as our faith may well atteine to the glorie of God? Therefore ought we to be the better confirmed in the promiſe that God hath made vnto vs, of aduauncing vs into his kingdome to enter into it as his lawfull heires thereof.

And although wee doe but as it were creepe on al foure here belowe vpon the earth, and our body is to vs as a corruptible and tranſitorie lodging, and we be weyed downe with theſe bace thinges: yet muſt our true dwelling place needes be aboue, and wee our ſelues muſt needes be citizens of heauen and fellowes with the Angels aforehand, and poſſeſſe the thing aforehand by faith and hope, which wee haue not as yet in very deede, as the holie fathers haue done afore vs, who not withſtanding had not thinges opened ſo plainely & manifeſtly vnto them, as wee haue nowe, nor nothing neere.

Thus ſee you the maner how Abraham, Iſaak, and Iacob were not diſapointed of ẏ land which God promiſed to giue thẽ, although they neuer had the full fruition thereof themſelues, but walted patiently til the cõuenient time were come, for God to put their ſucceſſors in poſſeſſion of it after their deceaſſe. Sith it is ſo, let vs walke on vpon earth in ſufferance of many conflicts, looking only vpon the things that are promiſed vs, not doubting but that we be ſure of the benefite of them already, although we holde them not in our handes, ne behold them with our eyes. For why? God cannot fayle in his promiſes.

But now let vs come to the ioyning together of ẏ thinges ẏ Moſes ſetteth downe: for he ſaith, Draw towards the land and poſſeſſe it, for it is as your commandements, according as God ſware to your fathers. Here Moſes matcheth Gods promiſes, withẏ exhortations which he himſelfe maketh: for the true faſhion of building when men are to be brought vnto God, that they may honor him & ſerue him & ſeek his kingdom, is to begin at his free promiſes, & to vewe that he preuenteth vs through his own mere goodnes, ẏ he paſſeth not whether we be good or no, & ẏ although we haue not deſerued ought at his hand, yet doth hee of his meere free goodneſſe come vnto vs, & bynde himſelfe to vs without any cauſe why. Thus ye ſee at what end we muſt begin. Againe, men muſt be exhorted & warned not to deſpiſe ſuch a benefite, but to receiue it, & therewithall to inforce and indeuer themſelues to anſwere God when he calleth them. This is the order which wee muſt obſerue in this text of Moſes.

Draw hence (ſayth he) and march forward. As if he ſhould ſay, Go to, your God hath called you longer time than you be aware of. For in deede, the promiſe of ſaluation was giuen vs before we were created; yea euen before the creation of the world did God chooſe vs, as S. Paul auoucheth: and againe he hath fetched vs backe to him, when wee were as cattell gone aſtray. Loe how Gods meere free goodneſſe ſheweth it ſelfe. We cannot alledge here any ſtrength or any worthyneſſe of our owne: We cannot ſay, oh, God hath payed vs our wages for our comming vnto him: There is no ſuch thing at all. But at ſuch time as we were forlorne and damned, our God opened vs the gate of ſaluation: when we were in Satans bondes, he did ſet vs free: when we were become his vtter enemies & were baniſhed out of his kingdom, he made vs heirs therof. Therfore lyke as he hath freely preuented vs, and ſheweth vs ſtil that it is of his owne meere grace, that we can attayne to ſaluation: ſo we on our ſide muſt not be negligent and ſlothfull: but ſeeing he hath ſpoken vnto vs, we muſt alſo anſwere vnto him: ſeeing that he ſayth, Go, march on, let vs be going our way out of hand.

Eph. 1. 4. 1. Pet. 2. 25

When there is any talke of doing good or of ſeruing God, the Papiſts imagine by and by that men earne the kingdome of heauen by their owne deſertes or merites: but the holy ſcripture holdeth the cleane contrary order, as wee ſee here. For why? It is not ſayde that men bynde God to them by their meritorious deedes: but after that the inheritance is ſet before them, and that of free gift: and after it is it is shewed them, that nothing beareth sway in that behalfe but onely Gods goodnesse: then is it sayd vnto them, March forward. And so wee learne to doe good, and to giue our selues to the seruing of God, & to become holy through his righteousnesse: not of purpose to make him beholden vnto vs, but to followe his holy calling, least wee should reiect his grace, howbeit that we cannot stirre one finger without Gods working in vs by his holie spirit. For whereas it is sayd, Get ye hence and march forward: it is not for that the people was able so to doe: but when God hath once incouraged vs, he printeth his doctrine in our heartes, and to the intent the same should not be vnauailcable, he quickeneth vs vp: and to be short, he worketh so mightily in vs, that after he hath once giuen vs willingnesse, hee giueth vs also performance therewithall, according as S. Paul auoucheth in the Phil. 2. 13. second to the Philippians. Yet for all this, wee must beare well in minde the thing that I haue touched alreadye: which is, that Gods offering of his grace vnto vs, is not to the end we should as it were fall aslcepe and make none account of it: but to the ende wee shoulde be quickened vp to doe good, according to this saying,

Tit. 2. 11. that his goodnesse and loue which hee beareth towards men, is vttered to the intent to purchase him a holy people fit for good workes, and [to the end] that we should walke in all purenes, wayting for the discouerie of the lyfe which he hath promised vs. And if this had place vnder the shadowes of the lawe: much more must we doe it now in these dayes. So then, let vs marke well, that Gods seting of the infinite riches of his goodnesse and mercie afore vs and his opening of the gate of heauen vnto vs, is to the ende we should mount vp vnto him, and rid our selues of all earthly affections, seeking nothing but to lift vp our heartes on high, and to passe out of this worlde, and to be discharged of all bondes and fetters that hinder vs and hold vs back, indeuouring with all our might to come vnto him, as they that know how this present lyfe is but as a race, and that men must not loyter and linger here, but rather go still foreward according to gods calling of vs, who sayth, Come, Come, drawe neerer to me. And if wee goe to him, we shall no more be in daunger of wandering here and there, but we shall keepe on our way to the mark that God hath set before vs, and we wil neuer rest till wee be come thither.

Now herewithall, to the intent to incourage the people, Moses telleth them that they shal not trauel in vaine. Go (sayth he) and possesse the land: and that is one poynt more well worth the noting. For if we should bestowe our labor, & not knowe that we shal fare euer the better by seruing God: we would become lazie, and our hartes would fayle vs euey minute of an houre. But when we be sure that we runne not in vaine, and that God will reach vs his hand, so as wee neede not to feare but our matters shall come to passe, though Satan streyne himselfe to hinder vs: when we stand vpon such a sure ground that our Lord will put vs in possession of the thinges that he offereth vs: it giueth vs an inuincible courage and constancie to ouerstand all temptations.

And therefore let vs wey wel these wordes where he sayeth, Get ye hence and possesse the land: God sayeth not singly to his faithfull ones, goe your wayes, see what ye can doe, trye your strength, and in the meane while leaueth them at all aduentures: no, but he sayeth to them, Go to possesse. As if he should say, doe but onely apply your selues to serue me, and let me alone with the doing of it. for I will worke after such a sort, as he that endeuoreth to followe me shall not lose his labor, he shal not take paine in vain, I will make all his doings to prosper. That then is the thing that wee haue to marke vppon this streyne. And therefore what excuse is there for vs, if we followe not our Lord whither soeuer he call vs, considering that this voyce, Go and possesse, ought to sound in our eares? And if it were spoken for ỹ land of Chanaan, much more shall it be auowed and verified still at this day. Wherefore whensoeuer we be slowe to obey God, loath to part from this world, or astonished with distresses: let vs enter into such thoughts as these: Alas, is it possible for to me to come vnto God? how may I ouercome so manie and so great distresses? It farre surmounteth all my power and strength. When we be so incombred and brought in perplexitie and doubt, let vs bethinke our selues thus: well, seeing it hath pleased God to shewe himselfe to me, it is good reason that I should be contented with the assurance that he hath giuen me, and with the experience of his goodnesse which hee hath made me to feele. And so must we passe on foreward still, notwithstanding all the temptations of distrust that may come in our heads.

And for a further confirmation of our selues, let vs also take to vs this saying of his, I haue set the land before you: for it expresseth yet better how they should possesse it. If men haue an eye but to their owne power, and consider but their owne abilities: they may well distrust and vtterly despaire. But when wee knowe how it is Gods office to giue vs the strength which we want of our selues, and to performe our saluation whereof he himselfe is the founder: that is the thing wherein lyeth our trust. And therefore without presuming any thing of our selues, let vs runne on with a cherefull courage: but yet let vs consider neuertheleſſe therewithall, how it is God that vttereth his power for the working of our saluation, and that he is the author thereof, and reserueth the leading of vs to himselfe, in such sorte, as the possession thereof is already in his hand. Now if we intend to fare the better by his doctrine, first let vs put out of our mindes all vaine imaginations of our owne strength, of our owne freewill, and of all that euer men haue surmised. For those are the thinges wherewith the diuell hath made men drunken, and beguileth them still, by bearing them in hand that they can doe much much of themſelues. And we ſee how the Papiſtes are puffed vp with that diueliſh pryde yet ſtil at this day. There is deſcanting among them of their owne Freewill, there is deſcanting of their owne forewardneſſe: and yet as able folke as they be, they doe no ſooner ſet foorth one ſtep, but they be ready to break their necks. And well worthie: for God muſt needes laugh their ouerweening to ſcorne, yea or rather puniſh it, becauſe it is a robbing of God. But whereas it is ſayd, that it is God which hath ſet the land at their commaundement: let vs vnderſtand that there is no ſtrength in vs, and that we muſt rid our ſelues of all ſelfetruſt. And when we be ſo beaten downe, then let vs take heart againe, aſſuring our ſelues that God will goe through with his worke, and that he hath not forgot his cunning, and that he will neuer giue ouer till he haue brought the things to paſſe which he hath promiſed vs. Againe, if it were ſo that the land of Chanaan was to be ſet before the people of Iſrael, & that the ſame was to be done by ỹ hand of God: I pray you muſt not wee be fayne to haue the kingdome of heauen ſet before vs? [yes ſurely.] For that people had but mortall men to ouercome, that they might enter into the poſſeſſion of a ſtrange countrie. But we muſt ouercome Satan the prince of the world, wee muſt ouercome an hundred thouſand enemies that fight againſt vs, yea and all that euer wee haue of our owne muſt be done away. Wee muſt flye vp on high: and what a diſtance is there from hence to heauen? Then ſeeing it is ſo, let vs reſort to our God, let vs put our ſelues wholy into his hand, let vs reſt vppon his onely grace, and let vs cal vppon him with lowlyneſſe and reuerence. And therewithall let vs walke on in ſuch ſort, as we ſuffer him to guide and gouerne vs, aſſuring our ſelues that hee will neuer fayle vs. For if we proceede after that faſhion, wee ſhal finde that the truſt which we haue to attaine to ſaluation, will not puffe vs vp with all ſelfe-weening, but make vs to yeeld God his due honor in the name of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt.

Nowe let vs kneele downe in the preſence of our good God, with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to make vs feele them more & more, and that therewithal we acknowledging our infirmities, and perceyuing our ſelues to be poore and naked of all goodneſſe, may runne wholy vnto him, ſo as we ſeeing that there is no cauſe why we ſhould glorie in our ſelues, may ſeeke our whole glorie in his onely goodneſſe and mercye. And that foraſmuch as wee haue not nowe an onely Moſes to leade vs into the land of Chanaan, but Ieſus Chriſt which is come downe vnto vs to drawe vs vp into heauen after him: we may follow ſuch a guyde, yeelding our ſelues wholy vnto him, and in no wiſe dragging backe from him, ſaying he will haue vs to come vnto God his father. That it may pleaſe him to graunt this grace not onely to vs, but alſo to all people and nations of the earth. &c.

On Wedneſday the xxvii. of March. 1555.

The third Sermon vppon the firſt Chapter.

9 And at the ſame time I ſpake to you, ſaying, I cannot beare you my ſelfe alone:

10 The Lord your God hath multiplyed you: and behold, you are this day in nomber as the ſtarres of the skye.

11 The Lord the God of your fathers make you to increaſe a thowſand times as many as you be, and bleſſe you as he hath ſayd vnto you.

12 How ſhall I alone beare your comberance, charge, and ſtrife?

13 Bring me from among you, men of wiſedome and vnderſtanding, and tryed men, according to your trybes, and I will make them your heades.

14 Then anſwered you me and ſayd: It is good to doe as thou haſt ſayd.

15 Then tooke I the heades of your tribes, men of wiſedome and skil, and made them gouerners ouer you, rulers ouer thowſandes, ouer hundreds, ouer fifties, ouer tennes, and officers among your tribes.

AMong the benefites that God beſtowed vppon the people of Iſrael after his deliuering of them from the thraldome of Egypt, one is that he did alwayes lay hold on them to gouerne them. For without that, what would become of men? If all thinges be well conſidered, there is leſſe gouernment in them, than in brute beaſtes. So then, it was needeful that God ſhould take order for the gouerning of them. And now Moſes putteth the people in remembrance how God had bin their guide at all times, and had not onely bin contented to rid them out of the horrible thraldome wherein they had bin held, but alſo had eſtabliſhed ſuch a gouernment and ſtate among them, as there was no let but in themſelues, that they might not liue in quiet, and alſo walke in all kind of vprightnes. It is all one therefore as if Moſes ſhould ſay,

See

See how greatly ye be beholden to your God: For he hath euery way prouided well for you: he hath continually pitied you, and by all meanes procured your welfare. And in very deede, the remembrance of Gods benefites, ought to prouoke vs continually to serue him the better: and when we see that he hath not fayled vs in any thing, is it not reason that we shoulde be the more disposed to yeelde our selues wholy to his obeisance? For he sheweth how deere we be vnto him, what loue he beareth towardes vs, and what a care he hath of our weldoing, when he procureth it after such maner.

And by the way, wee haue to note here for a speciall poynt, that when God settethra good order among vs, and appointeth men to haue the guiding of vs: it is a singular president of his goodnesse and loue towardes vs. True it is that the thing which is rehersed here by Moses, proceeded of the counsel of Iethro his father in law, as he himselfe sheweth in the eyghteenth of Exod. 18.17 Exodus. And although Iethro was an heathen man: yet did God serue his owne turne by him in this behalfe. And so we see, that God applyeth all thinges and all persons to our benefite. Who would haue looked that a man which had none acquaintance with the people of Israel, sauing that Moses had maryed a wife out of his house, should haue come and giuen such counsell? But so doth God apply all his creatures to the benefite of his people, as I sayd afore.

Besides this, we haue to note the lowlynesse of Moses, in that he held not scorne of the counsell that was giuen him by one that was not so excellent as he himselfe, nothing neere. Moses might haue replyed and sayd, what fellowe is this? For I am chosen of God to gouerne his Church, and to be the chiefe of it. I haue published his lawe in his name, I haue represented his maiestie, yea and he hath giuen mee such a visible signe thereof in my face, as though I were an Angell come downe from heauen, rather than any earthly man. I haue bin separated from the companie of mortall men by the space of fortie dayes, as though God had glorifyed me already: and shall a common person presume now to teach me? Moses then might haue cast foorth such wordes: but he submitted himselfe to reason. Why so? for he knew that God dealeth his gratious giftes as it pleaseth him, insomuch that the little ones may diuers times further the greatest and excellentest. And therein God intendeth to try the soberenesse and mildnesse of those whome hee hath aduaunced to degree of souereintie. For when they forget not themselues, but are alwayes pliable, and if a man bring them any better aduice than they themselues wist of, they receiue it willingly, and yeld vnto it: it is a true tryal of their obedientnesse [vnto God.] Seing then ỳ Moses, who was chiefe among all the auncient prophets, could finde in his heart to yeeld to the counsell of his father in lawe Iethro, who neuer knew what true Religion ment, but had only a little taste of it in a shadow: what shal we do which are not come to ỳ like glorie that Moses had? Wherefore let vs vnderstād, that although God haue bestowed his spirit most plentifully vppon vs: it is not to the end that we should hold skorne of the aduice and counsell of such as are meaner than our selues. For ỳ meane and very knot wherewith God will haue vs knit and ioyned togither: is that the greate ones should stoope to the least, and all agree in one. Moreouer, as hath beene declared already, although Iethro was the instrumēt to put Moses in mind of it: yet ought it to be imputed vnto God, who had a care to prouide for the benefite and safetie of his people, ỳ he might not faile them in any thing. And to this intent is it that Moses speaketh thereof. Now let vs come to the words that are set downe here.

First he sayth, that he himselfe is not able to beare them any more alone, because they were greatly increased: for you be (sayth he) mo than the starres of the sky: and we knowe that they were moe than seuen hundred thowsand persons. Seeing it is so then, I am no more able (saith he) to beare your charges, your incumbraunces, and your strifes: and therefore you must bee faine to choose some men to bee in office with me, men of wisedome and vnderstanding, and well tryed. First of all, whereas Moses protesteth that he was no longer able to beare the charge of the people: therein he sheweth vs, that such as are aduaunced to any degree of honor or dignitie, must not be as Idols without doing any thing at all, but [are set in that state] with condition to take paynes, yea and to doe seruice for the welfare of the commons, in asmuch as God hath layed that burthen vpon their shoulders, for the vpholding of the common weale. And it is a poynt of doctrine well woorthie to be obserued. For we see how all men are giuen to ambitiō, so as euery man seekes to be esteemed and honored, & all indeuour to growe great. And why? Because wee consider not, that Gods aduauncing of vs is to the intent we shoulde represent his person in this worlde. And surely that cannot be without incumberance. The more honorable therefore that any charge or office is, the more paynful and cumbersome is it. But for asmuch as men imagine an idle honor: that fancie of theirs caryeth them into so fond or rather furious ouerlustinesse, that they passe for no more but to haue their owne swindge, and to mount vp on high, yea euen (diuerse times) to breake their owne neckes.

And on the other side it behoueth vs to marke well, how Moses sayeth that he is not able to beare so great a charge: for it doth vs to wit, that he bewrayeth his owne infirmitie, or at leastwise sheweth it to be such, as he must be faine to beare a lower sayle. Thus then the second consideration which we ought to haue to correct all ambition and foolish loftinesse in vs with all, is that we must examine well our owne abilities, and then shal we finde that it were more for our behoofe to creepe belowe vppon the ground, than to couet to growe great to ouerrule our neyghbors. These (say I) are the two respectes that may abate our pryde and fond desire of superioritie. The one is, that we assure our selues that the hygher a man is exalted, the more also is he bound both to God and to them ouer whom he is set, inasmuch as there is no preheminence without burthen, yea or rather without bõdage as I sayd afore. Marke that for one poynt. But we must also beare in minde, that wee haue no abilitie at all of our selues, and therefore much lesse is any man to be found sufficient to beare so great a burthen. There cannot so small a charge be committed vnto vs, but the same is able to make our shoulders shrinke, yea and euen to bow too. For our infirmitie is so great, that whosoeuer sitteth himselfe throughly without hypocrisie and soothing, shall see that he is able to doe as good as nothing at all. Therefore if we think wel vppon such weakenesse, it wilbe as a bridle to restraine vs from clymbing so high. For what followeth but vtter confusion, when men will needes be honored, and yet in the meane while not discharge their duetie, but rather make themselues as Idols, and moreouer not haue any regard at all of their owne abilitie?

Furthermore wee must marke also for a thyrd point, that although Moses sawe the burthen to be ouerheauie for him: yet he did not quite and cleane renounce his calling, to giue ouer the office that God had committed vnto him: but sought to be helped and succored, saying, Let men be chosen &c. And this is well worthie to be noted: for there might haue bin two faultie extremities. The one is that which wee haue condemned already: that is to wit, that men haue not an eye to their owne slendernesse, but beare them selues in hand that it is a matter of no importance to be in authoritie. And that is it, that maketh him so rashe and bolde to gripe more than they be able to weelde, by reason wherof they see themselues confounded in the ende, but it is too late first. For this fooliish ouerweening maketh men to forget themselues, and to take too much vppon them for want of considering their owne vnabilitie: and of such fonde enterpryses can come nothing but euill, because God punisheth them for them.

Nowe there is also an other euill extremitie, which is, that when men see themselues to be very fraile, they become faintharted and thereupon, if God call them to anie office of charge, they plucke backe their neckes because they see the burthen cumbersome for them, and woulde faine shake off the yoke, and shun the vocation that God calleth them vnto. That is a vice whereof we must beware. But there is a meane betweene both, which is, when we see that the cumbersomnesse thereof passeth our power: then to take as much thereof as we be able to beare, measuring our selues by our owne span, and moreouer to pray vnto God to make vs meete to go through with the thinges that shall be commaunded vs. Those are the thinges that are shewed vs here by the example of Moses. For he did not fling away the gouernement of the people: because that in so doing he should haue bin a rebell against God. We see how God delt with Ionas, for he ouertooke him though he fled away. Therefore we must not refuse to obey God vnder pretence of our owne feebleneſſe, though the charges or offices which he allotteth vnto vs be so troublesome, that we must be faine to grone vnder them. Whatsoeuer come of it, let vs hold this rule: namely to submit our selues to Gods calling, and to followe him whither soeuer he will haue vs. And aboue all thinges let vs pray vnto him to supply our wantes: and in the meane time let vs not take too much vpon vs, but let vs measure our charge by our abilitie.

Were this wel followed, wee should not see so many outragious disorders euerywhere as there be. For what hath caused so barbarous tyranny in the Church, as is to be seene in the Popedome? Behold, the Pope hath vsurped an vniuersall supremacie ouer the whole world. For there must needes be one head sayth he. Verily as who should say that Iesus Christ were discharged, who is ordeined to be the head both of men and Angels. No: but the Pope will needes thrust the sonne of God out of his place. But if he wist what it is to reigne ouer the whole world: would he not be loath to take vpon him so vnpossible a charge? yes: but it cost him nothing to call himselfe the vniuersal head, and to spread out his winges euery way. Therefore that diuelish pride of his was the cause of the breaking & renting assunder of the order which God had set, according as S. Paul speaketh of it in the fourth to the Ephesians, where he sayth that our Lord Iesus Christ is gone vp into heauen to fill all thinges, and yet in the meane while hath not forsaken his Church. For he hath ordeyned Shepheardes (sayth he) & men meete to teach. And he addeth that that is according to the measure of euerymember, that we might al grow together, and Iesus Christ reigne ouer vs in cheefe place. Eph.2.22. Col.2.10. Ephe.4.10.

Thus doth Saint Paul distribute the offices in such wise, as euery man must haue his portion of them, because there is not any one man ẏ is able to doe all. But this order which ought to be vnuiolable, is rent assunder by the diuelish pryde of the Pope.

And afterward his taile, & the vermin of his clergie haue followed the same: for there is none of them all that mindeth his charge. When they angle for their benefices, doe they consider that Gods calling of them is with condition, that they shall yeeld an account of the soules that are committed to them? There is no talke among them but what a benefice is worth: and anon after, pomp and credite must be matched therewithall: and so they giue themselues to all lycentiousnesse. A man shall see, not onely Byshops, but also Archbishopsand Primates, which passe for nothing but for hunting, or drinking, or playing, or chambering: those are their ordinarie trades. And why? for it neuer came in their thoughtes, that the honour which they haue vsurped, shoulde bee matched with any bond of duetie. And this hath happened, not onely in the Churchmen, but also in all estates.

If Princes nowadaies did mind ẏ charge which they haue taken in hand: thinke you ẏ the whole world should be so turmoyled ẅ warres, & ẏ euery of ry of the would be catching and snatching to inlarge his territories? No: for there is not any one which hath but a countrie of one leage to rule, which findeth not himselfe throughly incumbered, if he haue a regarde of his office and dutie, as well towardes God as towards his subiectes. And yet notwithstanding he that hath a countrie of two hundred leages vnder him, woulde faine subdewe the whole world to him. And why is that? Because he thinketh not vpon the burthen that Moses speakes of here. As who should say, there were not a rule giuen to all such as are in any preheminence or authoritie, which is vttrered & declared of God by ỹ mouth of Moses as of his herault: namely ỹ they be not Idols to sit ouer their people in pompe only: but ỹ they must beare the burthen of the people, which cannot be without an honorable kinde of bondage as is sayd afore.

Also this extendeth euen vnto priuate persons. There is not that man which seeketh not to get still more and more: and when he hath three times as much reuenewe as hee needeth for his housholde, yet is he stil laying of baytes, to ioyne peece to peece. For no man bethinketh himself, How discharge I my selfe of that which God hath giuen me already? I haue goods vnder my hands, I haue an housholde, I ought to occupy my selfe in trayning my wife, my children, and my seruantes in the feare of God: I ought to haue mine eyes alwayes open, to see that nothing be done in my house whereby God may be offended. As touching my goods, I ought to vse them in such wise, as they may be imployed according to Gods will. If I haue aboundance, I ought to relieue such as haue want and neede. Howbeit, no man looketh to this geere, but such as haue goods are as gulfes to swallowe vp all that euer they can finger: there is no other talke with them, but how they may bring all thinges vnder their pawes, so as no man may be succoured at his neede. For all is one with them, so they may make their hand. As for Gods honor, they passe not so much for it, but that they had liuer to be sorted in the world, and to reigne in it at their pleasure. And in the meane while they be still set vpon gathering, and they consider not that in so doing they doe but plunge themselues continually into greater cursednesse.

Wherefore let vs marke well the doctrine that is giuen vs here by the example of Moses: which is, that first of all euery of vs must consider, that when God vouchsafeth to put any goods into our handes, or to aduaunce vs to any degree: hee bindeth vs with the straiter bond, and we haue the harder account to make: to the ende we may learne thereby to holde our selues within the boundes of our owne slender abilitie, whē it pleaseth God to haue it so. Moreouer let vs also haue a continuall eye to our owne infirmitie, so as we may acknowledge that our abilitie is very small: and if it please not God to aduaunce vs, let vs not beare enuy towardes them that are in that daunger, and haue that heauy burthen vppon their shoulders. If they feele it not: it is so much the woorse for them. And for our owne part (as I sayd afore) let vs be contented that our Lord let vs alone sitting as it were vpon the ground, and let vs not couet to climbe higher. Also therewithal let vs haue compassion vppon such as beare the hard burthen, & let vs pray God to giue them strength and might at their neede: for we see that if God let them alone, they must needs be vtterly vndone. And thirdly, if it please God to put vs in any office, let vs be ready to obey him, at leastwise according to our abilitie. Howbeit, let vs not take too much vppon vs, least this olde sayd saw be verified vppon vs, that he which gaypeth too much can hardly holde it. But let vs aduisedly offer our selues vnto God, that he may gouerne vs by his holy spirit, so as euery of vs may doe his duetie, and euery of vs employ himselfe according to his measure and abilitie, referring all our doings to the common weale, to the ende that God may be serued thereby, and our labor may redound to the benefite of the people committed to our charge. Thus ye see in effect what wee haue to marke.

Now must wee also marke this saying of Moses, Choose ye men of wisedome and of good skill, men well eyed, that they may be set ouer you according to your tribes, euen ouer Thousandes, ouer Hundreds, and ouer Fiftes, as wee shall see afterward. Hereby it is shewed vs, that when men are to be chosen to beare office in the common weale, they must be chosen with discretion, and not taken at aduenture whosoeuer can thrust in himselfe first: neither must they be preferred at any mans pleasure for fauor or for some fond brauery: but in such wise as God may ouerrule the choyce, and such men be picked out as are knowen to be meete to occupy the roomes that they be called vnto. And specially wee must obserue that which is rehearsed in the eighteenth chapter of Exodus heretofore alledged: for there Iethro sayth that we must take such men as are stout, fearing God, louers of the trueth, and haters of couetousnesse. Who is he ỹ speaketh this? A poore heathen man, as I haue sayd already: & yet God gouerneth his tongue in such wise, as we cannot haue a better teacher than him, when we be about to choose men to gouerne a people. First of all he requireth men that are stout, such as are not womanish, but haue wherewith to go through with such a charge, and haue both good zeale, courage, and noble mindednesse. Howbeit, forasmuch as without the feare of God all ỹ vertues in man doe turne to euill: behold, Iethro who neuer heard anie one worde of holy scripture, doth notwithstanding perceiue ful wel ỹ it is vnpossible for a man to discharge his duetie in gouerning a people, vnlesse he feare God. If a heathen man could speake after that manner: what a shame is it for vs nowadayes, that wee should haue lesse discretion than he? And yet a man may see with his eyes how the worlde goeth. Haue men this consideration w̄ them when they goe about to choose officers of Iustice, that they will needes haue the feare of God to be the first thing in ỹ partie? True it is that men wil professe feſſe ſo,& euen nature compelleth vs to ſay,ẏ we had neede of men that are wiſe,and ſtout, verily as graunting couertly that there is neither wiſdome nor courage,without ẏ feare of God beare ſway. Againe, to expreſſe the fruites of the feare of God yet the better, Iethro addeth, that there muſt be vprightneſſe and trueth. As if he ſhould ſay, that a man ſhall neuer be meete to gouern, vnleſſe he haue ſoundneſſe in him,ſo as hee be not hollowharted, but walke on with a good cõſcience. And becauſe that brybes doe blinde the eyes of the wiſe, and make good men to ſwarue from vprightneſſe: he ſayth that if we will haue men fit to beare authoritie,they muſt hate couetouſneſſe and deſpiſe the goods of this worlde,ſo as they can finde in their hearts to forbeare thẽ. Seing then that ſuch a leſſon is told vs by a heathen man: I pray you what a ſhame ſhall it be, that we which profeſſe our ſelues to be brought vp in the lawe of God and in his Goſpell, & haue our eares ſo much beaten with it, ſhould ſtill be nouices in the doctrine, or at leaſtwiſe put it ſo ill in practiſe among vs? And yet for all that, if we vſe it not to our profite,it is written to be kept to our great confuſiõ,& to make vs vnexcuſable.

So then, let vs wey wel this ſaying where Moſes exhorteth the people to chooſe men of vnderſtanding and wiſedome, and tryed men. For if a man be put in office but vpon hope, without good knowledge and experience had of him: is it not a defiling of the ſeate of God and of Iuſtice? In deede God reſerueth to himſelfe the ſouereintie ouer all men,as he is alſo worthe to haue:and yet notwithſtanding he wilbe ſerued by mortal men as by his miniſters & officers: and therefore the ſeate of Iuſtice is (as ye would ſay) conſecrated or hallowed vnto him, as ſhall be ſhewed in the next leſſon. Now, there is taking of men at aduenture, and they know not what they ought to doe, nor how to behaue themſelues. Well, ſuch a one muſt needs make a tryal what he can do,& when he is once ſet in his ſeate,he wil haue an eye to himſelfe.yea:Shal he ẏ would not take a Cowheard or a Shepheard into his houſe vpon bare hope,without knowledge or vnderſtanding of him what he is: ſhall he (I ſay)go ſet a man in Gods ſeate, of whom he hath no knowledge,and of whom he hath no experience to iudge what he is? Now then,let vs be well aduized, & foraſmuch as God graunteth vs the grace or rather priuiledge of chooſing officers to gouerne vs, which is not common to all people:in any wiſe let vs not abuſe that gift of God,or els we ſhal be amazed to ſee our ſelues bereft thereof. And ſoothly ẏ very cauſe why ſo many tyrannies are crept into the world, is that all nations haue forgone their freedome,ſo as there is no more election, by reaſon whereof Princes do ſell the offices of Iuſtice,& thinges are ſo out of order as is horrible to ſee.And whereof commeth that, but that when the people had the election in their hands,they abuſed it,& ſo were worthy that God ſhould bereaue them of the honor ẏ he had done them? For is it not as good as a wilful prouoking of Gods wrath,and ſpyting of him, when folke hauing free electiõ, whereas they ſhould chooſe men to ſerue God and to be as his officers,doe in ſtead thereof keepe rowtings in Taiſerns or Alehowſes, and euen as it were in skorne & mockerie of God, chooſe ſuch as are moſt vnthriftes & furtheſt out of order?See ye not how it is a peruerting of all order?To be ſhort,it ſhould ſeeme that men intended to thruſt God out of his ſeat, when they ſet his enemies in it after that ſort,& ſuch as deſpiſe him,& ſuch as ſeeke nothing elſe but to treade his name & Maieſtie vnder their feete.When men deale ſo, is it any wonder that God ſendeth ſuch diſorder into the world as wee ſee there is? Now then, it ſtandeth vs ſo much ẏ more on hand to marke wel this doctrine, where it is ſaide that when God giueth a people libertie to chooſe officers,they muſt not abuſe it, but muſt vſe diſcretion in chooſing of them. Yea and forasmuch as we may often times be deceiued,it behoueth vs to reſort vnto God, ẏ he may giue vs diſcretion & gouerne vs with his holy ſpirite, as though he had poynted them out with his finger whom we ought to chooſe. And ẏ is the cauſe why I ſaid ẏ elections ſhal neuer be wel ordered, except God ouerrule them by his holy ſpirit.

Laſt of al Moſes ſaith, I wil ſet thẽ ouer you to rule you. He ſheweth ẏ God had giuen him authoritie, & yet a man may ſee ẏ he imparted it vnto ẏ people,& ſhewed by his doings,as we haue ſeene afore, ẏ he chalenged not to himſelfe an inordinate power,but acknowledged ẏ God had bound him to the common weale. So then, Moſes hath authoritie & knowes well enough that Gods wil was to preferre him aboue the reſt of ẏ people,& yet doth not he abuſe his right for al that, but referreth all vnto the people. As if he ſhould ſay, I will but onely ſhewe the way how to guide, and in ſo doing I will take the payne to my ſelfe,as for the honor,I giue it ouer vnto you. And the ſame mind ought to be in all good magiſtrates and gouerners of people, ẏ they may be able to maintaine the authoritie that is requiſite: for euen to that end alſo hath God ſet them vp. But howſoeuer the world goe, let them not ſeeke their owne profite,but let them indeuour to make theſelues fit miniſters as nere as is poſſible,alwayes maintaining ẏ chiefe charge ẏ is committed vnto thẽ.

But now let vs come to that which Moſes interlaceth concerning the multitude of ẏ people. Your God (ſaith he) hath increaſed you, in ſuch wiſe that you be now as the ſtarres of the skye, and I beſeech him to increaſe you a thouſand times moe: or els, he will increaſe you a thouſand times more, according as he hath promiſed you.Here Moſes,in alledging the hardneſſe that he had to decide all caſes, doth alſo ſhewe the people Gods bleſſing and grace. And thereby a man may ſee,that his chiefe trauell was to make the people conceiue the benefites ẏ they had receiued at Gods hand: and that is a leſſon which we cannot be put in minde of too often. For on the one ſide wee ſee what vnthankefulneſſe is in vs, how we ſhut our eyes at the benefites that God beſtoweth vppon vs,Not ẏ we lyke not to haue them: but for ẏ we conſider not from whence they come, that we might glorify the giuer of them. And on the other ſide wee abuſe the giftes that wee haue receiued, becauſe wee bethinke not our ſelues ſelues how it is God that hath put them into our handes. Nay, which worſe is, wee ſee how men do ſo vaunt themſelues of them, that Gods glorie is darkened thereby, as though they were not beholden to God at all. And not onely that, but it ſhould ſeeme alſo that they arme themſelues againſt him to bid him battell, for ſhewing of himſelfe ſo bountifull towardes them: and as ſhall bee ſhewed in the two and thirtieth Chapter, they play the ouerpampered Iades, which fall to kicking againſt their maiſters. See (I ſay) how God is vnacknowledged of vs in his benefites. And afterward when wee haue forgotten him, wee growe after a ſort heathenish, and all his giftes are defiled by vs. Sith wee ſee this, let vs conſider that this doctrine cannot bee too often ſet afore vs: namely, that when God chooſeth vs to doe him ſeruice, he bindeth vs to him the more exceedingly. And therefore his opening of his benefites vnto vs, and his ſetting of them before our eyes, is to the ende wee ſhould knowe that he is readie to continue them ſtill towardes vs, if wee let him not through our vnthankfulneſſe. Therefore if we be often told of the free goodneſſe of our God, and it be ſhewed vs how richly he hath powred out his benefites vpon vs: although it ſeeme to be a very common matter, and that we haue heard ynough of it before: yet let vs aſſure our ſelues, it cannot bee ſpoken too much. Wee ſee howe Moſes, who is the true patterne of all Prophets and true miniſters of Gods worde, behaued himſelfe in that caſe. And foraſmuch as he ſtoode ſo much vpon that point: let ſuch as haue the charge of teaching in the Chriſtian Church, bee ſure that they can neuer be too lauiſh in that behalfe: & let all people alſo vnderſtand, that the often putting of them in remembrance of Gods benefits, is not a needeleſſe and vnprofitable doctrine. Marke that for one point.

Deut. 32. 15.

Furthermore Moſeſes intent is that the people ſhould perceiue and haue it manifeſtly prooued, that the great increaſe of them came not of the common order of nature, as we ſee that ỹ world doeth multiply: but that it was a very myracle of God. And for the ſame cauſe doeth he alſo ſet downe the ſimilitude that was behighted to their father Abraham. For God had ſhewed him the ſtarres of the ſkie in a viſion, and ſayde vnto him: thy ſeede ſhall be as the ſtarres of the ſkie. Like as the number of the ſtarres is infinite, ſo ſhall thy ſeede be after thee. Now then to the intent to magnifie Gods grace, and to print it the better in the peoples heartes: Moſes ſayeth thus vnto them: you know what was promiſed to your father Abraham, how that his offſpring ſhould bee in number as the ſtarres of the ſkie. Now therefore, ſee what a multitude is of you. For in very deede it is a wonder, conſidering howe ſmall a number went downe into Egypt. When they went thither they were but one houſhold, and little aboue threeſcore perſons. But when they came out, they were not any longer ſixtie, but welneere ſeuen hundred thouſand, and it was within leſſe than three hundred yeeres, that this nomber was ſo increaſed. For the foure hundred and thirtie yeeres are to bee reckened from the promiſe made vnto the people. And wee ſee that Abraham was long time without child. In the end he had Iſaac, who by all likelyhood ſhould haue bene made away. There was ſome likelyhood that Iacob ſhould be increaſed: he had twelue ſonnes: but what was that in reſpect of ſuch a multitude? So then, Moſes ment purpoſely to declare vnto the people, ỹ their multiplying came of ỹ grace of God, yea euen after an extraordinarie maner, and not after the courſe of nature. And yet notwithſtanding, (which ſhall ſerue for an end) Moſes prayeth vnto God to increaſe the people ſtill, or rather aſſureth the people that he will increaſe them more and more. Although this multitude was a great trouble to Moſes: yet doeth he not grudge at it, but receiueth it as a bleſſing of God ioyfully, and glorifieth him for accompliſhing ſo his promiſe. And therewithall he hath a care to prouide for them by good meanes, ſeeking nothing but that God might be ſerued and honoured, and that the fauour which he had begun to ſhewe to his people, might continue till it were come to full perfection.

Now let vs kneele downe in the preſence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to vouchſafe to make vs ſo to feele them, as we may come to him with true repentance to craue forgiueneſſe of them, and he releaſe them in ſuch wiſe, as wee may ſeeke nothing but to giue ouer our ſelues wholly vnto him, forſaking all the luſtes of our fleſh, and all the vntoward deſires which plucke vs backe to the worlde, and turne vs away from the obeying of righteouſneſſe. And ſo let vs all ſay, Almightie God heauenly father, &c.

On Thurſday the xj. of Aprill. 1555.

The fourth Sermon vppon the firſt Chapter.

16 And I charged then your Iudges, ſaying, Heare your brethren, and iudge vprightly betweene a man and his brother, and betweene the ſtraunger that is with him.

17 You ſhall haue no reſpect of perſon in iudgement, but heare the ſmall as well as the great. Ye ſhall feare no mans countenance: for the iudgement is the Lordes. And the caſe that is too harde for you, bring it before mee and I will heare it.

18 And at the ſame time I commanded you all the things which you ought to doe.

WE haue ſeene already what warning Moſes gaue for the chooſing of men meete to gouerne the people. For (as hath bin declared) if they had taken iudges at all aduenture, it had bin a defiling of Gods ſeate. Therefore in that caſe, it behooued them to vſe good diſcretion. But here Moſes addeth a point which wee ought to marke well. For although he had procured, that ſuch as were choſen were men that feared God, and were indued with ſingular giftes: yet ceaſſeth he not to put them in minde of their duety, and to warne them of the thinges that they had to doe. Wherein wee ſee, that euen the wiſeſt haue neede to be taught, and the vprighteſt and iuſteſt haue neede to bee warned. And therefore if God haue ſet vs in the good way, and beſtowed giftes of his holy ſpirit vpon vs: let vs not thinke that therefore wee haue no neede to bee taught. For wee muſt bee guided euen vnto the ende, and wee knowe that our perfection is not in this world, nor ſo long as wee beare our fleſh about vs, and are conuerſant here beneath. Againe, whom ſocuer God hath honoured by ſetting them in ſtate & degree of preheminence: let them vnderſtand that they haue neede to be told of their duetie, and to bee quickened vp to diſcharge themſelues accordingly.

But let vs come now to that which is conteyned here. The firſt charge that Moſes giueth to them that are ordeyned to bee Iudges and Gouernours, is to heare mens cauſes. Wherein he doeth vs to vnderſtand, that they ought to bee attentiue and diligent to vnderſtande euery mans right. For if a iudge vouchſafe not to heare, howe ſhall he execute his office? Wee knowe that although men doe the beſt they can to iudge aright, yet their frailetie is ſuch as they may miſſe: and if they be negligent too, then muſt all needes goe to confuſion. Therefore it is not without cauſe, that Moſes warneth the Iudges to vnderſtande well mens caſes. And he ſayeth expreſſely, betweene the Iewes and betweene the ſtraungers. As if he ſhould ſay, euery man muſt bee ſuffered to ſhewe his reaſon. Notwithſtanding that the examination and ſifting out of things may now and then procure fauour or hatred: yet the iudge that will doe his duetie well, muſt forget all thinges that may turne him from the right way. And foraſmuch as the ſtraunger hath no vpholder nor ſtay to leane vnto: the iudge muſt ſupply his want. And although he can looke for no reward, no nor for any great thankes at his hand to whom he may doe right: yet let him not forbeare to diſcharge his duetie, for he doeth acceptable ſeruice to God: albeit that there come no rewarde on mens behalfe, God is able ynough to recompence him.

Nowe then, ſuch as are Iuſticers haue their leſſon here in writing: that is to wit, that they muſt maintayne right and equitie towardes all men that are committed to their charge. For (as hath bin declared afore) the office of iuſtice is an honourable ſeruice. They that are ſet in authoritie are not aduaunced to that high eſtate to the intent they ſhould trample their ſubiectes vnder their feete, or make none account of them: but contrariwiſe they bee bounde vnto them, and it is a kinde of ſeruice. For God hath not made principalities for a fewe mens pleaſures, to y^e end that all mankind ſhould be their vnderlings: but for the common welfare and benefit of all men. Then if gouernours vnderſtand not that they be bound by Gods will and by the order of nature, to them of whom they haue the charge: they muſt be faine to yeeld an account vnto God for their abuſing of his gift and of the honour that he beſtowed vppon them. Thus much concerning the firſt point that we haue to marke here.

And herewithall let vs marke alſo, that if they bee ſo greatly bounde vnto men: much more ſtraitly are they bound vnto God. If a man be grieued in a matter of fiue ſhillings or leſſe, and the iuſtice cauſe him not to haue right: we ſee what is ſayd here. But now, if the name of God bee blaſphemed, if his honour bee defaced, if wicked and deteſtable thinges bee done, and they that ſitte in the ſeate of iuſtice and beare the ſworde in their hande withſtand it not, but are careleſſe what iniurie bee done vnto God: are they to bee excuſed? No: for if they ſuffer but a poore man to bee troden done, ſo as he haue but one penny loſſe: they ſhall bee blamed for it before God. But yet much more precious is the Maieſtie of God, and the thing that concerneth his honour and ſeruice. Sith it is ſo, that Magiſtrates bee bounde to miniſter right to euery man, in thinges that are ſmall and in maner of no valew: let vs marke well that they ought in any wiſe to procure the maintenaunce of Gods honor, more carefully without al compariſon, ſpecially when the caſe concerneth the kingdome of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, wherevnto all the whole world is not to bee compared, in as much as Gods glorie ſhineth forth there. And that is the ſecond point which we haue to marke vpon this ſtreine.

Againe, whereas it is ſayde, that the Magiſtrates muſt accept no mans perſon: it betokeneth that they muſt not bee mooued with any mans riches, or pouertie, or byrth, or friendſhip, or any thing elſe. For in the holy ſcripture, this worde Perſon is taken for any qualitie in man, which may purchace him grace and fauour, or diſgrace and diſfauour. When wee ſpeake of a perſon in our common ſpeache, wee meane a man or a woman: but the Scripture meaneth meaneth a more speciall thing: namely that there should no regard be had what maner a one the man is, whether he bee our neighbour, our friend, a riche man able to doe vs good, a man of credit and authoritie able to reuenge himself of vs, or a poore man, a man of no allyance or kinred, or I wote not what else. All these accidentes which serue but to induce vs to liking or misliking of the partie, and to make vs swarue from the right way, are comprehended in the Scripture vnder the worde Person: as if wee should vse the word Vizor. And in very deede, all these accidentes which bleare our eyes and beguile vs to make vs start out of the right way, are but as vizors. If a man come before vs without any qualitie: very well, we would heare him simply, and wee woulde not bee corrupted to iudge amisse. But if there happen any stoppe, by and by wee bee ouerraught, and our reason is so troubled, that wee iudge not any more as wee ought to doe. That therefore is a vizor, which yeeldeth foorth such a qualitie to bee seene in the partie, as maketh vs eyther to fauour him too much, or else to mislike him out of measure, so as wee keepe not an vpright and euen hand betweene the great and the small. And truely Moses declareth the same very well in this text, in that he sayeth, Thou shalt heare the small as well as the great: for it serueth to expound the word Person, and there needeth none other glose from elsewhere. And it is a phrase of speache which wee shall see in other textes hereafter. Therefore it behoueth vs to acquaint our selues with the termes and phrases of the holy Ghost, that the thinges which are contained here may not seeme straunge vnto vs.

Howbeit by the way, that wee may fare the better by the things that are declared here, let vs marke that the chiefe reason and ground of this doctrine, is bicause there is no accepting of persons before GOD. For the same cause ought Iudges to haue a stay of themselues, and to keepe them cleare from all considerations that may thrust them aside, or make them to swarue one way or other: namely (say I) for that they represent the Maiestie of God, in as much as he hath made them his officers. Now then, there is no accepting of persons before God, that is to say, when he iudgeth he hath no respect to the thinges that men regarde, and wherewith they bee drawen too and fro, so as they iudge not vprightly any more, bicause their excessiue affections doe ouermaister them. And this saying, that there is no respect of persons with GOD, extendeth very farre. For when as Saint Peter speaketh of it, first in the tenth of the Actes, and afterward in his Epistle, he sheweth that God chose whom he listed out of the whole world, in so much as he passed not whether they were Iewes or Gentiles. Whosoeuer doeth good (saieth he) shall haue the fauour of God, and as for Circumcision or vncircumcision, they shall none of them both bee made account of. True it is that God must bee faine to looke mercifully vpon vs, before we can do any good. For of our owne nature wee bee vtterly froward, and there can nothing come from vs but all maner of naughtinesse: insomuch that God should hate and abhorre the whole world, and cast vs away euerychone, if hee should tarie till any of vs gaue himselfe to well doing: for our nature driueth vs alwayes vnto euill. But God chooseth his, without any abilitie of deseruing aforehand on their behalfe: and yet notwithstanding, after he hath marked them to bee of the number of his flocke, he auoweth them & loueth them as his children and household folke, yea euen without regarding of what nation or state they be, whether they be riche or poore, or in credit, or indued with any good qualitie and handsomnesse, or any other thing. God then doeth as it were shut his eyes against all the respectes which are had in so great estimation. For he hath an eye to nothing but to soundnesse of heart, he doteth not vpon these vizors that are seene to the eye, according to this saying in an other place, namely that the outward shewes deceiue not him, but that he looketh vpon that which is within. Thus much concerning the first point. 1. Sam. 16. 7.

But wee must apply this texte to the same vse that Moses putteth it: which is, that after the example of God, wee must haue this vnpartialitie in vs, so as wee will not bee drawen one way nor other by the thinges that appeare in men. And this is a very profitable or rather needefull doctrine. True it is that this is spoken expressely to Iudges and gouernours, in as much as God hath taken them neere to himselfe by setting them in his owne seate, and by willing them to execute his office in this worlde: and therefore ought they also to haue the greater care to followe vprightnesse, that they suffer not themselues to bee peruerted by the thinges that are to bee seene in men. But yet for all that, euery man for his owne part ought to take warning to follow Gods example, and to frame himselfe thereafter, according also as Saint Paul sendeth vs thither, when he speaketh of bondmen and of men of bace degree that are easie to bee oppressed, bicause men take leaue to doe euill when they see that a sillie soule cannot reuenge himselfe, and that if he haue any wrong done vnto him he must bee faine to put it vp patiently: by reason wherof they presume ỹ more boldly to say, O, as for him, when I haue done the worst to him that I can, he hath no meanes to hurt mee. Thus are wee the bolder when we see that men are bace & haue no maintenance. But in this case Saint Paul saieth that wee must lifte vp our eyes to heauen, and that forasmuch as there is no respect of persons before God, wee must not thinke wee shall escape vnpunished when we abuse the priuiledge & authoritie that he giueth vs. He then ỹ despiseth his neighbour ought to thinke thus: yet notwstanding, we haue a cõmon iudge in heauen, & although I be now rich & honorable to the worldward, although I be in authoritie & estimation, yet when I come thither, all this geare must ceasse: and although my coũterpartie be now despised, & haue no mã to stãd by him, yet hath he a defender in heaue. Coloss. 4. 1.

Rom. 13. 1. Deut. 10. 17

Act. 10. 34. & 1. Pe. 1. 17

Lo here (say I) what ought to beate downe all pride in vs, to the end that none of vs aduance himselfe, nor take more vpon him than is lawfull, ne thinke he hath leaue to doe euill, vnder colour that our counterparties are of no credite and authoritie. Let vs not tarie till ordinarie Iustice doe redresse our extorsions, or till those whom God hath set in his place to iudge without respect of persons, doe punish vs for committing of some outrage: but let euery of vs remember this lesson here, namely that inasmuch as God regardeth not any outward shewes at al, it behoueth euery of vs also to frame himselfe to the like vprightnesse and indifferencie.

And forasmuch as men do always put vs in feare, so as there spring from thence the sorest and worst temptations that can be to hinder the perfourmance of our duetie: Moses warneth Iudges expresly, not to be afrayde of men. Why? For the iudgement is Gods, sayeth he. Loe here a text well worthy to bee marked. I haue tolde you alreadie, that which experience sheweth too much: that is to wit, that they which otherwise are of good nature, doe neuertheless ouershoote themselues through fearefulnesse. Ye shall see a man in the place of Iustice, who being not euill of himselfe, would that all should goe well, it grieueth him when he seeth any fault, and he could finde in his heart that euery man should brydle himselfe, or else that there should be some good correction when any men haue done amisse: but in the meane whyle, forasmuch as he seeth that there will be some grudging and misliking of the matter, [he thinketh thus with himselfe:] What? Shall I prouoke euery man to anger against mee? That man hath kinsfolke and friends, and such a one is able to be euen with me if I trouble him. Againe forasmuch as naughtinesse reigneth euerywhere, and wicked folke haue their full scope, and are most in number: I shall bring all the world in my top, & if I minde to discharge my duetie, I must not set my selfe against two or three onely, but I see that all are corrupt, and there is no man but he resisteth weldoing. They therefore which otherwise feare God and woulde minister right and iustice when they sit in iudgement, are letted through fearefulnesse. If they stand in awe of men, they shall surely bee shaken downe. And why? Bicause they bee not grounded vpon the foundation that Moses layeth here, namely that the iudgement is Gods. They knowe not (say I) that they offer great dishonour and reproche vnto God, when they preferre men before him. For he that swarueth from his duetie for feare, esteemeth mē more than God. Why so? A Iudge ought to consider, that God hath set him in the place where he is, with another maner of countenance than other simple creatures. For he that sitteth in the seate of Iustice, sitteth in the roome of God, and is as his Lieuetenant. A Iudge therefore ought to consider that: and if he doe not, he forgetteth God, whom he was bound to serue. It is all one as if a man being feeed by his maister to doe him seruice, knoweth not whether there bee a maister in the house or no, but falles to singing and playing, and eateth & drinketh at his houres, and sleepeth when he listeth, without hauing any care or regarde of his maister. Doeth not the seruaunt that forgetteth his maister after that fashion, deserue to haue men to spitte in his face? Nowe then, if Iudges consider not of whome they holde their estate and dignitie: their vnthankefulnesse or rather blockishnesse is too too shamefull & beastly. Againe, if Iudges knowing themselues to bee set vp of God, doe neuertheless shrinke from their duetie for feare of men, and bee stopped and held backe from doing the things which they knowe they ought to do, bicause men are against them: what yeelde they vnto God? what estimation haue they of his power? And yet for al that, God hath taught them their lesson, and promised them to stande by them, and to bee their defence. Seeing it is so, ought they not to make a bucklar of his inuincible power, and to fight lustily though al the world should step vp against them? Is not God mightie ynough to ayde them and succour them, if they trusted thereunto, so as they woulde rest vpon it, and plucke vp a liuely courage and constancie to goe on in the right way? Yes: but else, if they bee moued by such temptations to swarue from their duetie: let them assure themselues that God wil leaue them destitute of his power. Thus then wee see, that this streine (as I saide afore) importeth a very profitable doctrine.

But yet wee must note also, that this perteyneth not only to them that are in authoritie: but also to all men in generall. For there is as it were a comparison made betweene God and mortall men. And why? For nothing beguileth vs more, than that wee make too great reckening of men, and in so doing eyther diminishe God, or abolish his highnesse. As oft as men come in our minds, God is no body in comparison: insomuch as if wee put him in ballaunce, hee seemeth lighter than a feather: whereas men doe alwayes keepe their full weight with vs. Surely if wee were about to compare other men with our selues, wee coulde set them light ynough: for euery of vs woulde make much of himselfe. Or if wee were to consider one man with another: looke whom wee lyked off, he should giue greatest glosse to disgrace the thinges that were to bee mislyked in the contrarie partie: insomuch that wee say, tushe what is he? he is no body. For why? Wee woulde make farre greater estimation of the other. Thus ye see howe wee could skill to disgrace men. But come we once to GOD, he must bee as good as cast downe, and men must bee set vp in his place. Lo howe spytefull and frowarde wee bee. So much the more therefore doeth it stande vs on hand to mark this saying, where it is declared ỹ if God come in place, it is not for vs to make any reckening of men. For it is a great trayterousnesse that men or creatures shoulde bee in such estimation, that Gods right should bee defaced, or any thing bee plucked from him. And yet for all that, we see it is too common a thing, & it hindereth vs that we cannot serue GOD as we ought to doe. True it is that euery man is turned away by his owne luſtes, inſomuch that although wee haue none other to withſtande vs, yet haue wee inwarde incumberances of our owne, and our nature is ſo ſinfull, as wee cannot in any wiſe applie our ſelues to doe good. But yet is there this inconuenience more in it, that aſſoone as another man comes in place, by and by wee bee at our wittes ende. I would faine doe my duetie (ſay we), but what? Then muſt I purchaſe me ſuch a mās diſpleaſure. Wee ſee nowe adayes that a man cannot pleaſure men, except hee doe as the worlde doeth, and followe the byaſſe of other men. And againe, beholde heere my neighbour, hee will alwayes bee at deadly foode with mee, if I faſhion not my ſelfe to his manner of dealing: beholde, ſuch a man is my friende, I muſt needes beare him out. Hence come all priuie packings and other lewde trickes, namely that euery man deſpiſeth God, to pleaſe his neighbor or his friend. For whē vices reigne, as whoredome, drunkenneſſe, and other diſorders, ſo as euery man is infected by ỹ example of his neigh bor, & one catcheth diſeaſes of another: what is the cauſe of al this? It is for that we aduaunce men too much, and conſider not that it were meete for vs to abaſe both great and ſmall, and to frame our ſelues earneſtly to the will of God.

Now therfore let vs bethinke vs ſo much the better of this doctrine that is ſet down here, not only for Iudges but alſo for all men in common: That is to witte, that foraſmuch as the iudgement is Gods, we muſt not in any wiſe be ſhaken any more by mē, but giue God his preheminēce, & thruſt downe all conſideration of men, ſo as if men vex vs wee ſet our ſelues againſt them, and be not ſo lewd as to rob God of that which belōgeth vnto him, to furniſh creatures therewithal. Thus yee ſee what we haue to remember heere.

Moreouer alſo, whereas it is ſaide that the Iudgement is Gods: that ſpeech importeth another good leſſon. True it is that Moſes ſpeaketh heere of the roome that Iudges and Magiſtrates holde: as if hee ſhoulde ſay, they haue it not in feeſimple or as a Lordſhip of inheritance, but as an office: and God in ſetting them in that degree of honour, reſigned not his owne maieſtie to ſay, Sirs, you ſhall reigne with abſolute power, and I will henceforth bee no bodie. God therefore, when hee did thus ſet men in office, did not for all that diminiſh his owne eſtate. For hee holdeth ſtill the ſouereine dominion ouer all men, and they ought to bee but as inſtruments of his power, and conſequently to ſerue him, and to referre all thinges vnto him. If this doctrine were well knowen, Kinges and Princes woulde not lorde it ſo lycentiouſly nowadayes as they doe, and men ſhoulde haue ſeene another manner of modeſtie in them at all times than is now ſeene. For they that are aduaunced vnto honour, doe beare themſelues on hande that the worlde was made for them, and for their faire eyes (as they ſay): and there vpon they reiect all informations, lawes & ſtatutes, and ſhake off the yoke from their necks, as though they helde all things at their own ſwindge, and God is no body at al with them. But yet in this text Moſes telleth them, that be they neuer ſo great kings & princes, their ſuperioritie ought not to diminiſh the authoritie of God, that his glory ſhould not continue alwayes vnappaired. Why ſo? For what elſe are the princes of the world than Gods officers, to the end ỹ by their meanes he might be obeyed, and al men do him homage, ſo as the higheſt ſhould begin & giue example to the loweſt? Seeing then that the iudgement is Gods: they that peruert the order of gouernment when they be called to do their duetie, ſhalbe double blamed. And therfore ſhal Kings and Princes and al ſuch as are in roome of Iuſtice, haue a verie harde account to make. For if they do amiſſe, they be not bound alonely vnto men, neither haue they offēded creatures onely: but they haue violated the maieſtie of God, and defiled his ſeate. Why ſo? Becauſe iudgement belongeth vnto him, and he reſerueth it to himſelfe.

But like as it is ſaid of the execution of Iuſtice: ſo let vs note that it belongeth alſo to the ſpirituall gouernement which god hath ordeined in his Church: yea and this doctrine ought to bee kept more ſtraitly in that reſpect, than in the earthly gouernment. Why? When God ordaineth kings, Princes and Magiſtrates: there withall he giueth them authoritie to make Lawes. True it is, that they ought to learne them in his ſchoole, according as it is ſaid that lawes and ordinances which are made in commō weales, do take their force of Gods wiſedome. But yet for al that, ciuil or politike lawes are made by men. Yet notwithſtanding God hath not reſigned any thing, ỹ he ſhould not hold ſtil the ſouereine dominion ouer men, I meane euen in reſpect of outward policy. And as touching the ſpiritual gouernment of the Church, we know that God wilbe heard, and that he wil haue his word obeyed aboue all things, ſo as men may not take vpon them to make laws & ſtatutes, but muſt hold themſelues contēted with that which he commandeth them. For the rule that is conteined in his word is the very perfection it ſelf. Therfore when we go vp into the pulpit, it is not to vtter our owne dreames and dotages. why ſo? For God reſerueth the maſterſhip and chiefe ſuperioritie ſtill to himſelfe, ſo as hee will haue mē to receiue his word, to reſt wholly thervpon without any ſwaruing at all from it. Seeing that God hath once ſet it downe ſo: it behoueth vs to reſt vpon it. Had this bin well obſerued in the world, there ſhould not be ſo great troubles & variances at this day as there are. Whence come the variances that are betwixt vs & the papiſts, but of ỹ men haue not reſerued vnto god ỹ thing that belongeth vnto him, but haue framed articles of faith, lawes, and ordinances at their owne pleaſure, & in the ende are come to this horrible confuſion of mingling the inuentions of mens braines with the purenes of the holy ſcripture, ſo as they haue marred all things? And wherof elſe commeth it, that euen at this day, the papiſtes fight ſtill for the maintenance of that tyrannie, that a man might not knowe God from his Apoſtles as they themſelues ſay, by which common prouerbe of theirs they condemne themselues and cut their owne throtes? Wherefore let vs marke well this lesson wherein it is saide that the iudgement is Gods, that is to say, that the superioritie which men haue, in what degree so euer it bee, is not to diminish Gods preheminence, but rather to maintaine it. What then are the states of honour and all the dignities of the worlde? They are all meanes to bring to passe that God may reigne ouer vs, and to make all men to stoope to him, and to knowe him and obey him in all cases. So then, what ought kings, Emperours, and Magistrates to doe? They ought to see that God be exalted and magnified as he is worthie, and that all their subiectes doe him homage, and they themselues must shewe them the way. Againe, what ought schoolemasters and fathers to doe, and all such as haue anie household [or seruauntes]? Euerie of them ought to consider on his owne behalfe howe greatly God hath inhonored him? He that hath children ought to consider, thou holdest Gods place in this roome of a father, but yet hath not GOD stripped himselfe to clothe thee with his honour. What then? He is the father still, both of mee and of my children, therefore must I indeuer that he may be obeyed. The master must thinke thus: Is the mastership mine? No: but it is Gods, who hath graunted mee that prerogatiue vndeserued on my parte. It hath pleased him to put this household vnder my gouernement, but yet for all that, it is he that must rule me, yea both me and all that are vnder my subiection. After this manner ought wee to put this doctrine in vre.

And when wee haue passed through all the states of the worlde, wee must also come to the spirituall gouernement of the Church. Therefore let such as are ordeined to preach Gods worde, vnderstande that God hath not appointed them to set foorth their owne dotages, and to speake what they list: but to thinke vppon Gods superiorite, specially seeing that our Lord Iesus Christ is nowe declared to bee the heade of his Church, according to the euerlasting mastership which God gaue him ouer vs, in saying, Heare ye him. Seeing it is so, let such as haue the charge of teaching in the Church and are shepherdes and ministers, vnderstande that they must not seeke to aduance themselues, nor to be heard, nor to bring the people in a mase with their owne inuentions: but [they must indeuer] that God may alwayes haue the ouerhand, and be obeyed, and his worde bee receiued purely and simplie without any mingling or adding to it.

Mat. 17. 5. & Luke. 9. 35.

And like as they that are in that vocation and office, ought to haue muldnesse, and lowlinesse, that they vsurpe not the authoritie which God hath reserued to himselfe, yea and giuen to his onely sonne: so all Christians ought to thinke thus with themselues. Wherefore come wee to Sermons? Wherefore is there order in the Church? It is to the ende that GOD shoulde gouerne vs, and that wee shoulde haue our Lorde Iesus Christ to bee as our soueraine teacher, and that wee shoulde be his flocke to bee led by him. Nowe this cannot bee done, vnlesse we hearken to his voyce, and discerne it from the voyces of straungers, so as wee be not caried too and fro like wauering Reedes with euerie winde, but stande fast setled vppon the pureneſſe of the holy Scripture, and that our faith be so grounded therevppon, as the diuell may neuer shake it downe. Loe (say I) howe we ought to applie this doctrine to our vse, namely that the iudgement and authoritie is Gods. For if wee doe so, wee may well see many contrarieties in this world, men may assayle vs with many troubles, they may well set themselues against vs, and they may well speake against vs: but yet shal we stil keepe on our pace. And why? for GOD is not variable. Although the diuell keepe neuer so great a sturre here beneath, yet is Gods purpose alwayes vnchaungeable. And so is ment by this that is saide of the truth, that it dureth for euer. It is not such a trueth as is hidden or shutte vp in heauen: but it is saide expresly that it is the same truth which God vttereth to vs by his worde, as he witnesseth dayly. Sith it is so, let vs looke vp to GOD, and yeelde him the gouernement that is due vnto him, that hee may reigne ouer vs: and then shal our faith bee vnuariable, though the diuell trouble and turmoyle all thinges vpsidedowne, and sturre vp neuer so much strife and contention. Thus you see howe we must put the doctrine in vre that is conteined heere.

Nowe furthermore Moses saith expresse, that if there were any harde case, it should be brought vnto him. And afterwarde hee addeth for a conclusion, that hee had commaunded them all the things which they ought to doe. As touching the harde cases, Moseses reseruing of them to himselfe, was neither for desire of praise nor for pride, but because they belonged to his vocation: hee knewe that God had ordeined him to the same purpose. And therefore let vs not bee afraide to keepe still that which God hath giuen vs, if wee execute the charge that hee hath committed vnto vs. For why? like as a man must not esteeme of himselfe, so must hee not surmise, oh, this is hatefull, it may be ill taken, it is subiect to slaunder: but wee must followe that which God commaundeth vs. And therefore let vs not take any thing vppon vs of our owne heade, that is to say, let vs not bee rashe to say, this belongeth to mee, for ambition tickleth vs continually, and euerie of vs would haue I wote not what a priuiledge: wherefore let vs beware of such folly. Yet notwithstanding like as there shoulde no such boldnesse reigne in vs, as to vsurpe or take any thing vppon vs: so on the contrarie part, when GOD will haue any office or charge laide vppon vs, it becommeth vs to take it. True it is that men may chaunce to speake euill of vs for it, but wee must ouerpasse that, and keepe on our pace still. That is the thing which Moses hath shewed vs heere by his owne example.

And in his owne person, hee hath set vs as it were

were a looking glasse before our eyes, to shewe vs that we must followe the order that God hath set, and not swarue from it at all. If wee doe not so, it is an vntolerable vnthankefulnesse. We knowe what infirmitie is in our selues: not onely in some one point but in all things are wee so fraile as is pitie to see. But our Lorde hath well prouided for all our needes, and giuen vs remedies for them. As for example, hee hath giuen vs meate and drinke to maintaine this transitorie life of ours, hee hath ordeined Magistracie to gouerne vs, hee hath ordeyned the ministerie of his worde to rule our soules, and hee hath giuen singular giftes of grace to seuerall persons, so as they bee able to giue vs counsell, and to comfort and incourage their neighbours, and to helpe them at their neede. What is to be done then? Whensoeuer wee bee cumbered or in any perplexitie, let vs looke that wee vse the meanes of remedie that GOD giueth vs, yea and to vse them alwayes in his feare. For wee may bee abused, as wee haue seene. What is to bee done then? We must not turne aside nor stoppe for such as haue neither right nor reason in them, but euerie of vs must further himselfe by such meanes as God giueth him, euen as though hee were going to God himselfe. And that will make vs to vse the order of Lawe lawefully, which thing men doe not nowe. And it is a point well worthie to bee marked, to wit, howe men may repulse iniuries, and howe they ought to behaue themselues, when any of vs findeth himselfe intangled or in perplexitie, let vs pray to God to direct vs. If wee did so, surely wee would not goe to lawe but with trembling, and wee woulde say in our selues, I goe now to present my self as it were before my God. But howe goe men to it noweadayes? Rather to seeke a cloke for all naughtinesse: so as there is neither craft, nor spite, nor any other wickednesse which is not to bee founde there. And why? For without hauing any regarde of God, there is nothing thought vppon but howe to beguile men, or howe to winde them in by some wicked practise. So much the more neede therfore haue wee to marke well what is saide here, that is to wit, that according as God hath ordeined states and degrees among men: so must men dispose things and direct them by the order that God hath set and established.

And for a conclusion let vs also wey well this which Moses addeth in the ende: namely, that hee had taught the Iewes all thinges which they had to doe. When hee saith so, it is all one as if hee shoulde protest, that they coulde not but know, that they sinned not through ignorance, neither coulde say, I tooke it to haue beene otherwise, I knewe not what was to bee done. You knowe (saieth Moses) there is no let but in your selues, for I for my parte haue beene faithfull to Godwarde: since the time that hee did put mee in truste to instruct you, I haue taught you as hee commaunded mee: nowe therefore you cannot haue any excuse to hide you withall. And if Moses had such a care to teach the people in respecte of the earthly gouernment: no doubte but hee was yet more diligent in teaching them the doctrine of saluation. That is the first poynt whiche wee haue to note. Doth Moses tell vs, that hee did not conceale nor hyde any thing from the Iewes, in the thinges that concerned their worldlie dueties, for the mainteyning of some order and humaine honestie among them? Then is it much more likely that hee first preached to them the grace of God, and afterwarde shewed them the rule of good conuersation and there withall tolde them of the couenant of saluation, which GOD had made with his people. It is certaine that nothing was concealed in that behalfe, but that he vsed an exquisite diligence, so as hee lefte not the Iewes in doubt without due warrant how to behaue themselues to Godward.

Nowe then, if Moses discharged his duetie after that sort, wee must conclude that the Lawe was a sufficient doctrine to instructe the people, and that hee vsed not anie shiftes to carie them heere and there. Afterwarde came the Prophetes, which added yet a greater lighte. Last of all, the Gospell was preached through the whole worlde. Nowe then, can wee say that our Lorde hath not taught vs sufficiently, and that all the Prophetes, and the Apostles, yea and Iesus Christ himselfe haue giuen vs but halfe an instruction? Can wee say so? No: that were too vilanous a blasphemie. Nowe therefore, let vs haue our eares open to hearken to our GOD, and he will be a good schoolemaster to vs, and let vs bee contented with the doctrine that is conteyned in the holy Scripture. For there wee haue so perfect wisedome, as no fault can bee found with it. Consider well therefore what we haue to marke vppon this streine, to the ende that euerie of vs may indeuer to profite dayly more and more. And if there bee any ignorance in vs, let vs assure our selues it is through our owne fault, in that we bee as blinde wretches, vntill God haue inlightened vs through his grace. Therefore it behoueth vs to pray him to open our eyes by his holy spirite. And on the other side, let vs not stop our eares against the thinges that God speaketh, nor pretende ignorance to excuse our naughtinesse. But seeing that God telleth vs, that he hath shewed vs all thinges by his worde which wee ought to doe: let vs holde vs to it without coueting any nouelties, and without fond curiositie, for wee shall neuer scape from him; and therefore let vs not be gadding to receiue euerie newe toy that is offered vnto vs. And so let vs ponder well the thinges that wee haue to marke vppon this text, to the ende that for asmuch as GOD hath nowe giuen vs a confirmation of his Lawe and of his Prophisies, and directed vs to the right marke: wee may take the Gospel [alwayes] for our guide, in wayting till he haue gathered vs together into his kingdome.

to the ende we may returne to him with true repentance, and being aſhamed of our ſelues flee for refuge to his mercy: and that foraſmuch as we knowe hee hath ſet it forth moſt largely and abundantly in our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, wee may reſort to him the more boldely, ſeeking continually for the great treaſures which he hath prepared for vs in his kingdome. And [beſeeching him] to guide vs ſo hencefoorth with his holie ſpirite, as we may liue in his feare, framing our ſelues vnto his righteouſneſſe, and ſeruing him according to his holie will, ſo that although wee might be hindered by the ſtumblingblockes and cumberances which wee ſee in the worlde, yet wee may not ceaſe to followe our good GOD, whither ſoeuer hee calleth vs, notwithſtanding that the worlde bee blinded with neuer ſo outragious confuſion and diſorder. That it may pleaſe him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs &c.

On Fryday the xij. of Aprill. 1555.

The fift Sermon vpon the firſt Chapter.

19 Then departed we from Horeb, and went through the wilderneſſe which is great and terrible, as you haue ſeene, along the way of the hil of the Amorrhytes, as the Lord our God had commaunded vs, and we came to Cades barne.

20 And I ſaid vnto you, come ye to the Hil of the Amorrhytes which the Lord our God doth giue vs.

21 Behold, the Lord thy God ſetteth the Land before thee: Goe vp and poſſeſſe it as the Lord the God of thy fathers hath ſaide vnto thee. Shrinke not, neither be afraide.

IN this text Moſes rehearſeth, after what ſort he had exhorted the people to take poſſeſſion of the Lande that God had promiſed them, and by what meanes he would haue incouraged them to it. And that is to the ende that the people ſhoulde knowe their owne vnthankefulneſſe and naughtineſſe, in reiecting the benefite that was offered vnto them, and in that they obeyed not God, but were giuen too much to their owne ſenſualitie. This then which Moſes doth heere, is as it were an vpbraiding of the Iewes, to ỹ end they might knowe howe it was long of none but themſelues, that they inioyed Gods bleſſing no ſooner: and that they might afterwarde yeelde themſelues more pliable, and not bee ſo wilfull any more in their owne frowardneſſe, but ſimplie ſubmit themſelues to God as ſoone as they ſhoulde heare him ſpeake. That is in effect the intent of Moſes.

Neuertheleſſe hee interlaceth alſo another matter therewithall: which is, that he telleth the people they be ſo much the leſſe to be excuſed, becauſe they had had experience of Gods goodneſſe, in that he had led them with his mightie hande. For, their paſſing through the horrible and dreadfull deſert, was not without the aſſiſtance of a ſingular and vnaccuſtomed power of God: where as they notwithſtanding forgetting the goodneſſe which they had felt, and which they ought to haue borne in minde for euer, did grudge at God, and became wilfull, and would not goe forwarde when he was redie to haue led them to the end. And that is the cauſe why Moſes ſaith expreſly, that they had ſeene. As if hee ſhould ſay, you wrought euen againſt your naturall ſenſes, when you went not on as your God commaunded you. The reaſon is this. So long as you ſuffered your ſelues to bee gouerned by his hand, and ſo long as you walked in the way that hee appointed you: did you not euen ſee with your eyes, that hee made you to ouercome all hardneſſe? Was not the wildernes wherthrough you paſſed, a verie gulfe? And yet notwithſtanding you ſcaped out of it. And how came that to paſſe, but by the wonderfull working of your God among you? Seeing ỹ you heard his voyce, you were ſure that hee was come among you. Then ſaid I vnto you, now is there no more for vs to doe, but to inioy the lande which our God hath aſſigned to vs for our heritage. Goe, let vs fight, our God hath promiſed it vs, and hee will not diſappoint vs. Wee knowe he hath wrought mightily for vs hitherto, and ſurely he will goe through with his worke. Theſe and ſuch other things did I alledge vnto you: And yet you followed not them as you ought to haue done. Wherefore acknowledge your vnthankefulneſſe in that you refuſed to enter into the inheritance which God had promiſed to your fathers, and which he hath prepared for you.

Nowe by the way, the firſt good leſſon that wee haue to gather here, is that foraſmuch as God hath alreadie vttered his goodnes towards vs in making vs to feele his bleſſing: wee be the more worthy to be blamed, if we reſt not wholly vpon him, or put not our whole truſt in him to walk on boldly & without douting. For although God had neuer ſhewed himſelfe to our experience: yet ought wee to giue credite to his holie worde. And it is good reaſon that we ſhoulde do him the honour to beleeue whatſoeuer he ſaith or ſpeaketh vnto vs: for as much as he is faithfull, and his worde is better tryed than either gold or ſiluer, as it is ſaide in the Pſalme. And there- Pſal. 12. 7.

therefore if there were no more but Gods vttering of his worde with his owne mouth: it were ynough to condemne the whole world for their disobeying thereof. But seeing that God hath confirmed his sayings by deeds, and hath shewed vs as it were to our eyesight, that his making of his promises vnto vs is not in vaine, but hee hath made vs to feele the thinges with our hands; so as we know in effect what his power is, and that it neuer faileth those which are his: if after all this teaching we fall to checking still, and be so stiffenecked as we will not bow to submit our selues to the thinges that hee speaketh, nor haue any will to obey him: I pray you doth not the greater condemnation lye vppon vs? What is to be done then? Let euery of vs consider aduisedly the good turnes that God hath done him, & set him marke them and note them that hee may beare them in minde. Verie well, God hath succored mee at such a pinch, I haue felt his helpe in such a case, I haue beene ayded at his hande, and he hath made me to perceiue his mightie power after such and such fashion. After this manner must wee make rehearsall of Gods benefites, andof his helping of vs all the time of our life. And after as hee hath vttered himselfe vnto vs, so must we be the more confirmed to trust to his promises, and to rest wholly vpon them. Herewithal let vs be stablished in inuincible constancie, to goe which way soeuer he leadeth vs, without feare of any distresse. Why so? For my God which hath neuer forsaken me to this day, will not giue me ouer now. As I haue felt [hertofore] that he giueth strength to those that are his: so am I sure that hee will reach me his hande and succour me still. So then there is no more for me to doe, but to commit my selfe vnto him. I see that this thing & that thing may cumber me, there are a number of temptations which may make me turne heade: but yet forasmuch as my God hath succored me hitherto at my neede: I doubt not but hee will doe the like vnto the ende. Thus yee see that the way for vs to eschewe the blame of vnthankefulnesse, is to call Gods benefits oftentimes to our remembrance, thereby to strengthen our selues still in trust that he will neuer faile vs vnto the end. Also this wil serue to make vs ouercome al temptations: and although the diuel haue neuer so many meanes and stoppes to turne vs out of the right way, yet shall we not cease to goe on still. And why? Because the hope which wee shall haue gathered, of Gods former making of vs to feele his goodnesse, will serue to carie vs ouer all tempestes in the middes of the sea: it will be as a boate, or as a shippe, or as a bridge to conuey vs safely ouer. To bee short, wee shall haue wherewith to strengthen vs continually, so wee shutte not our eyes at the assistance which God sheweth vs dayly. Thus you see generally what wee haue to gather vppon this saying of Moses. A non the matters shall bee layde out more particularly by similitudes.

Let vs proceede to the things that he addeth: namely, that being come to the hill of the Amorrhytes, he saide, Let vs possesse the Lande which the Lord our God and the God of our fathers promised vs. For it is here before vs, that is to saye, at our commaundement, as hee had saide afore, for this is but a repetition of that which wee haue seene already. And heere Moses setteth forth the promise that God had made vnto the people, to the end to assure them of the Land in such wise, as they shoulde bee out of all doubt that it was their owne. And why? Because it had bene promised them of God. Beholde (saith he), thy God ment not to lye to thee, nor to beguile thee: and therefore thou maist assure thy selfe, that the thing which hee hath spoken shalbe performed. Marke that for one point.

Neuertheless, to the ende that the people may the better vnderstande, that they were not to possesse the lande for their owne deserts sake: hee telleth them expressly, It is the God of your fathers that doth it. For the Lande was promised as well to Abraham as to Isaac and Iacob, before the Iewes which then liued, were borne. Therby then are they put in minde, that they had not deserued such a benefite at Gods hande, but that it proceeded wholly of his free goodnesse. And so much the more were they to blame, in that they had felt such experience of Gods goodnesse, and their sinne also was so much the heinouser, in that they acknowledged not the mercie that he had vsed towards them. That then is the effect of Moseses meaning heere.

But we haue to note herewithal, that although the promise was then growen olde, yet had it not lost his force: neither ceased it to liue still, though Abraham, Isaac, and Iacob were deade. True it is that the promise which had beene made, was not spoken to them that were presently aliue at this time: [they to whome it was spoken] that is to wit, Abraham, and the Patriarks, were all deceased. But Gods promise & his truth die not with men, they haue not the course of a transitoritie and flightfull life as wee haue. Therefore let vs marke well, that whereas God had promised the lande to Abraham, for him, his heires, and successors that shoulde descende of his race: although Abraham was rotten in the earth, and they that followed him together with all the Patriarks were consumed to powder and dust: yet the worde that GOD spake continued still, and forewent no whit at al of his force. This (I tell you) is a point which wee ought to marke well. For it is nowe long ago since the Lawe was giuen: so that if we haue an eye to the oldenesse thereof, it will seeme to vs to bee an outworne and deade thing. About a two thousand yeares after that, the Gospel was published to the worlde: and wee see that manie yeares, yea many hundred yeares are passed since. Then if wee shoulde measure Gods trueth by time: wee might thinke it to bee a thing as good as buried and quite and cleane forgotten.

Moreouer they that first caryed the Gospell abrode, are deade long agoe: but yet must we beare in minde, that Gods trueth is euerlasting, and that although men be corruptible and passe and vanish away: yet the doctrine of salvation abydeth alwayes vnappayred, so as the force thereof abateth not at all. That is it (say I) which we haue to beare in minde. For although it was in olde time that GOD spake to Moses and the Prophetes, and although it bee nowe long agoe since the Gospel was delyuered to the Apostles: yet must we receiue the doctrine thereof nowadayes, as being in full force still. And that so much the rather, in respect of this saying of the Apostle, that our Lorde Iesus Christe hath made the way fresh by his bloude. They that liued vnder the Lawe and the Prophetes ought not to haue despised the trueth that had beene manifested to their fathers, though it was done long time before: and yet did not God discouer it so openly to them as hee doth to vs. It is not for nought then that the Apostle saieth, that the way which Iesus Christ made, is freshe. And why sayes hee so? His meaning is, that the bloude of our Lorde Iesus Christ cannot drye nor putrifie, but is alwayes freshe in remembrance before God, to the ende that wee shoulde bee assured of his trueth, which hee hath sealed with his death and passion. Seeing then that we haue such a pledge, we ought to be so much the forwarder to receiue Gods truth, forasmuch as wee perceiue that the force and vertue thereof dureth for euer.

Heb. 10,20.

Nowe must wee marke further howe Moses saieth heere, Thy God hath promised thee the lande, It is before thee, possesse it. By these wordes he betokeneth, that wee must rest wholely vppon that which God saith, and not stande scanning after our owne fancies. For if men content not themselues with the thinges that God speaketh to them: where shall they seeke for greater certeintie? Or when they haue sought it, where shall they finde it? But it is an offering of too greate wrong to our GOD, when wee bee not satisfied with his vttering of his will, and with his warranting of the same vnto vs. For if thereuppon wee bee still wauering and doubtfull: what else is such vnbelicfe, but a replying against Gods trueth as though hee were not faithful, or as though he went about to abuse vs by alluring vs with vaine hope? So then let vs marke well, that all our life long wee must content our selues with Gods worde, and when we haue it wee must followe it without seeking any further.

For looke howe many doubtes and mistrustes wee conceiue, so many ouerthwart nippes and priuie vpbraydings doe wee giue vnto GOD, as who shoulde say there were no certaintie in his saying. But wee knowe that nothing is more peculiar to him than his trueth. And so (as much as in vs lyeth) wee make it a thing of nothing. Therefore it is a verie profitable warning when hee saieth, The Lorde thy God hath promised thee the Lande. For hee speaketh still in generall, meaning that we must all our life long hold this rule of sticking simply to the word of God. Anon the things shalbe laide foorth particularly, as I saide afore.

But let vs marke well, that Moses hauing alledged Gods promise, and hauing saide that the Lande was at the peoples commaundement, because GOD ment not to fayle in the performance of the thing that hee had once promised: addeth afterwarde, Enter into it and take possession of it. Wherein hee sheweth vs that although GOD performe in vs al that hee hath saide: yet must not wee on our side bee idle, nor bee as blockes of wood, but wee must offer our selues to his seruice. For albeit that wee cannot stirre one finger to doe wel: yet hath GOD made vs instrumentes whereby hee will worke.

Therefore wee must goe forwarde when hee commaundeth vs, and wee must indeuer to apply all our members and wits to obey him. True it is (as I saide) that men are vtterly vnprofitable, yea and that their will goeth cleane backe from that which God commaundeth: but yet for all that, God ceaseth not to giue vs willingnesse, and when hee hath giuen vs willingnesse, hee giueth vs also performance, as saint Paul auoucheth to the Philippians: and therewithall hee maketh vs to doe it with feare and carefulnesse. When as Saint Paul saith, Doe ye, and also, It is God that doeth: those two thinges seeme to bee contraries: but they bee not. For Gods working is in such wise, as hee imputeth to himselfe the thinges that hee doth in vs: and yet for all that, hee will not haue vs to bee slothfull and to fall a sleepe, but that euerye of vs should indeuour himselfe. Let vs learne then that whensoeuer God promiseth vs any thing, it is his office to accomplishe the whole.

Neuertheless he will haue vs to take paynes and to straine our selues, yea euen vs which are vtterly vnprofitable. And hauing giuen vs his power, hee will haue vs indeuour to make the thing auailable which he hath bestowed vppon vs, and to make it to bee profitable. That then is the thing which we haue to note here.

Howbeit, there withall there is also the conclusion which Moses maketh: namely when as hee saith, Feare not, bee not dismayed. And hereby hee doth vs to vnderstande, that although we bee armed and fenced with Gods promises, so as wee ought to bee sufficiently resolued, that hee will guide vs vnto the ende: yet shall wee haue manie occasions to make vs grudge and repyne, so as we might swarue aside from the right way, or vtterly forsake it, if we had not constancie to ouercome all the stoppes and lettes that the diuell thrusteth in our wayes: for of nature we be fearefull. True it is that in many things we be but too hardie. When any fond thing is to be attempted foolishly: in that case men neede not to be hartened, for they be but too bold already, to attempt this and that, & to mount aboue the cloudes as thee say. But when GOD shoulde be followed whithersoeuer hee calleth vs: our eyes runne heere and there, vp and downe, wee bee at our wittes ende, yea and if a flye doe but whiske before our eyes or a strawe stirre at our feete: by and by wee are at a stoppe. Nowe seeing wee haue this vice in our nature, let vs determine to fight on al ſides againſt this fõd fearefulneſſe, to the ende wee bee not helde backe from following God whitherſoeuer hee commaundeth vs, but that wee may ouercome all the temptations of Satan, though he bee neuer ſo wylie in forging and framing of innumerable occaſions in that behalfe, to turne vs away from our calling. And therefore let vs marke this warning giuen to the Iewes by Moſes. For it is a warning to vs as well as it was to them, that it is vnpoſſible for vs to come thither as god calleth vs, if wee ouercome not this fearefulneſſe and diſmayednesſe, that is to ſay, if wee fight not againſt all the incumberances that ſathan can ſet before our eyes to make vs afraide. Therefore it ſtandeth vs on hande to bee armed with ſtrength from aboue. Thus you ſee howe wee ought to apply this ſtreyne to our inſtruction.

Nowe the thinges will bee the plainer and better vnderſtoode, if we make a ſimilitude betweene the lande that was promiſed to the children of Iſrael, and the kingdome of God whereunto wee bee called. For in good ſooth, the land of Chanaan was but as a figure & earneſt-penny of the kingdome of heauen. Had the auncient fathers ſetled their mindes vppon the lande which they ſawe: they had had a verie poore reſt and weake ſtay, for in verie deede they inioyed it not of all their life, they did but onely trauell through it as ſtraungers and wayfarers. Wee ſee that Abraham had not one foote of it in poſſeſſion, ſauing that hee purchaſed a little peece to burie his wife in, no hee had not ſo much as water to drinke. Iacob was baniſhed out of it a great parte of his life. Iſaac and all the Patriarks had but their walke in it, they neuer poſſeſſed one foote of the land which God had giuen for an heritage to them and their iſſue. Wee muſt needes conclude then that the auncient fathers did not paſſe through this viſible land, and that their acknowledging of it for their inheritance was after ſuch a ſorte, as they tended alwayes towardes heauen, and that was the marke which they aimed at. Seeing it is ſo, wee muſt make a ſimilitude betweene this lande, and the inheritance wherunto GOD calleth vs, as it hath beene purchaſed for vs by our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt.

Heb. 11. 9. & 13.

Whereas hee ſaith That God made the people to paſſe through a horrible and dreadfull wilderneſſe: the ſame belongeth vnto vs alſo, if wee conſider in what ſtate God founde vs, and whence hee hath drawen vs. For are wee not all damned and forlorne by nature? Hath not the diuell a tyrannous dominion ouer vs, from whence no man can deliuer himſelfe by his owne power? Euen ſo, if wee conſider where GOD ſeeketh vs when hee calleth vs to him: [wee ſhall finde, that] the wilderneſſe wherethrough the Iewes paſſed is not ſo dreadefull and terrible, as is the damnation wherein wee were. For wee bee in bondage of ſinne, wee bee vnder the thraldome of death, ſatan reigneth ouer vs, and is king and prince of the whole worlde. Seeing then that GOD riddeth vs out of ſo miſerable ſlauerie, and ſetteth vs at libertie by his holy ſpirite: is it not all one as if hee ſhoulde make vs way through the gulfes of hell? Yes: for wee bee there in verie deede, and wee cannot come at Ieſus Chriſt, except we be brought out of the dungeons of death. Nowe then, if there were no more but this, that God hath ridde vs from the curſe which was brought vppon vs by Adam, and wherein wee are all of vs faſt ſhut and locked vp vntill hee haue pitie vppon vs: the experience of that one point ought to make vs perceiue his goodneſſe. And if there were no more but that: it ought to giue vs courage to followe him, and to giue our ſelues wholly vnto him. For if wee bee ſlouthful, there is no excuſe for vs, becauſe his goodneſſe is ſufficiently warranted vnto vs, and it is long of none but our ſelues that wee bee not fully reſolued and perſwaded that hee will goe through with the thing that hee hath begunne. And that it is ſo, if euerie of vs bethought himſelfe well, wee ſhoulde finde that God by infinite wayes made vs to ouercome the thinges that ſeemed vnpoſſible. But what? To ſet foorth our owne valiant deedes, wee can well ynough alledge this and that, and our memorie is but too good. And though it bee but a thing of nothing that wee haue done, yet wee can ſkill to magnifie it and to make great reportes of it. Loe howe men can bee quicke ynough to remember all that euer they haue done in their life, that may ſet foorth their owne glorie: but in the meane whyle wee doe wickedly forget the benefites of GOD. And yet worketh hee in ſuch wiſe towardes vs, as ought to quicken vs vp to acknowledge his goodneſſe, or elſe on the contrarie parte wee doe but thruſt all vnder foote. Hee ſhall haue deliuered vs from manie after delays, and hee ſhall haue made vs to haue paſſed manie greate lettes, ſo as wee may haue thought that we had beene vtterly ſhut out and fordone, and hee ſhall haue reached vs his hand: and yet for all that, wee neuer thinke of it againe. Nowe then, where as wee ſee men to bee rechleſſe and ſlothfull in following GOD, it is becauſe they forget his benefites which they haue had proofe of, and become like the Iewes. And therefore it behoueth vs all to acknowledge our fault in this behalfe, and to mourne before God, and to ſeeke redreſſe of it.

Thus yee ſee howe wee ought to put this text in vre by ſimilitude: that is to wit, when the promiſes of the Goſpell are ſet forth to bring vs to the kingdome of heauen: let vs conſider whereat God hath begunne in vs, by what meanes he hath brought vs to him, and howe hee hath ſtrengthened vs, to the intent to bring vs out of the damnation, whereof wee are founde worthy by too too apparant conuiction. Nowe therefore if wee thinke there vpon, and conſider thus with our ſelues, beholde, our God hath made vs partakers of his power, wee haue had too apparant experience therof, he hath deliuered vs out of ỹ gulfe of hel, he hath ridde vs out of the bonds of the diuell and of death: let vs not doubt but hee will alwayes continue like himſelfe hereafter,

Furthermore let vs alſo marke well this ſaying in this text: The God of thy fathers hath promiſed thee the Lande. Beholde therefore, it is as thy commaundements, enter into it and take poſſeſsion of it. The meaning is that wee ſhoulde yeelde ſo much honour to Gods truth, as to bee fully and throughly reſolued in our ſelues, that inaſmuch as hee hath adopted vs to his children, our inheritance is certaine and infallible in heauen. For to what purpoſe is the Goſpell preached vnto vs, but to make vs knowe that GOD is our father, and that wee being become his children by his free adopting of vs, ſhoulde bee aſſured that the kingdome of heauen belongeth vnto vs? And in verie deede for the ſame cauſe is the Goſpell called the kingdome of heauen, foraſmuch as it openeth the gate vnto vs, to the ende that wee nowadayes ſhoulde not doubte but that GOD auoweth vs to bee his heires. But wee muſt haue a further conſideration of the inheritance that God giueth vs, than of all the benefites that Moſes ſpeakes of. For it ſtoode the Iewes on hande to haue helde themſelues ſtill to the thing that had beene ſpoken to Abraham, Iſaac, & Iacob. But now is the Goſpel another warrant vnto vs. For God is called the father, not onely of Abraham, Iſaac, and Iacob, but alſo of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, who is our head in ſuch wiſe, that being once vnyted vnto him, we become partakers of his own ſubſtance and life, and [therefore] we muſt not doubt but that the inheritance of the kingdom of heauē belongeth vnto vs. Nowe then, like as Moſes ſaid vnto the Iewes, The God of your fathers: ſo muſt this voyce ſounde in our eares, The GOD and father of our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt, hath not onely promiſed vs the kingdome of heauen, but alſo giuen vs wherewith to aſſure our ſelues the better of it. For we haue the performance & effect thereof, in that our Lord Ieſus Chriſt ſuffered death, to recouer vs the inheritance, whereof wee were bereft and diſpoſſeſſed in the perſon of our father Adam. Nowe then wee ſee after what ſort we ought to looke vpon this doctrine: that is to wit, that although wee bee vnhappie wretches, although wee deſerue to bee reiected of our GOD, although there bee nothing but curſedneſſe in vs, and although that by nature wee bee plunged in the gulfe of hell: yet notwithſtanding, ſeeing that God hath adopted vs in our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt, and made vs all one with him by faith: wee neede not doubt but we be heires of the kingdom of heauen. And why? For GOD cannot lye, and foraſmuch as hee is vnchaungeable, wee haue ſufficient warrant that wee ſhall not bee diſappointed by putting our truſt in him. Againe, wee haue our Lorde Ieſus Chriſte, who is the mediatour betweene God and men, and hee hath not onely taken ſolemne recogniſances as a publike notarie: but alſo accompliſhed the thinges that were promiſed on the behalfe of GOD his father. He hath ſigned the euidence in ſuch wiſe with his owne bloude, as wee ſee he hath payed that which hee owed not, and that which he was not to bee charged withall. So then let vs haue this ſtedfaſt aſſuredneſſe with vs, that GOD auoweth vs for his children, and conſequently that wee bee heires of eternall life. Howbeit, let vs alwayes take that aſſuredneſſe out of the Goſpell, accordingly as we ſee that Moſes leadeth the Iewes thither.

Mat. 13. 24. and 31.

True it is that wee muſt not forget the heauenly power that was vttered euerie where in the ryſing againe of our Lorde Ieſus Chriſte. But howe might we applie ſuch a benefite to our ſelues, or how could we inioy it, if it were not by faith? Therefore like as our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt hath purchaced vs the kingdome of heauen by his death and paſſion: ſo is it his will that comfort ſhoulde bee giuen vs nowadayes by his Goſpell, where hee witneſſeth vnto vs that all that euer hee did was for our ſakes and for our welfare: ſo that hauing that once, and being aſſured thereof, we may inioy the benefite that was purchaſed for vs.

But yet in the meane while, wee muſt doe ſo much honour to the Goſpell, as to beholde that thing by faith, which is hidden from our eyes. It is ſaide that the Lande is at thy commandement. Nowe if wee beleeue our ſenſes, wee cannot perceiue that the kingdome of heauen is ours, or in our hande: it will ſeeme to bee too farre off from vs, and that wee had neede of wings to flie aboue the ſkyes. But what? Wee muſt ſo honour Gods worde (as I ſaide) as wee muſt not doubt but that the thing which is ſpoken there, is poſſible to be done, although wee conceiue not howe by our fleſhly vnderſtanding: faith muſt ſurmount all capacitie of man. And if wee finde any hardneſſe therein, let vs fight againſt our ſelues, and dayly indeuour to recouer vnto God. For the way whereby hee will be glorified at our hands, is (as I ſaide at the beginning) that if there were no more but his bare worde, yet ought the ſame to contēt and ſuffice vs. But ſeeing he hath vouchſafed to deliuer vs this pledge which he hath giuen vs in the death and paſſion of our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt: we ſhalbe the leſſe excuſable, if wee haue not a full and whole contentation. Seeing then that we haue ſuch an aſſurance of the kingdome of heauen, let vs go and take poſſeſſion of the lande. For (as I ſaid afore) God will not haue vs idle.

True it is, that hee ſheweth vs by the holy ſcripture, that there is not one drop of power in vs that tendeth vnto good, but that wee be wholly giuen to euill. And yet notwithſtanding it is his will alſo that when he hath put his gratious gifts into vs, we ſhoulde make them auayable, without chalenging any thing at all to our ſelues. For in this caſe it is not for vs to glorie in our ſelues, nor to truſt in our owne legges, according wherevnto it is ſaide in the Pſalme to ſuch as are giuen to the worlde, that they muſt not truſt in their owne ſtrength, nor in the ſtrength of their horſes. If this bee ſaide of the thinges that perteine to this ſlightfull life: what is to bee ſaide of the ſpirituall life which is much more excellent? So then withwout attributing any thing to our ſelues, let vs indeuour neuertheleſſe ſeeing that God commandeth vs, and let vs goe on to enter into the poſſeſſion of the ſpirituall kingdome whereunto he calleth vs. And that is the cauſe why I ſaid that wee muſt cuermore come backe to our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt, and there ſeeke ỹ thing that is wanting in our ſelues. For wee knowe that his ſuffering of his death and paſſion, was to exalt vs aboue the heauens: and although wee doe but creepe vppon the earth, or rather bee ſo loppeheauie that wee ſinke ſtill downeward, to plundge our ſelues in the bottomleſſe gulfes: yet will our Lorde Ieſus lift vs vp, according as he himſelf was exalted, to the ſame end and intent, as is declared in the third Chapter of the Goſpel of S. Iohn.

Iohn. 3. 14.

Furthermore, to the ende wee may bee diſcharged of all ſelftruſt, let vs looke vppon the notable example that was giuen vs at the death of our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt. For if wee will goe the right way to heauen, wee muſt followe the poore theefe to whom he ſaide, This day ſhalt thou bee with mee in Paradiſe. Howe can wee bee ſure that GOD will bring vs to the kingdome of heauen, ſeeing that wee ſeeke hell, and all our affections, all our thoughtes, all our deſires, all our powers, and all our workes, tend wholly thither, euen to ſeparate vs from God, and to alienate vs from his kingdome, and to driue vs away from life and ſaluation? How may wee (ſay I) be ſure that God will take vs vppe into his heauenly kingdome? We muſt haue recourſe to this word that was ſpoken to the poore theefe: This day ſhalt thou be with me in Paradiſe. Seeing it is ſo that our Lord died, & that he entred into ſuch gulfes of ſorrowe, that he was pinched ſo farre as to abide the tormentes that were due vnto vs, and not only abode ỹ reproch and griefe of bodily death, but alſo felt ỹ luſtice of God, and became as a wretched offender to beare all the ſinnes of the world: let vs not doubt but he hath deliuered vs from the paines & anguiſh which wee ſhould haue felt, and will lifte vs vp to himſelfe, and therefore nowe let vs not bee afraide of death. But firſt of all it behoueth vs to followe the poore theefe. What had he in him to bring him to the kingdome of heauen? He was faſtened to a croſſe, he had his armes and legges broken, he ſeemed to bee but a wretched carkaſſe, there was nothing but reproche in him. Thus then you ſee howe he was an owgly myrrour to looke vpon: and yet neuertheleſſe, Ieſus Chriſte promiſeth him to make him his partaker and companion of his heauenly glorie. And what had hee beene all the time of his lyfe? So lewde and wicked both before God and man, that he was worſe than condemned and accurſed. Will we then be the heires of God? Wee muſt follow this theefe who had the preheminence to goe before vs into the heritage of heauen. And how [muſt wee follow him?] We muſt acknowledge ỹ naturally there is nothing in vs but vtter wickedneſſe, and that GOD might iuſtly holde vs accurſed. Alſo wee muſt thinke our ſelues to bee as folke that haue their armes and legges broken, yea and as men vtterly diſmembred, ſo as we haue not one whit of ſtrength in vs, at leaſtwiſe as in reſpect of our ſelues. And yet for all that therewithall we muſt not doubt but that God accepteth vs to him, when wee linke in with our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt by right faith and pure affection, acknowledging him to be our king, and hauing our eyes faſtened vpon the inuiſible kingdome, as I ſaide afore. For if the wretched theefe which ſawe death before his eyes, which was in as great tormentes as was poſſible, and ſawe himſelfe as it were behated of all the world, did put his truſt in Ieſus Chriſte: what ought wee to doe? Againe, in what ſtate was our Lord Ieſus Chriſt at the ſame time? He hung vpon a croſſe full of reproche and ſhame, all men did ſpit at him, all men did ſpite him. And yet, notwithſtanding that reprochfull ſtate, the poore wretch ceaſſed not to behold life in death, and to ſay, Lorde remember me when thou commeſt into thy kingdome. But now wee knowe that Ieſus Chriſt is exalted to the right hand of GOD his father, and hath ſouereigne power ouer all creatures: ſo that if wee yeeld him not his due honour now that he is entered into his glorie, wee ſhall haue no excuſe at all. True it is that he was once hanged vpon a gibbet ful of reproch and ſhame: but yet wee ſee therewithall that the ſame was turned into glorie and triumph, ſo as the victorie which he obteined was more royall than all the triumphes of all the Princes in the worlde. Seeing then that wee doe ſee that Ieſus Chriſt hath ridde away all the ſlaunder of his croſſe by the power of his reſurrection: ought wee not at leaſtwiſe to looke vp to the kingdome where he dwelleth, whereunto he calleth vs, and which he hath purchaſed ſo dearely? Thus you ſee after what maner wee muſt put in vre this text of the poſſeſſing of the land which he hath promiſed vs and purchaſed for vs.

Beſides this, when wee heare this ſaying, that it is at our commaundement: let vs vnderſtand that it were a diſanulling of the death and paſſion of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, if wee ſhould not bee fully reſolued of this inheritaunce, according alſo as Saint Paule ſheweth: If thou ſay, who is he that ſhall goe downe into the deepe, it is all one as if thou ſhouldeſt fetche vp Chriſt againe from death. Then if wee imagine with our ſelues, alas wee bee wretched creatures, there is nothing but vtter weakeneſſe in vs, euill doeth ſo ouermaiſter that wee wote not what to do, the diuell tormenteth vs, on the one ſide, and on the other ſide wee bee ſo fraile as is pitifull to ſee, and wee bee in trouble and vnquietneſſe: if wee ſtande herevpon as quite out of heart and diſcouraged: Saint Paule ſayeth it is all one as if we beleeued not that Ieſus Chriſt dyed for vs. For why? The death and Paſſion that he ſuffered are no trifling thing, but a thing of verie great price. Nowe then wee muſt take it to bee of power as it is, ſo that although we ſee our ſelues in the mids of bottomleſſe pits, yea & that very often and commonly, inſomuch that [when wee bee out of one gulfe, by and by wee enter into another, and therewithall Satan hath ſuch power againſt vs and wee on the other ſide are ſo feeble, that we can ſcarcely ſtirre one finger: yet let vs not forbeare to aſſure our ſelues, that the inheritaunce belongeth to vs ſtill: for that is the honour which wee muſt yeeld to our Lord Ieſus Chriſt. But therewithall let vs go foreward ſtill. After what maner? Let vs call to minde howe the Apoſtle ſaieth, that like as our Heb.13.12. Lord Ieſus Chriſt went out of the Citie as reiected out of the companie of men: ſo we muſt not diſdaine to become like him, and to beare the ſhame and reproche of his croſſe: for it becommeth the members to be faſhioned like to their body. And therefore let vs determine to goe after him, For thoſe are the true markes whereby he knoweth vs to bee his. And for performance thereof, let vs vnderſtand that wee muſt forſake the world in general, yea and our ſelues too. For the matter ſtandeth not alonely vpon going out of the world. True it is that ſo long as it pleaſeth God to haue vs lodge here, here wee muſt abide: but yet howſoeuer we fare, we muſt euer haue one foote vp, readie to goe hence whenſoeuer it ſhall pleaſe God to take vs to him: ſo that if wee will be heires of the heauenly kingdome, wee muſt be but pilgrims and ſtraungers in this world. Yea and (which more is) wee muſt go out of our ſelues, that is to ſay, we muſt not leane to our owne will and wit, but wee muſt ridde our ſelues of all ſelfweening, and couet nothing but to goe vnto God. And if the world ſhake vs off and make a mocking ſtocke of vs, (as we ſee now adayes how the poore Chriſtians are lightly eſteemed, ſo that they bee taken to bee as the ofſcouring of the world, or rather as myre & dung, as ſaieth S. Paul:) I ſay, if wee bee ſo reiected of 1.Cor.4.13. the whole world: let vs beare it patiently. For why? Ieſus Chriſt went out of the Citie Ieruſalem, bearing the reproch and curſe of the whole world vpon him: and therefore let vs bee readie to bee faſhioned like vnto him. Alſo therewithal let vs determine to ſeparate our ſelues from all the vncleanneſſe that reigneth euerie where now adayes in the world. And foraſmuch as we can not poſſeſſe the heauenly heritage, vnleſſe wee ouercome this doubting and fearefulneſſe which plucke vs backe: inſomuch that if our mindes runne ſtill vpon our owne feebleneſſe, truely wee ſhall not neede any other thing to ſhake vs downe: whereas on the other ſide if we haue our eye vppon our captaine Ieſus Chriſt, who alonely hath vanquiſhed all feare, yea and euen death, and the diuell, & all his power: then may wee boldly goe on ſtill, to ouercome all lets that may hinder vs or turne vs aſide from following God whitherſoeuer he calleth vs: Let vs ſhut our eyes againſt all that euer may turne vs out of the right way, and let vs not doubt but that God wil alwayes be our guide, and worke in ſuch wiſe, as he will outgoe all our deſires, yea and all the hope that we can conceiue of him.

Nowe therefore let vs kneele downe in the preſence of our good God with acknowledgement of our ſinnes, praying him to make vs ſo to feele them, that being caſt down in our ſelues, wee may reſort wholly vnto him, and acknowledging our ſelues to bee wretched offenders that haue deſerued his wrath and vengeance, (yea euen wout euer being able to recouer out of endleſſe death and curſednes) flee for refuge to the redemption that is purchaſed for vs by the bloudſhed of his onely ſonne. And that ſeeing our Lord Ieſus Chriſt hath payed all our debtes, to diſcharge vs of them, and to beare the condemnation that was due vnto vs, and foraſmuch as he offereth vs daily the fruite and effect of his death and paſſion: we may not doubt but that he will accompliſh the thing that he hath begunne in vs, and by his holy ſpirit make the power of his reſurrection auaileable in vs, to the end that we may leade a new life, and bee ſtabliſhed in him more & more, till we be quite rid of all the corruptions of our fleſh, to bee taken vp into his kingdome. That it may pleaſe him to graunt this grace, not onely, &c.

On Saturday the xiij. of Aprill. 1555.

The ſixth Sermon vpon the firſt Chapter.

22 Then came you all vnto me and ſaid, let vs ſend men before vs to ſearch out the land for vs, and to bring vs word by what way we ſhall go vp into it, and into what Cities we ſhall enter.

23 That ſaying liked me well, and therevpon I tooke twelue men among you, of euery tribe one.

24 And they departed, and went vp into the Mountaines, and came to the riuer of Eſcol, and ſearched out the land.

25 And they tooke of the fruits of the Land in their handes, and brought them to vs, and brought vs word againe and ſaid, The Land which the Lorde our God giueth vs is good.

26 Yet notwithſtanding, you would not goe vp, but were diſobedient to the commaundement of the Lord your God.

27 And you murmured in your tentes and ſaide, bicauſe the Lorde hateth vs, therefore hath he made vs to come out of the Countrie of Egypt, to deliuer vs into the hand of the Amorrhytes, to cauſe vs to be deſtroyed.

28 How ſhall wee goe vp? Our brethren haue made our heartes to quaile, by ſaying: The people are moe in nomber and taller of ſtature than wee. The Cities are great, and walled vp to the skie. And moreouer we haue ſeene there the ſonnes of the Enakims.

HEre Moſes bringeth to their remembrance the things that are conteined in the xiij. Chapter of the Booke of Nombers, howbeit that there ſeemeth to bee ſome diuerſitie at the firſt bluſh. Num. 13.2. For there he declareth that ſuch as ſhould haue eſpied out the land, were ſent by the expreſſe commaundement of God: and here he maketh no mention of it, but ſaieth it was done at the requeſt of the people. Now theſe two things may very well agree: that is to wit, that the people ſhould deſire to haue the enteraunce into the land knowen before they went any further: and alſo that God ſhould allow that deſire, yea or rather euen preuent it, accordingly as wee knowe that in all thinges he guided this people with a paſſing fatherly care, as ſhall bee ſhewed in the next Lecture. Therefore there is no inconuenience in it, that God, to ſhewe the people what care he had to guide them, ſhould appoint ſpies to be ſent: and that therewithall the people alſo on their part ſhould require it. So then we ſee ſtill that God bare with the people, when he graunted to ſend men to ſpie out the land. And let vs marke, that it was a condemning of the people, when the thing that ſhould haue bene to their helpe and furtherance, did plucke them backe. And it is not reported alonely of thoſe whome Moſes ſpeakes off, to the intent that wee ſhould blame them: but they bee ſet forth as an example and looking glaſſe, for vs to ſee our ſelues in, and to fare the better by it. If God beare with vs and giue vs meanes conuenient for our infirmitie: let vs apply them to our vſe, let them ſtirre vs vp to obey him, and let vs not in any wiſe be hindred by them. This (ſay I) is the thing that wee haue to marke.

But the chiefe point is this that Moſes addeth, namely, That the ſpies brought worde againe that the land was good, and that the people would not beleeue it, but were diſobedient to the mouth of God. Num. 13.31. 32. & 14.6. It ſhould ſeeme that Moſes rehearſeth not the ſtorie as it is conteined in the place before alledged. For there it is ſaid, that of the twelue which were ſent, there were but two that hartened the people to enter into the land that was promiſed them, and that the other ten laboured as much as they could, to diſcourage thoſe which were not verie well diſpoſed of themſelues. Seeing it is ſo, why doeth Moſes ſay here, that the ſpies reported it to be a good land, as though they had incouraged the people to doe as God had commaunded them? Wee haue to marke here, that Moſes hath not an eye to the greater nomber nor to the multitude: but to the better ſort of them. Although then that there was no moe but Caleb the ſonne of Iephonee and Ioſua the ſonne of Nun, that made good report, and traueiled to make the people to obey God: yet are they preferred at Gods hand. Thus ye ſee that God eſteemeth more of the ſixth part than of all the reſt. And it is a verie notable point, as whereof wee may gather verie good and profitable doctrine. For anon Moſes will adde, that the greater part of thoſe that were ſent to ſpie out the land, ſaide that the Cities were great and walled vp to the ſkie. But as now he ſpeakes but of the two that diſcharged their duetie.

Wee ſee then, that whenſoeuer the greater multitude of men inclineth vnto euill, we muſt let them alone as though they were nothing worth. They bee not worthie to come in account, and wee muſt rather holde with a handfull of men whom wee ſee to teache vs faithfully and to giue vs good counſell: I ſay wee muſt rather followe one or two ſuch, and let a hundred, yea a thouſand others goe, than caſt our ſelues into confuſion with the greater multitude. And if euer this were needfull: it is needfull now in our time. For on the one ſide wee ſee how all thinges are turned vpſide downe in the worlde: ſuperſtitions are ſo great and vnmeaſurable as is pitie to ſee. If wee ſhould frame our life to the common trade, what a thing were it? For all is infected with robberie, deceite, crueltie, treaſon, blaſphemie, contempt of God, drunkenneſſe, whoredome, pride, and looſeneſſe. Nowe then, whoſoeuer faſhioneth himſelfe to the cuſtome of men, muſt forſake God and withdrawe himſelfe from all goodneſſe: he muſt giue himſelfe to all lewdneſſe, and plundge himſelfe into all wickedneſſe. Lo to what point wee bee come. What is to be done then? Let vs learne to looke vpon ſuch as are able to guide vs aright, though they be but fewe in nomber: and let vs not be caried away by the greater multitude. For it wil not ſerue to ſhield vs before God, it will not ſerue to leſſen or to mitigate our fault. If we ſay, euery mã did ſo: when I ſaw ſuch a nomber of men followe that trade, I put my ſelfe in companie with them: & to my ſeeming ẏ thing that was ſo commonly vſed, could not bee but lawfull: the alledging of ſuch fond excuſes will ſtand vs in no ſtead, for we ſhall win nothing by them, as I ſaide afore. And therefore let vs follow thoſe to whom God hath giuen the grace to ſhew vs ẏ right way. Though there be but three or foure of them, let vs eſteem them no leſſe than if they were an hundredthouſand. For God paſſeth not for the greatneſſe of the multitude, as it is ſaid alreadie.

Againe, on the other ſide, as concerning Religion: are they that ſticke to the pureneſſe of the Goſpell, moe in nomber than the Papiſts, Turkes, and heathen men? No ſurely. Inſomuch that if wee bee compared but with the Iewes which are a curſed offcouring, whom God hath ſo rooted out as there remaine verie fewe of them: yet notwithſtanding the Chriſtians which are willing to giue themſelues ſimply to the ſeruing of God according to his word, are ſo fewe in nomber, as the other may farre paſſe them. What would become of vs then, if wee ſhoulde followe the greater nomber? And yet wee ſee howe a great ſort of ignoraunt folkes doe take vpon them to ſay, Tuſh, as for them that take vpon them to alter Religion, they bee but a verie ſmall nomber, and are they wiſer than all the world beſide? Thus you ſee how moſt men gaſe vpon themſelues, and caſt a ſtop in their owne way, to barre themſelues from comming to Gods trueth. And what is the cauſe thereof? Euen their blearing of their owne eyes, by gaſing vpon the greater multitude which goeth to deſtruction,

But contrariwiſe, let vs condemne the whole world, as Noe was faine to doe in his time. And that condemning of his was not in vaine: for he and his houſhold were ſaued by it. And although they were not aboue eight perſons in all: yet durſt they ſet themſelues againſt ỹ whole world: and ſo muſt wee doe. Though all the whole world crie out with one voyce, that it is not now needefull to reſt vpon the holy ſcripture, and that the opinions of the great wiſe men of the world ſhall ſtand: let vs giue eare to that which GOD ſayeth. Albeit there were but one man that laboured to bring vs from the errours and ſuperſtitions that haue full ſcope euerywhere: yet let that one man bee more eſteemed at our handes, than a hundred thouſand others. For wee ſee the rule thereof that is giuen vs here.

And although Moſes was the writer of this Booke: yet is it the holy Ghoſtes dooing, who vſed him as an inſtrument. Now then, where it is ſaide That the ſpies reported it to bee a good land: wee ſee that the two are ſet downe at it were in the roome of all the twelue, and the other tenne are laid vnderfoote. For they were not worthie to bee remembred, and we knowe that God deſtroyed them for their vntruſtineſſe. Then if there bee any deceiuers that ſeduce the common people, ſo as their wicked doctrine is receiued, and men like well of them, and in the meane while there are very fewe that teache vs to ſerue God purely: let vs heare thoſe fewe, & let vs not ſticke to ſay, Theſe are the teachers that inſtruct vs rightly what wee ought to doe. Though the nomber of their aduerſaries be neuer ſo great, let vs not make any account of thẽ, foraſmuch as we ſee that God deſtroyeth them, & that they be as it were raſed out of his booke: for beholde, this ſtorie written by Moſes is the very regiſter of God. Inſomuch that whereas on the one ſide ten men had conſpired to miſcarie the people, they were all reiected, & God made no reckening nor account of them. And [on the contrarie part] whereas there were but two that incouraged the people faithfully: thoſe were put in nomber for all ỹ reſt, for they were well worthy to be eſteemed as miniſters and ſhepherdes in Gods Church, for their due perfourming of their charge. Therfore if we marke this text, we ſhall be throughly armed and fenced againſt all the ſtumbling blockes ỹ trouble moſt men, who when they ſee a ſort of dogges barking at Gods trueth, are vtterly at their wits ende, and knowe not what to doe nor where to become. Wherefore let vs looke to obſerue the rule that God giueth vs: & then ſhall wee euer keepe on our courſe, & neuer be turned out of the way for the troubles and diuiſions that we ſee in the world.

And hereunto alſo ought that to ſerue which Moſes addeth, You would not (ſaith he) but were diſobedient. To whom? He ſaith not ſingly vnto God: but vnto the mouth of God. This maner of ſpeache might ſeeme harſh at the firſt ſight: but yet it importeth good doctrine. Wee know that men are alwayes deſirous to excuſe themſelues whẽ they withſtand God and incounter his word: and yet for all that they ceaſſe not to proteſt that they meane not to be againſt God. Their intent then is, that men ſhould not thinke them to doe that which they do. But here to cut off occaſion of all ſtartingholes, the holy Ghoſt ſaith expreſly, that we muſt yeeld to Gods mouth. And what is mẽt by this mouth of his? It is his vttering of his will vnto vs, when he ſpeaketh to vs by his miniſters, by his Prophets, and by ſuch as he raiſeth vp in his Church to gouerne his people. That then is ỹ thing that wee muſt take heede vnto: for God will not ſhewe himſelfe to vs in viſible maner. True it is that at the ſame time he gaue ſignes & tokens, to the end it might bee knowen that he himſelfe ſpake by Moſes: but yet in the meane while he vſed Moſes as his inſtrument, & therewithall confirmed his lawe which was publiſhed at that time. After him came the Prophets, and them alſo did God vſe as his mouth: but in the Goſpell wee haue his mouth open moſt of all. So then let vs marke well, ỹ they which proteſt that their intent is to ſerue God, & in the meane while make none account of his word, as it is vttered and left in writing: are but hypocrites, yea euen ſhameleſſe hypocrites, bicauſe the deede it ſelfe proueth them liars. For whereas they on the one ſide ſay that their intent is to ſerue God: and God on ỹ other ſide intendeth to trie our obedience by ſetting his word before vs: ỹ ſame is a good triall to diſcerne whether our ſaying that we be his ſeruantes, be ſo in good earneſt or no. For thereby it appeareth, that they hearken not to his word, but rather reiect it, & preferre their owne opinions and fancies before it. And ſo ye ſee a point that ye ought to marke wel.

And hereby it appeareth how much ỹ whole world is to be condemned now adayes. For ỹ Papiſtes can well ynough ſay, ỹ their intent is to be ſubiect vnto God: yea & to what purpoſe elſe do they take ſo great paines, & martyr thẽſelues in their fooliſh deuotions? All the Idolatries which they commit, they terme by the name of Gods ſeruice. But yet for all that, behold, wee haue the holy holy ſcripture wherein God hath vttered his will vnto vs, and he will haue men to be ruled thereby. This is alledged to the Papiſtes, to the end they ſhould not followe their owne lykings, but ſubmit themſelues to the bridle in ſuch ſorte as God hath layde it vppon vs, and beare his yoke quietly. But contrariwiſe, they will needes ſerue God after their owne imaginations, as we ſee by the confuſed mingling that is among thē, [which maketh it manifeſt] that they haue no care at all to obſerue Gods commaundements. For their ſaying is, mee thinkes that this is good, thus were we taught by our fathers. Wherby we ſee that they doe flatly reſiſt Gods mouth. They will not ſtick afterward to ſay, O wee worſhip God. Yeamarie, but God will haue men to harken to his mouth, and we knowe what maner a one that is: namely euen the ſame wherewith he hath ſpoken by Moſes and the prophets, and finally by the Apoſtles by whom he hath taught vs familiarly all that euer hee would haue vs to doe. So then let vs nowe take good heede to this doctrine, for wee cannot diſobey Gods mouth, that is to ſay his word, but it is a manifeſt deſpiſing of him: for they be things that differ not, neither can they be ſeparated aſunder.

Furthermore not onely the Papiſtes doe prouoke God by reſiſting his word: but alſo we ſee thateuen they which poſſeſſe the Goſpell, will beleue nothing but that which lyketh thēſelues. For what reuerēce hath the holy ſcripture nowadayes among a nomber of men? In deede the word Goſpell coſteth them nothing: but in the meane while, if a man tell them that God ſayth not any thing which is not there: euery man takes vpon him to bee an interpreter: or els hee ſayth, mee thinkes this is harde, and as for that, I cannot diſgeſt it. And ſo, after as euery man miſlyketh of the holy ſcripture, ſo taketh he leaue to reiect one thing or other, whereas notwithſtanding, wee ſhould in all pointes haue our mouthes ſhut when God ſpeaketh, and our eares open to receiue whatſoeuer he ſayth vnto vs. Foraſmuch then as we ſee that the doctrine of the Goſpell is ſo deſpiſed throughout the worlde, and euery of vs ſhooteth foorth his owne bolt, and wee will needes haue ſuch ſhiftes and deuiſes as lyke our ſelues, ſo as if any thing ſeeme euill vnto vs, wee reiecte it: it may eaſily be gathered by the ſight thereof, what horrible condemnation is prepared for all ſuch as diſobay the mouth of God. And therfore let vs learn to temper our ſelues with ſuch modeſtie, and ſobernes, that as ſoone as we haue any record of Gods trueth, wee may yeelde vnto it without gainesaying. Let that ſerue for one poynt.

And moreouer let vs extend this doctrine yet to a further vſe: which is, not to be inquiſitiue of Gods trueth, furtherfoorth than it is vttered in the holy ſcriptures. For God will not haue vs to fall (as yee woulde ſay) to pulling out of his bowels, as they doe which will needes bee ſearching out of meaſure, and more than they haue leaue to doe. We ſhall ſee a nomber of fantaſticall fellowes & giddibraind perſons, which caſt forth fond & tryfling queſtions, and turmoyle heauen & earth, & are neuer contented, but are alwayes buſie & full of vnquietneſſe. Now, this is a curſed & deadly diſeaſe. And therfore let vs learne to hearken vnto God when he ſpeaketh to vs, & not to couet to know any more than he hath taught vs, & ſetteth daily before vs in the holy ſcripture. Let all our wiſedome be to receiue ỹ which is vttered vnto vs by ỹ mouth of god. It followeth how Moſes vpbraided ỹ people, that they murmured in their tentes, ſaying: Beholde, becauſe the Lord hateth vs, therefore hath he brought vs out of the land of Egypt, and brought vs hither as to a burial place. For our brethren haue made our hartes to quaile, telling vs that they ſawe Giants in the land, and that the townes are walled vp to the cloudes. And to what purpoſe then ſhall wee goe? Here wee ſee that when men begin once to doe amiſſe, the miſchief waxeth ſtil worſe and worſe, vntill it become to the full meaſure. It was an euill beginning aforehand, when the people reſiſted God, and would not followe to enter into the land at the commaundement of Moſes.

But is this all? No, behold here is yet a much more curſed blaſphemie, in that the people ſpyteth GOD, repyning at his bringing of them out of Egypt, and charging him with hatred towardes them. And whereof came this? No doubt but hee maketh it playne: namely for that men ſeeke couert in dooing euill, and make no conſcience to accuſe God and to blaſpheme his holy name, to the ende to haue ſome colour wherewith to hide their owne wickedneſſe. Thus you ſee how men deale, when they cannot finde in their hartes to yeeld vnto God. They will needes ſtill iuſtifie themſelues in their diſobedience, ſpecially when God preaceth vppon them and holdeth them at a bay, yea and layeth in ſuch euidence againſt them, as they be conuicted: for then doe they ſeeke ſtartingholes to iuſtifie themſelues euen in deſpite of God, accuſing him and laying all the fault vppon him. Truely this is a curſed kinde of dealing, but yet we ſee it is common, inſomuch that men doe make euen an arte of it. How many are there to be found, that wil not blame God to cleare themſelues? If a man blame them for it, and charge them with their faultes: they will not graunt that their intent was ſo: but yet the deede bewrayeth that it is ſo. If a man bee rebuked for his vices, with whom hath he to doe? In deede it may be ỹ it is but a mortall man which findeth fault with him & ſayth, thou haſt done this or that: but yet muſt he vnderſtand that the iudgement is Gods. When ſoeuer any man telleth vs that we haue done amiſſe: wee muſt not looke at him that ſpeaketh, for Gods word is the iudge. Therefore muſt euery man eyte himſelfe, and as oft as he is warned of any offēce, he muſt offer himſelf to Gods iudgemēt ſeat, & conſider ỹ ỹ is the place where he muſt appeare to make his account. Now let vs ſe how euery of vs is inclined or diſpoſed to cōfeſſe his faults. Nay, cōtrariwiſe we ſecke al ỹ ſhifts we can, to ſhroud our ſelues, & we haue our lurkingholes, inſomuch ỹ euen whē we be too manifeſtly cōuicted of our ſins, yet we

ceaſe not to wrangle ſtill. But our Lord will not ſuffer vs to ſcape him ſo by our fond excuſes. He followeth ſtill vpon vs, and then begin wee to gnaſh our teeth at him. We ſee that theſe would excuſe themſelues. But when they fall to replying, with how ſo? ſee we not that the euill is already apparant? Therfore when men perceiue themſelues to be ſo preaced at by Gods word, they become as wilde beaſtes, they ſpit out and caſt vp their poyſon, they ſpite God apparantly, & rayle at his word. And would God ỹ examples thereof were not ſo common as we ſee they be.

Wherefore let vs marke, that this text ought to ſerue vs as a looking glaſſe, wherein to behold the frowardneſſe that reigneth throughout the world. And when we haue done amiſſe, let vs learne to abſteine from wilfulneſſe. For elſe in the ende we ſhall fall into the bottomleſſe pit of blaſpheming God, & if we continue in that ſtubbornes & vnwillingnes to acknowledge our own vices, in the end we ſhal fal to reſiſting God furiouſly, as it befell to theſe wretches of whome Moſes ſpeaketh here. For when men wil needes maintaine themſelues after that ſorte in their wicked quarels againſt God, they fall not onely into diſobedience, but alſo into ſturdineſſe, yea euen into moſt ſhameful & beaſtly ſturdineſſe, as we ſee here. It was too groſſe a fault already, when the people had ſaid, how ſhall we goe, or what can we do, ſeeing the townes are ſo ſtrong and the people ſo giantlyke? It was too much already to reſiſt God after that faſhion. But behold, here is yet a more exceſſiue vnthankefulneſſe. For in ſtead of bethinking themſelues of Gods grace, in deliuering them from the thaldome of Egypt: they fal to rayling at him. What (ſay they?) Would God haue fetched vs out of the land of Egypt, if he had not hated vs? Now alas what hatred was it! When God pitied his poore creatures, they were euen at the laſt caſt: they were intreated lyke wretched ſlaues, yea euen to the drawing of the bloud out of their vaines: they were ſo cruelly handled, as was horrible to ſee: & in the end the tyranny was growen ſo farre, that all their malechildren were murthered, of purpoſe to make cleane riddance of them, and to wipe out the very remembrance of them. Euen at this pinch, did God haue compaſſion vppon the people. Could any greater goodnes haue bin ſhewed? And when as he ſaith by his prophet, My people, what harme did I thee in bringing thee out of the land of Egypt? doeth it not appeare thereby that they were too too malitious and frowarde? I planted a vine [ſayth God] and looked for good fruite: & now thou wilt choke thy maiſter with thy ſowerneſſe.

Now then ſeeing that this deliuering of them out of the land of Egypt, was a ſingular warrant of Gods goodneſſe, loue, and mercie towardes them: muſt it not needes be that they were ſtark mad, when they twited God with his bringing of them out of Egypt, charging him that he did it of hatred towardes them? Were it poſſible that men ſhould ouerſhoote themſelues ſo farre, if they were not become ſtarke deuils? No: but as I ſayd afore, this doctrine is written of the Iewes that were in the time of Moſes, to the intent that we ſhould profite in the feare of God by their example, and beare in minde that they which will needes ſtand ſo wilfully in their vices, ſhall in the end fall to flat ſpiting of God, and blaſpheme his name, turne good into euill, deface his mercie as much as they can, mingle heauen and earth together, and make a helliſhe confuſion of all thinges. Wherefore let vs ſtand in awe, and walke on in humilitie and wareneſſe, glorifying God. Againe, when we haue committed God any fault, let vs be afrayd, yea and euen mourne for it, and not pretend any matter or quarell againſt God, but rather flee to his onely mercie for refuge, being vtterly aſhamed and caſt downe in our ſelues. And ſo ye ſee what we haue to marke vppon this text, where it is ſayd that the Iewes murmured in their tẽts, ſaying that Gods bringing of them out of the land of Egypt, was becauſe he hated them.

Now furthermore it behoueth vs to marke, that the cauſe of their rayling, was for that they knewe not Gods power, notwithſtanding that it was apparant to them. For although they had felt it enough, & more than enough to haue cõfirmed thẽwithal: yet neuertheles, as ſoon as they heard ſpeaking of the talneſſe of their enemies, of their walled cities, & of their ſtrong holdes: by and by their hearts failed them and they were vtterly diſmaid. And why? Surely God had giuen them proofe of his mightie power, to the intent they ſhould haue truſted to him as I haue ſayd heretofore. But what for that? They ſhut their eyes at all thoſe thinges, and therewithal fell to grudging aſſoone as they heard of any diſtreſſe. And euen ſo doe we. For when God calleth vs, or commaundeth vs to goe: we will ſee aforehand whether there be any lettes or no. How ſhall I goe, ſay wee? for there is this let and that let: and as for me, I haue no ſtrength at all. And in the meane ſeaſon we conſider not that God is ſtrong enough for vs, and that it is his power which maketh vs to walke on, and to ouercome all that euer the deuill trumpeth in our way. Now then, wee can neuer yeeld God his due honor, to truſt in him, to put our ſelues into his hand, and to hope that he will helpe vs and giue vs the vpper hand of all thinges that may turne vs out of the right way: except we haue an eye to the benefits we haue receiued before. And ſo we ſee that Moſes rehearſeth not here a ſingle ſtorie, ỹ we might the better know what God hath willed vs to doe: but rather that he ſetteth before our eyes what we be, together with the vices that are but too common among among vs, to the end we ſhould learne to put our truſt in Gods ſtrength. What is to be done then? We ſee our owne frailetie, howbeit not ſo much as were requiſite: but yet, that which we ſe ought to make vs hang downe our heads. Neuertheleſſe, when we knowe once ỹ there is no power in vs to follow Gods will: let vs ſtep to the remedie, let vs not be out of hart for it, neither let vs doe as they doe which thinke themſelues quit becauſe they haue not wherwith to ſtead ỹ turne, ſaying, oh ſyr, I am of fleſh and bloud, I am a man. And what is that to say, but that thou art in sin, and vncleane? but manie men say so, to the intent to washe their handes of it. They may well say, as for me, I haue not so great streng.h: true it is that I ought to doe it, but I am not able. Yea marie, but is there not a God ỹ can do it for vs? yes: and therefore when we once knowe our owne weakenesse, let vs learne to seeke the remedie, forasmuch as god hath promised vs ỹ spirit of strẽgth, that being grounded thereupon, wee may not doubt but that wee shall ouercome all our enemies, and all the assaultes that can be made vppon vs. Furthermore let vs also consider ỹ power of our enemies, and the greatnesse of temptations. For wee haue not to doe with flesshe and bloud, they that fight against vs are not mortall and transitorie men, but they be all the powers of the ayre, and the prince of the worlde practiseth all ỹ he can to discomfit vs. Now therefore, when we once knowe the force of Satan, and the meanes that he hath to breake vs, and to vndoo vs: let vs not faile to take courage, and to bee of inuincible constancie. And why? for we know ỹ our God hath promised vs the vpper hand of al that euer Satã shal practise against vs. And therfore it is he ỹ we must trust vnto. Thus we see generally how we ought to put this doctrine in vre.

Now haue we to goe through with the rest of the similitude which I glaunced at here before: which is, that we must consider, that seeing God doth call vs nowadayes, not to the possessing of the lande of Chanaan, nor to be lodged here in this world for a fewe dayes, but to come to the heauenly lyfe, and to the immortall inheritance: it becommeth vs to take courage, and to acquaint our selues with this doctrine. And see ing that God hath told vs, that his reaching of his hand once vnto vs is not in vaine, and that he will goe through with his worke: wee on our part must determine fully to goe through with our course, and not to shrinke in the middes of the way. Thus ye see, first of all that we be more to blame than the Iewes of olde time, if wee hearken not to Gods mouth, considering that his intent is not only to giue vs an earthly dwelling place to lodge in, but to call vs right foorth to the kingdome of heauen, and to the immortall glorie, whereof wee bee made partakers aforehand by hope. And besides this, wee see after what sorte our Lord hath called vs. For he hath not giuen vs such Spyes as were giuen to the people of olde time, he hath not giuen vs a dooſen persons to report vnto vs what maner a land it is: but hee hath sent vs his onely sonne, who is a faithfull witnesse of the inuisible heritage, yea and he hath giuẽ vs good hansel thereof in his rysing againe. Wee haue the twelue Apostles which were chosen according to ỹ nomber of the tribes of Israell, & they were as good as twelue trũpetters to make gods voyce heard throughout the whole world. And besides them, there hath bin a great cloude of witnesses, as the Apostle termeth them in the twelfth to the Hebrewes, whereby he meaneth that if we were not ouer dull, & worse than vnthankeful & churlish: it might well suffice vs to haue such an infinite multitude of witnesses [to auow & warrant] our faith. Now then let vs learne, that if we fight vnder Iesus Christ, who hath told vs that sin is ouercome by his death and passion, & the bondes of death are broken to the intent to set vs free: it becommeth vs now to looke vp to heauen, & to march on boldly through ỹ world, forasmuch as he being risen againe, sheweth vs that the possession of righteousnesse and lyfe is assured vnto vs, because the power of his spirit is vttered therein. Seeing we haue such a confirmation to warrant vs the kingdome of heauen that is promised vnto vs: should we be cowardly? what excuse wil there be if we play the dastards and nice cockneyes? But to the end we may obey our God and not prouoke his mouth: let vs sal to strengthening of our selues in him. For what caused this wretched people to turne away so from his calling? Euen their considering of their enemies force according to their owne nature, and their forgetting of God and his power in the meane while. Let vs learne then to make such account of the strength of our God, as that wee may by the power of his spirite gette the vpper hand in all incounters that hee bringeth vs vnto: for hee will not haue vs to be idle in this present lyfe. Hee coulde well enough set vs in quiet at the first instant, so as wee shoulde not be troubled any maner a way, nor the worlde make warre against vs, nor we be tempted at all by our owne flesshe, and that Satan should bee far of from vs. God I say could well maintaine vs in ease at the first instant: but he intendeth to trye our patience: for he will haue vs to be men of warre. Wherefore let vs on our side fight, yea, let vs fight lustily: and if our enemies bee too strong for vs, (as wee finde that they be in deed) let vs flee for refuge to the helpe that our Lorde hath promised vs, and wee shall ouercome all lets if wee fight in the strength of God. But yet let vs marke that wee must fight vnto death, and not dye once onely: but haue death present dayly.

For what else is a Christen mans lyfe, than an indeuoring to renounce the worlde and all his owne affections? And therefore looke how many good thoughtes wee haue, so manie are the deathes of our owne froward nature: so as it is not possible for vs to serue God one day, but we must dy a hundred, yea and a thousand times: I saye wee must dye by beating downe the sinfulnesse of our owne nature: for wee bee full of vices. So then let vs marke well, that God is so farre of from making account of Liuerhearted seruants, that delight in ease, commoditie and pleasure: that hee will not onely haue vs to fight, but also to be readye to dye, and to put the doctrine in vre which I come now to touch: that is to say, to bee chaunged and renued euerye minute of an houre.

Moreouer let vs note also, ỹ lyke as our Lord Iesus Christ was buryed after hee had bin crucified and suffered ỹ reproch of his death: so must we be buryed too. For it is not enough for vs to dye one day and no more, as some doe, (which haue haue good braydes, ſo as ye would thinke them ready to forſake themſelues vtterly, and there appeareth great willingnes in them to renounce the world: but ſuddenly they will needes fall to reſting there, and they can no skill of entering into the graue:) But we muſt holde out in it, ſo as when wee haue once learned to dye with Chriſt, and to crucifie our olde man as S. Paul termeth it to the Romans: we muſt alſo be ready to goe into the graue, that is to ſay, all that euer is in vs as in reſpect of the world and of our owne fleſhe, muſt be vtterly aboliſhed, and wee our ſelues become nothing. To be ſhorte, wee muſt deſire nothing but to haue our lyfe hidden with Chriſt, (as ſayth Saint Paul to the Coloſſians) yea and to haue it hidden til his comming againe. But in any wiſe let vs beware that wee be not vnthankefull: for we ſhall neuer take courage, but by conſidering the ineſtimable worthyneſſe of ỹ good things whereunto God hath called vs. And therefore when we heare that the people conſidered not Gods bringing of them out of the land of Egypt: let not vs followe that trace, for it were the next way to put vs out of hart. So then, we ſhall neuer make anie account at all of Gods benefites which wee haue receiued alreadie, and which he ſhall haue made vs to feele: except we haue our eye alwayes faſt ſet vppon the promiſed land, that is to wit, vppon the euerlaſting lyfe. And therefore on the one part wee muſt oftentimes bethinke vs of Gods benefites, and call to minde his goodneſſe and mercie towardes vs which we haue felt. But that is not all that we haue to doe: when wee haue once conſidered how God hath ſhewed himſelfe to be our redeemer, how he hath taken vs out of the horrible blindneſſe wherein we were, how he hath inlightened vs with the brightneſſe of his Goſpel, and how he hath done vs ſo many good turnes euen in reſpect of our bodies, as we ought well to vnderſtand that he hath ſhewed himſelfe a father and ſauiour towardes vs: but ſpecially when we haue throughly weyed or rather worſhipped the goodnes which he hath ſhewed vs in all the ſpiritual benefites ỹ we haue receiued at his hand: (for they be the excellenteſt, & we alſo ought to eſteeme them more than al the bodily things that we could haue had at his hand:) whē we haue once conſidered all theſe thinges: then muſt we alſo bethinke our ſelues whereunto it is that God calleth vs, that is to wit, to the kingdome of heauen. Therefore we muſt alwayes haue our countenance as it were ſet faſt vppon the heauenly lyfe, and looke thitherward, ſo as all our wittes, all our deſires, and all our indeuors tend thither. For if we haue not an eye to the kingdome of heauen: wee muſt needes ſhrinke at euery incounter euery minute of an houre. Thus then ye ſee what wee haue to doe in that caſe. And moreouer to the intent our hartes quaile not as Moſes ſayth here: let vs indeuer to ſtrengthen our ſelues with the power of the holy ghoſt, and conſider that (as it is ſayd by the prophet Eſay, and alledged by the Apoſtle in the Epiſtle to the Hebrewes,) the Goſpel hath this propertie and nature with it, that when wee feele our knees weake and trembling, when our armes are feeble and after a ſort brooſed and broken, and when we be hemmed in on all ſides with impediments that hinder vs from following our vocation: it maketh vs to reſorte to Gods word, which ought to ſtrengthen vs and to make our armes and legges ſound and luſtie againe, and ſpecially to ſtrengthen vs in our hearts and mindes.

Rom.6.6. Rom.4.6. Col.3.3. Eſa.35.3.& Heb.12.12.

Now let vs kneele downe in the preſence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to make vs feele them better than we haue done, ſo as we may repent vs rightly of them, and being aſhamed in our ſelues reſorte vnto him, aſſuring our ſelues that (as he hath promiſed to receiue all wretched ſinners that come vnto him vpon truſt of his grace by meanes of the death and paſſion of our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt) wee ſhall be accepted of him and and his wrath pacified towardes vs, though wee haue prouoked him neuer ſo much. And let vs pray him, not onely that wee may obteyne forgiueneſſe of our ſinnes paſt: but alſo to guide vs henceforth by his holy ſpirite, and to drawe vs from all the vanities of the worlde, ſo as he faſhion vs according to his owne righteouſneſſe, and make vs feele the fruite of the victorie and triumph that is prepared for vs in heauen. That it may pleaſe him to graunt this grace, not only to vs but alſo to people & nations of ỹ earth. &c.

On Wednesday the xvij. of April. 1555.

The ſeuenth Sermon vpon the firſt Chapter.

29 And I ſayd vnto you, dread not, neither be afraide of them.

30 The Lord your God which goeth before you will fight for you, lyke as hee did with you in Egypt before your eyes.

31 And in the wilderneſſe where thou haſt ſeene how the Lord thy God bare thee (euen as a man beareth his ſonne) in all the way which ye haue gone, vntill ye be come vnto this place.

32 And yet for all this, you haue not beleeued the Lord your God, 33 Who to prouide you a place to pitch your tentes in, went before you in the way, in fyre by night to giue you light in the way that you ſhould goe, and in a cloude by day.

If Har-

IF hardineſſe were well taken, it were an excellent vértue worthie of great prayſe, and exceedingly requiſite in al a mans life. For if wee be fearefull, and haue not a ſtout courage to doe well: it will be an eaſie matter to cary vs to all naughtineſſe. But yet for all that, the worlde knoweth not how to bee hardie. And that is the cauſe why men are ſo much giuen to raſhneſſe, & ſo bold & ouerbold to aduéture vpon fooliſh matches without aduiſemét. But if we aduéture vpon things on our own head & fancie, & put not our truſt in God: it is a building without a foundation. Neuertheleſſe, it is not for vs to looke for Gods helpe, furtherfoorth than he hath bound himſelfe to it by his promiſes. The way then that we ought to be hardy, is that when we haue once ſought out Gods will, wee obey it ſimply without attempting any thing at our owne pleaſure. Be wee once at that poynt, wee muſt examine our owne ſtrength and abilitie, and finding nothing but weakeneſſe there, wee muſt vtterly diſtruſt our ſelues and reſort vnto God. And foraſmuch as he of his owne free goodneſſe vouchſafeth to aſſure vs that hee will not leaue vs at our neede: we muſt thereupon conclude, ỳ we cannot miſcary being vnder his protection.

Now then wee ſee that the true hardineſſe which God alloweth of, is when men truſt not to themſelues, ne leane to their owne wit and reaſon, but yeelde themſelues wholy to him that ought to gouerne them, and depend vpon his grace for all thinges which they want, and thereupon goe foreward ſtoutly, without ſhrinking or ſwaruing one way or other. And this leſſon is ſhewed vs in the text that I rehearſed euen now out of Moſes. For there hee exhorteth the people to hardineſſe, and ſheweth them why. The Lorde your God (ſayth he) will fight for you. As if hee ſhould ſay, If you eſteeme your ſelues the more for your great multitude, or thinke to ouercome your enemies by your own power: it is but fooliſh preſumption, and God wil puniſh you for being ſo puffed vp with pride. And if ye ſhould attempt any thing without Gods leaue and without hauing his worde for it: that alſo were an ouerweening which ſhould not ſcape vnpuniſhed.

But foraſmuch as God is on your ſide, and you haue his promiſe that he will not faile you, and you be not come hither but by his leading of you with his owne hand: Be not afraid. Thus ſendeth he them to Gods will, to the ende they ſhould not doe any thing which is not lawfull. Againe, he will haue them to leane altogether to Gods promiſes, and becauſe they could not haue in themſelues the thinges that were requiſite: he will haue them to hope that God will aſſiſt them. Now, this was ſpoken to the Iewes whom Moſes gouerned at that time: but yet is it a doctrine whoſe vſe is euerlaſting in Gods Church, as is ſayde afore. We haue not the Chananites for our enemies againſt whome to fight: but yet doe wee knowe ỳ this preſent life of ours ſhall not be idle, but that God will haue vs kept occupyed lyke men of warre that are waged to battell. And who be our enemies? Satan with all the ſhiftes that he hath, and all the vnbeleeuers through whom we muſt paſſe. For here wee be mingled with ſuch as ſeeke nothing els but the deſtruction of Gods children, wee haue infinite temptations, and to be ſhort wee neede neuer to go out of our ſelues to finde incounters enow: for all our luſtes, and all that ſpringeth of our fleſhe, is deadly enmitie againſt GOD, as ſayth S. Paul to the Romans. Seeing then that God hath ordeyned that wee ſhould mainteine battell all our lyfe long, and wee haue a greate ſorte of enemies, yea and thoſe very mightie and ſtrong, which neuer ceaſe troubling of vs: it behoueth vs to get vs hardines: for if we ſhrink, anon we be ouercome. Therefore it ſtandeth vs on hand to be armed with inuincible conſtancie, or elſe if euery of vs followe his owne ſwindge, God will let vs alone. So then, are we deſirous that God ſhould guide vs, & hold vs vnder his protection, & withſtánd our enemies to giue vs victorie againſt them? Let vs walke in obedience, and learne to leade our lyfe according to his will. For whoſoeuer roueth abroad at randon, forſaketh Gods helpe. Againe, let no man beguile himſelf vpon truſt of men, foraſmuch as they are commonly diſapointed of their enterpriſes. And it is good reaſon that God ſhould laugh them to ſkorne, when they fling forth ſo at al aduenture, and keepe neither way nor path. But lyke as moſt men are ſo ouerluſtie, that they can away with nothing worſe, than to beare the yoke that God layeth vppon vs: ſo euery man would haue libertie to doe what he liſteth, and it is ſeene that all men make warre againſt God and his worde, ſo as their iollitie cannot be daunted, but they be worſe than wilde beaſtes. And therefore doe moſt men abuſe themſelues with their owne deuices: for they regard not what God permitteth them to doe. When a man will aduaunce himſelfe for vaineglorie, he regardeth not what is lawfull, but pilleth, polleth, and filcheth by hooke or by crooke. He hath an eye to the ordinarie cuſtome of the world, but as for to frame himſelfe after Gods lawe, he hath no minde at all: He neuer thinketh thus with himſelfe, beholde, my God giueth me no leaue to doe this thing, and therefore I muſt forbeare it. He hath no ſuch thought with him.

Rom. 8. 7.

Wel may men coakes themſelues for a time, and beare themſelues on hand that all the world fauoreth them: but in the end, God will make all their enterpriſes to vaniſh away, ſo as they ſhallbe all confounded. And why? Becauſe they ranne gadding about, and kept not the right way. Now then, if we will be guided by Gods hand, and ſuccored by him at our neede: let vs learne to rule our lyfe aright, and to ſubmit it wholy vnto him. If wee be not at that poynt, let vs not looke for any helpe at his hand: but rather to haue him againſt vs as we bee worthie. Thus much concerning the firſt point.

But yet for all this, the matter lyeth not altogether in being deſirous to ſerue God, & to abſteine frõ the fooliſh attempts ỳ cary men away.

For there may be ſome that are pliable enough, & which would faine doe the thinges that God commaundeth: but therewithall they be puffed vp with a fond ſelfeweening, bearing themſelues in hand that they be able to compaſſe the things that they haue to doe, and truſting to their owne reaſon. But our Lord cannot abide to be robbed of the honor that belongeth vnto him. For what haue wee whereof it is lawfull for vs to boaſt? When we haue gathered all our powers vnto vs, wee ſhall finde them to be nothing but a vaine and fond ſhew. And therefore wee muſt bee faine to put to the ſecond poynt which I haue touched. Which is, that here we be warned to ſubmit our ſelues to the obedience of God, ſo as we ſeeke the thinges that he giueth vs leaue to ſeeke, & aske counſell at his mouth what things he lyketh and alloweth: to the intent that knowing our ſelues to bee ouerweake, yea and that there is no wiſedome, ſtrength, nor towardneſſe in vs, but that al our powers fayle vs: wee may pray him to guide vs and to giue vs good direction, and to hold vs vp with ſtrong hand, ſo as wee ground not our ſelues vpon our owne weening or opinion, but altogether vppon the aſſurance of his worde. Hath God promiſed to helpe vs? then let vs not doubt but he will doe it. Haue we no promiſe at his hand? then muſt we needes be at our wittes ende, till he comfort vs and ſtrengthen vs by ſhewing vs his wil. Thus yee ſee what wee haue to marke vppon this text of Moſes.

And therefore although it be vnpoſſible for a chriſten man to ſtep one ſtep without falling: yet muſt wee not be out of hart. The reaſon is, becauſe wee haue Gods promiſe, that he will fight for vs. Our fighting (ſayth Saint Paul) is not againſt fleſhe and bloud; beholde, all the powers of the ayre are againſt vs. For the diuil is named the prince of the world, he is aboue vs, and holdeth vs as it were betweene his pawes and in his throate, ſo as he is lyke enough to ſwallowe vs vp euery minute of an houre lyke a lyon: and we haue neither ſtrength nor ſenſe to withſtād him.

Eph. 6. 12.

But yet for all that, we muſt conclude, that foraſmuch as we be in the protection of our God, we be ſure of the victorie, if we fight wel. Therefore let this ſaying be well printed in our minde, that the Lord our God will fight for vs. When there is any queſtion of doing well, the Papiſtes cling to their own freewill, and it ſeemeth to thē that God layeth the brydle in their necke, ſo as they be able to doe this and that, whereby they ouerthrowe themſelues as they be worthy. But contrariwiſe let vs flee to our God, and hope to haue him doe the thinges that we cannot doe.

Furthermore let vs marke well, that this doctrine could not ſtande, vnleſſe wee were vnable to fight for our ſelues. For were wee of power to reſiſte our enemies, Gods fighting for vs were more than needed. Then doth it follow, that his fighting is becauſe wee haue no power at all, becauſe our armes are as good as broken, and becauſe wee bee lame from the ſole of the foote to the crowne of the head. And in good ſooth, if the Iewes hauing to doe but onelie with mortall and tranſitorie enemies, needed to haue God to fight for them: what had we need of? I pray you, when wee ſee Satan and all the worlde readie to giue aſſault vpon vs, yea and that he hath alreadie gotten the forehand of vs, and in the meane while wee haue neither wall, nor banke to holde them out, but (which is worſe) all our owne luſtes are as dartes wherewith Satan may ſerue his turne to wound vs with all: can wee defend our ſelues, hauing ſo hard a battell to beare out? No: and ſo wee ſee how the poore papiſtes are deceiued, in preſuming vppon their owne freewill, and in bearing themſelues on hand that if they haue neuer ſo little helpe of God, they can well enough get the vpper hand of Satan. On the contrary part, it is not ſayd that God will ſupply ſome little default with his power, and that wee muſt fight firſt to preuent him: it is not ſayde ſo, but that it is our God that fighteth for vs. It followeth then that all that euer wee doe, is done by the onely power that hee giueth vs, ſo as it is borrowed of him.

True it is that wee would fayne runne, & that wee make great indeuers to ſerue God: but whereof commeth that, but of this, that knowing our ſelues to be vtterly vnable, wee preſume not vppon any power or abilitie of our owne, but doe feele that we be not yet come to perfection? And ſo, to be ſhort, all our fighting commeth of the meere grace of the holy Ghoſt.

True it is that God worketh not in vs as in logges or blockes: for his will is to exerciſe vs as I haue ſayd already. Therefore when we ſhould doe well, wee muſt haue a good mouing and a liuely affection: and although wee haue bin letted and drawen away, yet muſt wee take courage to inforce our ſelues, that God may worke in vs as in his inſtruments. To be ſhort, the battels of the faithfull are paynfull enough: but yet for al ỹ, we muſt come backe to this point, that it is God which worketh by vs, and that all that euer wee doe proceedeth of him, inſomuch that without him wee could not ſtir one finger, no nor ſo much as thinke one good thought. And ſo yee ſee how this ſaying that the Lord our God fighteth for vs, is accompliſhed. When wee be once come to that poynt, although our enemies be neuer ſo terrible, yet let vs not be as men diſmayed, aſſuring our ſelues that God alone is ſtrong enough for vs, and that although all the world ſhould ſet themſelues againſt vs, yet ought wee not to care for them.

Haue wee made that account once, with ful purpoſe to withſtand all Satans aſſaultes: we muſt alſo put the ſame doctrine in vre in all the reſt of our lyfe. And ſo, when wee ſee our ſelues beſet with neuer ſo many wicked perſons, and that they lie in wayte for vs, continually following their lewd practiſes and deuices: what haue wee to doe? Wee muſt walke on playnely and vprightly, and not hold with the hare and hunt with the hound as they ſay.

When wee ſee that the wicked labor all that they can to ouerthrowe vs, let vs not doe as they doe, but let vs looke what God commaundeth vs, & frame our ſelues thereafter. And beſides beſides that, let vs conſider, that we ſhall bee as a pray to them, if God had vs not in his keeping. But ſeeing hee hath promiſed vs that hee will haue a care of vs, (as in deede he is our father) and that he will maintaine vs in our iuſt quarels, and ſet himſelfe againſt all ſuch as labor to oppreſſe the right: forasmuch as hee of his infinite goodneſſe vouchſafeth to take our caſe in hand: let vs goe on hardily, and although our enemies be neuer ſo wyly, & haue the world at will, and haue a nomber of practiſes ready for vs: let not all this abaſh vs, nor make vs to ſtep out of the right way. For why? ſeeing that God is on our ſide, what a ſhame were it to preferre mortall men before him, as though they were able to get the vpper hand of him? So long then as the creatures are not able to preuaile againſt God, let vs aſſure our ſelues of the victorie, forasmuch as it cannot but fall on our ſide. Thus you ſee how wee ought to apply this doctrine of Moſes to our vſe.

Furthermore we muſt alſo wey well this saying which he addeth, namely that God had giuen them a hanſel thereof in Egypt, ſo as they had good warrant to put their truſt in him, and that throughout the wilderneſſe he had ruled them lyke lattlebabes, and borne them in his armes. Seeing it is ſo (ſayth hee) that you haue had proofe of the power of your God in deliuering you from the handes of your enemies: and ſeeing you haue alſo perceiued his fatherly care towardes you, and that not for one day onely, but for a long time together: You be too too vnthankefull if you make not this concluſion, that he will no more faile you hereafter. To bee ſhort then, to confirme this people withall, Moſes alledgeth here the experience of Gods fauor which they had had. And although this poynt hath bin treated of heretofore: yet forasmuch as it is repeated again by Moſes: I muſt needes rehearſe it againe and put you in remembrance thereof: for there is no ſuperfluitie in ỹ ſpeach of the holy Ghoſt. Wherfore let vs marke well, that when God putteth vs in minde of his former helpe and grace, his meaning is that wee ſhould thinke well vpon the great nomber of benefites which we haue receiued at his hand. And the ſame ought to ſerue vs for a warrant, that he wil continue to the end. For he is not lyke mortall men which alter and change their minde: neither is his abilitie abridged: and to be ſhort, he neuer ceaſeth to do men good: whereas on the other ſide, if a man haue done his friend a pleaſure, he will perchaunce be willing to doe as much for him the ſecond time. But if his friend make none ende, he will be wearie of him. For he may ſay he is not able to doe for al men, and that he hath other friends whom he muſt doe for, as wel as for him. Againe, wee know that men are not conſtant. But there is no ſuch thing in God, for the more good that we receiue of him, the readier are his riches for vs, and they neuer diminiſh. And as for him, he doth not thinges by fittes as creatures doe, but he continueth alwayes in one will. There is not ſo much as any ouerſhadowing in him, as ſayth Saint Iames, to ſhewe that he is alwayes lyke himſelfe, and keepeth continually at one ſtay. Thus may wee aſſure our ſelues of Gods grace for the time to come, by our former experience of his ſuccouring of vs at our neede heretofore, in that he hath reached vs his hand. To be ſhort, all the good that God doeth vs, ought to ſerue vs to confirme our faith.

Iames. 1. 17.

But nowe let vs ſee what our vnthankefulneſſe is. For hath there paſſed any day ſince our comming into the worlde, wherein God hath not aſſiſted vs a thouſand wayes? yea and did we not finde him a father, before we knew him, yea and euen before wee came out of our mothers wombe? How ſhould the childe be nouriſhed in the mothers womb whē he is there as in a graue, vnleſſe God vttered a wōderful goodneſſe therin? Be we once entered into the world? behold, wee be hemmed in round about with miſeries. Could we paſſe ouer one minute of an houre, if God ſhewed not himſelfe to haue a continuall care of vs? Now then ſeeing that our God hath vttered himſelfe vnto vs ſo manie wayes: is there any excuſe for vs if wee be ſtill in doubt and diſtruſt of him, ſo as wee cannot leane vnto him? Againe let euery man looke vpon himſelfe [how God hath dealt with him particularly.] For beſides the common courſe of this worldly lyfe, and the thinges that are ordinarie to all men, euery man ought to conſider thus: Go to, I haue bin in ſuch a daunger and in ſuch a neceſſitie, and god hath helped me. How hath he wrought with me vnto this day? Hath it bin long of my ſelfe that I haue not bin vndone and deſtroyed a hundred thowſand times? was it through mine own power, that I haue bin preſerued? No. Then muſt it needes be that I had his helpe to ſaue me, during the time that I was as good as ſenſeleſſe. And afterward he ſhewed me the lyke fauour againe, when I had not yet any diſcretion to acknowledge it and to honor him for it. Now if I haue receiued ſo many benefites of him: ought I not to hope that he will continue to doe ſo to me ſtill hereafter? Let euery man then bethinke him of the benefites that he hath receiued at Gods hand, as well for his ſoule as for his body: and then ſhall wee be ſufficiently conuicted, that he hath powred out the riches of his goodneſſe vppon vs, and that in ſuch ſorte, as we may well truſt in him, that he will neuer forſake vs nor put vs out of minde. After this maner muſt wee put this text in vre, where Moſes ſpeaketh to the Iewes and ſayth thus: conſider what you haue found at the hand of your God vnto this houre. How hath hee dealt with you? how mightily hath he ouermaiſtred the lād of Egypt, and deliuered you from the bondage wherein you were? And beſides this, Moſes noteth here a double circumſtance, whereby the people were conuicted of gods mighty working in their behalfe. For (ſayth he) He hath fought for you in Egypt, yea euen before your eyes. As if he ſhould haue ſayd, that the miracles which God had wrought, were not darkſome nor done in hudther mudther, but ſo openly, and apparantly, as the people could not ſay, we knowe not how the caſe ſtandeth. God then ſhewed himſelfe after a viſible manner in that behalfe, ſo as yee cannot but knowe that he reached out his arme. That is the firſt of the two circumſtances.

The other is this where hee addeth, that from the time of the peoples deliuerance, God had maintained them, yea and that with ſuch kindeneſſe and gentleneſſe, as a father that had borne his childe in his armes could not haue done more for him. Now theſe two poyntes belong to vs. For they bee the too meanes whereby God procureth and furthereth our ſaluation, vntill he haue brought it to full perfection. On the one ſide hee fighteth for vs: for wee ſhall neuer bee without enemies as hath bin declared already. If wee be not acquainted with God, the deuill will reigne peaceably ouer vs, and wee ſhall delight to bee vnder his tyranny, as they that are naturally giuen thereunto. But if God call vs to him; then ſhall wee feele the deuill vtterly againſt vs, and wee ſhall ſee the world inflamed with deadly hatred towardes vs. To be ſhorte, there will be ſuch a ſorte of enemies to bidde vs battell, as wee ſhall not knowe on which ſide to turne vs. Lo in what plight Gods children are. Now then, his power muſt bee fayne to maintaine vs, and to fight the battell: and if he haue done it for the Iewes, hee muſt be faine to doe it now for vs too.

Thus yee ſee that the firſt meanes whereby God ſheweth himſelfe to be our Sauiour: is that hee armeth vs againſt our enemies, or rather that hee himſelfe is our ſhielde, our Pſal. 91. 2. ſtrong holde (as he nameth himſelfe oftentimes in the ſcriptures,) our bulwarke, our captaine, and to be ſhort, all that euer wee bee. Mark that for one poynt.

Now herewithal, when God hath ſo ſtrengthened vs, and giuen vs the vpper hand of all aſſaultes that could be put vnto vs: he muſt bee faine to vphold vs ſtill within. For elſe ſhoulde not we bee able to goe one ſtep, and wee ſhould want all that euer belongeth to our ſaluation. And euen as a young childe ſhould dye, if it were not ſuccoured: euen ſo is it with vs. If a little childe be let alone, hee will caſt himſelfe into the fire or into the water, hee coulde not take one bit of bread to feede himſelfe withall, hee muſt be borne in armes, hee muſt bee ſwadled, he coulde not dreſſe himſelfe, he would ſtarue for cold ſooner than come to the fire, and to be ſhort, wee ſee that a young babe before hee come to ſome age, is the miſerableſt creature that can bee deuiſed: and euen ſo is it with vs in reſpect of our God. Let vs ſet as much ſtore by our ſelues as we liſt, as wee ſee that men doe, glorying maruelouſly in their owne opinion: and yet is there more infirmitie in vs than in little infantes. He muſt be faine to rule vs, he muſt be faine to feede vs, he muſt be faine to cary vs, he muſt be faine to clothe vs, he muſt bee faine to doe all for vs. For if wee haue any witte at all, it is of his gift: if we haue any ſtrength, it commeth of him: if wee haue any abilitie or helpes, it is he that giueth them. True it is, that wee could not inioye the leaſt benefite in the worlde, but by fayth, I meane to our profite: but yet for all that, it is hee to whome wee be beholden for all. Now therefore, when wee once perceiue that God hath giuen vs ſtrength and ſtoutneſſe to outſtand the temptations that Satan hath ſtirred vp againſt vs: that wee haue not bin woſided to death by his venemous darts and arrowes: that we haue not wallowed in the mucke of this worlde: that wee haue not bin caught in the ſnares of the wicked: that their practiſes and wiles haue not preuailed againſt vs: and that God hath ſuccoured vs at all aſſayes: I ſay when wee haue perceiued that: let vs alſo conſider that God hath borne vs, that he hath fed and nouriſhed vs, that hee hath clothed vs, and yᵗ he hath as it were put our meat into our mouthes. The thing then whereupon wee muſt ſette our mindes, that wee may well bethinke vs of Gods benefites: is that the ſame muſt ſerue vs for a warrant and confirmation of our fayth, both in lyfe and in death.

But yet the ſimilitude that Moſes vſeth where hee ſayth, as a father beareth his childe: deſerueth to be well weyed. Truely if there were no more but this, that God compareth himſelfe with a fleſhly father: it were a ſingular record of infinite and incredible loue. What a one is GOD if he be taken in his maieſtie? Are wee worthie to come to him ſo familiarly? Now then ſeeing hee taketh vppon him the perſon of a man, and a creature, and lykeneth himſelfe to them that beare their children: therein we ſee how he humbleth himſelfe, of good wil to accept vs in like caſe as if we were his owne children. And what a token of loue is that? Now as for vs, wee be nothing woorth: needes then muſt wee acknowledge an ineſtimable goodneſſe in our God, when he putteth off his maieſtie, to make himſelfe lyke a man.

Neuertheleſſe hee contenteth not himſelfe with this ſimilitude onely, as wee ſhall ſee hereafter in the ſong. For there he lykeneth himſelf
Deut. 32. 11. to an Eagle, which ſtretcheth out his winges to cary his young ones, and to trayne them to ſore in the ayre. Seeing that God putteth himſelfe as it were vnder the ſhape of a byrde, to ſhewe vs the paſsing fatherly care that he hath of vs: I pray you, ought not wee to bee rauiſhed with wonderment, when God ſtoopeth ſo vnto vs, to make vs perceiue the loue that hee beareth vs, and the fauour that hee meaneth towardes vs? [yes ſurely.] For what a maieſtie importeth this worde GOD? And what are the birdes and vnreaſonable creatures? [Nothing.]

And yet notwithſtanding, beholde, God loueth vs ſo greatly, that to expreſſe the loue which he beareth vs, and to witneſſe his goodneſſe towardes vs, hee lykeneth himſelfe to a byrd, and vs to his little ones. Sith wee ſee this, let vs learne to magnify the goodneſſe and infinite grace of our God better than wee haue done heretofore, and let euery of vs awake and inforce himſelfe to conſider them throughly. For wherefore is it that our God transfigureth himſelfe in ſuch ſorte, but to reproue our vnthākfulneſſe, becauſe we be ſo ouer groſſe groſſe and dulheaded, as we let the benefites ſlip which he beſtoweth vpon vs, and digeſt them not to conceiue the goodneſſe of them, and to take heede of them? That is the cauſe why he ſetteth them before vs after that faſhion. And we ſee alſo how our Lord Ieſus ſpeaketh of himſelfe, in bewayling the deſtruction of the Citie of Ieruſalem. Howe oft (ſaieth he) would I haue gathered thy little ones vnder my winges, and thou wouldeſt not? There our Lord Ieſus ſpeaketh not as man: but ſhewing ỹ inaſmuch as he is the euerlaſting God, he played the part of a henne towardes the Iewes, and had his winges ſtretched out to haue brooded them: and that they on their ſide played the wylde beaſtes that woulde not bee tamed. When wee ſhall once haue knowen the fauour of our God towardes vs: let vs beware that it be not ſo defaced as we may iuſtly bee accuſed of vnwillingneſſe to ſuffer our God to gouerne vs peaceably. What is to bee done then? Seeing that our GOD ſheweth himſelfe ſo louing and kinde hearted, that he proteſteth himſelfe to bee as a father towardes his little babes, in bearing with our feebleneſſe and infirmities: and ſeeing that he ſaieth by his Prophet Eſay, that although all the mothers in the world ſhould forget their children, yet would not he forget vs: and ſeeing he ſtoopeth ſo lowe as to liken himſelfe to an Eagle and to a Henne, to ſhewe that he taketh vs for his chickins and birdes: let vs looke that wee yeelde vnto him, & lay our ſelues as it were in his lappe, praying him to beare vs and to releeue our infirmities, that we may be comforted at his hand, as he is readie to doe, if wee flee to his mercie for ſuccour. Thus ye ſee what wee haue to doe for the well putting of this doctrine in vre.

But Moſes addeth yet one point more for the better confirming that God had as it were borne his people in his armes, ſaying That a nightstimes he appeared to them as in a pillar of fyre, and a daysimes hee appeared to them as in a Cloud. Wee knowe that Gods ſhewing of theſe two viſible tokens, was to the end that ỹ people ſhould bee aſſured of his preſence: and thoſe tokens were requiſite for the leading of the people. For elſe in the night they ſhould haue bene flighted with the wilderneſſe which was verie dreadfull, as I haue declared alreadie. God therefore did giue them light by night, whereby he ſhewed that he was continually with them. And bicauſe they were in a hotte and drye Countrie, he did ſpred a cloud ouer them in the day, which ſhadowed them from ỹ burning of the Sunne. Wee ſee then that theſe two tokẽs of Gods preſence, ſerued fitly for the eaſing of the Iewes, and that in all theſe doings they felt his fatherly goodneſſe. Againe, the moe of ſuch figures they had, the more were they conuicted that GOD had gouerned them, and that he had a continuall care of their welfare. And therefore doth Moſes make expreſſe mention both of the fire and of the cloud, ſaying that neyther night nor day GOD had euer forſaken them: ſo as they could not but knowe that he was with them, and that his grace accompanyed them, as he ſawe meete and expedient for them.

But by the way wee muſt note, that although wee in theſe dayes haue no ſuch figures as the Iewes had vnder Moſes: yet notwithſtanding GOD giueth vs the thing that is of equall value; according alſo as Saint Paule ſheweth, ſaying that the cloud and the fire were a kinde of Baptiſme to the auncient fathers. And the chiefe thing that GOD meant to ſhewe vnto them thereby, was that although as in reſpect of their bodyes they were guided with fire by night, and had a cloud ſpred ouer their heades by daye: yet Gods meaning was not to haue them ſtay vpon theſe temporall benefites, but to leade them further. Then were they baptized in the cloud. And what haue wee now adayes? Doeth not Baptiſme warrant vs Gods preſence more certeinly & with a greater vertue, than did that auncient figure? Yes ſurely, if all thinges bee well conſidered. For wee muſt not ſtay our eyes vpon the water: but foraſmuch as ỹ bloud of our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt was ſhed, which is a ſpirituall waſhing vnto vs: therein God ſheweth himſelfe more familiarly vnto vs now adayes, than he did to ſuch as liued vnder Moſes. True it is that wee haue not the like myracles: but in the meane while, howe excellent was the Maieſtie that appeared in the perſon of our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt? How excellent were the myracles that he wrought? To bee ſhort, howe highly ought wee to eſteeme the death and paſſion that he ſuffered? Againe, haue wee not a paſſing excellent recorde of his Godhead in his riſing againe from death? Seeing then that wee haue the whole fulneſſe of Gods Maieſtie in the perſon of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, and that not in ſhadowe onely, but in very ſubſtance as Saint Paule declareth to the Coloſſians: I pray you were it not too ſhamefull a thankeleſneſſe in vs, if wee ſhoulde not bee throughly reſolued that our God hath vttered himſelfe ſufficiently vnto vs, to cauſe vs to reſt wholly vpon him, and to truſt in his power? Thus yee ſee wherein we reſemble the Iewes as touching the cloud whereof Moſes ſpeaketh here, and as touching the pillar of fire.

Col.2.9.

Furthermore, if wee conſider well howe our Lorde guideth vs: wee ſhall finde that the Cloud and the pillar of fire ſerued not the Iewes more, than the gouernment that is ſtabliſhed in the Church at this day, ſerueth vs. Whereas that people had the pillar of fire by night, and the Cloud by daye: wee muſt vnderſtand that in ſo dooing GOD meant not to bleſſe them for that one time onely. For what had the Iewes bene the better for it, if it had not made them to knowe that God was their gouernour all their life long? Now then wee cannot goe one pace, vnleſſe wee bee led by our God and aſſured of his goodneſſe. For our life is like the iourney that the people of Iſrael made thorough the wilderneſſe. God therfore ſuffereth vs not to wander in vncerteintie, knowing not whether wee were beſt to goe or to ſtand ſtill. For wee haue ſuch a declaration of his will, as wee can neuer ſtraye, except it bee wilfully.

Whoſoeuer ſeeketh Gods good pleaſure, ſhal be taught by him. And therefore now adayes wee haue no need of the viſible pillar of fire, nor of ỹ cloud that was ſpred ouer the childrē of Iſrael, forſomuch as our Lord ſheweth himſelfe to bee at hand with vs by another meane, and ſtretcheth out his hand continually ouer vs, and the way is wide and open ynough for vs. Now then we haue good cauſe to be contented.

And ſo let vs vnderſtand, that Moſes did not onely ſpeake to the Iewes after all ſortes: but alſo that he hath written theſe thinges for vs, that wee alſo might be confirmed now adayes in the doctrine which we haue of God, and not be diſobedient vnto him. And ſeeing wee haue neede to be ſuccoured at his hand, againſt Satan and all our aduerſaries: let vs learne to diſtruſt our owne ſtrength which is none at all, and acknowledging our owne wretchednesſe let vs reſort to him for aide and helpe at our neede. And when we haue once gotten hardineſſe to marche vnder his banner: let vs aſſure our ſelues that he will neuer ſuffer vs to miſcarie, though we be aſſailed with neuer ſo many temptations. Wee ſee what threatening there is now adayes, yea euen on all ſides: wee ſee how our welfare (as to outward ſeeming) is as a pray to our enemies, which ſeeke nothing elſe but to ſwallowe vs vp: and therewithall wee ſee alſo how weake and feeble we be to withſtand them: and yet for all that, let vs not doubt but our Lord fighteth for vs, conditionally that wee walke on ſimply vnder the ſhadowe of his winges, and play not the looſe colts, ne attempt any thing which he alloweth not. And ſo doing, let vs not doubt but he will deliuer vs, and ſtretch out his hand vpon our enemies to vanquiſhe them and deſtroy them, ſo as wee ſhall knowe that he hath a continuall care of vs, and that his only deſire is to guille and gouerne vs, and to continue and increaſe his graces in vs, and to haue vs alwayes in his keeping and protection.

Nowe let vs kneele downe in the preſence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to make vs ſo to feele them, that being aſhamed of our ſelues, wee may craue pardon of him, and being deſirous to be gouerned by his direction, ſeeke nothing but to ſubmit our ſelues to his yoke more and more, till he haue ridde vs quite and cleane of all our fleſhly corruptions and imperfections, and that we bee come to the full meaſure of his righteouſneſſe, whereunto it behoueth vs now to tend. And ſo let vs al ſay, Almightie God heauenly father, &c.

On Munday the xxij. of Aprill. 1555.

The eight Sermon vpon the firſt Chapter.

34 Then the Lord heard the voyce of your wordes, and was angrie, & ſware, ſaying:

35 None of the men of this wicked generation, ſhall ſee the good land that I haue ſworne to giue to their fathers, 36 Sauing Caleb the ſonne of Iephone, who ſhall ſee it: and I will giue him the ground wherevpon he hath troden, and vnto his children, bicauſe he hath followed the Lord throughly.

37 Alſo the Lord was angrie with me for your ſakes, ſaying, Thou alſo ſhalt not goe in thither:

38 But Ioſua the ſonne of Nun, which ſtandeth with thee, ſhall goe in thither. Strengthen thou him: for he ſhall put Iſrael in poſſeſſion thereof.

39 Your little children which ye ſaid ſhould be a pray, and your ſonnes which at this day knowe neither good nor euill, ſhall go in thither, and I will giue them the land, and they ſhall poſſeſſe it.

40 But as for you, turne ye backe againe, and get ye into the wilderneſſe by the way of the red ſea.

AFter that Moſes hath rehearſed the peoples ſinne: now he putteth them in remembraunce of the puniſhment that followed vpon it, that they might be better aduiſed thenceforth, & not prouoke God to wrath after that faſhion. For whenſoeuer God puniſheth men for any offences, the ſame ought to ſerue them for a warning, and other men for an example, to beware that they doe no more ſo. True it is that they which had murmured after that ſort againſt God, were alreadie dead: but yet was it expedient ỹ their children ſhould haue it printed in their mindes, that God had not left ſuch vnbeliefe and diſobedience vnpuniſhed. And ſo wee ſee the intent of Moſes. Wherefore let vs note, that if God haue ſhewed vs that he cannot away with ſome offence: his intent is that we ſhould thinke vpon it, and that the chaſtiſementes which he layeth layeth vpon vs ſhould turne to our profite, and that they ſhould ſerue vs for the time to come, ſo as wee ſhould not looke to haue him to ſtretch out his hand againſt vs: for it is good for vs to bee taught at other mens coſt as the prouerb ſaieth. But wee muſt marke, that Moſes rehearſeth here briefely, the things that are declared more largely in the fourteenth Chapter of the Booke of Nombers, where God is ſo wroth with the people, that he would haue deſtroyed them vtterly. He ſaieth there to Moſes, paſſe not thou for it: I can giue thee a greater and excellenter people than this: but as for theſe wicked folke, they muſt needes bee rooted out, I cannot ſuffer them any more. Hereupon Moſes maketh interceſſion for them and ſaieth: Not ſo Lord: for if it ſhould be heard in Egypt, that it were ſo come to paſſe, thy name ſhould be blaſphemed, & the wicked would make a ſcoffing at it, ſaying: becauſe God could not performe his promiſe, therfore hath he ſlaine this people, and ſo hath he beguiled them and betrayed them. Lord, wilt thou ſuffer thy name to be ſlaundred after that ſort? Thereupon God telleth him that he will not execute his vengeance vpon any other than ſuch as had murmured, & yet notwithſtanding that he would therewithall reſerue a ſeede, on whom to perfourme the thing that he had promiſed to his ſeruant Abraham.

Num. 14.11

By the way, ỹ threate that is conteined here, importeth not that God was not determined in his owne purpoſe what he would doe: for if wee ſhould thinke that he altered his mind vpon the aduertiſement that Moſes gaue him: it could by no meanes agree [with his nature.] Should a mortall man haue more diſcretion and forecaſt than the liuing God? No: and on the otherſide wee knowe that God doeth in no wiſe chaunge his purpoſe. Neuertheleſſe, diuers times he vttereth ſomewhat rough threatnings, to driue vs to humble our ſelues before him, and to make vs feele what wee haue deſerued. God then in telling Moſes that he would vtterly roote out that people, ſo as there ſhould not one of them bee left aliue, meant not that he was determined ſo to doe: but ſheweth that the people was worthy to haue bene quite and cleane deſtroyed. And in deede there was iuſt cauſe why, to the intent that euery of them ſhould be ſmitten downe and ſubdued on his owne behalfe, and that Moſes ſhould pray after that maner. And yet for all that, God found the meanes to make good his promiſe, notwithſtanding the wilfull frowardnes that was in the people. And this is a point well worthie to be marked among others: that when God hath choſen any people, although his grace bee deſpiſed, ſo as all they whom he had called become vnworthie of ſuch a benefite, and baniſh themſelues out of his houſe by reiecting ỹ promiſe that was offered them: yet will God finde the meanes to chaſtiſe them in ſuch wiſe, as his Church ſhall not vtterly periſh, yea and he will euen ouercome mens frowardneſſe with his goodneſſe. I ſay it is well worthie to bee marked. For wee ſee that on the one ſide, the hypocrites, vnder colour that God hath manifeſted himſelfe vnto them, and promiſed to bee their Sauiour: doe ſurmiſe that they haue him bound, and thereupon take leaue to doe euill: and if a man ſhewe them their ſinnes, they harde themſelues againſt it, there is nothing but pride in them, & they arme themſelues with Gods name, to fight againſt his Prophets. And this haue they done in all ages. When the Iewes were rebuked for their wicked life, & for their turning away from God: they were inflamed with ſuch rage againſt the Prophets, as to ſay, How nowe? To whom ſpeake ye? Are not wee the Church? Are not wee Gods inheritance? Hath he not ſet his couenant among vs? Haue not wee the ſigne of Circumciſion? Haue not wee the temple where he is worſhipped? Wee ſee then that the Iewes did falſely abuſe Gods name, to aduaunce themſelues againſt him and his word. And this is reported of the Iewes: but yet wee may ſee the like in our ſelues. For all they to whom God hath done ſo much honour as to giue them his word and to manifeſt himſelfe vnto them, doe imagin that they haue him as it were in their ſleeue: & yet for all that, in ſtead of profiting themſelues by Gods ſo gentle alluring of them vnto him, they ſet themſelues againſt all good doctrine, they cannot finde in their heartes to beare any yoke, they will needes bee as wilde beaſtes, and yet in the meane while they will needes haue God to auow them to be of his flocke. But here wee ſee, that although God had as then ſet vp his ſeat among the Iewes, and made a couenant with them to bee their Sauiour vnto the ende: yet when he ſawe they were not meete to haue him, but that they drew cleane backe, and ceaſſed not to ſpite him: he found the meanes to puniſhe them, yea and that in ſuch ſort, as all thoſe things went to nought, and yet he himſelf abode ſoothfaſt, notwithſtanding their deſtruction. And therfore let vs not deceiue our ſelues. When God hath once taken vs to him to be of his houſhold, and adopted vs to be his children: let vs not ſooth our ſelues in our vices, but conſider how it ſtãdeth vs on hand to walke ſo much the more awefully, when God hath ſhewed himſelfe ſo bountifull towardes vs, and that foraſmuch as he hath vttred his goodnes in ſuch wiſe, it is good reaſon that wee on our part being ſo much beholden vnto him, ſhould looke well about vs and indeuour to giue our ſelues wholly to his ſeruice, and be ſo loth to offend him, as we may alſo be afraide to be bereft of the grace that he hath once beſtowed vpon vs. Marke that for one point.

Ierem. 7.4.

And therewithall let vs marke alſo, that God in puniſhing the hypocrites and all ſuch as abuſe the goodneſſe that he hath done towards them, ceaſſeth not for all that, to continue faithfull ſtil. For if he ſhould deſtroy the whole world and leaue no afterſpring to call vpon him, it might bee ſaid, in deede God hath iuſt cauſe to puniſh men after that maner: but in the meane time where is his promiſe? He hath ſaide that his Church ſhall continue for euer, & that his name ſhall bee called vpon here beneath, as long as there is eyther Sunne or Moone in the ſkie: but

nowe is all diſpatched quite and cleane, the remembrance of ſaluation is vtterly buried among men. Although then that God ſhould doe iuſtly in puniſhing ſuch as had done amiſſe: yet ſhould his promiſe bee vaine and voide, if he perfourmed not the thing that he promiſed, and ſo would men blame him of vnfaithfulneſſe. But (as I ſaide) he findeth meanes to puniſh them that deſerue it, and yet notwithſtanding reſerueth and keepeth ſtill a people to himſelfe, and ſuffereth not his trueth to fall to the ground, or to die without effect. And hereof we haue a notable example in this place. For wee ſee that God had made a couenant with Abraham, and had promiſed him to giue the land of Chanaan for an heritage to his offſpring. As ſoone as the time came, the promiſe was performed. Yea verily: but all the poſteritie of Abraham refuſed and reiected the promiſe, whereby they diſanulled it as much as lay in them. Thus you ſee they bee depriued of it through their owne vnthankfulneſſe. But yet to the intent that God be not accuſed of leauing his promiſe vnperformed: it behoued him in puniſhing the fathers to preſerue their race. They that come vp afterward are alſo the offſpring of Abraham, and they poſſeſſe the land that was promiſed: by meanes whereof the couenaunt that God had made abode ſure and faſt ſettled to the end. And for the ſame cauſe it is ſaid that God reſerued the yong children to himſelfe. Now then, as many as had murmured and were aboue the age of twentie yeeres, are caſt off and baniſhed from the good turne that was readie for them: but they that were vnder that age are preſerued ſtill, and God is glorified in them. And albeit that the accompliſhment of his promiſe was delayed by the ſpace of fortie yeeres: yet notwithſtanding he ſhewed himſelfe faithfull in the end. This is the matter which we haue to beare away.

So now likewiſe, when wee ſee the world ſo farre out of order that al is mard, and it ſeemeth that all men will needes ſpite GOD, and ſhut themſelues out of all hope of ſaluation, by driuing away the light of the Goſpell that is giuen them: let vs looke for ſome vengeaunce at hand. For though God bee patient: yet muſt he bee faine in the ende, to ſtretch out his arme to bee reuenged of ſuch malice and contempt. On the one ſide, they to whom the Goſpell is preached, doe growe altogether heatheniſh, and it is ſeene that a nomber waxe worſe and worſe, and wickednеſſe becomes more exceſſiue than it was in the time of the abominations of the Popedome, ſo that (to ſpeake properly) it ſhould ſeeme that men become diuilles after their hearing of the Goſpell. What is it I pray you, that a man ſhall ſee, yea and that commonly? That there is now no more loue of God, no nor countenance of louing him, that Religion is let alone colde and dead, and that there is no more zeale in vs than in a timberlogge. It is apparant then that Gods word is now adayes ſtained and defyled with our iniquities, in ſo much that whereas wee ſhould bee as burning Lampes to giue light to the ſillie ignorant ſoules, wee giue them occaſion of ſtumbling. Againe on the other ſide, we ſee how the faithleſſe doe fight againſt God, ſeeking nothing elſe dayly but to ouerthrow his trueth, and to cauſe it to be quenched out, that it might neuer be ſpoken off more. Seeing then that the whole world is ſo malicious, and that as well the one ſort as the other doe make open warre againſt God, continuing ſtill in their ſtubbornneſſe which increaſeth from day to day: muſt not God (after he hath waited for ſome conuerſion and amendment) execute his vengeance vppon vs as wee deſerue? Ye ſee then after what manner it behoueth vs to prepare our ſelues, conſidering that wickedneſſe is ſo great nowe adayes, and ſo farre paſt hope of recouerie. But yet therewithall let vs comfort our ſelues, and looke alſo that in puniſhing the offenders God will not fayle to keepe ſtill ſome ſeed to himſelfe, ſo as he wil alwaies haue ſome little flock to cal vpon him and to worſhip him. Let vs not doubt then but that our Lorde will alwayes maintaine his Churche, to the intent to ſhewe himſelfe ſooth faſt. Although all thinges ſeeme forlorne and brought to confuſion: yet will God worke after ſuch a faſhion, as wee ſhall ſee in the ende, that he hath had a regard of his promiſe, and that he will ſhew himſelfe faithfull and prooue himſelfe ſo in deede.

But let vs marke well, that the Churche ſhall not alwayes be viſible ſo as wee ſhall perceiue it. It ſhall ſeeme [nowe and then] that all is come to nought: Like as when God made the people to turne backe againe, he ſaid vnto them, Get ye into the wilderneſſe towardes the red Sea, as though they ſhould haue returned againe into Egypt. Here is ſuch a great confuſion, as it might well ſeeme that he minded not any more that the land of Chanaan ſhoulde bee giuen for an heritage vnto thoſe to whom it was promiſed. Ye ſee then that for a time it ſeemed that God had falſified his promiſe, and that there was not any more hope that the children of Abraham ſhould haue entered into the place that was promiſed them. Euen ſo ſhall it fall out with vs, as in deede it is come to paſſe. For when God withdraweth his light out of the worlde: it will ſeeme that there is no more any Church at all. If a man looke round about him, he ſhall ſee that all is gone to hauocke. And in good faith, what deſolation was there in the time of Poperie? Yea and euen ſtill at this day, a man myght thinke that all ſhoulde goe to ruine and decaye. But let vs marke, that it is all one as if God ſhoulde cauſe thoſe to goe backe againe which are not woorthie to goe forewarde: and that yet notwithſtanding, he ceaſſeth not to holde on in ſuch wiſe, as his Churche ſhall ſtill bee maintained and preſerued. Howbeit, not that the ſame can bee diſcerned with the eye, or perceiued by man: but wee muſt ſhut our eyes, vntill our Lord doe worke after his owne maner, that is to ſay wonderfully beyond all our expectation, and beyond all that we bee able to conceiue. Thus you ſee howe wee may comfort our ſelues in this, that although wee ſee it is not poſſible but ỳ God muſt not caſt ſome horrible puniſhment ment in these dayes vppon mens wickednesse: yet neuertheless hee will alwayes reserue some people to himselfe, so as the thing that he speaketh by his Prophet Ioel shalbe seene continually. Though heauen and earth (saith he) do goe together, though the sunne be darkened, though the moone drop bloude, though the starres lose their light, and though the earth remoue: yet for all that whosoeuer calleth vppon the name of the Lorde, shalbee saued: GOD will preserue them whom he hath chosen to call vpon him: and albeit that their life bee hidde, yet will not God faile to heare them in the end, and to shewe them that hee neuer was vnmindefull of his promise, but that he had a regarde of him selfe, notwithstanding that men were not worthy to haue any one drop of goodnes and mercy offered vnto them. This is the matter in effect which we haue to remember in this first place.

Ioel. 2. 30.

But herewithall we must marke the othe that God made against the Iewes, as it is set downe in the Psalme, and afterwarde applyed vnto vs by the Apostle, saying: To day, if ye wil heare his voyce, harden not your hearts as your fathers did in the wildernesse, vnto whom I sware in my wrath, that they should not enter into ỹ land ỹ was my rest. We see how it was ỹ wil of the holy Ghost, that the Iewes should in al ages be mindful of this disobedience that had bin committed: and that therevpon they should remember that for the same, their fathers were bereft of the benefit that had beene promised them, and shutte out from Gods rest. For (as I saide afore) this serued not for the Iewes only, but the Apostle applieth it also to our time. God then directeth his speech to vs at this day. Therefore wee must haue our eares open to hearken vnto him: wee must not driue of from morrowe to morrowe: wee must seeke no delay: as soone as God speaketh wee must be readie to learne, and not harden our heartes against him. Whereby wee bee put in minde, that there is nothing which hindereth our obedience vnto God, but our own resisting of him through a certaine wilful frowardnes. For he for his part applieth himselfe in such wise vnto vs: as hee beareth with our rudenesse and infirmitie. So then, all they that are taught by the Gospell, shall obey God without gainesaying, if they poyson not themselues through a certaine wilful frowardnesse to withstande God, and to driue backe his grace. That is the cause why we be expresly warned, not to harden our heartes. Yea verily: for wee must not think that God will suffer his grace to bee so scorned, and dalyed with, and set light by. If he were inflamed with anger against the Iewes for refusing to enter into the Land of Chanaan: if we nowadayes doe playe the restie iades and fall to kicking, let vs not thinke that such vnthankefulnesse shall scape vnpunished. And in good sooth, if the Iewes were so punished at that time, that all the sorte of them came to nought, wandering in the wildernesse by the space of fortie yeeres: God shewed yet more harde and rigorous vengeance vppon them afterwarde, in the thraldome of Babylon and other miseries that happened vnto them: for the thraldome of Babylon lasted threescore and ten yeares. And at their returne, although he shewed great and wonderfull power: yet were they but a handfull which were saued, according to this saying of the Prophet Esay, though thy people were as the sande of the sea, yet shoulde but a small remnant of them be saued. And in another place hee saith, we had beene as Sodome and Gomorre, if God had not reserued a little seede, yea euen a verie little one. Wee see then that God increased his wrath against such as amended not at the example of their fathers. And why? Because they were the lesse to bee excused, for they ought to haue taken warning by the punishmentes that were prepared for them. Therefore did they double their offence. And what thinke we of the desolation that hath happened since the [first] preaching of the Gospell, [for the refusall whereof] the wretched world hath wandred so astray, as all things haue bin corrupted in the Church, so that in steede of Gods seruice there hath beene nothing but abhominations, insteed of truth there hath beene nothing but diuelish lyes and errours, and all thinges haue beene put out of order there, and that the same confusion hath lasted nowe so long time? [All these thinges doe put vs in minde] that Gods voyce ought to sounde shirler noweadayes in the Gospell, than it did in the Lawe. For as is saide by the Prophet Aggeus, God maketh heauen and earth to quake nowadayes, when the Gospel is preached. And besides that, wee haue all the thinges that befell to the people of olde time, which serue vs as a liuely picture. There must wee beholde Gods wrath, to restrayne our selues from doing euil, as Saint Paul sheweth vs in ỹ tenth of the first to the Corinthians. But if wee make no reckening therof: is it not reason that God shoulde punish vs sorer than hee did the Iewes?

1. Cor. 10. 11

Let vs learne then to hearken to Gods voyce while it soundeth in our eares, and let vs beware that wee harden not our heartes, least God sweare in his wrath. For it is saide expresly that God sware. And whie? Because men thinke his threates to be vaine, if hee make them not to perceiue that hee speaketh in good earnest. And of a trueth we see dayly, that when Gods threatnings are vttered vnto vs, a great many of vs do but shake our eares at them, and the number of those that are touched with them, is verie smal. Therefore the othe that GOD sweareth is no more than needeth, euen in respect of the blockishnesse that is in men, forasmuch as they bee so foolish as to make but a mocke of euerie thing that is tolde them. And like as God to helpe the weakenesse of our faith, vseth an othe when hee confirmeth his promises: so on the contrarie part, hee vseth to sweare when hee threatneth to punishe vs. And why? To the ende that being afraide and abashed at it, wee shoulde come to repentance. For if wee bee not made to stoope that wee may take holde of Gods iustice: our faultes will neuer mislike vs.

Gods

Gods iuſtice then muſt become as a thunder or lightning, and we muſt bee abaſhed before him, that we may no more bee ſo drunken in our ſins as wee were. And therefore whenſoeuer Gods threatnings do not diſmay vs ſufficiently: let vs cal to minde the oth that Moſes ſpeakes of here, and let vs aſſure our ſelues that it is we whom the ſame pointeth at, according to that which I haue alledged alreadie both out of the Pſalme, and out of the record of the Apoſtle.

And therewithall let vs alſo marke well the words that are ſet downe heere by Moſes. None of this curſed and wicked generation (ſaith hee) ſhall ſee the good land that I haue promiſed. Heere GOD maketh a compariſon betweene lande and the people. This lande then was a ſingular gift, in token whereof hee calleth it his reſt: meaning thereby that he had choſen that lande to bee as a dwelling place and euerlaſting inheritance for the people to reſt in vnder his protection. For there is no certaintie in this worlde, and if wee bee lodged in any place, wee may bee put out of our neſt againe to day or to morrowe. But God tolde them that hee had aſſigned the lande of Chanaan for an euerlaſting poſſeſſiō to the children of Abraham, to mainteine them and keepe them ſafe there, ſo as no man ſhoulde trouble them, nor euer driue them out againe. Yee ſee then that the lande was not a common gift, but a gift that deſerued to bee eſteemed as moſt excellent aboue al others. But behold, the people on the otherſide, are malicious and froward. Therefore it is all one as if our Lorde ſhoulde ſay, I ſee wel ynough howe the worlde goes, I ſhall ſooner make fire and water to agree, than cauſe thispeople to like of my benefits. For in my benefites there is nothing but meere goodneſſe, and in this people there is nothing but meere naughtineſſe.

Let vs marke well then, that to inioy Gods benefites, wee muſt frame our ſelues to his will and righteouſneſſe: for our naughtineſſe and Gods goodneſſe can neuer match together, inſomuch that if wee will needes followe our owne nature, God muſt needes withdrawe his goodneſſe away from vs. True it is that God looketh not for any worthineſſe at our hands why hee ſhoulde doe vs good: nay rather, hee fighteth dayly againſt our ſinnes, and vſeth mercie where as hee might lawfully vſe rigour againſt vs. But yet for all that, if hee ſee that we continue in our naughtineſſe, hee can no longer continue in doing vs good. Yee ſee then that the doctrine which we haue to gather vppon this conſideration: is that there muſt bee as it were an accorde and melodie betweene God and vs, and that when hee imparteth his benefites vnto vs, we muſt make ſuch eſtimation of them, as wee indeuer to ſerue and honour him for them, and conſider that he calleth vs to him, to plucke vs backe from our ſinnes. If wee doe ſo, the good that he hath done vs ſhalbe confirmed more & more. Otherwiſe, it muſt needes bee that our naughtineſſe ſhall cut off the courſe of his goodneſſe. Why ſo? For (as I haue ſaid alreadie) when God offreth men his benefits, & they refuſe them of a wilfull frowardneſſe: it is as if fire and water ſhould meete together.

But beſides this, wee muſt alſo marke Gods vpbrayding of the people, with their ſaying that their yong children ſhoulde be a pray to their enemies. They (ſaith he) ſhall poſſeſſe the lande, yea euen to the intent that you may be proued lyers. Heere it behoueth vs to marke well, that when men will needes doubt of Gods trueth, they muſt in the ende be founde lyers, and Gods trueth ſhine forth the brighter to their ſhame. Nowe hereby wee bee warned to receiue ſimplie the promiſes that GOD offereth vs. And although it ſeeme at the firſt bluſh that they ſhold neuer be accompliſhed, & that there be a number of impediments to hinder them: yet muſt we doe him the honour to beleeue that he is faithfull, and to abide patiently for the conuenient time of his performance of the thing that hee hath ſaid. For if we gaineſay his truth, and murmure, and fall to queſtioning and diſputing, with howe can this be? is it poſſible? God ſeemeth to mocke vs: I ſay, if we go that way to worke: Well may hee performe his promiſe for all that: but it ſhalbe to our ſhame, ſo as wee ſhall alwayes bee founde lyers. Wee may well triumph for a time, as we ſee the vnbeleeuers doe, which malapertly deſpiſe God, ſpewing out their blaſphemies againſt him: but yet in the ende God ſhall continue faithfull, and his trewneſſe ſhalbe knowen ſpite of our teeth, and therewithall we ſhalbee put to ſhame. And therefore let vs beware of it, and that wee may beware of it, let vs marke well howe the Iewes are vpbrayded with it here. Yee haue ſaide that your children ſhall bee made a pray: but they ſhall inioy the land, and you ſhalbe ſet beſide it.

Moreouer the example of Caleb the ſonne of Iephone is verie notable, and ſo is alſo the example of Ioſua the ſonne of Nun. Theſe two are reſerued of a great multitude. And why? Becauſe they had gone through ſtoutly. For this recorde is yelded to Caleb, that hee had perfifted [or continued] in following the Lorde. Whenas God exempteth here but two men of an infinite multitude: therein wee ſee howe it is a folly to looke what other men doe. For had Caleb and Ioſua done ſo: what had come of it? They had gone to deſtruction with the reſt. But they ſuffered not themſelues to bee caryed away by that horrible tempeſt. When they ſawe ſo ſtraunge a turning backe in the whole people: yet did they confirme themſelues in the power of God, and although the people woulde haue ſtoned them, (as is declared in the booke of numbers, and as ſhalbe touched againe anon): yet did they their duetie. So then, ſeeing that God alloweth the conſtancie of Caleb and Ioſua, for that they did ſhut their eyes when they ſawe the people ſo exceſſiuely ſet vppon miſchiefe, and exhorted them to obey God: let vs note well that although thinges be out of order in the worlde, and we ſee ſtumblingblockes to ouerthrowe vs, and vices rage like a waterfloud: yet is it no ſufficient cauſe to ſuffer our ſelues to bee caryed away, or to make vs followe the common traine, for it ſhall not abate our condemnation before God. We may well ſay, all the worlde doth ſo: for all the worlde ſhall periſh, and thou with it, which ſpeakeſt ſo in contempt of thy God. What a thing is it, that men wil needs aboliſh Gods iuſtice, and giue no more eare vnto him when they giue themſelues to all naughtineſſe, but ſhut him vp in heauen, and ſuffer him to haue no more authoritie heere beneath? Whereto tendeth this? And yet for all that, wee ſee noweadayes that when the ignorant intende to ſhrowde themſelues, the greateſt ſheelde that they haue is to alledge, Howe ſo? I ſee that all the worlde behaue themſelues contrariwiſe. And in the meane ſeaſon what becomes of God? God muſt bee faine to bee thruſt vnder foote, and men muſt runne leaping and friſking at their pleaſure. Yea and euen among our ſelues, if a man tell one or other of their faults: [their anſwere is,] I ſee others are as bad as my ſelfe. Wee beare our ſelues on hande, that our condemning of our neighbours will goe for good payment, and that we ſhal ſcape Gods hand by that meane. Therefore let vs thinke continually vpon the example of Caleb and Ioſua. And foraſmuch as GOD ſheweth that hee made more account of them though they were but two in all, than of all the other howge multitude which were about ſeuen hundred thouſande perſons: foraſmuch (ſay I) as we ſee that God giueth ſuch ſentence of them: let vs learne to ſubmit our ſelues to him, and to regarde nothing but that which he commaundeth. And though the world runne gadding here and there in the meane while, let vs followe the way that God hath ſhewed vs by his pure word.

Moreouer, let vs wey this ſpeech where it is ſaide, that Caleb held out in following the Lorde. For it is not ynough for vs to beginne well, but wee muſt alſo ſticke to God through ſtitch, yea euen without any feining or ſtarting, and without fainting or giuing ouer in the mids of our way. And in good ſooth, it is not for nought that this recorde is giuen to Caleb. For (as I haue touched heretofore) the people were in ſuch an vprore, as they would haue ſtoned him and Ioſua too. Inſomuch that if God had not take them away, and his glorie appeared vppon the tabernacle: they had loſte their liues for it. Yet for all this, they ceaſed not to doe their duetie ſtill, but cryed out againſt the people and rent their clothes. And after that manner ſtroue they againſt thoſe which woulde not inioy Gods bleſſing. Wee ſee then how there was a marueilous power in Caleb and in Ioſua. And therefore we bee warned by their example, not onely to enter into the way, but alſo to goe forwarde and forward ſtil, aſſuring our ſelues that we cannot holde out to the ende in ſeruing God, but by bearing out of many harde brunts and temptations, [and therfore we haue neede] to ſtrengthen our heartes in ſuch wiſe, as nothing may be able to make vs to fleete. Thus yee ſee whereto our Lord and his holy ſpirite exhort vs.

Where as he praiſeth here the conſtancie of Caleb and Ioſua: it is to the end (ſay I) that their example ſhould ſerue to our inſtruction. For although the memoriall of the righteous be bleſſed before God: yet is it declared for our profite. Therefore let vs not haue ſuch a zeale as ſhall waxe colde when it commeth to the following of God: but let vs determine fully with our ſelues to holde out with it, whatſoeuer the diuell practiſe, or howſoeuer the world ſet it ſelfe againſt vs: like as at this day wee ſee many reſiſtances, and many occaſions, that might make vs ſtart away: but yet for all that, we muſt holde on our iourney, not for two or three dayes onely, but all our life long. Let vs goe on therefore: and when there is any mention of following God: let vs marke that it is to confirme the matter better which I haue declared alredie: that is to wit, that if we followe men, we ſtall runne aſtray. For why? what els are the wais of the world but ſtraiings, ſo as euery man gaddes in and out, when they once turne their backes vpon God? What is to bee done then? So long as wee looke vppon men, it will bee vnpoſſible for vs to goe right: but wee muſt followe God.

True it is that when God is ſo good vnto vs, as to giue vs men to accompanie vs, yea and to goe before vs and to reach vs their hande: it is a great helpe, and (as Paul telleth vs) wee muſt looke wiſtly vpon them: and when we haue good ſeruantes of God which teache vs and leade vs with good conſcience, we muſt marke that, and faſhion our ſelues like to them: and in ſo doing we ſhall not followe men: for in faſhioning our ſelues like to them that follow God, we haue his way for our way. We grounde not our ſelues one vpon another, to ſay, Thus will I doe, for I ſee moſt men doe it. No: but foraſmuch as God calleth vs to him, it behoueth vs to go, Yea though there were no mo but my ſelfe alone: yet ought I to follow my God. But if furthermore he beare with me ſo farre, as to giue me companie: then muſt I goe to him with ſo much the better corage: and whatſoeuer come of it, I muſt not ſwarue from his pure worde. Thus yee ſee why it is ſaide here, that Caleb the ſonne of Iephone followed the way of the Lord, and therefore was exempted from the common condemnation. Yea and it is ſaide that he followed conſtantly, that is to ſay, he continued throughout to the vttermoſt. And ſo wee ſee nowe in effect that all the people were condemned, & that onely two were acquit, becauſe they had giuen glorie vnto God.

1. Cor. 4. 16. & Heb. 13. 7.

But the circũſtance that is added, namely, that God ſpared not Moſes becauſe of the people: increaſeth yet more the thing that I haue ſaide. In deede this cannot be diſpatched all as nowe: but yet muſt I ad this point aforehande. For if God ſpared not Moſes, (who notwithſtanding had ſuch recorde as wee knowe), but puniſhed him becauſe hee helde not out conſtantly to the vttermoſt in reſiſting the leawdneſſe of the people: I pray you what ſhall become of vs? Is it likelie that wee ſhall goe ſcotfree nowadayes, when euerie man ſuffereth himſelfe to be caried away becauſe hee ſeeth that naughtineſſe hath the vpper hande? Then if wee happen to ouerſhoote our ſelues ſo, thinke wee that that God will let vs alone? No no: For if ſuch puniſhment as we heare of, was extended vpon Moſes: needes muſt wee feele farre ſorer, when we intangle our ſelues in the common vices, and forſake God to followe the worlde. And let vs

Num.14.34. marke well, that in ſwearing that the people ſhould not enter into the lande: he ſayth, ye ſhal recken the yeres according to the nomber of the dayes wherein ye ſpied out the land. They that were ſent to ſpy out the lande taried forty daies: and ſo behoued it the people to wander vp and downe by the ſpace of fortie yeares. And ſo we ſee that when God hath vſed long patience towardes vs, he maketh vs to pay verie deere for our abuſing of his goodneſſe. Wherefore let vs not meaſure Gods puniſhments after our owne fancie: for they be ſorer than our wittes can conceaue. But whenſoeuer he threatneth vs, let vs tremble at his only ſpeech, and make haſt to follow it. And foraſmuch as his ſpeech is directed to vs nowadaies, let vs not driue off til to morow, but let vs follow, and let euerie man be going on his way. Againe foraſmuch as we be fraile and haue a rough and thornie way to goe, yea and there be many ſtoppes to barre vs, ſo as it will ſeeme that there be great mountaines to make vs turne backe againe: let vs pray our God to giue vs ſtrength to go on ſtil forward. For if he ſtrengthened Caleb and Ioſua: let vs aſſure our ſelues he will do the like to vs. And therewithall if we ſee that the world hinder vs, and that there is ſtore of ſtumbling blockes on all ſides: let vs pray God that he ſuffer vs not to be corrupted with others, but that we may beare him the honor to ſtick vnto him, & to yeld our ſelues wholly to his word, giuing them leaue to periſhe that needes will periſh, and in the meane while ſtaying our ſelues by the promiſe of ſaluation which he hath giuen vs, accordingly alſo as it is his will that wee ſhoulde attaine thereto by any ſuch knowledge.

Now let vs kneele down in the preſence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faults, praying him to touch vs better than we haue bin: & that aboue al things we may bethinke vs of the vnthankefulneſſe whereof we be giltie, in that we haue not obeyed his word, nor bin ſo willing to followe the things that he hath declared vnto vs as was requiſite. And therefore let vs beſeech him, not only to forgiue vs our faults paſt, but alſo to ſtrengthen & gouerne vs in ſuch wiſe by his holie ſpirite, as wee may ouercome al the temptations of Satan, and forſake all the luſtes of our owne fleſh, to the end we may obey the voyce of our God, and in ſuch ſort applie all our ſenſes thereunto, as we may paſſe through all the diſtreſſes of this preſent world, vntill he haue gathered vs togither into his euerlaſting kingdom. That it may pleaſe him to graunt this grace, not only to vs, but alſo to all people & nations of the earth, &c.

On Tewſday the xxiij. of April. 1555.

37.38.39.40. Alſo the Lord &c.

41 Then anſwered you and ſaide vnto me: We haue ſinned againſt the Lorde. VVe will goe vp and fight as the Lorde our God hath commaunded vs. And you armed your ſelues euery one with harneſſe of warre, and were readie to goe vp into the hill.

42 And the Lord ſaid vnto me, warne them that they goe not vp, ne fight not, for I am not among you: leaſt you be vanquiſhed of your enimies.

WE began yeſterday to ſee howe hard it is to abſtaine from ſinning when a man is in euil companie, ſpecially if hee haue the charge of gouernment. For ſeeing it was Moſes hap to be ſhaken downe: Howe ſhall they do which are farre weaker than he was? Wee knowe that God had made him to excell all men, we ſee alſo how he ſerued his turne by him, & what record hee hath giuen of him. And yet for all that, behold here a fal which God miſlyketh of ſo greatly, that he diſappointeth him of entring into the lande for it: and ſuch diſhonour and reproch was done vnto him, that hee might not poſſeſſe the inheritance that had beene promiſed, as well to him as to all the people. Therefore we had neede to call vpon God when we be mingled with ſuch as are able to corrupt vs and to thruſt vs out of the way, ſo as we be hemmed it rounde about with euill examples. But yet they which haue the charge of gouernement, ought to ſtande in greater feare and dreade, and to call vppon God to ſtrengthen them, and to giue them ſuch conſtancie as they may not ſwarue any whit at all.

But before we goe any further, we muſt mark that where as Moſes reporteth that God was angrie with him for the peoples ſakes: hee doth it not to excuſe himſelfe that he had not done amiſſe: for then ſhould he replie againſt God who had giuen ſentence vpon him. In the twentith Chapter of the booke of Numbers it is ſayde expreſſly, thou ſhalt not enter into the lande, becauſe that thou and Aaron haue not glorified the Lord before the people of Iſrael. So then we ſee that God chargeth not Moſes with the ſinne of Num.20.12.

the poeple, as who ſhoulde ſay that he himſelfe had beene giltleſſe: but his meaning is that hee fell not to euill of his owne accorde and mouing, but was driuen to it as by a ſtorme, when he ſaw ſuch vprore and hurlyburly among the people, that he was at his wits ende and wiſt not what to doe, by meanes whereof he had not a preſent faith to giue glorie vnto God. The intent of Moſes then is not to waſh his hands, as though hee were not blame woorthy at all: but to doe the people to vnderſtande that the verie miſchiefe ſprang of them. Neuerthelesse it may be thought ſtraunge howe Moſes ſhoulde offende, ſeeing it appeareth not in all the reherſall of the ſtorie. It Numb.20.2 is ſaide that the people grudged againſt God, becauſe they wanted drinke in the wilderneſſe, ſaying: Had it not beene better for vs that God had killed vs in Egypt? Muſt hee needes bring vs into this drie and barren place, that we might die heere for thirſt? It appeareth well that hee hateth vs, and that his intent is to make vs to linger heere in tormentes: and in the meane while wee bee paſt all hope of doing well. After this manner did the people murmure. On the contrarie part Moſes weepeth and reſorteth vnto God, ſaying: Alas Lorde, oughteſt thou to haue ſo fleder a reward for thy deliuering of this people through thine owne goodnes, as to haue thy holy name blaſphemed by them? What coulde Moſes haue done better than this? For he is ſo farre off from conſenting to the wickednesse of the people, to bee any companion with them: that hee weepeth to ſee the offence committed againſt God. And Dauid likewiſe ſhew- Pſal.69.12, eth an excellent and wonderfull weldiſpoſed minde, in ſaying that hee wore ſackloth for their ſakes that blaſphemed God. Moſes did as much. It ſhoulde not ſeeme then that there is any fault in all this. For God commaunded him to take his ſtaffe, and to ſtrike vpon a rocke, and to make water to come out of it before the people. Hee obeyed. Wee ſee not there any replying at all: nay we ſee not that Moſes did ſo much as once doubt. Moreouer when hee ſpeaketh Num.20.10. to the people, hee ſaith: Come on yee rebelles, muſt God bee faine to make water to come out of this rocke, which you ſee nowe ſo harde and drie? Yee ſee hee rebuketh the people ſharpely, and a man woulde thinke hee coulde not glorifie God better. And yet for all this, it is ſaide vnto him, Thou haſt not giuen vnto mee the honour that belonged to mee, and therefore thou ſhalt bee baniſhed out of the lande that belonged by inheritance vnto thee. And did hee ſinne then? As I ſaide afore, if we iudge after our owne fancie, it will ſeeme to vs that Moſes diſcharged himſelfe well in all pointes, ſo as hee offended not, ne had any ſpot or blemiſh in him. But what for that? Heereby wee ſee that it belongeth onely vnto God to iudge, and that wee may bee deceiued at all turnes, in following our owne witte and reaſon. Wherefore let vs keepe this rule which is verie needefull: that is to wit, that wee bee farre vnable to diſcerne good and euill alwayes by eye ſight, for as is ſaid Luke.16.5. in the ſixteenth of Saint Luke, the thing that is highly eſteemed among men, ſhall be abhominable before God. When we haue ſifted a thing neuer ſo well, and ſetled all our wittes to vtter it well: yet ſhall it ſeeme to vs cleane contrarie to that it is indeede. Nowe then, let vs caſt downe our eyes and acknowledge that none but onely God is the competent iudge.

True it is that wee haue the lawe, whereby wee may aſſuredly ſay, this is good and that is euill: and our yeelding vnto that which is ſhewed vs there, is not to make vs iudges: for wee take no authoritie to our ſelues, but onely yelde to ỹ things that God ſetteth forth. And beſides this, wee muſt not onely iudge our neighbours doings by the lawe, but alſo examine our owne liues by it. And when wee finde our ſelues to haue ſwarued from Gods commaundementes, we muſt willingly condemne our ſelues, and allowe no further of our owne doings, than they agree with Gods will. Although they ſeeme good to our ſelues, yet let vs not ſtande vppon that. For our eyes are ſo troubled and weake, that oftentimes one ſinne eſcapeth vs and a hundred followe out after it: and that is becauſe we be not ſharpeſighted ynough, to ſpie out the thinges that God perceiueth, and which are hid from vs. And that is the cauſe why ſaint Paul ſaieth, 1.Cor.4.4. that although he had walked purely in his office: yet was he not iuſtified for all that. For God requireth another manner of perfection than wee can ſee. So then, ſeeing wee haue ſo weake and dimme a ſight, let vs learne to referre our ſelues vnto God: and let euerie of vs put that thing in vre in himſelfe, which is ſhewed vs by Dauid Pſal.19.13. when he ſaith, Who is he that knoweth his faltes? Lord forgiue me the euill which I perceiue not. We muſt not onely aſk God forgiueneſſe of the ſinnes that ſting vs, and whereof we haue proofe in our ſelues: but we muſt alſo acknowledge that we haue manie ſinnes which wee knowe not of. Marke that for one point.

Furthermore, proceeding ſtill herewith, let vs not be haſtie in iudging, to acquite one and to condemne another: but let vs reſerue vnto God that which is his, for as I haue ſaid afore, if God had not pronounced that ſentence vppon Moſes, euery man would canonize him, and ſay hee did the beſt that coulde be deuiſed. But what for that? Seeing hee is condemned by the heauenly iudge, we muſt bridle our ſelues, and not fall to incountering againſt God. For wee ſhall winne nothing by it. And for the ſame cauſe alſo S. Paul Rom.14.10. intending to exhort vs to modeſtie in the 14. to the Romanes, alledgeth that wee muſt all come before the iudgement ſeate of our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt, where we ſhall not allowe what we thinke good, nor reiect what we miſlike in our own fancie: for that authoritie belongeth to the onely ſon of God. Seeing it is ſo my brethren (ſaith he) wee muſt abſteine from fooliſh ouerweening. Thus much concerning that which is reported of the ſinne of Moſes.

Nowe let vs come againe to the matter that wee were in hande with: Which is, that Moſes meaneth not to excuſe himſelfe: he ſeeketh no ſtartinghole to leſſen his fault: but the thing that he alledgeth is reasonable, he setteth foorth the heynousnesse of the peoples offence, shewing ỹ their sedition was so forcible, that euen he him selfe also was ouerthrowen with it. The meaning then of Moses was as if he should haue said thus: Beholde yee wretches, God hath chosen me to supply his place among you, and he hath gouerned me in such wise by his holy spirit, that I haue had as it were his image printed in me: & yet not withstanding I haue done amisse, I haue offended. And what is the cause of it? I excuse not my selfe: but yet are you giltie before God, of corrupting me, your murmuring hath ouerthrowen me, for by reason thereof I haue forgotten my duetie, and not yeelded God such glorie as was due vnto him. Seeing it is so: [I may well say] it is not long of you, that you bereft mee not of all the grace that I had receiued at Gods hande: for where as he made me your heade to guide you: you haue done ynough to carie mee away to Satan through your naughtinesse and rebellion.

Nowe then acknowledge the sinne that you haue committed, for God hath brought me low, and it is his will to shewe you in my person, that you bee well worthie to perish euerichone of you. Therefore besides the thing that I haue touched alreadie, (which is, that we must not like ỹ better of our selues whē our faults are vnknowen [to our selues,] or when we can couer them, for Gods eies are not blindfolded for al ỹ, and the thinges that scape men are inrolled before him): wee must marke moreouer, that if wee giue anie man an occasion [of stumbling or offending], although hee on his parte is not thereby discharged, yet must our offence needs be the more grieuous and heauie, according as it is in very deede. Wherefore let euery man so behaue himselfe, as hee giue not his neighbours any occasion of stumbling. For if any man sinne vnder pretence of mee, if hee be misseled by my lewde conuersation, if he take ill example by my vices: all the whole mischiefe shalbe laide in my necke before God, I shalbe discharged, wo shalbe vnto mee as saith our Lord Iesus Christ, and it were better for mee that I were cast into the middes of the sea with a milstone about my necke, than to haue giuen my neighbour any cause of misbehauiour. And therefore let vs liue in such sorte, as it may not bee cast in our teeth before GOD, that wee haue beene the cause of other mens ruine and destruction. For it will cost vs very deare, if the sillie soules whom God hath created after his owne image, and whom Iesus Christ hath so deerely redeemed, be lost through our fault and wickednesse. Thus we see in effect what we haue to note vpon this sentence, where Moses saith, that GOD was angrie with him by meanes of the people.

And furthermore we haue to mark here, that Gods laying of his temporall chastisementes vppon his faithfull ones, is not to driue them to despayre, but to humble them for a time: for in the ende all turneth to their benefite, and therefore they must not bee out of heart for it. It was a verie harde and bitter punishment vnto Moses, to bee banished out of the lande that had beene promised him.

The time is come that the people shoulde bee deliuered out of the thraldome of Egypte, to bee conueyed into the Lande of promise: Moses is chosen to bee their guide, so as hee supplyeth Gods office in deliuering them: and yet notwithstanding this shame is done vnto him, that GOD shutteth the gappe against him and saieth, thou shalt not come there. Yee see then howe Moses is (as yee woulde say) bronded with a marke of reproch before God. Nowe had hee taken it in despyte: it had beene ynough to haue plunged him into some blasphemie. But hee bare this correction patiently, knowing that it shoulde bee to his benefite, because it was but temporall. And therefore let vs marke this saying of Saint Paul, that Gods punishing of vs is to the intent we shoulde not perish with the worlde. Seeing then that GOD procureth our welfare thereby, and his mortifying of vs for a time as in respect of the flesh: and his condemning of vs in such wise as we bee ashamed afore men, is to the intent that our soules should be saued at the latter day, and wee liue in his presence: seeing that that is the end & butte that he shooteth at: let not vs on our part be so headstrong, as to chafe or fume at his corrections, but rather follow the example of Moses, who (as wee see) did make no wordes against God. It might seeme hee had some occasion to say, howe falles this out, that I am driuen out of the lande of promise? What shall a man say to it? For thou hast ordeyned mee to be as a redeemer in thy steede: and nowe must I tarie heere still. It was thy will that I should serue in this office, to put the people in possession of the promised lande: and why shall I not be partaker of the benefite that thou hast purchased them by my hande? What though there haue beene some little distrust in mee, which continued not the turning of a hande? Is the offence so heynous, that I must bee so grieuously punished for that? Moses then might haue helde such plea with God: but hee holdeth his peace, and yeeldeth to the sentence of condemnation willingly. Therefore let vs followe that which is shewed vs here by example: and (as I said afore) when GOD is so gratious to vs, that in steede of casting of vs away (as he might iustly doe) he doth no more but chastise vs as in respect of the flesh, and shame vs before men, to the ende to bring vs to repentance, and to humble vs: let vs bee quiet, and let it not cast vs into sorrowe, but let vs plucke vp a good heart to follow our vocation. This is the thing wee haue to remember. For if hee spared not Moses, what will he doe to vs? Ought wee to chalenge greater priuiledge than he?

1.Cor.5.5

But heerewith all let vs marke, that Moses ceased not to bee an heire still of the heauenly kingdome, though hee were bereft of the outwarde signe of it. And thereby wee be warned, that if God make vs not to feele his fauour and loue in this worlde so fully as wee woulde wish,

it must not make vs to bee out of patience. For it may happe that we shall take our selues to bee miserable, yea and that when wee looke vppon our owne state, we shall deeme it had bin much better for vs to haue gone astray with the world:
Coloss. 3. 3. But what for that? Of al ỹ time we haue a life that lyeth hid in God. Therefore it is no hurt at all to vs, though God cut off the blessings of this present life from vs. For he knoweth to what end he doeth it: and it is good for vs to be so exercised. Thus yee see that the thing which wee haue to beare in minde, is that God doeth diuers times hide the signes of his loue from vs, as in respect of the worlde: but hee loueth vs neuer a whit the lesse, as we see how it happened vnto Moses.

As touching that which is saide of Iosua: it is one notable point more. For beholde, hee is appointed to succeede in Moses roome, yea, and yet was he but his seruaunt. And afterward Moses is commaunded to incourage him. Heere we see that God will take the thinges that are not greatly esteemed among men, yea and exalt them aboue our opinion, as we see he hath vsed to doe at all times: and not without cause: for thereby he intendeth to pull downe all pride according to this saying of Saint Paul, that hee
1. Cor. 1. 27. 28. chooseth the weake thinges, yea euen to the end that men shoulde not glorie in their owne strength: and hee chooseth the foolish thinges, to the ende that men shoulde not glorie in their wisedome: and when he taketh ỹ things that are despised, it is to the ende that men shoulde not trust in their owne credit, nor bee puffed vp with their owne worthinesse. And it is verie requisite that it shoulde be so: for we see howe euery man seekes to aduaunce himselfe, and wee leaue nothing to God as neere as we can. Nay rather if wee doe but yeelde him the tytles that belong vnto him, it is but in way of dalliance: and in the meane while we would that all shoulde be in our own persons. Now forasmuch as men haue this pride rooted in them: God must be fain to shew them by experience, that all of it is but vanitie: and so doth hee, by choosing the things that are not regarded, and by seruing his turne with such as are not esteemed to be of any great renowne. If we looke howe God chooseth men somtimes, to set them in preheminence: wee will say, who woulde haue looked for this? And God worketh after that manner, to the intent that those by whom he serueth his turne, shoulde learne to acknowledge themselues beholden to him for their dignitie wherein he hath set them, and vnderstande that they obteined it not by their own power and policie, but that it is God which hath placed them in that degree. For if they thinke they haue ought of their owne purchasing: God will shewe them the contrarie. That then is the thing which we haue to marke, when it is heere declared that God preferred Iosua before Moses insomuch that although Moses had now of long time beene cladde with the grace of the holy Ghost: although hee had beene chosen to bee the Redeemer [or Ransommer] of the people: although God had set his marks vppon him: although that in executing his office, it was well seene that hee was a newe creature, and there appeared in him a maiestie surmounting the nature of man: and there withall although hee had done so many deedes worthy of memorie, as might astonishe all them that hearde speaking of them: yet notwithstanding, in the ende God ordeyned his seruant in steede, to leade the people into the lande of Chanaan, and to put them in possession of their promised heritage, and Moses himselfe is not worthy to come there. So far off is hee from cõming there euen as a common member shuffeled in among the rest of the body: that God driueth him from it: and behold, God reacheth his hand to Iosua, who had neuer looked for it.

But now besides that which I haue said, (that is to wit, that we be warned to forbeare all presumption, and to lay downe all pride): let vs bee wel assured, that it belongeth to God to aduance vs & to make vs of estimation, through his mere grace: and that when we shal haue heaped vp al that euer we can together, all is nothing. Then, besides that we haue a good warning to humble our selues: it is shewed vs therewithall, that wee must not enuie those by whom God serueth his turne. And that is another good lesson. For wee see howe euery of vs repyneth, when God hath aduanced any man, specially beyonde all worldly hope. Where as we should consider thus, beholde God serueth his turne by such a one, euerie man commendeth him, and there appeare manifest gifts of grace in him: when we see those things, we be so malicious, that we grudge & repine at it. But contrariwise wee ought to marke, that when we be so pricked with spite and enuie, it is an aduancing of our selues against God and not against mortall creatures. Therefore let vs learne to honour God wheresoeuer hee sheweth himself, & to be glad when he vouchsafeth to extend his grace to our neighbours: for if we do so, all shall fall out to our welfare. If another man haue mo gracious gifts thã I: I am rich in his person. For whē we confesse ỹ communion of saints: it is to shew, that whatsoeuer God giueth to one man or to another, the same redoundeth to the benefite of all. True it is that we perceiue it not at the first push: but yet doth such diuersitie serue for the whole bodie of the Church. The mem- Rom. 12. 4.
bers of a bodie haue not all one operation: the eyes execute not the office of the legges, nor the hands the office of the feete: and yet notwithstanding the body is so knit together in one, that whatsoeuer is giuen to any one member, doeth benefite al the rest. Now then let vs vnderstand, that when God bestoweth the gifts of his holie spirit more largely vpon some one man than vpon others, he ceaseth not therefore to haue pitie vpon vs: For we also must be edified therby. Yea surely, so we be not vnthankfull, and that we take no pritch at it when hee listeth to holde vs lowe and to exalt our neighbours. To bee short, wee make warre against God when we cannot abide that he shoulde keepe the order which hee hath determined: ỹ is to wit, to pul down ỹ things that are great to the worldward, and to aduance and exalt the things that are base and despised.

Moreouer we see that Moses is commaunded to strengthen Iosua. So little ought Moses to be greeued at the preferring of his seruaunt before himselfe, that hee must instruct him and harten him. As if hee shoulde say, I see nowe it is Gods will to honour thee by dishonoring mee. I am worthie of it, and I must be faine to beare it, and therewithall also to prepare thee to thine office. Although thou take my place: yet will I not set my selfe against thee, but (which more is) I will helpe thee to the vttermost of my power. Nowe am I become thy seruaunt. Whereas God had erst aduaunced mee: I must nowe giue vp this preheminence, and thou must take my roome: and I must indeuer as much as I can, that the benefite which Gods will is to bestow vpon thee, may auayle in thee. So then, if it please God to take any man to serue him, let vs streyne our selues to helpe him, and let vs not bee ashamed to put our shoulders vnder him to heaue him vp. Let vs not haue any of these wicked respects, to say, O ho, truely as for mee, if God were so gratious to mee as to aduance me as wel as such a one, I woulde bestirre mee. But forasmuch as hee holdeth mee downe to the grounde, I will not meddle with other men. Let vs beware of such churlishnesse. Nay rather when we see that God hath chosen a man: [let vs reason thus with our selues.] I see that God hath chosen such a man, indeede hee is not the ablest that coulde bee deuised, but yet is it Gods will to bee serued by him, and wee see hee hath a good will: therefore let vs helpe him, let euerie of vs reach him his hande, and let euerie of vs consider wherin hee may succour him to his furtherance. Yee see then that the thing which wee haue to marke heere, is that although our working beare no great outwarde shewe, and that the thinges which we doe haue no great glosse to commend them to the worlde: yet wee must not therefore cease to serue God according to our power, and to linke in with those by whom it is Gods will to bee serued, and not to imagine any thing that may foreslowe vs, or make vs say, At whose whose hande shall I bee recompensed? That which I haue done is as good as lost, men make none account of it. It shall well ynough come in account before God. And therefore let it suffise vs to be allowed at his hand. These are ỹ things that we haue to note vpon this, that Moses was commaunded to strengthen Iosua.

Nowe finally it is saide, that the people perceiuing their sinne, answered: Wee haue offended the Lorde, and therefore wee bee nowe readie to goe vp. And they not onely vsed those wordes: but also euerie man prepared and armed himselfe, and so they went vp to encounter with their enemies. Heere wee see the nature of men. When GOD biddeth them be still, they be too too forward, & they be as hot as fire to doe the thing that is forbidden them. But when they were bidden goe, then their legges were broken. And yet notwithstanding it is saide, that the people acknowledged their sinne, when they had beene so disobedient against GOD. Whereby it appeareth that there is such a corruptnesse in our nature, that euen in minding to doe good we doe euill, and offende God, & ouershoote our selues without reason or measure. Heere is then a faire lookingglasse for vs to discerne our owne vices by: yea verily, so wee consider in the person of ỹ Iewes, that not only they themselues are condemned, but also that God purposeth to giue a generall lesson, whereby all men may fare the better. Nowe I tolde you first of all, that when God soundeth his trumpet and commaundeth vs to march, we stirnot a whit: and that although wee haue some good liking of the matter, yet we bee so colde and slowe, as is pitie to see. And on the contrarie part, that if hee say, Tary still, wee bee lustie, and moreouer so hot and hastie, that wee desire nothing but to occupie both our armes & our legs too. When it was saide to the people, Go, for your God is among you, bee not afraide so long as yee haue such a power to defende you: The people replyed againe on the other side, nay marie, howe shall wee goe vp? They bee Gyants, they wil deuour vs with their lookes, wee shalbe vndone at the first chop, it were better yet to returne into Egypt. When the people had replyed so, and it was tolde them againe, What meane you thus to distrust your God? He hath giuen vs this lande, wee haue his promise of it: and besides that, you haue had proofe of his helpe alreadie many wayes, and he offereth it you still: howe thinke you of it, you faithlesse and rebellious people? When the people were thus laide at: did they yet returne to their right wits? Yea, for yee see they repented. What for that? It is but a false repentance. Goe to (say they) sith it is so, we will goe and march against our enemies, seeing it is Gods pleasure. Nay, yee see heere, that God ment to trie their faith and obedience another way, that is to wit, by their forbearing to doe any thing at all. Because hee sawe they had not obeyed him at the first: nowe he will haue them ashamed of it, and to tarie his leisure till hee haue pitie of them. And forasmuch as hee had sworne that they shoulde not come there: his will was that they shoulde (after the example of Moses) haue suffered themselues to bee bereft of that honour as they were worthie. Wee see then that men haue but too greate frowardnesse when GOD commaundeth them to sit at rest: and contrariwise that they bee but too colde, when he would haue them to goe forwarde: nay they will rather creepe into cranies, than goe forth when God biddeth them.

Howbeit, for the better vnderstanding of this matter, let vs marke that this people offended in pre acing forwarde without promise. For as I haue saide afore, we must not be hardie any further than God biddeth vs. Therefore when wee haue but a worde of his mouth, we must take corage, and put all lettes vnder foote that may turne vs away. For the thing wherein GOD will bee glorified, is that hee commaunde vs nothing in vaine. And speciallie when hee promiseth vs good succesſe to our matters, and to prosper our doings: then must we rest thervpon, assuring our selues that hee will giue vs

good dispatch. Neuertheleſſe when God had ſworne, that the people ſhould not come there: then woulde they needes goe vp againſt their enemies, not conſidering that in ſo doing they reſiſted GOD, and aduaunced themſelues againſt him. True it is that if a man had asked them, whether they minded to reſiſt God or no, and to doe cleane contrarie to his will, or whether they minded to haue him to bee their aduerſarie: they woulde haue aunſwered, No: Wee beleeue that God will helpe vs. For why? Hee hath deliuered vs out of Egypt, he hath promiſed our father Abraham to giue this lande in poſſeſſion to his linage, and the time is nowe come. Yea but there is no promiſe [to you,] and therefore it is but fonde preſumption or rather ſtarke madneſſe, when men take a toye in their heades, and aduenture to doe this or that, when in the meane while God hath not promiſed any ſuch thing. So then let vs marke well, that wee muſt not be bolde vppon our owne heade, but hearken till God ſpeake: and when wee haue his promiſe, wee muſt rule our ſelues thereby, and not paſſe the boundes thereof. For elſe it may happen vnto vs, as Moſes reporteth here that it happened to this people: that is to witte that wee ſhall doe all thinges arſiuerſie, and ſo offende God. In ſo much that when wee weene to doe well, wee ſhall dubble our faultes: when GOD commaundeth vs to go, wee ſhall bee as though our legges were broken: and when he commandeth vs to tarie, we ſhall run too ſwift: and ſo, all our whole life ſhall be out of order.

Furthermore let vs beare in minde, that (as I haue ſayde alreadie) if GOD liſt to chaſtice vs as in reſpect of the fleſhe, we muſt not bee too much grieued thereat: for it is for our benefite and welfare. If this people had beene well aduiſed, they woulde haue thought thus: bicauſe wee haue offended God by our diſobedience, hee will not haue vs to enter into the land: but yet for all that he bereaueth vs not of the hope of ſaluation, let vs content our ſelues with that, and wander foorth in this worlde till he take vs hence. So likewiſe let vs learne to wander on, if wee minde to come to the heauenly life. And if God doe nowe and then caſt vs downe, let vs conſider that ỹ caſting downe, will make vs to go much more ſwiftlie towardes the marke of the heauenly kingdome that is ſet before vs, than if wee had runned neuer ſo faſt, and had neuer left galloping all the way. Thus ye ſee what we had to marke more, vppon this ſaying, that the people would needes goe vp to diſcomfit their enemies.

Nowe Moſes addeth, that They made themſelues readie with their armour and weapons. Yea forſooth, but it is all one as if ye ſhoulde put an armour vppon a ſcarecrowes backe, and take him a ſworde in his fiſte: ſurely hee were ſubſtantially well armed: but in deede all were to no purpoſe. Euen ſo is it with vs: If wee were furniſhed with all the helpes of man and with al inferiour meanes, and in the meane whyle were not ſtrengthened in our heartes, but were full of fooliſhe ſelfeweening, and as it were drunkenneſſe, by preſuming vppon our owne power: all the brauerie that wee can make, is but winde and ſmoke, bicauſe wee haue not an eye vnto God, but are rebellious againſt him. Wherefore let vs learne to leaue the arming of our ſelues, and to ſeeke ſtrength and courage at Gods hand, and then let vs take armour & weapon as at his appointment. If we go that way to worke, God will proſper the helpes that he hath giuen vs: for he will bleſſe thē, bicauſe we ſought them at his hand. Beſides this, he himſelfe will ſtand by vs though all other meanes faile vs. For diuers times he will perchaunce ſuffer vs to bee made naked, and let ỹ world mock vs, as though we were vndone aforehand: but yet will he prouide wel ynough for all, at leaſtwiſe ſo that afore all things wee be furniſhed with his inward vertue. This is the thing that we had to marke, yet further vpon this text.

And here Moſes ſheweth that God ment not to deſtroy the people, when he commaunded them to turne backe. Turne ye backe againe ſaieth he. Here wee ſee Gods wonderfull goodneſſe, & that the threate which he ſpake off yeſterday, was not to the end that God woulde purſue the iniquitie of the people without hauing any pitie vpon them: but to make them feele their owne euill. For notwithſtanding all that, yet doeth he vſe compaſſion and kindneſſe towardes them, in forbidding them to incounter with their enemies. For although that at the firſt ſight a man would ſay that God reiected them, and curſed them: yet notwithſtanding, in ſo dooing he ſheweth them a ſigne of his mercie. For had he ſaid neuer a worde, what a thing had ỹ bin? In deede the people increaſed their offence yet more, by being diſobedient to the warning that he gaue them. But whatſoeuer they did, wee muſt conſider what God intended when he ſaide, Goe not vp: for I will not bee with you, neither will I helpe you. Wee ſee that when the people had once bin brought lowe, they perceiued and acknowledged a wonderfull goodneſſe in God, and therewithall became ỹ better diſpoſed to profit themſelues by the correction that was ſent them. Let vs marke well therefore, that when our Lord vtereth any token of his grace and goodneſſe towardes vs: therein he ſheweth more apparantly howe much he loueth vs, than if he made no countenance of any thing, but hekle his mouth ſhut, and ſuffered vs to do what we liſted. Why? For alas, we ſhould but throwe our ſelues headlong into deſtruction, if we followed euery man his owne fanſie. Seeing it is ſo then, whenſoeuer God ſetteth himſelfe againſt vs, whenſoeuer he rebuketh vs, and whenſoeuer he ſheweth vs our follie, yea though it be with ſuch roughneſſe as it amaſeth vs: yet is it to our benefite, & therefore let vs learne to beare his yoke.

Moreouer let this bee our rule to diſcerne good and euill by: namely to depend wholly vpon Gods mouth, and not to bee wiſe in our owne conceits, but to ſuffer him to be our guide, and not to fall to gambolding at our owne pleaſure and fanſie, but to followe the way quietly which he ſheweth vs. And then will he giue vs armes and legs, and guide all our ſteppes in ſuch ſort, as he will make vs to goe ſtill forewarde, and cauſe vs to arriue at the good hauen. But on the contrarie part, if wee will needes bee fantaſticall, and doe thinges vppon our owne head and vppon our owne liking, and therevpon fall alſo to fooliſh practiſes: God muſt needes bee againſt vs: And then albeit that all thinges goe well forewarde with vs to our ſeeming, and fall out according to our minde: yet will God turne all vpſide downe, and ouerthrowe vs when we be at the higheſt. Thoſe are the things which wee haue to note. And therefore let vs ſet all our whole mindes to obey God: And for the bringing thereof to paſſe, let vs beſeech him to giue vs the true vnderſtanding of his worde, and to keepe vs from being froward and ſtubborne againſt him, as wee ſee by the example that is ſhewed vs here, which I pray God wee may eſchew.

And now let vs kneele downe in the preſence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him ſo to touche vs with them, as wee may profite more and more in faith and repentaunce, euen vntill he haue vtterly chaunged vs: and not ſuffer vs to ſtand againſt his holy commaundementes, nor to dubble our miſdoings when wee haue offended him: but to reforme vs in ſuch ſort, that being rid of all fleſhly glory, wee may ſeeke nothing but to bee mortified by him, to the end ỹ he may ſo frame vs to his righteouſneſſe, as our whole indeuour may be to rule all our thoughtes wordes and deedes thereby. That it may pleaſe him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs, but alſo, &c.

On Wedneſday the xxiiij. of Aprill. 1555.

The tenth Sermon vpon the firſt Chapter.

42 And the Lord, &c.

43 I tolde you of it: but you woulde not heare mee, but rebelled againſt the commaundement of the Lord, and were preſumptuous, and went vp into the hill.

44 Then the Amorrhyte which dwelt in that hill, came out againſt you and chaſed you, as bees doe, and ſmote you in Seir euen vnto Horma.

45 And when ye were come backe againe, ye wept before the Lorde: but the Lord heard not your voyce, ne inclined his eares vnto you.

46 So you abode a long time at Cades barne, as the dayes doe ſhewe which you haue taryed there.

WE ſawe yeſterday howe it is not lawfull for vs to put foorth our ſelues, except GOD call vs and ſhewe vs the way: and that although the thing which wee take in hande, bee neuer ſo allowable in reſpect of men, yet is it nothing woorth vnleſſe God bee our guide, and that wee bee ſure that wee aduenture vppon nothing but by his will. Therewithall wee ſawe alſo that we haue too tickliſh a nature, inſomuch that when any thing is to be done [that lyketh our ſelues,] wee bee but too forewarde, and wee cannot tarie till GOD ſhewe vs his will. And that on the contrarie part, wee ſee what vnluſtineſſe is in vs when God commaundeth vs any thing: for then wee bee ſo laſie as is pitie to ſee, it ſeemeth that our legges are broken: and to bee ſhort, wee bee ſtarke lame. Nay (which worſe is) when wee weene to doe well, wee marre all by our raſhneſſe. And this is confirmed yet better by that which Moſes addeth. For he rehearſeth what GOD had inioyned him. Thou ſhalt ſay vnto them, Goe not vp, ne fight not, for I am not with you (ſayeth the Lorde,) and therefore ye ſhall bee ouercome. In this ſentence wee ſee how it belongeth to God to ſay, Goe: and likewiſe to bidde vs tarrie, when he thinketh good. And if wee haue not that voyce to guide vs: we may well ſeeke all manner of furniture, and wee may be well ynough armed to the fight of the world: but yet ſhall there bee nothing but confuſion in our caſe. Then like as wee muſt ſimply obey the thing that GOD commaundeth, and haſt forward with all ſpeede when wee ſee it is his pleaſure that wee ſhould goe: ſo on the contrarie part, when he will haue vs to ſit ſtill, let his forbidding ſuffice vs, aſſuring our ſelues that he will turne all thinges vpſide downe, if wee thinke to further ỹ matter by thruſting our ſelues forewarde. To be ſhort, we muſt yeeld God no leſſe honour & reuerence, in forbearing to do things when he forbiddeth them: than in dooing and executing the things that he liketh.

And he ſheweth expreſſely, that it ſhall not boote vs to do any thing vnleſſe God command it, according as it hath bene declared heretofore how it belongeth to him to fight. True it is that he will haue the faithfull to inforce themſelues, but yet in ſo dooing wee muſt attribute all vnto him. Therefore if he be on our ſide we ſhall bee ſure of the victorie: but if he ſhrinke from vs, we ſhall haue the foyle though all the world helped vs. Then is there but this one onely reſpect that may may giue vs courage: which is, that God bee at hand with vs to succour vs, so as wee bee sure of his assistance, and rest wholly thereupon. Neuertheleſſe it is not for men to beare themselues in hand that God will aide them, further than he hath assured vs by his promise. But it is certeine that God makes no promise to any, but to such as walke in obedience. Whosoeuer then flingeth ouer the fieldes, that is to say, whosoeuer gadeth here and there, & resteth not simply vpon Gods word, doeth vtterly refuse the benefite that God had promised him, & bereaueth himselfe thereof wilfully. For the receiuing of Gods word to the end we may know what to do, and be ruled by his mouth: and to trust in him, so as we be grounded vpon his grace, and resort to him for succour at our neede, are things inseparable. He therefore that will needes dally vpon his owne head, and trust to his owne foolish imaginations without submitting himself to God: may well say, I hope God will helpe me: but his hope hath no resemblance to the hope of ỹ faithfull. So then, seeing we perceiue what our owne imaginations are: let vs looke what things God giueth vs leaue to do, and what is lawfull for vs to do by his word. And therewithall, let vs be forward in doing ỹ which he biddeth vs, waiting for his blessing wherby he will make all to prosper. For although we see the contrarie to our vnderstanding: yet shall we ouercome all impediments by his helpe.

But howsoeuer the case stande, let vs beare this lesson in minde, that GOD, if wee desire to bee his, doeth binde vs by his infinite goodnesse to be guided by him: and that as we would bee shielded by his mightie power, so likewise wee must quietly suffer him to rule vs as his lambes and sheepe, and not followe euery man his owne fansie. And if this ought to bee obserued in the thinges that concerne this present life: howe much more ought it to be so in going to the kingdome of heauen? I say that euen in all our worldly affayres, we ought to doe God so much honour, as not to take too much vpon vs, nor to raunge here and there, without hauing first asked counsell at his mouth, (as he saieth by Esa.30.2. his Prophet Esay,) and vntill he haue ordered al our deuises by his holy spirite. When we haue any businesse to doe, although it bee not of any great importaunce: yet ought wee to call vpon God with all lowelinesse, and not to do any thing till our conscience bee throughly settled and resolued that he alloweth our doings. Now if God looke to be obeyed in small things, & which are as good as nothing: what will he doe when the matter concerneth his seruice? and when ỹ case concerneth so excellent a thing as is the saluation of our soules? Therefore we see herein, howe sore the wretched world is blinded, seeing they giue themselues to their owne follies & to mens traditions, and thinke not at all vpon the things that God hath ordained: No: that shall be the last thing ỹ they will doe. And therefore it standeth vs so much the more on hand to studie well this lesson of Moses, That God will not bee with vs, except we come neere vnto him, and be diligent to hearken what he will say vnto vs, & followe it when we haue done, without adding any thing to it, or diminishing any thing from it. And thus ye see in effect, what we haue to gather vpon this streine.

Now herewithall Moses threateneth them, That they shall bee ouercome of their enemies, and fall before them. Whereby we be done to vnderstand, that if God bee once gone away from vs, wee must needes perish, yea and our enemies must needes haue the vpper hand of vs, according as wee see in another place, that God leadeth vs [into aduersitie,] and holdeth vs as it were fettered in it. And when our foes haue such power ouer vs, it is because wee bee Gods prisoners. True it is that men aduaunce themselues ynough in their presumption, but yet for all that, God daunteth their courage when it commeth to the pinche, and holdeth their hands fast tyed, so as they cannot stirre one finger. Let vs marke well therefore, that wee must needes fall before our enemies, if wee bee not vphelde by Gods hand. For there lyeth all our strength. Nay moreouer, though no man followe vs, yet must wee fall before our owne shadowes, and be ouercome without any man pursuing of vs. For Gods wrath of it selfe without any other helpe or meane, is able ynough to confound vs. Neuertheleſſe the diuill ceaſseth not to practise to destroy vs, and we be assailed on all sides: therfore what woulde become of vs, if God were not our wall and bulwarke? Then if we consider well the state of our life, there is none other way for vs, but to walke in feare and to be watchfull, that we happen not to play the loose coltes. As I saide euen now, ye see that the diuell ceaſseth not, and he hath innumerable wyles to oppresse vs withall: we knowe what force he is of, and he is not without cause termed the Prince of the world. He commeth with so great crueltie, as passeth al the force of our fleshly enemies. On the other side, this worlde is full of Ambushes against vs. To bee short, when wee haue bethought vs neuer so well of the enemies whom wee see: there are an infinite multitude of enemies [whom wee see not,] which seeke nothing but to ouerthwart vs when we should do good. Therefore let vs sit stil in humilitie, to the end ỹ being shrowded vnder the shadow of God, wee may be vpheld and maintained by him. Let vs looke well to it then, that wee followe not what euery of vs thinketh good in himselfe: but submit our selues to Gods good will, as I haue shewed afore.

Deut.32.30.

Le.26.17.36

Ioh.12.31.& 14.30.& 15. 11.& Eph.6. 12.

Nowe it followeth, That Moses spake vnto the people, & that the people would not followe his aduise, but were disobedient to the mouth of God. This maner of speach hath bin expounded already heretofore. But here wee see yet more clearely, the proofe of ỹ which hath bin said afore: ỹ is to wit, that God is despised not only when he speaketh from heauen, but also when folke make none account of his word ỹ is preached by men. It is said expresly That the people were disobedient to the mouth of God. And how? It is not said ỹ God appeared in visible shape, or ỹ there was any voyce heard from heauen: but it was Moses ỹ spake: it is a man ỹ saith that ỹ people resisted the mouth of God. Now then we ſee that God will haue his word receiued w̃ like humilitie when he ſendeth men to declare his commandemẽt, as if he him ſelfe were among them. The doctrine that is ſet forth in ỹ name of God, ought to be of as much authoritie [in the mouth of a man,] as if all the Angels of heauen came downe to vs, or as if God ſhewed his Maieſtie preſently before our eyes: yea & it is the thing wherein he will trie the obedience of our faith. True it is that wee ought to vſe good diſcretion when men ſpeake. For if wee ſhould receiue all that is put to vs: there ſhould be no difference betweene ỹ lyers and falſe prophets ỹ ſeduce our ſoules, & the true miniſters of God. But if we haue ſure warrant that the thing which is brought vs, proceedeth of God: (as if it ſhould be ſhewed vs by the holy ſcripture, ỹ men ſhould not inuent any thing of their own heads, but hold themſelues to the pure ſimplicitie of ỹ Law & the Goſpel:) it is certaine that whoſoeuer maketh any reſiſtance in ỹ caſe, doeth not make warre againſt a creature, but manifeſtly w̃ſtand God, who will be heard when he ſpeaketh ſo by men, and ſerueth his turne by them as by his inſtruments. Therefore let vs beare well in minde this order of Moſes ſaying, which is, ỹ he himſelf is the ſpeaker, & yet notwithſtanding, ỹ the people in diſobeying him diſobeyed God. For why? Moſes had not forged any thing of his owne braine, but ſhewed vnto them how it was God ỹ had ſent him. And therfore it is no ſtraunge caſe that God ſhould finde himſelfe grieued, & that his Maieſtie ſhould be offẽded, & take ỹ outrage to be done as to himſelfe, when the meſſage that he had ſent by Moſes was not receiued. In likewiſe is it at this day. And for the ſame cauſe doeth our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt auow, that if men refuſe to heare the Miniſters of the Goſpell, he will take that wrong to bee done to himſelfe. Therefore let not men make a ieſt of it, when GOD cauſeth his worde to bee preached nowe adayes, and ſtirreth vp men to publiſhe it abroade: If any man thinke to eſcape by ſaying, they bee but men with whom wee haue to doe, and therewithall deſpiſe the doctrine: they ſhall knowe in the end, that it came from heauen, and that they ſet themſelues againſt God and not againſt mortall creatures: for he will haue his Maieſtie to bee knowen there. Then if men take him for their ſouereigne Lorde, let them ſtoope vnto him, and doe him homage in his doctrine. For he hath Printed his marke in ſuch wiſe there, that if any man incounter the things that are conteyned in it, it is all one as if hee would put his truth vnder foot, wherein he hath ſhewed himſelfe openly as in his liuely image. Looke that wee beare that poynt well in minde. For if earthly Princes reuenge the deſpite that is done to their cotearmours, and thinke themſelues to bee miſuſed therein: I pray you is it not much more rightfull reaſon that God ſhould doe ſo, when men make no reckening of his worde? [Yes verily.] For this caſe concerneth not ſome painted picture or blaſing of armes: but it is the image of God which appeared to vs in ſubſtance, yea euen with ſuch power as we ought to be tranſſigured into it, as ſaith S. Paul. That is the thing which we haue to marke. 2. Cor. 3. 18.

And therefore let ſuch as haue the office of preaching Gods worde looke well to themſelues that they goe ſoberly to worke, & that they may alwayes be able to proteſt, that the things which they teache are put into their mouthes by God. When they bee once ſure that it is ſo: let them labour to make al their hearers to feele Gods power which is after a ſort incloſed in his worde, that it may be receiued as it deſerueth, and euerie man ſubmit himſelfe to it, and God by that meanes bee worſhipped of all men, and ſerued with one accord. And therewithal let them defie al rebels & deſpiſers. Whẽ they ſee ỹ heatheniſh ſort fall to ſcoffing at the doctrine which they beare abroade: let them aſſure themſelues that the things which they haue vttered, ſhall ſuffice to ſend all theſe to the bottome of Hell, which do ſo ſet themſelues againſt them, according to this ſaying of Saint Paul, that the Preachers of Gods word are armed with ſuch a ſword, as is able to confound all ſuch as will not obey the doctrine. And herewithall likewiſe let euerie man haue an eye to himſelfe, and when he commeth hither to be taught in the name of God, let him be prepared with ſuch lowelines and modeſtie, as he may perceiue that it is God which ſpeaketh, and be moued to bow downe his necke, to receiue his yoke patiently. And as for thoſe that will needs play the wild beaſtes: let them vnderſtand ỹ here is ſentence giuen vpon them, ſo as they may well plead againſt it, but they ſhall win nothing by their ſhiftes, bicauſe it is ſaid that all ſuch as obeyed not Moſes, were diſobedient to Gods owne mouth. 2. Cor. 10. 4.

And nowe Moſes addeth expreſſely, That the people were preſumptuous, in that they woulde not bee at reſt. And this importeth very much. For it doeth vs to vnderſtand, that there was neuer yet any vnbeliefe or ſtubbornneſſe in men, but it was matched with loftineſſe, and pride, which puffed them vp in ſuch wiſe, and made them ſo farre out of patience with themſelues, as they fell to checking againſt GOD, and to giue themſelues to all euill. And that is ỹ cauſe why vnbeliefe is ſo behated afore God. Sometimes it will ſeeme to vs to bee ouer great rigour, when GOD puniſheth them ſo ſore which cannot [finde in their hearts to] hearken to his word. For we excuſe them by ignoraunce, foraſmuch as they were not well aſſured that it was God that ſpake: and in the meane time wee looke not to the euill that lurketh in couert, which God perceiueth and iudgeth: ỹ is to wit, that men are inwardly as full of poiſon as toads, and that they bee ſtuffed with pride, which maketh thẽ to moũt vp in ſuch wiſe, as in effect they refuſe to obey God, foraſmuch as they vouchſafe not to yeelde all ſuperioritie to him. That is the cauſe why pride or preſumption, is matched in this place with vnbeliefe. And it is ỹ ſame thing which I haue declared afore, namely that the true hardineſſe muſt bee grounded in God, ſo as men muſt not attempt any thing vpon opinion of their owne power, nor perſwade themſelues that that they haue this or that: but onely ſtand vnto that which God promiſeth vs. If it be not ſo with vs: then will our hardineſſe be turned into preſumptuouſneſſe. And in this reſpect ought wee to condemne mens raſhneſſe when they aduance themſelues too much: and to commende their inuincible conſtancie, when they ſubmit themſelues out of hand to Gods woorde, ſo that hauing once his promiſe, they reſt vpon it as vppon a rocke deſpiſing all ſtumbling blockes, & keepe on their pace ſtil, notwithſtanding any trouble or ſtorme that can be ſtirred vp againſt them, or anie threatening or menacing of them. It will be ſayd diuers times, that Gods ſeruantes are wilfull: becauſe they will not ſwarue for any thing, nor for al ỹ worldly reaſons that can bee alledged. This and that ſhall be brought in, and wee knowe that nothing is eaſier than to ſtrike ſayle at euery blaſt of winde as they ſay. But wee ſee that ſuch as purpoſe to ſerue God, doe ſhut their eyes againſt al daungers, inſomuch that although all ſhould goe to hauocke, yet will they not ceaſe to doe the thing that is commaunded thē. Lo here a willfulneſſe: yea verily, according to the opinion of the fleſh: but yet in very deede it is the true hardineſſe. Why ſo? Becauſe it hath the good foundation. Heauen and earth are of great weight: and yet is all that houge building grounded vppon the onely worde of God. In what good plight then ſhall a particular thing be, when it is founded vppon the ſame? Thus yee ſee what wee haue to gather vpon this text, that the people was preſumptuous in that they yeelded not to God, when hee commaunded them to ſit ſtill.

Now, to the ende wee may know, that when God hath once ſpoken, they be no threatnings to ſcarre babes withall as they ſay: he addeth for a concluſion, You went vp, and behold, the Ammorrhyte that dwels on the hill came out before you, and chaſed you as waſpes or Bees doe, inſomuch that they ſmote you in mount Seir euen vnto Horma. Hereby Moſes ſhewcth that the people were taught after the maner of fooles, that is to ſay, by their owne hurme. And good reaſon it is that when we will not beleeue Gods ſingle word, we ſhould pay very deere for our experience, and be made to knowe in ſpite of our teeth, that he will be ſtedfaſt in his purpoſe, and bring the thing to paſſe that he hath ſpoken. And hereby wee bee warned not to prouoke Gods wrath, nor to tempt him. So ſoone then as he ſpeaketh, let vs ſtand in awe: for it is a part of fayth as is ſhewed by the example of Noe in the eleuenth chapter to the Hebrewes. It is ſayd there, that Noe beheld the flud at ſuch time as men made great chere in the world. How ſo? for God had told him that the world ſhould periſh, and hee contented himſelfe therewith. And therefore let vs not tary till God arme himſelfe and vtter his power againſt vs: but as ſoone as he hath ſpoken, let vs be afraide, that we may preuent his wrath: and then ſhall we be taught as wee ought to be, to our welfare. But if we bee hardheaded, and thinke that all that euer is ſayde is but a mockerie: wee ſhall finde to our confuſion, that God hath an effectuall worde, and that his hand and his tongue goe together, ſo as all that euer commeth from him ſhall be found to bee certaine and infallible.

Heb. 11. 7.

Alſo wee haue to marke this ſimilitude that Moſes ſetteth downe here: namely that the Ammorrhytes came out lyke Bees. For wee knowe that when Bees are angrye, they ſting men: and they regard not whether men be too ſtrong for them, but they fly vppon them with ſuch choler and furie, as they cannot but be aſtoniſhed. They ſeke to ſting their eyes: ſo as there is not the hardieſt of them, but he is put to his ſhiftes, and is faine to runne away from thoſe little pretie fowles. Moſes then hath vſed this ſimilitude, to ſhewe that the enemies had Lyons hearts, becauſe God had incouraged them. For it belongeth to him onely to ſtrengthen men. When it pleaſeth him to defend vs, though our enemies were as mad as might be, yet ſhould they ſhrinke away, and be diſmayed at a thing of nothing. But elſe, if there were but little children againſt vs, GOD would ſo ſtrēgthen them, as we ſhould not know where to become, but bee diſcomfited before them. Therefore let vs not haue an eye to the ſtrength of men, nor to their furniture. For our Lord will ſtirre vp folke againſt vs, that coulde doe nothing afore, and in whom there was no lykelyhoode at all: and wee ſhall be ſo combred to withſtand them, that to our ſeeming, all the world is againſt vs: and moreouer wee ſhall be ſo diſmayed, and GOD ſhall ſo bereaue vs of all ſenſe and reaſon, that euen a viſor ſhall be enough to ſcarre vs out of our wittes. Thus yee ſee what wee haue to conſider in this ſimilitude which Moſes hath ſet downe here in the text.

Finally he ſayth that the people being ſo diſcomfited, fell to weeping, but God heard not their cry, and ſo they taryed in Cades Barne according to the time that they abode there. Some ſupply it here w theſe wordes, according to the time that you abode in other places, and they ſay that they abode there nyneteene yeeres. But that cannot be prooued by the holy ſcripture, & the makers of that gloſe were the Iewes, who haue turned all the holy ſcripture topſiteruie, with their dreames and dotages. The meaning of Moſes is farre otherwiſe. For his intent is to put the people in minde of their long abiding at Cades Barne, becauſe God helde them there as it were at a bayes: and to make them cal to remembrance and conſider the better that his pulling down of their pride after that maner, and his cauſing of them to feele that they ought not to raunge abroad at random when God ſhutteth the gate againſt thē by forbidding them, was a juſt puniſhment frō heauen. Moſes then intendeth here to ſtabliſh the people the better in ỹ knowledge which they ought to haue had long agoe concerning Gods iuſtice, to the ende that the ſame may humble them, & touche them the better with repentance. That is the playne meaning of the text.

Now wee ſee here firſt of all, that men recoyle a hundred paces backe, when they weene to goe forewarde but one, at leaſtewiſe beyonde the will of God. This people was neere their enemies, they did but put themselues in a readinesse, and as soone as they were armed, they gaue charge vppon them. They needed not to retyre for the matter, that is to say, they needed not to remoue: for wee see how they be chased, and not onely beaten downe there in the same place: but that God also dryueth them before the winde, as chaffe or dust is driuen. Ye see then here is a fayre lookingglasse to shewe vs that when men presume to make themselues redoubted, they doe no sooner set one foote foreward, but God plucketh them an hundred leagues backe, and that to their great confusion. What is to be done then? Obedience must alwayes be as a cresset vnto vs to shew vs the way, so as we may first and formost knowe what God hath appointed, and thereupon take courage to goe, when we be sure that he guideth our footesteppes. For thereupon wee may boldely conclude, that the ende thereof shall bee good, and that there shall followe nothing of it but prosperitie. But contrariwise, if wee will needes be leaping out, when God will haue vs sit still at home: it will coste vs very deare. Thus yee see what wee haue to remember vppon this text of Moses, where hee sayth expressely that the people were chased euen vnto Horma, and that they came vnto Cades.

As touching the weeping that is spoken of here, it should seeme that there was some repentance in them before, and that now the same was doubled: and yet notwithstanding it is said that it was but lost time, and that the peoples weeping booted them not at all. This at the first blushe might seeme contrary to other texts
2. Chr. 6. 24. & Esa. 65. 23. of the holy scripture. For it is sayd that as soone as sinners acknowledge their faultes and doe but sigh for them, God receiueth them to mercie, yea and euen preuenteth them. It is sayd that hee taryeth not till wee cry, but that he preuenteth our crying: or at leastwise that whensoeuer wee pray, he is ready to heare vs. But here it seemeth that the people repented, and yet that God letteth them alone, so as they languishe still without faring any whitte the better for their repentance. As touching the thing that wee haue seene, it was set downe to shewe vs that the people had a false repentance, as men cõmonly haue, soothing themselues through hipocrysie, and bearing themselues on hand that they bee well sorie for their sinnes, when there is still some backe nooke behinde, so as they consider not the mischiefe so deepely as it were meete to be searched. True it is, that God will not suffer vs to be plunged in [sorrowe for] our sinnes, so wee bethinke vs of them earnestly: but all our seeking is to couer them, and to forget them quite by our good will. Now then, wee haue so much the more neede to pray God to worke so in vs, as wee may not bee Iere. 13. 23. & Rom. 2. 5. double hearted to flatter our selues. And for the same cause the holy scripture telleth vs, that he which knoweth not how hard it is to come to repentance, deceiueth himselfe.

The Papistes imagine, that they can helpe themselues and further themselues to repentance by their owne freewill. Loe what their ouerweening is. But let vs vnderstand that it is a singular woorking of the holy ghost, when it pleaseth him to leade vs to repentance. For what else is it than a renewing of the man? Is it in any mans power to create himselfe? No: but God fashioneth vs newe againe, and therefore that prayse is to be giuen vnto him. Againe, our wittes are vtterly dulled or rather starke blinde. God must bee faine to inlighten them. And is that in our power? Whereas there is nothing but corruption in our hartes: whereas there is nothing but secrete rebelliousnesse and malice: God must be faine to rid and clense away euery whit of it.

And therefore let vs marke well that there was no repentance in this people, although they were toiched before. It might well bee a signe that God had compassion of them: but true repentance requireth not onely an acknowledgement of our faultes, but also that wee shoulde be sorye for them, and that vppon the feeling of our owne euill, wee should goe vnto GOD, referring our selues wholy vnto him, and seeking nothing but to bee gouerned thencefoorth by him, forasmuch as we haue nothing but frowardnesse in our selues. But the people were not yet come to this poynt: and so wee see they were not ripe to repentance. And as touching their weeping, true it is that they had some feeling and vnderstanding: but that was not enough yet.

Furthermore let vs marke well, that Gods refusing to heare the cry of the childrē of Israel, was not to shake them off vtterly. And there is not a text better worthie to be noted than this. For it importeth great instruction for all our whole lyfe. I say then that God harkened not to the peoples weeping, and yet notwithstanding that he did not vtterly shake them off, nor was altogether deafe to their request. And how may that be? For sometimes God heareth vs not to outward appearance, and yet howsoeuer the case stande our prayers are not vnaualeable, but doe vs good.

As for example: When a man hath played the vnthrift, GOD plucketh him backe, (there are examples enowe to be seene thereof commonly:) and when another hath bin giuen to gluttonie and excesse: another hath bin a whormonger or a drunkard, and another hath bin a blasphemer: very wel, God seeing men become such beastes, subdueth them by force, hee sendeth them afflictions which laste not for a day or a moneth only, but linger vpon them a longtime: whereupon the one sorte take the bridle in their teeth, and chawe vppon it with fretting and chafing against God, continue still sturdy and stubborne in their sinnes: the other sorte graunt that they haue offended, and are sorie for it before God, beseeching him to vouchsafe to moderate his rigor, & to asswage ẏ paines which they indure. And yet in the meane while, their miserie abateth not, but they continew at the same stay that they were at before. It should seeme then ẏ their prayers are lost, & that God

gaue deafe eare vnto them. Now although ſuch folke pray hartily: yet let vs marke that Gods hearing of them is not to outward appearance. And why? Becauſe he knoweth that it is good for them to be ſo vnder his rod ſtill. Euen ſo was it with this people: it was to their benefite for them to be put in minde of their lewde dealings euery minute of an houre. But yet for all that, he fayleth not to haue compaſſion of them: for he giueth them patience, and afterwarde maketh their afflictions to doe them good: inſomuch that although they were irkſome to them, yet did they ſtand them in ſtead of medicines. Ye ſee then that God doth ſometimes heare vs, and yet notwithſtanding it appeareth not ſo to any mans thinking, yea and euen wee our ſelues may ſuppoſe that wee haue loſt our time. True it is that God will ſurely reiect the yellings of the wicked when they cry out vnto him, and that he will laugh at their weepings: and it is not to bee marueiled at. And yet in ſo doing he fayleth not to accompliſhe his promiſe, which is, that he will heare all them that cry vnto him. And why? For this promiſe belongeth to none but ſuch as cry vnto God rightly, and come not to him with windlaſſes and feining, according to this expreſſe ſaying of the pſalme, that God is neere to all ſuch as call vpon him, yea, as call vpon him in trueth. Then if wee will be heard at Gods hand, wee muſt firſt and formoſt haue our affections clenſed. And therefore his reiecting of the hipocrites when they cry vnto him, is no counterworking againſt his promiſe: For they bee vncleane. In deede they houle, and they will not ſtick to ſay, alas my God, they will make lamentation enough: but foraſmuch as they ſeeke not God of a deſire to come vnto him, but in ſtead of comming to him, would recoyle backe from him if it were poſſible: their crying out, my God, is as though they were vpon the racke. Now then, this howling of theirs is brutiſh, and hath no affinitie with faith to doe them good withall. But the thing that I tolde you of euen now, hath another maner of thing in it: that is to wit, that [diuers times] God will not heare vs to deliuer vs from the bodily puniſhmentes that he ſendeth vs: and yet in the meane while he ceaſeth not to be mercifull and well minded towardes vs. And therefore let vs beare in minde, that when our Lord ſendeth vs anie diſeaſes, ſo as one is ſtriken with pouertie, another is ſmitten after another faſhion, and euery man hath his griefe: if we pray vnto him, and the miſerie is as though it were tyed to our ſhoulders, and he maketh no countenaunce to heare vs: it is not to be ſayd therefore that God letteth vs alone therin, to driue vs to deſpaire. But if wee beare the aduerſitie patiently which hee ſendeth, let vs looke to be deliuered of it in the ende: and in the meane while let it ſuffice vs to be comforted by his holy ſpirit, and let vs hope that he will not ſuffer vs to be tempted aboue that which we be able to beare. Thus ye ſee how God heard not the peoples cry, and yet that they which haue ſought him with a true and rightmeaning heart, haue not loſt their labor.

Ex.22.27.& 2.Chr.7.14.

1.Cor.10.13

God ſhewed not by outward deed, that he heard them, and yet in the meane while he made their bodily puniſhment to ſerue to the welfare of their ſoules: inſomuch that albeit they lingered there by the ſpace of fortie yeeres: yet were they not diſinherited of ỹ kingdom of heauen. Whereas they were diſappointed of the land that was promiſed them: therein they felt Gods wrath: but yet did they ouercome that temptation through fayth: I meane them that came againe into the right way, and grew not hard hearted as the moſt part did, which did nothing elſe but chafe vpon the bit, as we haue ſeene afore. And herein wee ſee, that if we haue true repentance of our ſinnes, we ſhall finde that God is not vnmindefull of our requeſtes, though he heare vs not ſo ſoone as wee would: and that yet notwithſtanding our repentance muſt keepe vs ſtill vnder, ſo as although that (to our ſeeming) the gate vnto Gods goodneſſe is ſhut againſt vs, and he will not admit vs in: yet neuertheleſſe, our prayers ſhall not be in vaine. For God will ſhewe in the end, that he was not deaf to our requeſts, but that he heard them to giue vs ſuch aſſwagement of our afflictions, as he knew to be meete and expedient for our welfare.

And finally let vs marke wel that if God haue puniſhed vs, yea & that the affliction hath indured a long time: ỹ remẽbraunce thereof muſt bee well printed in our mindes, that we become not lyke thoſe which forget Gods chaſtiſementes win a day or twaine. And ỹ is ỹ cauſe why Moſes ſayth to ỹ people, According to the dayes which you haue taryed there. As if he ſhould ſay, yee ought to beare it well in remembraunce. For it ſeemed to you that ye ſhould neuer haue come ſoone enough into the lande of bleſſing: but God made you to retyre from it, & it ought to haue bin yet longer time ere ye had come there. Thinke vpon it, & conſider how it was Gods hand ỹ held yee there as it were ſhut vp in cloſe priſon. Now then, although God haue deliuered you from it: yet muſt you beare it in mind ſtil, according as we ſee how king Ezechias ſpeaketh thereof in his ſong, ſaying ỹ he will bethinke him of the yeeres paſt with heauineſſe and griefe of heart, and call to minde ỹ chaſtiſementes that he had receiued at Gods hand, thereby to holde himſelfe in awe, ỹ hee fall not backe againe into the ſame faultes for which he had bin puniſhed. Thus ye ſe how wee ought to thinke vppon the corrections that God ſhall haue ſent vs, that we may profite our ſelues by them. And therefore let vs not reſemble this people that are ſpoken of here: but whẽſoeuer we be chaſtiſed at Gods hand, let our ſorrowing be in ſuch ſorte, as we may haue wherewith to comfort our ſelues in his grace. And therwithall let vs holde our ſelues thenceforth in his obedience, neuer to prouoke him as wee had done before.

Now let vs kneele downe in the preſence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to vouchſafe to touch vs with them more and more, in ſuch wiſe as wee may not only aske him forgiueneſſe for our trãſgreſſing of his commaundementes ſo many wayes:

wayes: but alſo deſire to be reformed by his holy ſpirit, that by his power wee may fight againſt al our owne luſts, and againſt al the temptations of the world, and quietly goe through with our calling, vntill ſuch time as being deliuered from all fighting, wee be receiued into the heauenly reſt that is promiſed vs. And ſo let vs al ſay, Almightie God heauenly father, &c.

On Thurſday the xxv. of Aprill. 1555.

The eleuenth Sermon which is the firſt vpon the ſecond Chapter.

THen turned wee and drewe to the wilderneſſe by the way of the red Sea, as the Lorde had ſayd to mee: and wee compaſſed about mount Seir many a day.

2 And the Lorde ſpake vnto me, ſaying:

3 Yee haue gone long enough about this mountaine: turne yee towardes the North.

4 And warne thou the people, ſaying: yee ſhall ſhortly paſſe through the borders of your brethren the children of Eſau which dwell in Seir, and they ſhall be afrayd of you: but take yee good heede to your ſelues,

5 That yee prouoke them not: for I will not giue you ſo much as one foote of their land.

6 Yee ſhall buy vittels of them for mony, and eate: and lykewiſe yee ſhall buy water of them for mony, and drinke.

7 For the Lorde thy God hath bleſſed thee in all the workes of thy handes. He knewe that thou ſhouldeſt iourney through this great wilderneſſe. The Lord thy God hath bin with thee now theſe fortie yeeres, and thou haſt wanted nothing.

HEre wee ſee more fully the proofe of the matter that I treated of yeſterday: ſ God in chaſtiſing men, doth teache them to obeye him, & by that meanes holdeth them in awe by force, becauſe they would not ſubmitte themſelues to him willingly: And ſecondly that he tryeth their obedience, by reyning them backe, whereas wee of our owne nature are deſirous to preace foreward, and to purchaſe our ſelues eſtimation. Moſes then ſayth, ſhas the people turned backe after they had bin ſo beaten by their enemies: For before they could not bee tamed by no meanes. God had commaunded them what they ſhould doe: but wee ſawe they rebelled for all that. When he ſayd, be ye ſtill: they were in a heate and would needes be running vpon their enemies: And when he ſayde, goe not: they would needes runne faſter than before. But were they once taught to their coſte, and had God once performed his threatning, by making them to be ouerthrowen by their enemies: then were they plyable enough: But it was all too late, as we commonly ſay in the prouerb, a foole is neuer wiſe till he be well beaten. Now hereby we be taught how greatly it is for our behoofe to bee ſo dealt with. For except God bring vs home to him by correction: it would be vnpoſſible for vs to bee ſuch as we ought to be, ſo as we would harken to his voyce and followe him whitherſoeuer hee commaundeth vs. Therefore wee muſt be faine to be prepared with ſtripes of the rod.

Furthermore, let vs learne well the thing that hath bin declared heretofore, according alſo as Moſes ſheweth it to the eye: that is to wit, that God will ſuffer vs to languiſh: and that although he bee mercifull to vs, and haue forgiuen the ſinnes that we haue committed: yet muſt wee be faine to ſuffer for a time. We ſhall ſigh vnto him, and yet will he let vs alone in our miſerable ſtate and plight: but in the ende, all ſhall fall out to our benefite. For had God ſet open the gap to the children of Iſrael, and giuen them enterance into the promiſed land: within a day or two they woulde haue forgotten that horrible cryme of theirs in murmuring againſt him, yea (& as much as in thē lay) euen in forſaking their heritage: they would neuer haue thought vppon their vnthankefulneſſe and diſobedience. Therefore it behooued them to bee chaſtiſed a long ſeaſon, ſo as they might neuer forget the offence that they had committed. Now then, whenſoeuer wee haue prouoked God to anger by our diſobedience: let vs not thinke it ſtrange though he doe not at the firſt daſhe

deliuer vs from the aduerſitie that he ſendeth vs for a chaſtiſement. For our ſinne would not bee printed ſo throughly in our remembraunce at the firſt day as is requiſite. God therefore muſt be faine to worke after ſuch ſorte, and to make vs to languiſh, as I haue touched before. And in good faith, what elſe is all this preſent lyfe but ſuch an exerciſe? Wherefore hath God made vs ſubiect to ſo many miſeries? wee be no ſooner ſcaped out of one miſchiefe, but anon there commeth another in the necke of it, ſo as there is neuer any ende. And all is to teach vs this leſſon, which wee cannot remember if wee be not inforced to it. Beſides that, we would forget it by and by, if our Lord did not (as yee would ſay) incorporate it into vs, ſo as wee may bee prepared and led of nature to ſay, ſee how our God exerciſeth vs with many miſeries, and hee doth it becauſe wee be wretched ſinners. And yet for all this, can wee frame our ſelues to his lure, and not rather drawe cleane contrarie to his will? Therefore is he faine to teach vs, that ſpyte of our teeth wee be in his hand, and he hath all ſouereine dominion and Lordſhip ouer vs.

Againe to come to particularities, whenſoeuer God ſendeth a man any affliction, let him bethinke himſelfe, that beſides the common miſeries of this flightfull lyfe, god intendeth to giue him a particular inſtruction. And let vs not ſay, why doth not this man or that man deſerue to be chaſtiſed as well as I: according to the common maner, which is that euery man woulde be priuiledged aboue others? nay let euery of vs yeelde to receiue the rod patiently at Gods hād, aſſuring our ſelues that hee chaſtiſeth vs meaſurably, & as he knoweth to be for our profit. Thus much concerning ỹ retyring ỹ is treated of here.

Furthermore if our Lord plucke vs backe, and wheras things were in good forewardneſſe, and there was good lykelyhoode that all ſhould haue floriſhed and bin in great proſperitie: if we ſee a ſuddeine confuſion, and that the ſame continueth afterward, and things goe on from worſe to worſe: let vs vnderſtand that it is for our ſins ſakes, & becauſe wee haue peruerted the courſe of Gods goodneſſe. For he [for his part] neuer fayleth to goe foreward with the good that hee hath begunne to doe for vs: but wee cannot abide that hee ſhould continue it, wee hinder him as much as in vs lyeth. And therefore is he faine to handle vs as we deſerue.

Beſides this, let vs aſſure our ſelues that when we obey God, then hath he made his corrections auaileable in vs. True it is that a great nomber doe harden when God goeth about to ſubdue them: yee ſhall ſee them growe wilfull and full of venim againſt him. But God worketh after ſuch ſorte in his choſen, that when hee ſmiteth them with his hand, he doth alſo touch thē inwardly with his holy ſpirit, ſo as their harts become ſoft that they may obey, by reaſon wherof the corrections doe them good. Although then that the miſeries which we indure are hard and contrary to our nature: yet muſt wee thinke them good, becauſe God maketh them to ſerue for our welfare after that faſhion.

Now Moſes ſayth expreſſely, that after the people had ſet a windlaſſe and trayled about the mountaine Seir, they came to the north ſide, euen as God had commaunded him. Wherein wee ſee the thing more clearely which I haue touched: that is to ſay, that there is a pliableneſſe in the people which was not in them before: they bee now become tractable. And although they wandered a long time, ſo as they might haue bin out of patience euery day, and haue taken occaſion to murmure, and to haue made ſedition: yet notwithſtanding they went ſtill foreward. And why? for the corrections which they had receiued, had wrought a chaunge in them. Wee ſee then that Gods reforming of men by puniſhing them for their ſinnes, is as a fornace to melt them and caſt them newe againe in. And therefore if God haue let vs alone here at out eaſe, and wee fall to kicking againſt him: let vs aſſure our ſelues it is more for our behoofe to bee corrected by ſome chaſtiſement. And therewithall let vs beware that we profite our ſelues by it, and that wee become not worſe than they were which are ſet forth to vs as an example of diſobedience and ſtubbornneſſe. Harden not your hartes as your fathers did, ſayth the Lord. And yet notwithſtanding wee ſee that this people (how ſtubborne and froward ſoeuer they were) miſſed not to goe about the mountaine a long tyme, after God had ſo chaſtiſed them: that is to ſay, they were driuen to knowe that it was in vaine for them to reſiſt the hand of God. Howbeit we ſee yet ſome obedience, in that it is ſaid, that they waited to haue a new commaundement, ſo as they durſt not remoue one ſtep, [till they had it.] It might ſeeme that God mocked them to goe round about after that faſhion. They might haue ſayd, what ſhall become of this in the end? If God will haue vs to tary, why lets he vs not alone? Or if he will haue vs to goe, why ſheweth hee vs not the way, to ſay, goe forewarde? He holdes vs here lyke little children, ſo as wee doe nothing but fetch a circuit without departing out of one place, and when wee haue tyred our legges neuer ſo much, wee are neuer the further onwarde on our way. The people might haue deſcanted after that faſhion. But what? They tary till God ſay to them, Turne yee that way. Wee ſee then yet ſtill howe this chaſtiſement had done them good in that behalfe. And heereupon let vs marke what true repentaunce bringeth with it. Where as wee were deafe when God ſpake to vs, and gaue no eare to his voyce: wee muſt holde our ſelues in awe vnder him, and looke what hee ſayth, that muſt wee doe, and no more. That is the chiefe fruite of repentance. And if it appeared vnto vs in this people which was ſo ſtubborne and vntamable: what excuſe will there be for vs, if wee will not receiue the thinges that are ſpoken to vs in the name of God: but rather will be ſtill replying, and haue not the witte and diſcretion to ſuffer our ſelues to be guided by him who onely can leade vs aright? So much the more then ought wee to reſtraine our ſelues from attempting any thing, vnleſſe God commaund it.

1. Pet. 1. 7.

Pſal. 95. 8. & Heb. 4. 7.

Moreouer it is ſayd that the people ſhall paſſe through the countrye of Edome, without prouoking of the inhabitantes. Firſt of all it is ſayd, They bee your brethren, the children of Eſau. Wee knowe that Eſau was the brother of Iacob, who was the Patriarke, and (as yee would ſay) the welſpring from whence this people deſcended. And for aſmuch as Eſau came of the line of Abraham: a part of the land of promiſe had belonged vnto him, but that hee was cut off from the inheriting thereof, howbeit not by the pleaſure of man, but by the heauenly ordinaunce vttered by God yea euen while their mother Rebecca was with childe of them, inaſmuch as hee ſayd that the elder ſhould ſerue the younger. But yet for all this, Eſau ceaſed not to bee Iacobs brother ſtill. And their children ought to haue continued the ſame brotherhoode & kinred betwixt them afterwarde. Marke that for one poynt.

Gen.25.23. & Mal.1.2. & Rom.9.13

Another poynt is, That God gaue mount Seir in poſſeſſion to Eſau: it was his lot. When he had excluded him out of the land of Chanaan, hee gaue him the other countrye for himſelfe and his ſucceſſors. Foraſmuch then as it was aſſigned him of God: it was not for men to attempt to depriue or bereaue him thereof. Now as touching this brotherhood, God will haue it to moue vs, and to be as a certein bond to knit vs together, ſo as nature may perſwade vs to bee kindehearted one to another, and reſtreyne vs from doing wrong or harme to any man. True it is that there is not fleſhly kinred betweene all men, to make them ſo neere of bloud as they might call one another couſins, and name themſelues be any linage whereof either other were deſcended: but yet is there a certain cõmon kinred in generall, which is, that all men ought to think how they be faſhioned after Gods image, and that there is one nature common among them al. Euẽ the heathen men knew that very wel. So then whereas we haue ſome diſcretion to maintaine peace and concorde, and to yeelde euery man his right without taking away of any mans goods, & without committing of any extortion or outrage: and wee peruert the order of nature, and are worſe than the wilde beaſtes which make countenance one to another when they be al of one kind. For the woolues are not at ſuch variance among themſelues as men are. And therefore let vs learne, that although there be not any neere kinred among vs, yet notwithſtanding in aſmuch as we be men, there ought to be ſome cõmon bond betweene vs, and a certain brotherly loue. But there is yet another conſideration among Chriſtians: for God hath adopted them to bee of his houſholde: and that ought to auaile more than all the kinred on the earth. For ſeeing that God hath tolde vs that he intendeth to take vs to himſelfe, becauſe that being of his Church wee bee as it were his owne children, and call vpon him as with one mouth, ſaying our father: if wee neuertheleſſe agree as cattes and dogges among our ſelues: may it in any wiſe be borne withal, ſpecially conſidering that wee cannot clayme him for our father, vnleſſe we be gouerned by his holy ſpirit? [No ſurely:] For either his ſpirit muſt cry in our hartes: or elſe we ſhall haue our mouthes ſhut. Againe on the other ſide, by what title can wee clayme ſo great a benefite and honor as to be the children of God: if we be not members of Ieſus Chriſt? But wee be not of his body, but vppon condition aforeſayd. Whoſoeuer then hurteth his neighbor, whoſoeuer is voyde of louingkindeneſſe and pitie, whoſoeuer layeth to catching and ſnatching on all ſides: the ſame (as much as in him is) rendeth Ieſus Chriſt in peeces. And therfore let vs marke well, that when God alledgeth kinred: we be warned to conſider in what degree God hath put vs, and what vnion hee hath ſet among vs, & euery of vs to diſcharge himſelfe faithfully thereof, to ỹ intent ỹ whereas God hath ſet vs together to maintaine vs in good agreement and ſoue: wee make not a confuſed diſorder. Let that ſerue for one poynt.

Rom.8.14. 15.16.

But if wee conſider the common trade of the worlde, how it ſhould ſeeme that men haue conſpyred to doe cleane contrary to Gods commaundement: it is ſo farre of from neighbors to thinke that Gods placing of them neere together, is to the end that euery man ſhoulde ſerue his neighbors turne, and all imploy themſelues to the common profite, without hurting or greeuing one another: that euen brothers thinke it lawfull to ſhift euery one for himſelfe, and there is none other lyfe with them, but to drawe ſtill to themſelues without any pitie or compaſſion. How then ſhal the neighbors be brethren, which haue but ſome acquaintance a farre of: ſeeing ỹ they which were borne all in one belly, and are all one mans children, beare nõ more friendſhip one to another than wilde beaſtes, but rather much leſſe? Truely it ſhould ſeeme that ſome will needes be brethren, euen in ſpite of God. For if it be to doe ſome miſchiefe, or to playe ſome diueliſh pranke to the ouerthrowe of all goodneſſe: then they can skill to alledge, wee haue this, and wee haue that, wee be countrymen, wee be neighbors children borne all in one towne. Loe how the wicked can finde themſelues to be couſins and brothers. And what to doe? To riſe vp againſt God, to put all thinges out of order, to make quarels and frayes, to maintaine themſelues in all looſeneſſe, and to procure all manner of ſtumblingblockes, that Gods name may be blaſphemed and all honeſtie peruerted. Theſe are the brotherhoods and couſiningſhips of the worlde, as is to bee ſeene too much. But when it commeth to the poynt that euery man ſhould helpe his neighbor, and abſteine from doing him harme or anoyance: men be ſo farre of from abſteining, of from thinking that God vnited them together, or that God hath created thẽ after his own image, or agayne, that they be bound yet w̃ a ſtraiter bond, inaſmuch as he hath adopted them by his Goſpel to be members of his ſonne Ieſus Chriſt, and heires of the kingdome of heauen: men (I ſay) are ſo farre off from thinking any ſuch thing, that they peruert the whole order of nature, with worse than beastly furie. But yet is this text sufficient to condemne men if they walk not in all mildenesse, and be not more kindhearted one to another than they be.

Now let vs come to that which is added here in the second place: which is, That God had ginen Mount Seir in possession to Esau. True it is that when he compareth Esau and Iacob together, he sayth by his prophet, Is not Esau Iacobs brother? And yet haue I placed him in a hillie countrie, in a stonie and barrein countrey: and I haue giuen you a fruitefull and fatte lande. Hereby the people of Israell are put in minde, that God had bestowed many mo benefites vpon them, than vppon those that went afore thē. For Esau was the elder sonne, and yet did God disherit him of the land that he had promised to his graundfather Abraham, and to his father Isaak. And why did God so? wee see none other reason, but for that hee listed to vtter his free goodnesse towardes Iacob and his linage. The people of Israell coulde not say, wee were the more noble and excellent: for the byrthright belonged to Esau. They could not say, wee were better. No: for we see they were a people set altogether vppon malice and vnthankefulnesse. Now then, their inheriting of the promised land befel them not for any worthines of their owne, but through Gods meere mercy. And besides this, God had also prouided for Ismael who was halfe a bastard. For the matching of Abraham with Agar was not a lawfull mariage. And although it was no aduowtrie: yet was not that mariage altogether allowed of God. But yet did God prouide for Ismael, in asmuch as hee sayd, I haue heard him. If the case stoode so with Ismael, much more reason was it that Esau shoulde haue some place, and that God should extend his blessing euen to those that were of his linage. And for that cause did hee giue him mount Seir. Now therefore, in this consideration the people of Israel ought not to trouble him, but to let him alone with the portion that was assigned him from heauen.

Here wee haue a good lesson to gather, which belongeth to vs all. Although mention be made here precisely of the linage of Esau, which were called Edomites and Idumæans: yet notwithstanding, as we shall see hereafter in the song, God declareth that according as he made the partitions and stretched out his meeteline, so were the realmes and countries deuided. Let vs not thinke that the world is ruled by fortune, and that thinges are so intangled, but that God guideth all by his prouidence and power. Hee then hath stretched out his meeteline to appoint euery people their countrey to dwel in. But yet for all that, wee see how men haue transposed those boundes. They will not sticke to confesse that boundes are a very holy thing. And truely [the transgressing in that behalfe] shall be more punishable, than if a man had offended in any other deede. Lykewise mony becausse it is ỹ thing whereby men intercōmon among themselues, is a priuiledge and (as yee would say) a sacred thing. In lyke case is it with the bounds [meeres, and buttels] of fieldes: for without them, all woulde goe to hauocke, so as men would eate vp one another. Wee will well graunt this as in respect of a field or a medowe: but wee see that the pride, Ambition, and vnsatiable couetousnesse of men haue so caryed away their mindes, as they haue not bin ashamed since to transpose the boundes that God had set. For as touchng such as haue enterprised warres against their neighbors, to increase themselues: haue they not all broken the order which ought to haue bin inuiolable? yes: So then wee see how men are made to spyte God through their ambition and couctousnesse. And yet this mischiefe continueth still at this day, and is inflamed more than euer it was.

But yet for all that, this rule shall holde for euer: that is to wit, that looke what landes, what kingdome, what Lordship, what principalitie, what state, or what free citie soeuer there bee: wee may assure our selues, that the distributing of them after that sorte, is done by God: and that whosoeuer wageth battell against them, doth as much as in him lyeth to breake the boundes which God hath set. I meane here such warres as are taken in hand through ambition, or couetousnesse, or pride. Otherwise, wee see here, that the children of Israell ought to make warre: for God auoweth their doing, because he had ordeyned thē to be owners of the land, and will haue the former inhabiters driuen out as they deserued.

But are warres made nowadayes by the authoritie of God? Haue men an eye to the thing that is lawfull? Yea, or doe they tary till they haue commandement from God? Nay, they go to it in despite of him, the diuill driues them forewarde. True it is that if a man reason of Realmes and Principalities as they bee nowadayes: it may be alledged, how hath this realme bin inuaded, and how hath that country bin conquered? Yea, but yet for all that, it is not for men to remoue boundes. Although they haue bin confounded: yet is it not for vs to enterprise any thing. For our Lorde hath not giuen vs commission so to doe: hee hath reserued that to himselfe.

But let vs marke lykewise, that when men haue once altered the order that God hath set, hee must needes ouerthrowe them. And that is the cause why there happen so many changes, and it is maruell that there are not seene yet a hundred times mo. Surely if God had not a speciall regard to the preseruation of mankinde: no doubt but wee should see alterations of kingdomes euery day, so that within two or three dayes, hee that is now a king should bee but as one that were dresst in a players apparell, to play an enterlude vppon a stage. But yet for all that wee must marke well, that the alterations of kingdomes which happen, doe serue to punishe the chaunges that were made afore, when men remoued their boundes at the beginning, and would needes peruert the order that God had set. Neuertheless, howsoeuer the case stands, let vs beare this lesson in minde, that God hath limited realmes and countries: and that wheras it is his wil that there ſhould be principalities ſtabliſhed euery where, forasmuch as the ſame commeth of his prouidence: it behooueth vs to holde our ſelues contented and not to alter any thing, vnleſſe we haue good warrant that he openeth vs the gate and armeth vs. As for example, if violence be offered vnto vs, then is it certein that if God giue victorie to him that was wrongfully aſſayled, ſo as he ouercome his enemie and put him to flight: that is a chaunge that commeth of God. But as for to aſſaile [vnprouoked:] that (as I ſayd afore) is not to fight againſt creatures, but againſt the liuing God.

And let vs wey well the wordes that are ſet downe here: Thou ſhalt not prouoke them (ſayth he) and they ſhall be afraide of thee. And hee addeth afterwarde, Thou ſhalt buy the bread that thou muſt eate, yea and euen the water that thou ſhalt drinke, ſo as thou muſt alwayes haue thy purſe open to pay and content them. Here wee ſee that when God intendeth to maintaine a people in their poſſeſſion, he prouoketh them not to make the misbehaue themſelues, for euen therefore did he caſt that feare vppon the Edomites, to the end that the children of Iſraell ſhoulde not haue any occaſion of warre. Wee ſhall ſee hereafter how God hardened the hart of Sehon, and inflamed the other inhabitants of the countrie, ſo as they armed themſelues againſt the people of Iſraell, becauſe he was minded to driue them out. And ſo did he ſhewe the children of Iſraell by effect, that they had iuſt cauſe of warre. But whereas he held the Edomites in awe, and inclined their hearts in ſuch wiſe as they gaue paſſage to the children of Iſraell, and bought and ſoulde quietly with them: therein wee ſee (as I touched before) that when our Lorde purpoſeth to maintayne a people in their poſſeſſion, hee will giue the ſuch a minde as they ſhall not prouoke their neighbors, nor open them any gap by ſtryking vp the drumme, or by ſounding the trumpette firſt themſelues. To be ſhorte, the warre ſhall not ſpring on their owne ſide. Therefore wee muſt conclude, that when a people doe put forth themſelues, or when a prince will needes attempt fooliſh enterpriſes, and be medling here and there: wee may perceiue it is Gods doing, of purpoſe to ouerthrow him and to bereue him of the countrye that he had giuen him. So much the more then ought wee to pray God to maintaine vs and to make vs milde and peaſeable, that we may not followe thoſe whome we ſee to haue their heads full of vnquietneſſe, ſo as they muſt needs be medling with one thing or other. Let vs abſteine from ſuch thinges, that our Lord may mainteine vs in peace: for that is the true meane, as I ſaide afore.

Herewithall alſo wee be taught, how men ſhould behaue themſelues in their warres (prouided alwayes that the warre be rightfull and holy, and ſuch as God alloweth of:) that is to witte, in ſuch ſort as no man be vexed, and that there be no pillage, no ſaccage, nor no extortion committed. For it is ſayd, yee ſhall buy the bread that ye eate, yea and ye ſhall pay ready money for the water that yee drinke. If God commaund the people of Iſraell to buy water to drinke: howe much rather ſhould they that make warre, pay for wine and victuals, & ſuch other things as coſt ready mony, to thoſe that are not their enemies? For the thing that is ſayd here, is ſpoken of the Edomites. But how is this obſerued nowadayes, I pray? In deede there are Edictes and proclamations inow made: but the world ſees how they be kept.

Yea and who bee moſt troubled with the warres, but ſuch as beare the burthen of it? And that is euē the countrie. When a king or a prince is about to make war, it ſeemeth to be for the cōmon weal: & ſo are men made to beleeue. But in the meane while, when the poore ſubiectes haue payed a ſorte of tallages, taxes, and impoſtes for the maintenance thereof: yet muſt they be ſtill bitten to the bone, ſo as the enemies ſhall not be more vexed, thā they vnder whoſe name and title the warre is made. They can well enough make markets for men to ſel their wares in, and beare them in hand they ſhall haue ready mony. But what? the thing that is woorth three ſhillings, ſhall bee eſteemed at one. And moſt commonly they take vp vittels and pay for them as they liſt. And ſo wee in effect, that all the warres which are made nowadayes, are but robberies: and that the crueltie and vnnaturalneſſe is ſo exceſſiue, as tendeth to vtter confuſion: ſo as it ſhould ſeeme that men are bent to baniſhe all equitie, and that warre cannot bee made without the forgetting of all vprightneſſe, that there may be no more lawe, but that men may become wood beaſtes. Loe to what poynt the world is come.

But yet for all that, lyke as this doctrine cannot be wiped out of the holy ſcripture, ſo can it nor alſo be blotted out of gods booke of records, that he ſhould not iudge the worlde according as he hath pronounced thereof already: that is to wit, that the men of warre which will needes inrich themſelues with other mens goodes, are condēned at his hand, whatſoeuer they alledge for thēſelues, notwithſtanding that they haue taken it vp of cuſtome to ſpoyle and rob, becauſe they haue not ſufficient wages, or whatſoeuer color elſe they can pretend. They may well appeale to kings and princes for to bee their warrant: for they ſhall leade the daunce, and be driuen to anſwere as capteines of theeues: and all their ſouldiers ſhall followe after them, as parteners of their wickedneſſe. Now forasmuch as wee ſee ſuch diſorders in the worlde, wee be warned thereby to pray vnto God, that hee ſuffer vs not to be wrapped in the ſame. And when we aske him our dayly bread, let vs haue conſideration to thinke thus: Ah good Lord, graunt vs the grace that euery of vs may liue of his own labor, and be in peace: and that when the drum is ſtriken vp, wee may not play the madde bedlems, nor giue our ſelues to ſpoyling & robbing, but holde our ſelues in quiet, ſo as we may take paynes and yelde the thankes for thy ſuſteyning of vs, & ſuffer euery man to inioy his owne, without without offering of violence to any man.

Besides this, if they that make warre bee expressely commaunded to pay for their bread and water: I pray you what ought wee to doe in peace? For many misorders may seeme halfe excusable when there is open warre, and it may so fall out, that they which would faine bee gentle, sometimes cannot, but are inforced to doe thinges which they be loath to doe; yea euen to their enemies. And yet for all that, it is apparant, that if a man take any thing without paying for it, so as the owner or partie bee grieued, GOD condemneth it vtterly, and giueth sentence here against it, yea euen though thinges bee neuer so farre out of order, whereby some colour might bee giuen to iustifie their dooinges. Nowe then I praye you what will he doe in peace, when wee haue no cause to grieue one another, but that they which can skill of husbandrie may finde themselues thereby, the shoppes are open for marchauntes and handicraftes men, and there is common policie [for men to be ordered by:] Seeing that God inducеth vs [by such meanes] to withholde our selues from all outrage and extorsion: if we then goe about to robbe other men of their goods, if euerie man seeke to spoile his neighbour to inriche himselfe with his goods, if we be so spiteful as to eate vpone another without any cause: must we not bee condemned dubble? Yes certainly. Now then, seeing that men of warre are commaunded to passe without making spoile, & without offering any trouble or extorsion: let vs learne that we are much more commaunded to walke vprightly & iustly, without doing any outrage or any pilling and polling, seeing that God giueth vs greater meanes to auoide it. Thus ye see the effect of that which wee haue to beare in remembrance.

And nowe for a conclusion here is made a rehearsall what GOD had done for this people. The Lorde thy God (saieth Moses) hath led thee in the wildernesse: he hath fedde thee with Manna: thou hadst not any natural water to drinke, but God gaue it thee out of the drie rock: thou neededst not any money to buy thee clothes withall, or to paye for thy charges as thou wentest: and is it not reason now that this goodnesse and iust dealing should cause thee to deale reasonably with those by whom thou passest? For the people might haue replied, Yes marrie, but wee haue not wherewith, wee haue bene a long time in the wilderneſse, there were no mines of golde or siluer there, we earned not a penny there, neither haue wee had any trade of marchaundise whereby to get any thing. But Moses answereth hereunto, Consider howe the Lorde thy God hath gouerned thee. As if he should say, ye haue none excuse at all: for ye haue wherewith to pay and content euery man. And why? For in the wilderneſse ye spent not any whit of the spoile that ye brought with you out of Egypt: ye were not driuen to buie bread, vittelles, apparell, or any other thing. So then, nowe that you are at the point to possesse the land that God hath promised you, ye shoulde bee too vnthankefull towardes God, and too churlish towardes men; if ye should refuse to content those by whom ye passe. And of a trueth, although yee had not wherewith, yet should it not bee lawfull for you to rob them. For our Lord chaungeth not the order that he hath set, for any pouertie that is in men. But if a man that hath no neede, doe rob or fleece his neighbour of his goods: therein appeareth so much the lewder and outrageouser naughtinesse. And therefore let vs marke well that Gods alledging of this reason to the people, was to the end they should bee the better perswaded and disposed to do the thing that was commaunded them.

And herein wee see first of all howe God beareth with vs: for as a father flattereth his child, and vseth great gentlenesse towardes him, & although he might cõmand him at one word, saying, doe this or that, without alledging any reason at all: yet he dealeth so gently with him as to say, my childe, marke, this is the reason why I would haue thee to doe such a thing, insomuch that he falleth euen to flattering of him: euen after ỹ same maner doth God of his infinite goodnes beare with vs. So much ỹ more then are wee to blame on our part, if wee suffer not our selues to be ouerruled by him, seeing he sheweth himselfe so gentle and amiable towardes vs.

And for the second point let vs marke, that although no necessitie can excuse our sinnes: yet notwithstanding these are the more to bee condemned, which offend vnconstrained by any extremitie. As howe? If a poore man deale vnconscionably when he hath not wherewith to liue, ne knoweth where to become: yet shall he bee condemned: (and if a theefe be punishable before men, much more reason is it ỹ he should be so before God:) And what shal the man bee to whom God hath giuen wherwith to maintaine himselfe, if he fall to pilling & polling, and be neuer satisfied, but is catching and snatching on all sides, and hath no regard of Gods blessing, but is alwaies thecuing, filching, & deceiuing? Such a mã is the more to be abhorred, & wee must conclude ỹ a horrible vẽgeance is prepared for such as haue offended so wilfully. Nowe then let vs marke, ỹ when God giueth vs wherw̃ to sustaine & maintaine our selues, his wil is to lead vs therby to be the louinger to our neighbours, & to do no man any harme or wrong. And so ye see that Gods blessinges ought to be instructions to vs, to make vs liue vprightly, without attempting any thing against our dutie, or without troubling of any bodie. This is it that we haue to remember in the second place. The rest cannot bee dispatched as now, and therefore it shalbe reserued till to morrowe.

Now let vs kneele downe in ỹ presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faults, praying him to make vs so to feele them, as wee may returne to him with true repentance. And againe forasmuch as he vouchsafeth to maintein vs nowe in peace, let vs praye him to continue the same fauour towardes vs, and not suffer vs to bee assayled, least wee doe wrong or harme to any bodie, and so open a gap to such as ſeeke to ſwallowe vs vp, by prouoking them againſt vs: but rather that our mildneſſe may make them to ſit ſtill though they were willing to bee doing with vs. And therewithall, our good God graunt vs alſo the grace to fight in ſuch wiſe againſt our ſpirituall enemies, as wee may get the vpper hand of them by his power. Let vs then bee giuen wholly that way, and therwithal let vs ſeeke to ſerue men to the vttermoſt of our power, ſeeking peace & friendſhip with all men, till our good God haue rid vs from all bartels of this world, to take vs into ỹ endleſſe reſt which he hath promiſed vs. That it may pleaſe him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs, but alſo, &c.

On Fryday the xxvj. of Aprill. 1555.

The twelfth Sermon, which is the ſecond vpon the ſecond Chapter.

8 Then paſſed we by our brethren the children of Eſau, that dwell in Seir, by the way of the wilderneſſe of Elath, and of Aſion-gaber: then turned we, and went in the way of the wilderneſſe of Moab.

9 Then ſaide the Lord vnto me, trouble not Moab, neither prouoke him to battell: for I will not giue thee any peece of his land to poſſeſſe, bicauſe I haue giuen Ar in poſſeſſion to the children of Lot.

10 The Emians dwelt there before, which were a great people and many in nomber, and tall as the Enakims.

11 And likewiſe they were counted Giantes as the Enakims, and the Moabites called them Emins.

12 Likewiſe in Seir dwelt the Horians aforetimes. But the children of Eſau draue them out, and deſtroyed them before them, and dwelt there in their ſtead, like as Iſrael hath done in the land of their poſſeſſion, which the Lord hath giuen them.

13 Then ſaid I, now then, get ye vp, and goe ye ouer the riuer Zared. And wee went ouer the riuer of Zared.

14 And the time wherein wee trauailed from Cades barne vntill wee paſſed the riuer of Zared, laſted eight and thirtie yeeres, euen vntill the whole generation of the men of warre was conſumed from among the hoſte, as the Lorde God had ſworne vnto them.

15 For the hand of the Lord was againſt them, to deſtroy them from among the hoſte, vntill he had conſumed them.

16 And it came to paſſe, that when all the men of warre were conſumed from among the people,

17 Then the Lord ſpake vnto Moſes, ſaying:

18 This day ſhalt thou paſſe the borders of Moab by Ar,

19 And come to the children of Ammon, whom thou ſhalt not beſiege, nor prouoke them: for I will not giue thee any poſſeſſion in the land of the children of Ammon, bicauſe I haue giuen it in poſſeſſion to the children of Loth.

20 This land alſo was counted a land of Giantes: for Giantes dwelt in it aforetimes: and the Ammonites called them Zomzomins:

21 A great people and many in nomber, and tall as the Enakims. But the Lord deſtroyed them before them. And ſo they poſſeſſed it and dwelt there in their ſtead:

22 Like as he had done for the children of Eſau that dwell in Seir, when he deſtroyed the Horims before them: by reaſon whereof they poſſeſſed their land, and dwelt there in their ſtead euen vnto this day.

23 Alſo the Caphthorims that came out of Caphthor, deſtroyed the Euims that dwelt in Hazerin euen vnto Gaza, and dwelled there in their ſtead.

Like

LIke as yesterday wee sawe that the children of Israel were commaunded to passe by the Countrie of Edom without doing any wrong to the inhabitantes, bicause there was kinred betwixt them, inasmuch as they descended of Esau Iacobs brother: so nowe they be willed to passe by the borders of Moab and Ammon, without dooing them any hurt or harme, bicause that they also were of kinne to them. For the Moabites & Ammonites came of Loth: and God would haue the children of Israel to acknowledge it still. And herein wee haue to note, that here againe God tried the obedientnesse of his people. For the children of Israel had languished nowe a great while alreadie: and although they had bene fed by Gods free goodnesse, inasmuch as Manna was giuen them dayly from heauen: yet notwithstanding if wee looke vpon their trauell, the time thereof might seeme verie long to them, & they might haue bene exceedingly wearie of it. Nowe againe God commaundeth them to passe on their way, paying for their meate and drinke, and not to take any bootie nor to seeke any profite or aduantage, but to goe by intreatance notwithstanding that they could haue vsed force. This might haue bred a newe hartburning among them. Howbeit forasmuch as they had beene wel tamed with afflictions: they yeelded themselues the more plyable as was declared yesterday. And therein wee see what the fruite of chastisement is. When God hath once pulled downe our pride, and taught vs to beare his yoke: wee can stoope to obey him, and wee will make no greata doe of it. But vntill that time, our necke is so stiffe as wee can no skill to yeelde to any right or reason. Ye see then that one point which we haue to marke, is that God tried here the obedience of his people, by forbidding them to make warre vppon the Ammonites or Moabites. And here Moses alledgeth the selfe same reaso again, which I expounded yesterday intreating of Mount Seir and of the Countrey of Edom. You shall not prouoke the Moabites, saith he. And why? For God will not giue you their land to possesse. As if he should say, it is not lawfull for you to attempt any thing, which God doeth not auow, and giue you leaue to doe. Nowe it is certaine that he will not suffer you to prosper, if you assaile the Moabites, and therefore forbeare them.

And so let vs marke well, that such as make warres wrongfully and frowardly, consider not that their ambition and couetousnesse shall bee cursed of God in the ende, and that all their preparation must come to ruine & confusion. True it is that such as take warres in hand vpon a brauerie, shall diuers times haue great victories and winne many Countries: howbeit that is not bicause God beareth them any fauour, but bicause he meaneth to punish men, sometime the one and sometime the other, so as euery one of them shall haue his turne. And in good sooth wee see that the warres which are made now adayes, are like the game of the Barriers, wherein he that winneth to day looseth to morrow. And this is not done by haphazard, but our Lord giueth Satan the bridle, who prouoketh and inforceth the wicked to kill one another, and to knocke one another vpon the heades. For God vseth them as Smithes, as he saith by his Prophet Zacharie. Zach. 1. 20. But yet herein wee haue a good lesson, which is, that when a Prince moueth warre, he must consider wel against whom he doeth it, and whether God do giue him entrance or no, or else the end of it must needes be cursed of God.

And hereunto Moses addeth the cause why the people of Israel might not take any thing frō the Moabites. For it is the Lorde (saieth he) that hath giuen them the land to possesse. Deut. 2. 5. Yesterday it was declared, that God did cast out his lynes ouer all the world, and that the partitions were made by him: insomuch that Principalities, Kingdomes, & Common weales haue not any thing of them selues, but for that he will haue the world to bee so gouerned. Therefore when any man goes about to chaunge the borders that God hath set: he doeth as much as he can to violate the order of nature, and the end thereof must needes bee cursed. Were this marked throughly, wee should not see so many garboyles as are in the worlde. For men thinke not that they ought to yeelde any account vnto God. And in very deede they thinke not that God medleth with the gouerning of men. When they haue gotten any victorie, they make bonfires for ioy, & they thanke God with solemne procession: but it is not for that they thinke so, or for that they be fully perswaded of it: it is but for vaineglorie that they do it. For if they meant to shewe that God was on their side: they should lay downe their pride in fathering all things vpon their owne power, or vpon their good fortune. Yet notwithstanding it would bee thought a very straunge thing nowe adayes, if a man shoulde say to them that take warres in hand, Be well aduised: for if your cause be not iust, lawfull, and allowed of God, so as you haue sure and infallible witnesse that you were inforced to make warre, and that God hath reached out his hand vnto you and shewed you the way: all your furniture must needes turne to your owne ouerthrowing. If a man should say so to them, they would thinke he did them great wrong: but yet were it for their behoofe to mark that lesson well.

Further let vs marke, that this must serue vs for a comfort. For if wee bee sure that God hath called vs into the place where wee bee, and that wee liue there in his seruice: we haue here a promise, that if any man come to assaile vs, howe great force so euer our enemies bee of, although they come as a tempest that were like to destroy and marre all: yet notwithstanding wee shall be maintained by the hand of God. Nowe then if our Lord take vs so into his protection, and telleth vs that wee dwell in any countrey at his appointment: ye see we may wel assure our selues, and defie all our enemies. Contrariwise, if God list to forsake vs: wee bee vndone, there shall neede no great force to ouerthrowe vs. Therefore let vs learne to submit our selues cōtinually to the tuition of our God, and to pray him to bee our defence. And when wee ſee great forces prepared againſt vs, let vs flee to his promiſe, and waite to bee ſuccoured of him at our neede. Thus ye ſee that the applying of this doctrine to our vſe, conſiſteth not in thinking that only princes are taught thereby what they ſhould doe: for the meane people alſo are to be comforted therby, foraſmuch as they may ſee thereby that God defendeth them as his flocke.

Alſo let vs call to minde what was rehearſed here, concerning kinred. In deede it was treated of at length yeſterday: howbeit foraſmuch as Moſes ſpeaketh of it againe, in making mention of the children of Moab and of their brethren the Ammonites: and ſeeing that God ſetteth before his peoples eyes the kinred which they had with theſe nations: Let vs marke ỳ wee muſt liue peaceably and brotherly one with another, bicauſe God hath knit vs together. In deede wee ſhal not all be kinſfolke in reſpect of the fleſh: but yet is there ſuch a [generall] vnion among mankinde, as wee ought not at any time to bee ſuch ſtraungers one to another, ỳ there ſhould not be ſome communicating together: & ſpecially foraſmuch as we be all created after one likenes, & we ſee as it were our own fleſh & bones in other folkes perſons, in reſpect whereof it behoueth vs to practiſe this ſaying of the Prophet Eſay, that we muſt not hate our own fleſh. But beſides this, there is an image of God which ſhineth in all men: and is it not reaſon that wee ſhould doe it ſo much honour, as to reuerence it whereſoeuer it ſheweth it ſelfe? Againe ſeeing God hath called vs to the knowing of him, and will haue vs to call vpon him as our father, and hath vouchſafed that wee ſhoulde bee marked with Baptiſme, and be grafted into the bodie of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, and that he openeth vs his kingdome, to take vs in thither as into our common inheritaunce: muſt it not needes be that wee be worſe than beaſtes, if yet for all this, wee will not bee kinde hearted one to another, to bee as brethren, and to abſtaine from all anoyance and extorſion? And herewithall let vs marke alſo, that the neerer God bringeth men together, and maketh any neighbourhood between them: the more readie ought they to be to doe ſeruice one to another: and that if they doe it not, it is as a defying of God and nature.

Eſa. 58.7.

But nowe let vs ſee what kinred there was betweene the children of Iſrael, and the Moabites and Ammonites. Truly the original of theſe two peoples was of inceſt, ſo as they could not boaſt of their Pedegree. And in deede the verye names of them were euerlaſting marks of their ſhame. For what is Moab to ſay? Of my father. What? that the daughter had conceiued childe by her owne father? Yea: and that (ye ſee) was a beaſtly and curſed deede. And againe, what is meant by Ammon? [It is as much to ſay, as] Of myne owne people, that is to ſaye, of mine owne bloud: for he alſo was borne of the other daughter, who had made her father drunken as her ſiſter had done, and ſo conceiued by him likewiſe: and all this was againſt nature. Ye ſee then that theſe nations are no better worthie than to bee counted Harlottes birdes borne in a brothelhouſe: but that they were yet in more horrible plight, becauſe their begetting was againſt all order and humane honeſtie. And yet notwithſtanding, God will haue the children of Iſrael to acknowledge their kinred w̃ them, not for any honor or worthineſſe ſake, but onely bicauſe of Lot. For although he were ſo beaſtly drũken, as to be bereft of diſcretiõ: yet did God cõtinue his goodnes towardes him, and therefore vouchſafed he to fauour his linage & the childrẽ that came of his race. And therein we ſee ỳ God had not an eye to the excellencie of thoſe nations to whom he ſhewed himſelfe ſo beneficiall, but ỳ he did all of his owne free mercie. Likewiſe alſo as touching the children of Iſrael, if God had looked for nobleneſſe to moue him to ſhew himſelfe ſo gratious towards them, and to deale ſo friendly with them: what would haue come of it? For ỳ chiefe ſtocke among them was ỳ tribe of Iuda. And whence came Phares and his brother Zare? Euen of inceſt too. For Iuda thinking to haue medled with a harlot as common as a Colmanhedge, had to do with his owne daughter in lawe, & played the beaſt as dogs and buls doe. Ye ſee then it was ſo great a villanie, ỳ euen the Heathen men would haue bene aſhamed of it. They that neuer knewe of God nor of Religion, could not haue done worſe. To bee ſhort, it was ynough to haue made al his offspring to haue bin quite rooted out. And yet nowithſtãding we ſee that Dauid came of the ſame race, and that it was Gods will to ſtabliſh the ſeate of a kingdome in his tribe, yea & that not of an earthly & tranſitorie kingdome onely, but of ſuch a one as ſhould bee a figure of the euerlaſting kingdome that bringeth vs to heauen, inſomuch that euen our Lord Ieſus Chriſt came of the ſame ſtocke. And ſo wee ſee (as I ſaid afore) that God ſought not any worthines in this behalfe, as who ſhould ſay that this people was of more dignitie and nobleneſſe than all the reſt of the worlde, and therefore he would make much of them. No nor but he powred out the infinite treaſures of his goodneſſe vppon them. Yea and the baſeneſſe of the children of Iſrael, cauſed Gods ineſtimable goodneſſe to bee perceiued the better, and gaue the greater gloſſe vnto it. Then let vs conſider, that whereas here is mention made of the Moabites and Ammonites: GOD alledgeth them not as in waye of exalting the thing that is in man, or to put in ballaunce, their deſertes, their qualities, or any renowne of theirs which they haue gotten by their owne trauell. He meaneth no ſuch thing. But foraſmuch as it pleaſed him to loue Lot, and to continue his mercie towardes him & his linage, notwithſtanding the foule and outragious fault that he had committed: Therefore is it his will that ỳ Moabites and Ammonites ſhall ſtill inioy the landes that he had giuen them.

Ge. 38.25.29

And let vs note further, that although God beſtowed his bleſſinges ſo largely vppon thoſe two Nations: yet they were neuer the better for it, but became ſo much ỳ more vnexcuſable

in the ende. For ſurely their vnthankefulneſſe ſhewed it ſelfe in that they knewe not that God ſpared them. Let vs marke well then, that Gods preſeruing of vs in this worlde, and his defending of vs with his hande, and his making of vs to ſcape our enemies handes, and his ſuſteining of vs through his fauour, is not all [that wee ought to deſire]. For the hauing of all this will boote vs nothing at all, if wee want the principall: which is, that God bee mercifull to vs, that wee call vppon him, that wee referre our ſelues wholly vnto him, and that we knowe him to bee our father, not to maintaine vs heere for a two or three dayes onely: (for this life is but a little ſhadowe that glideth away out of hand): but to bee our euerlaſting Sauiour, and that wee walke in ſuch wiſe vnder his awe, as wee not only look to be guided by him for a little while: but alſo that hee ſhould gather vs to him in the ende, ſo as when hee hath made vs to paſſe through this worlde, at the laſt wee ſhall haue a much better inheritance which is prepared for vs in heauen. When wee once knowe this, wee haue all. And that will make vs to inioy theſe earthly bleſſings to our welfare. Otherwiſe they ſhall bee turned into a curſe: Inſomuch that they to whome GOD hath done moſt good, ſhalbe founde moſt blameworthie before him. And why? Becauſe they haue abuſed them. For wee doe wickedly corrupt all Gods benefites, when wee bee not ledde and prouoked by them to honour him for them, and to put our ſelues wholly into his handes, to flee to him for refuge. Let vs then put this doctrine in vre: and while wee paſſe through this worlde, let vs not deuour the benefites that God ſendeth vs, to become brute beaſtes here, pooring with our muzzels vppon the grounde: but rather let vs lift vp our heades to heauenwarde, and conſider that God calleth vs to him, and that it is to no purpoſe to haue had ſome earthly proſperitie, except wee goe further, that is to witte vnto our GOD, to bee knitte vnto him for euer. Thus yee ſee what we haue to beare in minde.

Yea and let vs marke alſo that the two nations which are ſpoken of heere, ſhewed themſelues too too vnkinde, in yeelding farre other reward to the children of Iſrael than was to be looked for. Wee ſee that the children of Iſrael paſſed by them [quietly,] paying readie monie for all thinges, yea euen for the water that they dranke. The Moabites therefore and the Ammonytes not onely had no cauſe to complaine, ſeeing they were not greeued nor troubled by the children of Iſrael, nor receiued any harme or loſſe by them: but alſo ought to haue conſidered thus, Beholde, Gods will is to ſtabliſhe the brotherhood that is betwixt them and vs, and that ought wee to print well in our mindes. In ſo much that although they had had neither ſtories nor Chronicles: yet ought that to haue beene a thing of renowne among them, and the report of it ought to haue beene common from father to ſonne, to the ende they might haue applied and indeuoured themſelues to maintaine one another. Though there had beene none other alyance nor promiſe: yet ought that to haue ſuffiſed to maintaine peace and agreement betwixt them. But contrariwiſe they became Scorpions to ſting the children of Iſrael: and when they coulde not make warre againſt them themſelues, they linked in with their enemies, and procured them manie quarrels. And whenſoeuer any aduerſitie befell them; they playde the barking curres and made hew and crie after them, as wee ſee is ſpoken of them by the Prophetes and the Pſalmes: For it is ſaide, Lorde remember the children of Edom, which were the neereſt of kinne vnto them: for they came of Eſau and were circumciſed as well as the children of Iſrael, they bore the badge of Gods couenaunt, as houſeholde folkes of his Church: and yet for all that, in the day of Ieruſalem they cryed out, vppon them vppon them, roote them out ſo as one ſtone may not abide vpō another. Thus ſee ye ſo greate a crueltie, that euen the enemies woulde haue beene more courteous, than theſe which had cauſe to haue beene ſo, and ought to haue beene as brothers. As much is to bee ſaide of Moab. For when the poore Iewes were put to any afterdeele and fledde vnto Moab, in hope to haue ſome refuge there: they were betrayed by theſe to whome they had conueied themſelues. And therefore doth God complaine of ſuch crueltie ſaying: Moab, thou wart the couert of my people, but when they came to thee, thou draueſt them away; yea and deleſt more cruelly with them than their enemies. That was the recompence which thoſe nations yeelded whom God had ſo greatly borne with all, and to whom hee had ſhewed ſo great kindneſſe: but yet ought not that vnkindneſſe of theirs, to make the children of Iſrael to ſhewe themſelues vncurteous towardes them. For their ſparing of them after that ſort, increaſed their condemnation the more, I meane them that had ſo ill acknowledged the benefite. And therfore GOD failed not to puniſh ſuch trecherie.

Deut. 2. 5. 12. Abd. 11. Pſal. 137. 7. Eſa. 16. 4.

Nowe then wee bee taught, firſt not to paſſe whether men acknowledge ỹ good that we haue done them or no. For albeit that wee may ſeeme to loſe the thing that wee ſhall haue done: yet let it ſuffiſe vs that GOD alloweth our obedience, in that hee ſaieth, bee kindehearted towardes all men. And when wee ſhall haue indeuoured to doe good to all men, without hurting of any man: if men acknowledge it not, but doe the contrarie vnto vs: verie well, let vs not paſſe for it, but let vs beare their vnthankefulneſſe patiently. For why? Wee haue ſerued GOD, who will not forget what wee haue done. Therefore if the worlde bee ſet vppon ſuch frowardneſſe, as wee may bee occaſioned to feele ſome griefe and impatiencie: yet muſt wee ſtill keepe on our courſe, which God hath commaunded vs. Marke that for one point.

And it is a verie needful leſſon in theſe dayes. For if we ſhould fal to reckning of our cards, before we would ſhew any kindnes one to another, what what a thing were that? When ſhould a man begin to doe good? [neuer:] for we ſee how al the world is ſo corrupted, as is pitifull to thinke. It ſeemeth that wee caſt our good turnes into the throtes of woolues or madde dogges, and that it is nothing elſe but a prouoking of their malice more and more, which ſeeke to abuſe our ſimplicitie. But yet for all that, it behoueth vs to haue an eye to that which God commandeth.

Nowe whereas men on their ſide are ſo malicious and froward: let vs marke, that as God took vengeance of the Moabites, Edomites and Ammonites, for miſuſing the children of Iſrael after that ſort: ſo will he doe the like nowadayes. I tolde you euen now that the Prophets doe oftentimes make mention of the ſlender recompence, that theſe nations yeelded to the children of Iſrael: but did God let them alone from heauen? No. For although the children of Iſrael cõplained not: yet did God take their caſe in hand, and ſet himſelfe as counterpartie againſt thoſe nations. He taryed not till the crie of the afflicted did come vp vnto him, and vaniſh away in the aire: but he ſendeth them his Prophets, and telleth them that foraſmuch as he had taken the people of Iſrael into his protection, he wilbe reuenged of the outrage that is done vnto them. For although that they on their ſide did ſuffer it iuſtly, for ſhrinking from their ſubiection to God: yet notwithſtanding, the Edomites, Moabites & Ammonites ought to haue pitied their brethrẽ. And therfore did God ſet himſelfe againſt them and ſaide, You alſo muſt flee when your turne comes about, and no man ſhall receiue you: yee ſhalbee ſcattered throughout the worlde, and not finde any place to reſt in. Againe, when hee ſpeaketh of the Edomites: wee ſee hee curſeth them, and in the meane ſeaſon comforteth his owne people. There ſhalbe a horrible ſpoile (ſaith he) through the whole countrie of Iewrie: but yet will I bring home my people againe in time. But as for Edom, curſed ſhall hee bee that buildeth it againe, or that goeth about to builde it and ſet it vp againe. Hee ſhall lay the foundation of it in his firſt borne, that is to ſay, all the preparation that ſhall bee made to ſet vp this people againe, ſhall fall downe in the ende, and they that helpe him ſhall periſh: for there ſhalbe no helpe, but it ſhall fall out againſt him. Nowe then, ſith wee ſee this, let it ſuffiſe vs that wee haue indeuoured to doe our duetie. For our God will take the caſe in hande for vs, and bee on our ſide. If men bee malicious towardes vs, and render euill for good: GOD will make himſelfe the counterpartie againſt them, and although wee ſit ſtill and make no countenance to reuenge our ſelues: yet will GOD put to his hande. Thus yee ſee what wee haue to beare in rememberannce concerning theſe nations.

Abd. 17. Ioſ. 6, 26.

But there is yet this point to bee noted where it is ſaide, That there had beene Gyants in all the Countries of the nations afore mentioned, and that God had driuen them out. For Moſes intended to doe vs to wit, that the ſucceſſours of Ammon, Moab, and Eſau, had beene brought into thoſe countries by the hande of God. As if he ſhould ſay, there was no force in themſelues to conquer the countries that they poſſeſſed: for they were too farre ouer matched. And therefore as touching their bringing of their matters to paſſe: it muſt be concluded that it was god which wrought that chaunge. Mark that for one point.

And hee addeth, that it was to be conſidered that the children of Iſrael had gotten the poſſeſſion of their land after the like maner. He ſpeaketh here as of a matter alreadie come to paſſe. As if hee ſhoulde ſay, Goe to, looke about yee my friendes; ſee how God bringeth you into the lande that he promiſed to your fathers for an inheritance. When yee be come thither, and that hee hath ſetled you there: thinke yee that hee woulde maintaine you there, if he had not compaſſion vppon you, according as you ſhall haue good neede thereof? For yee ſhalbe hated of all the worlde: and therefore your God muſt bee faine to maintaine you. Nowe if you be deſirous to bee preſerued by him, attempt not any thing againſt his hande, and you ſhall perceiue that hee will ſet himſelfe againſt all ſuch as ſhall goe about to hurt you. Therefore muſt you bee gentle towardes them that are in the ſame caſe that you are. Nowe wee ſee what Moſes meaning is. Wherfore let vs learn to come home to our ſelues when wee conſider not Gods benefites towardes other men, as in deede oftentimes wee haue our eyes blindfolded. If a man tell vs that wee ought to conſider the good that God hath done to our neighbour: wee paſſe not for it. But when wee enter into our ſelues, then are wee conuicted, and wee learne what it is to forſake others. That is the common leſſon which is giuen vs heere. As howe? for it would bee darke ſtill, if it were not ſet out plainlyer by example. If it bee ſaide vnto vs generally, God hath giuen euerie man that which his pleaſure is that hee ſhall haue and poſſeſſe: thereuppon ſuch as pille and polle their neighbours, & vſe violence and extortion, notwithſtanding that they make their quarel againſt creatures, do in deed match themſelues againſt God, who wil haue order kept in the world. Whẽ any man tels vs heereof, wee are not perſwaded of it that it ſhoulde bee ſo. For wee haue euer ſome fonde toye or other to bleare our owne eyes with all. What, ſay wee? Is ſuch a man rich by the will of God? And howe knowe wee that? Nay rather, I ſee hee is inriched by euill meanes. We make no bones in conſtruing the thing the cleane contrarie way. And why? Becauſe wee conſider not Gods grace in our neighbours. But if a man ſay vnto vs: See what God hath done for thee: thou muſt doe him homage for it: if thou acknowledge it hee will make thee to inioye it, yea and thy inioying of it ſhall bee for euer.

Againe, looke that thou ſuccour thy neighbours according to the abilitie that hee hath giuen thee: and if thou goe that way to worke, all ſhall turne to thy benefite. Now then we ſee to what purpoſe Moſes hath alledged this admonition: and after what manner wee ought to practiſe practise it.

And besides this, let vs marke in general, that the chaunges which happen, come not but by Gods hand and prouidence. When wee see a mightie people, when wee see strong and well manned Cities, when wee see all other meanes that may serue to the maintenance of a Countrie, and yet the same is conquered by enemies: it must needes bee thought that God wrought therein. And therefore let vs learne to behold Gods iudgementes in al the alterations, that are seene in the worlde. And although all things bee on a broyle: yet let vs vnderstande that God holdeth the sterne aboue. True it is that men will make vprores, and runne into disorder, and when they keepe a greate stirre, to their seeming God is shut out of doores. But when they haue practised what they can, yet shall it not stoppe God from turning all things to such ende as hee hath purposed in his minde. And therefore as I saide afore, let vs not imagine that fortune beareth any sway in the worlde: but let vs assure our selues that God hath reserued the souereintie to himselfe, to bring euen all the turmoyles that men rayse vp, to such ende as hee hath ordeined, of purpose to punish the sinnes of such as offende him, to pull downe the pride of such as are too loftie, and to cut off his blessings when he seeth them misused. That is the thing which we haue to note.

And euen these manner of speeches, That God draue out the Gyantes before the face of the Edomites and before the face of the Moabytes, doe yet better confirme the things that are saide alreadie, according as wee haue seene heeretofore, that it is hee which putteth men in feare. For if it please him, although men haue no courage at all, but bee fearefull and henharted: yet will hee make them strong and stout, so as they shall bee as vnmoueable as rockes when other come to incounter against them. And on the other side although they bee Gyantes and carie the countenaunces of Lyons: yet can God weaken them in one moment, so as they shall runne away from their owne shadowes, though no bodie else pursue them. Forasmuch then as Moses vseth such manner of speeches: let vs assure our selues that men haue not their heartes in their owne handes, to strengthen them at their neede. And therefore let vs take warning thereby, to trust that GOD will discomfit our enemies without the power of man: and that if they rise vp against vs with neuer so violent rage: yet shall they bee beaten downe, and not bee able to doe any thing against vs. And why? For GOD which when hee listeth doeth put to flight not only men of smal courage, but also euen Gyants which are so howge that they astonish men euen with their looke: can well ynough skil how to put them backe with al their boldnesse.

Exo. 23. 27. Deut. 2. 4.

And therefore let vs learne to call vppon GOD, that hee may vouchsafe to giue vs courage at neede, and that wee may bee strengthened by him: for else what will become of vs? Wee shall bee as weake as water, though no man preace much vpon vs. And this must teach vs to walke the more warely, considering the weakenesse or rather brittlenesse that is in vs: to the intent wee bee not so foolish, as to ground our selues vppon our owne strength and courage, but pray vnto GOD to holde vs with his mightie hande, and to giue vs inuincible constancie. Nowe if wee bee so vnable to incounter with mortall men: howe much more vnable are wee to incounter our ghostly enemies? Are wee able to withstand Satan and all his assaults? Alas, wee come farre short. And therefore let vs followe the counsell that is giuen vs heere: let vs pray GOD to driue away Satan, and to cut a sunder all the cordes which holde vs heere fast tyed, and therewithall to giue vs such power to resist him, as wee may haue victorie euen vnto the ende. Thus yee see what wee haue to remember vppon this text of Moses.

Furthermore where as hee saith, that God led his people about by the space of eight and thirtie yeeres, vntill such time as all those that were able to beare armour at the time that the people murmured, were consumed: it serueth still to bring to remembrance the thing that hath beene spoken: namely that God executed the vengeance which he had threatened to his people. And (as wee see) it is a verie profitable lesson, to teach vs to tremble at Gods threatenings, as well as to bee mooued at his promises. Such is our nature, that when GOD promiseth vs any thing, wee fall to scanning and disputing of it, so as wee cannot rest vppon it, to say it shall bee so: wee cannot conclude that it is Gods will. True it is that we will confesse it with our mouth: but as for to bee fully resolued of it, wee will none of that, vnlesse his trueth bee well sealed and warranted in our heartes by his holie spirite. And yet euen then too, we be so inclyned to distrust, that we draw still backe from the thing that God promiseth vs: so brutish and dulheaded are we.

And this appeareth yet more when he threatneth vs, So much the more then ought wee to thinke vppon his iudgementes, and to consider that if hee bee prouoked, the threatenings that hee hath vttered with his mouth shall not fall to the grounde, but haue their effect and performance.

Thus ye see to what purpose Moses rehearseth again, that all they which were aboue twentie yeere olde at the time that the people murmured, were consumed, and that not by casualtie, but according to the Lordes owne saying. And this was to assure the people yet more, to the ende they might perceiue that Gods threatening of them was in good earneste.

And herewith all let vs also call to remembrance, that God cannot abide that men shoulde despise and refuse the benefite that hee offereth, and let occasion slippe: for if hee open the gate, and men will not enter, hee cannot beare with that negligence of theirs matched with disobedience. For what was the cause that God was so prouoked to anger, that hee sware that all

Num.14.31. all the carkeiſes of the people ſhoulde rotte in the wilderneſſe, and that hee vſed ſo ſharpe wordes vnto them? It was for that they had refuſed to enter into the lande that hee had promiſed them. Wee ſee then, that vnthankefulneſſe prouoketh Gods vengeance againſt vs to the vttermoſt, ſpecially when wee refuſe the benefite that hee offereth vs, and that ſuch refuſall proceedeth of wilfulneſſe and malice, which happeneth in manner continually. For what maketh vs ſo loath to receiue the good turnes that GOD woulde doe vs; but our owne vnbeleefe, forasmuch as wee thinke not that he will keepe touch with vs, but rather fall to reaſoning what will become of it? And therefore let vs marke well that men ſhall neuer bereaue themſelues of Gods benefits, but through their owne diſtruſt. Wherefore it ſtandeth vs ſo much the more on hande to indeuour to beleeue al the promiſes of our God, and to receiue his ſayings purely and ſimply, and to yeeld vnto them without any gainelaying. Lo wherupon it behoueth vs to reſt.

Nowe as concerning the time, true it is that God coulde haue deſtroyed them all at the firſt day which prouoked him ſo to anger: he coulde haue ſent an Angell to haue made cleane riddaunce of them, and yet haue preſerued the young folke by myracle, ſo as they ſhoulde haue come into the lande the firſt day: but hee ledde them vp and downe by the ſpace of fortie yeares. And why did hee ſo? To the ende that others ſhoulde take example by them. For God ſeeth, that wee profite better by his corrections and iudgements in proceſſe of time, than if hee ſhoulde puniſh vs out of hande and away. Indeede, in our owne imagination wee had leuer that God ſhoulde thunder downe at the firſt daſh, and wee thinke wee ſhoulde perceiue his power much better, if hee wiped them quite out of the world which haue offended him, and that wee might ſee the wicked conſumed at once. And what woulde become of it, if hee ſhoulde out of hande deſtroy and take away all thoſe out of the worlde, which are not worthie to liue in it? If it were ſo, wee woulde within a day or twaine forget the thinges that he had ſhewed vs before our eyes. Wee may well weene the contrarie, but God knoweth that it is ſo. For hee leaueth the wicked heere in this worlde, where they haue their delightes, ſportes, and triumphes at their pleaſure: and that is to trie our patience. Neuertheleſſe ſometimes God ſetteth them languiſh as well as other folkes, ſo as a man may ſee them dragge their legges after them, and they bee as it were vppon the racke, and God ſetteth them before vs as lookingglaſſes, ſo as we may well perceiue, that it is more for our profite to ſee his iuſtice ſo prolonged, by making the wicked to languiſh after that manner: than if hee ſhoulde ſende them their puniſhmentes out of hande. This (ſaye I) ſtickes faſter in our remembrance. Yee ſee then howe wee be better taught by the delay of Gods iuſtice, than if it were executed at once and out of hande. And that was the cauſe why it behoued God to bee fortie yeeres ſpace in conſuming the people, to ſhewe them that they were not worthie to enter into the promiſed lande. For thereby the younger ſort were occaſioned to thinke, why did not God giue vs the fruition of the lande at the firſt day? It is becauſe our fathers murmured againſt him. And ſo are wee depriued of the inheriting thereof from our childhoode, and that not for a day or two, but it was Gods will that we ſhoulde wander in this wilderneſſe a long time, to the end that the ſinne of our fathers might be the better printed in our minds, to beware that wee followed them not in that behalfe. Yee ſee then that by this meanes the yonger folke were taught to liue in the feare of God, and to be better aduiſed than their fathers were. And therefore whenſoeuer God executeth not his iuſtice vppon the wicked, to make cleane riddance out of hande, but conſumeth them by little and little: let vs learne to hold our wittes alwayes tied vp and as it were in ſuſpenſe. And in the meane time let vs take the inſtruction that God giueth vs thereby, & learne to beare them wel in mind, and neuer to forget them: for his intent is to put vs in minde of them vntil we haue throughly digeſted them. After this manner muſt wee practiſe this doctrine, concerning the time that is ſet downe heere by Moſes, wherein God led his people vp and downe by the ſpace of eight and thirtie yeares, wherevnto two yeares moe were added afterwarde, to make vp the full number of fortie.

Nowe let vs kneele downe in the preſence of our good God with acknowledgement of our ſinnes, praying him to vouchſafe to bring vs more and more to ſuch repentance, that wee mourning for them before him, may acknowledge that there is nothing but curſedneſſe and deſtruction in vs, wherein wee ſhould dwell ſtil, if he pitied vs not, and that in the meane while we may not be ſo frowarde and malicious, as to turne heade againſt him, though hee handle vs roughlier than wee would bee, but that acknowledging it to bee rightfull that hee ſhould touch vs with his hande, wee may bee ſo reformed, as our whole ſeeking may bee to mortifie all our affections and luſtes, and to pleaſe him and to obey his righteouſneſſe: and that therewithall he ſtrengthen vs in ſuch wiſe, as wee may fight ſtoutly vnder his antſigne, & by that meanes be mainteined vnder his protection, vntill we haue finiſhed our race in this worlde, and bee taken vp into his euerlaſting reſt, after wee haue outſtoode the battelles that wee haue to indure here. That it may pleaſe him to grant this grace not onely &c.

On

On Wedneſday the j. of May. 1555.

The xiij. Sermon, which is the third vpon the ſecond Chapter.

24 Afterward the Lorde ſaid, Vp, get ye hence, and go ouer the riuer of Arnon. Behold, I haue deliuered Sehon King of Heſebon the Amorrhyte and his land into thy hand. Begin to take poſſeſſion, and prouoke him to battell.

25 This day will I begin to ſend the feare and dreade of thee vppon all people that are vnder the whole heauen: ſo that when they heare the fame of thee, they ſhall tremble and bee in anguiſh for thy preſence.

26 Then ſent I meſſengers from the wilderneſſe of the eaſt, to Sehon King of Heſebon, with wordes of peace, ſaying:

27 Let mee paſſe through thy land, keeping on the high way, without turning to the right hand or to the left.

28 Thou ſhalt ſell me meate for monie, to eate, and thou ſhalt alſo giue mee water for monie, to drinke: let me but onely paſſe through on foote, 29 (As the children of Eſau haue done which dwel in Seir, and the Moabytes which dwell in Ar) vntill I be come ouer Iordan, and bee entered into the lande which the Lord our God giueth vs.

HEere Moſes confirmeth yet better the thing that I treated of before: that is to wit, that men muſt not giue themſelues to foliſh enterpriſes, as euerie mans fancie leades him: but wee muſt haue an eye what is lawfull. And thereof there is none other triall, than to hearken what God cõmaundeth and promiſeth vs. For his will muſt be our ſure rule. Whoſoeuer thruſteth himſelfe forth to doe what he liketh beſt, although he be able to iuſtifie his doings before men, and can ſet neuer ſo many faire colours vppon them: yet ſhall he alwayes be condemned before God. Therefore let vs beare in minde, that to liue as it becommeth vs, we muſt haue this ſoberneſſe and modeſty with vs, that we aduenture not any further than his worde will beare vs out. True it is that the talke heere is onely of warres: but wee muſt applie the doctrine thereof to our generall vſe. For like as God choſe his people of Iſraell to make them as a lookingglaſſe for his Church: ſo muſt wee applie all the thinges to our ſelues which are written of them. For the perfection of the things that are conteined here, belongeth to vs as ſheweth ſaint Paul. Nowe were this wel obſerued wee ſhoulde not haue ſuch diſorder in our life, as wee ſee. For euerie man hath his liking by himſelfe, and according to his liking, ſo flingeth he forth to attempt thinges, and we neuer ſtande to inquire what God commaundeth, but our owne affections carrie vs away, and inflame vs in ſuch wiſe, that euerie one runnes after the thing that he lighteth vppon: and ſo wee doe but gadde vp and downe all our life long.

1. Cor. 10. 11. & Heb. 6. 1.

But heere it is tolde vs, that men muſt not reach out their handes to aduenture vppon any thing at all, further foorth than GOD hath giuen them leaue. When hee ſaith, goe: our going is not at all aduenture, but it is matched with a promiſe, Behold (ſaith hee) the Lord hath deliuered Sehon king of Heſebon into thy handes. As if hee ſhoulde ſay, men muſt not haue an eye to any thing that may drawe their deſire to it afore hande, as wee ſee that our nature doeth driue vs thereunto: for ſcarſly can wee tell howe to open our eyes, but ſome lewde liking will tickle vs. And what is the cauſe thereof? It is for that wee bee not fully perſwaded of this principle, that wee muſt let all thinges alone which are not graunted vs of God. If wee followed this doctrine, ſuch as are poore would be contented with their ſlenderneſſe, and craue no more of God but to bee ſuſteyned: and the rich ſort would not be ſo blinded with vnſatiable couetouſneſſe, as to increaſe themſelues ſtill by adding peece to peece. And therefore it ſtandeth vs ſo much the more on hande to beare this doctrine in minde, ſith we ſee howe ſore our life is diſordered, and we cannot rule our luſtes according to Gods will, which onely can and ought to maſter them.

Againe on the other ſide, wee ſee howe wee picke out enemies: whereas it belongeth to GOD to appoint vs them. In good faith what is the cauſe that men heaue one at another, that they ſeeke to eate vp one another, and that there is ſo much ſtriſe, trubble, and quareling? It is for that as ſoone as any man is greeued, by and by hee will needes bee reuenged: and wee cannot abide that any man ſhoulde touch vs in our goods or our perſons, but incontinently wee will be at open warre with him. As for patience, there is none at all in vs. But our Lorde will haue vs to ouercome euill with good, that in ſo doing wee may be as his ſheepe. But no man will bee brought to ſo much reaſon. Men then arme themſelues where God commaundeth them to bee quiet and peaceable: and they will needes haue them enemies, whom God would haue them to labour to winne by loue and gentleneſſe.

Contrariwiſe, if there bee a iuſt quarell that ought to bee mainteyned, euery man ſhrinkes away. The name of God is blaſphemed, and wicked deedes are committed: there ought ſuch as haue courage and manhood, to ſhewe that they feare not the hatred or anger of men. For GOD will haue vs to vndertake warre in his name: and euery man doeth ſhunne it. And therein wee ſee howe frowarde and vntowarde wee bee. Againe, it is ſaide that our warring Ephe.6.12. muſt bee, not againſt mortall men, but rather againſt Sathan and all his wyles. Loe howe GOD ſoundeth the trumpet and ſtriketh vp the drumme, and telleth vs that wee muſt enter into battell againſt our ghoſtly enemies. But that will not ſinke in our ſtomackes: wee be wedded to our owne luſtes: if any man anger vs, if any man doe vs wrong, wee muſt bee reuenged: and wee conſider not that in ſo doing Satan winneth greatly at our handes.

Nowe then (as I ſaide afore) wee ſee that this doctrine was written for our vſe and inſtruction, ſo as wee muſt alwayes beare in minde the likeneſſe that is betweene vs and the people of olde time.

Wherefore, firſt of all let no man couet to poſſeſſe any thing which hee hath not receiued at Gods hande, according to our dayly aſking of him our ordinarie breade. Then let vs not goe about to inrich our ſelues by vnlawfull meanes, crafte, and violence, neither let vs practiſe one thing or other by ſuttletie: but let euerie man followe his trade ſimplie, and meddle with nothing but that which GOD giueth vs leaue to doe, and let vs learne to rule our liues according to his worde, wayting for ſuch beſſing as it ſhall pleaſe him to giue vs. And let ſuch as haue goods, be always readie to forgo them, whenſoeuer it ſhall pleaſe him: and let ſuch as haue not the worlde at will, beare their pouertie patiently. That is the thing which wee haue to marke in the firſt place.

Secondly, when the caſe ſtandeth vppon aduenturing, let our hardineſſe bee: that wee dare bee bolde to doe whatſoeuer GOD commaundeth vs, ſpecially when wee haue his promiſe, as is ſaide afore. That is the thing (as I haue declared alreadie heretofore) which putteth difference betweene the true wiſedome of the faithfull, and the raſhneſſe of ſuch as playe the looſe coltes and runne galloping aſtray. For the faithfull doe waite for warrant from GOD, and that the ende of the thing which they take in hande ſhall bee good: and when they once haue his promiſe, then goe they forwarde without attempting any thing to the contrarie. But the vnfaithfull take a toy in their heade, and when they haue laide their platte, they conclude to doe whatſoeuer ſeemes beſt to themſelues, without inquiring of Gods will, and thereupon they ſticke at nothing. In ſo doing there is nothing but preſumptuouſneſſe to ouerthrowe themſelues. But the true foundation is to haue God promiſe, and to reſt vpon the ſame, doing the things that hee commaundeth vs. And if wee haue that regarde with vs: then ſhall wee take the contrarie way to that which I haue ſpoken of. For where as nowe wee be ſearefull in the good quarrels that God alloweth, and wherein wee ought to hazarde our ſelues: wee ſhall haue an inuincible conſtancie, and euerie of vs ſhall haue an eye to his duetie, to ſay, beholde, my God commaundeth mee to doe it: in deede I ſhall haue many aſſaultes and manie incomberances, and I may perchaunce bee greatly hindered by men: but it is ynough to mee that God is my warrant: ſeeing he hath appointed mee to doe it, it is not for mee to ſticke at it.

Beſides this, we haue alſo a promiſe: God neuer ſaith to vs, Doe this, but he telleth vs alſo that hee will be with vs. Nowe then ſeeing we know that hee is able to maintaine vs euen in ſpite of all the wicked and of all them that are in a chafe againſt vs: what neede wee be afraide to do wel? And if wee bee afraide, doe wee not wrong vnto God as though hee were not of power to defende vs? So then wee ſee nowe howe bolde and hardie wee ought to bee in maintaining of good quarels, for aſmuch as wee bee ſure that GOD will not faile vs, ſpecially when wee bee to incounters againſt Satan, and againſt all the things that hee practiſeth, as well againſt our ſelues, as againſt the whole Church. Therefore if wee play the daſtardes and ſhrinke away when wee ſhoulde enter into ſuch incounters, as wee ſee moſt men doe, who ſeeke ſtartingholes, and cannot finde in their heartes to beare any burthen for the honour of God: is it not too ſhamefull trecherie? yes: for wee cannot ſtep out of the way, but our vnbeleefe bewrayes it ſelfe. What cauſeth vs to bee ſo colde in performing our dueties? It is for that wee beleeue not God. For were wee throughly perſwaded that hee will keepe touch with vs, and that wee ſhall not bee diſappointed in wayting for the thing that hee hath promiſed: it woulde make vs to forget all feare, and all the goodlie ſhiftes that wee deuiſe to turne the catte in the panne. And therefore let vs learne to glorifie our GOD in yeelding to him the title of ſoothfaſtneſſe: and then ſhall wee bee hardie ynough, not to followe our owne fancies, but to obey his commaundementes. Wee ſhall haue a holy preſumptuouſneſſe, if wee holde vs to this line and rule of truſting in God, and of hoping that hee will performe whatſoeuer he hath ſaide or vttered with his mouth. Thus yee ſee howe this leſſon is to be put in practiſe.

Furthermore let vs marke heerewithall, how God addeth heere, that hee will ſtrike ſuch a feare and terrour into theſe peoples hearts, as they ſhall be diſmayed when they doe but heare of the fame of the Iewes. Heere wee ſee that God holdeth mens heartes in his hande, to weaken them or ſtrengthen them at his pleaſure.

True it is that men imagine themſelues to haue this vertue of manlineſſe in themſelues. And the verie cauſe why they deſpiſe God, is that euerie of them makes his account to comcompasse his matters by his owne power. But so farre off are the common people from hauing any stoutnesse or manhood in them, without that God giue it them: that God holdeth euen the heartes of kinges and princes in his hande, and although they seeme to themselues to haue much more strength and courage than others: yet doeth God make them to slip away like water, when hee thinkes good. So then let vs marke well, that it is not in any mans power to bee valiant, vnlesse GOD strengthen him. And therefore wee may applie this doctrine to double vse. The one is that although a man see himselfe to be weak, he must not be out of heart for it: for there is a remedie readie for it, if we list to seeke it. I say we must gather strength of mind by seeking it in God, yea euen whensoeuer we be hindered to do our duetie for want of courage. As for example: God perchaunce calleth vs to glorifie his name, hee sholeth vs out from this worlde, accordingly as it is his will that euery man shoulde renounce himselfe, and that wee shoulde forsake our owne lustes. Nowe wee see howe possible it is to obey, yea and wee knowe howe farre all our abilite stretcheth. Againe, we see also a great number of hazards, and the diuell will face vs with this inconuenience and that daunger, where at we shalbe as good as dismayed, so as we shall not dare to stirre one finger to obey God and to execute his commaundement. And what is the reason? It is for that we be too faintharted. Now it is not for vs to sticke still in this myre: but wee must seeke for strength where we can finde it. Let vs consider (say I) that God is able ynough to amende the faintnesse of heart that holdeth vs backe, yea & which maketh vs to shrinke back from his word, and to turne heade from it. Yee see then how wee ought to take warning to flee vnto GOD and to seeke succour there, forsomuch as hee hath mens heartes in his hande, and doth both fashion and bowe them as hee thinketh good. Likewise again, whē we feele a good disposition in our selues, so as wee would faine giue the onset (as they say), and wee haue no feare at all to holde vs backe: yet must wee not stande vppon that, for wee heare howe saint Paul warneth vs to worke out our saluation with feare and trembling, that is to say, to followe and drawe that way which God sheweth vs. And after what maner? Fearefully, and as it were with trembling. Why so? For it is God (saith he) which giueth vs both the will and the performaunce, and all through his owne freebestowed goodnesse.

Seeing it is so then, albeit that wee haue the spirite of courage and stoutenesse: yet let vs not cease to resort vnto GOD, and to humble our selues continually, and to pray him that hee forsake vs not, but rather continue the grace that hee hath put into vs, and confirme the same vntill wee haue finished our course. And thus yee see that wee bee warned to seeke continually for newe strength, notwithstanding that we feele that our Lorde hath strengthened vs alreadie.

Nowe the seconde vse is, that when wee see our enemies fearefull and dismayed, wee must consider howe it is GOD that hath discouraged them, and not impute any whit to our owne prowesse, or to aught else that in vs: but yeelde the whole prayse thereof to him that ought to haue it. And on the contrarie parte, when wee perceiue our enemies to bee like fiendes, so as there is none other likelyhood but that wee shalbe swallowed vp: when we see a desperate boldenesse in them so as they goe forwarde still whatsoeuer come of it: [finally] when wee see them, all on flaming fire after that sort: yet let vs not bee dismayed thereat. For why? God will make them to soke away like water when it commeth to the pinch.

Psal. 58. 8. & 90. 5.

Nowe then, as for this diueliish geerishnesse which the wicked haue to ouerthrowe Gods children withall, and to cumber and trouble them euerie where: let it not put vs out of hearte, though they pursue vs neuer so deadely. For why? GOD will prouide for vs in such wise, as hee will make those afraide of our shadowes, which seeme as nowe to haue their throates open to swallow vs vp, and to bee as gulfes of hell. God will worke after such a fashion in that behalfe, as they shall not bee worthie to be compared with little babes.

Let vs marke then, that seeing it is tolde vs that God holdeth mens hearts in his hande: wee must alwayes rather looke to him, than rest vppon any thing heere belowe, whensoeuer wee see any stoppes that may put vs in feare. And in so doing wee shall neuer bee confounded.

Moses addeth moreouer, That hee sent to Sehon with wordes of peace, saying: Let vs passe through thy countrie, wee will pay for our breade and water, wee will doe thee no harme, wee will passe as thy friendes, as wee haue done to our brethren the Edomytes. It shoulde seeme heere at the first sight, that Moses did against that which was commaunded him. For these are two diuers things, [namely ỹ God saith] goe giue battell to Sehon king of the Amorrhytes: and that Moses in steede of giuing him battell, and in steede of incountering him in the fielde, sendeth an Ambassade vnto him, and prayeth him to giue him leaue but onely to passe through his Countrie, promising to doe no harme, and to paye for all thinges that hee tooke. It might seeme then that heere is some contrarietie: and if it were so, then was Moses disobedient vnto God.

Let vs marke, that where as God commaunded him to offer battell to Sehon king of the Amorrhytes: his meaning was, that the warre shoulde in all respectes bee lawfull, and that Sehon shoulde well perceiue, that hee was iustly assayled by the people of Israel. This therefore is no impediment, but rather a meane whereby God ordeyned his people to haue lawfull warre with Sehon and all his subiectes. Where as God had saide, I will giue yon the lande in possession: it was requisite that the malice of Sehon shoulde bee discouered and bewrayed, that it might appeare to the worlde, that the People of Israel had iust tytle to discomfite him. For where as GOD promised the lande of Chanaan to his people: this was no parte of that Countrie: hee gaue them this as an income or ouerplus, and extended his liberalitie further than the promise made to Abraham did conteine. And therefore Sehon was not as yet declared to bee an enemie to the people of Israell. And if they shoulde hatte defied him as an enemie at the first dash, without giuing him knowledge of the warre: it had beene a disorderly kinde of dealing. These thinges then, agree verie well: that is to wit, that Sehon was condemned aforehande by God: and that the children of Israel hauing chased out all the inhabitaunts of his countrie, shoulde possesse the same themselues: and also that these thinges shoulde not bee done, vntill the wilful stubborneneſſe of Sehon were disclosed that hee might dispossesse himselfe, and bee the cause of the warre, so as the fault might iustly bee imputed to himselfe. Wherefore let vs marke well, that Moses hath not swarued heerein from Gods commandement, to play the wise man after the manner of the worlde, which is to haue some politike deuise by themselues, so as they muste needes inuent some toy or other of their owne heade, as though they were better aduised than GOD. And surelie that is the common fashion of all. But such forecast is curſed, when we thinke to amende the things that God commaundeth vs, by our owne policies and inuentions. Moses went not that way to worke, he followed simplie Gods will.

But by the way it may seeme verie straunge, that GOD doeth sende a message of peace vnto Sehon, and yet notwithstanding had determined afore hande that it shoulde not auayle him. In this case all worldly pride must stoope, and consider Gods manner of dealing towardes vs with such humilitie, that where our wittes cannot reach vnto it, wee may honour his incomprehensible secretes. And certes it is a text worthie of rememberance when it is saide, that GOD (or Moses by Gods authoritie) sendeth vnto Sehon to desire him to suffer the people to passe, gently intreating him and shewing him the thing that was for his welfare: and yet notwithstanding that GOD had fully determined aforehande, that Sehon shoulde make none account of it, but that hee shoulde bee discomfited and destroyed. This may seeme straunge geere to our imagination. When men will needes scanne of Gods workes and prouidence according to their owne reason: they shall finde thinges to grudge at, euerie turning of a hande. And that is the cause why venemous tongues rush out nowe adayes, and are not ashamed to blaspheme God. When there is any talke of Gods secrete ordinaunce, and of his disposing of thinges in this worlde, after a manner vnknowen to vs, so as we shall not comprehende it vntill wee bee ridde of this flesh of ours: they storme at it, and repyne against GOD. And why? Because the same surmounteth their capacitie. But if Gods iustice be too high for vs: ought it to bee abased therefore? If his ordinance bee aboue our vnderstanding: shoulde it therefore bee hidden from himselfe, and shoulde it haue no authoritie ouer vs? Yes: And this text is ynough to stoppe the mouthes of all such rascols. For one of the common obiections that such beastes doe make, is this: Howe so? If men had not free-will to take or refuse the thing that GOD sayeth to them, and that the thing it selfe were not vndetermined: it were in vaine to preach, or to make exhortations, or to profer the choyce of good and euill: for the matter were dispatched aforehande.

Thus doeth it seeme in deede to these seelie fooles, which attribute more to their owne braine, than to Gods doctrine, and which by reason of their slender exercise in the holy scripture, are the more presumptuous to iudge at all aduenture of the thinges that they knowe not. But let vs looke vppon that which Moses rehearseth here. The message that hee sent to Sehon king of the Amorrhytes, came of GOD, and must not bee taken as the message of a mortall man, as I haue declared before. But yet is Sehon disposed to receiue the message? Or is there any casuall vncertamtie in this behalfe, so as a man might thinke it might as well not happen as happen? [Nay.] Moses was well assured that Sehon woulde not obey it: and I enter not yet so farre as to discusse whereof that proceeded. It shall bee declared in the nexte Lecture, that God had hardened Sehons hart, and that it was his will that it should be so. Lykewise also it is sayd in the psalme, that God turned away the hartes of such as otherwise had bin the peoples friends, and that hee hardened them in such sort, as they could not abide to spare them. But I will not enter yet so farre. I treate as now but vppon this poynt, that GOD sendeth messages to men in his owne name and authoritie: which notwithstanding shall not preuaile to reclaime them. And why? Because that those to whom hee speaketh, are set vppon euill aforehande: and there is none other thing to bee looked for, but that they shall bee the more inflamed and waxe woorse, at the hearing of Gods commaundement. And therefore (as I haue saide alreadie) although it bee not seemely to our humaine reason: yet must wee humble our selues and honour Gods secretes. When wee finde thinges contrarie to our naturall reason, is it meete that wee shoulde giue libertie to our owne witte, to say, Oho, I take it to bee otherwise, and therefore it must needes be so? Noe: Let GOD rather haue the maisterie, and let vs become fooles that wee may bee wise in him. For at that ende muste wee beginne if wee will profite well in GODS schoole.

Wee muste followe that which Saint Paul telleth vs, whiche is, that wee must bee fooles in our selues, that is to say, wee must not couet the curſed wisedome where with men are puffed vp, when they thinke themselues to bee ſharpe witted and wiſe ynough to iudge of [diuine] matters. Let vs beware of ſuch imaginations, and ridding our ſelues quite and cleane of all ſelfeweening, let vs profite our ſelues by Gods ſhewing of the thinges vnto vs which he liketh, and which are good in his ſight. Let vs then learne to frame our ſelues wholly to his good will, for if wee be counted to be fooles and witleſſe before men: it ſhalbe but of ſuch as iudge after their owne mother wit.

Furthermore let vs marke, that when wee haue ſearched things throughly, wee ſhall finde that Gods ſending of his worde dayly vnto ſuch as receiue it not, and are alreadie condemned afore him: is not without cauſe. Then is it vncertaine to vs, that when Gods worde is preached, it is to the ende to blinde the reprobates and ſuch as are vncorrigible: and yet for all that, that it is Gods will to make them vnexcuſable. For commonly God reſerueth that knowledge to himſelfe, and when we bee ſent of him and doe preache in his name: wee cannot tell whether our labour ſhall doe good or no. Hee then which is appointed to preache Gods word, knoweth not (when he hath done as hee was commanded) whether his preaching ſhall turne to the ſaluation or damnation of his hearers. But yet for all that let vs labour ſtill, and pray GOD to vouchſafe to giue effect to his word, that it may ſo profite, as the wretched worlde may bee plucked backe from the deſtruction whereunto it goeth. That is the marke which wee muſt ſhoote at, and the thing which wee haue to doe. Neuertheleſſe ſometime GOD will ſhewe vs before our faces, that his worde ſerueth to condemne the hearers, and to bereaue them of all excuſe. Wee ſee it was once ſaide vnto Eſay, Goe to this people.* And what to doe? It was in deede to carie them the word of ſaluation. But yet therewithal it is ſaide vnto him, Goe to harden this peoples heartes, goe to ſtoppe their eares, goe to ſhut their eyes, and to thicken their heartes, to make them vtterly paſt recouerie: for I will not haue them conuert. Seeing then that the Prophet is ſent with ſuch commiſſion, as he knoweth well that thoſe to whom he ſpeaketh, ſhall but waxe the worſe for it: in what caſe is he? But what for that? Yet muſt he execute his commiſſion with all obedience. It is not for men to enter into counſell, and to take aduice in this behalfe according to their abilitie: no, but they muſt ſubmit themſelues to GOD as I ſaide afore. Looke what was ſaide to the Prophet, doeth ſhewe it ſelfe dayly in effect. It might put vs oftentimes out of patience, to ſee that the more that Gods worde is preached, the more doeth the worlde ruſh foorth into all licentiouſneſſe. For they that conſpire among vs againſt GOD and his Goſpell: are in compariſon farre worſe than the Papiſtes. The Papiſtes haue ſome deuotion with them: and although they bee growen brutiſh, yet neuertheleſſe their chiefe intent is to ſerue GOD. But as for the other ſort, they bee ſtarke Diuels: and although they knowe and ſee it ſufficiently prooued, that they warre againſt God and not againſt mortall creatures: yet doeth their furie carrie them away to proceede ſtill. Wee ſee it. Wee ſee that whereas in the time of blindneſſe there was ſome ciuill order, and men were more bridled: nowe it ſeemeth that all thinges are ſet at libertie. This were able to make Gods ſeruauntes quite out of patience. But what for that? We muſt take courage as Saint Paule comforteth vs. Hee ſaieth that whether Gods worde bring life or death to men, yet is it alwayes a good and ſweete ſauour before GOD. True it is that Gods worde of it ſelfe (as ſhall bee declared more fully hereafter) is alwayes the ſauour of life. For what is it that God ameth at, if wee conſider his worde in it owne nature? The calling of men backe to the ende they might be ſaued. And yet for all that, wee ſee by experience that it is an odour and ſauour of Death, inſomuch as the wicked are ſtrangled and choked with it, as ſoone as they doe but take the ſent or ſmell of it. They neede not to taſte of it nor to eate of it: if they doe but take the ſent of it a great way of, it is poyſon to them, ſo that the diuell carries them away, and they fall to fretting and chafing againſt GOD: and all to their owne deſtruction. And do we ſee that Gods word turneth into occaſion of death, to a great nomber of men? Yet muſt wee bee of good cheere, ſaieth S. Paul. And why? Bicauſe it is a good and ſweete ſauour vnto God, when men are made vnexcuſable.

2. Cor. 2. 15. 16.

Eſa. 6. 9.

But nowe let vs come to declare how Gods worde tendeth vnto life, and howe it hath that propertie: notwithſtanding that men through their owne wickedneſſe, doe turne it to their deadly condemnation. This is ſufficiently expreſſed in that it is ſaide, That Moſes ſent a meſſage of peace to Sehon King of the Amorrhytes. His deſire then is to abſtaine from all anoyance, if Sehon coulde abide it. Nowe let vs ſee to what ende the Goſpell is preached, and after what manner. What elſe is contained in it, but that God intendeth to bee reconciled to the world, as ſaieth Saint Paule in the fifth of the ſeconde to the Corinthians? In as much then as GOD ſendeth vs tidinges of peace, ſo as his deſire is to ſhewe himſelfe a father to all ſuch as yeelde themſelues teachable vnto him, and our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt is offered vs as the meane to bring vs againe into the loue and fauour of our God: it is ſurely a meſſage of peace. And in deede the Goſpell is ſo intituled, and not without cauſe. True it is that the lawe alſo was a meſſage of peace, as in reſpect of the promiſes: If wee looke vppon the lawe ſtrictly, as Saint Paul ſpeakes diuers times of it: it will be a very meſſage of wrath. But if wee looke vpon the promiſes that were made to the fathers of olde time: [wee ſhall finde that] euen from the beginning of the world, Gods will was that ſinners ſhould knowe his mercie, and come vnto him. And for that cauſe is it ſaide that Ieſus Chriſt bringeth peace, both to them that are a farre off, and to them that are neere hande, as ſayeth Saint Paule to the Epheſians: and he will haue it to bee preached through the whole worlde, that Gods onely desire is to holde vs in his loue. Thus ye see howe wee may finde saluation in the Gospell. Nowe then wee see, that Gods worde considered in it selfe, is a commission of peace, furthering vs to be ioyned and made one with him, so as wee may call vpon him and rest in his goodnesse. And the meane to haue this worde to redounde to our saluation, is this, if wee can receiue it as wee ought to doe, accor-

Rom.1.16. ding as Saint Paul treateth thereof in the first to the Romanes. And therefore the Ministers therof must haue this consideration with them: Beholde, GOD sendeth mee: and what putteth he in my mouth? Peace, to offer it vnto all men, and to the ende that euen the wickedst should bee partakers of the same message and vnderstand that GOD seeketh them. But yet for all that, wee knowe that this message cannot profite all men. What must it doe then? It must make men vnexcusable. For what can bee saide to it, if God handle men out of hand as they deserue? Wee bee all damned by nature, we bring such an inheritaunce of cursednesse from our mothers wombe, as God might sinke vs at the first day, and wee coulde lay nothing at all for our selues. And forasmuch as there are a great nomber of people, which seeme to perishe but through simplicitie: therefore it is Gods will to conuict the whole worlde, to the end to take away all scapes. Wee see that when the Gospell is preached, those whome a man woulde haue thought to haue bene well disposed, doe burst foorth, and their malice is discouered and laide open, which was hidden before. The worlde seeth howe fewe are willing to stoope to take the yoke vppon their neckes: Nay, which worse is, the world sees that they become enemies to it, so as they can not bee ouercome by any warnings: or else they become so wilde headed, as a man can not tell on which side to catch holde of them. Seeing then that when GOD hath sent men the message of peace after that sort, they on their side desire warre and seeke it, and can not finde in their heartes to yeelde and submit them selues vnto God, but will needes bee enemies vnto him: wee see that the preaching of the Gospell to such as are vtterly past recouerie, is not vnauailable. And why? For else their malice had bene vnknowen, and Gods Iustice shoulde not bee so apparant, nor haue so great brightnesse, as when the wicked abide still vnconuerted and coulde not bee subdued for ought that could be done.

Nowe hereupon what haue wee to doe? This doctrine belongeth not onely to such as are ministers of Gods worde, to make them to goe through with their calling, so as they may shut their eyes when God is to bee obeyed, and proceede still in preaching his worde though it bee misused, and turned cleane contrarie to Gods intent: but also wee bee all warned generally, in what wise wee ought to receiue the message that God sendeth vs: namely that for as much as he sheweth himselfe so gratious towardes vs, that in stead of being our enemie, as he might most rightfully and iustly bee, he is contented to bee at one with vs, and taryeth not till wee seeke peace at his hande, but seeketh attonement with vs, notwithstanding that he perceiue vs to bee mad to make warre against him: wee should not bee so wretched and malicious as to dragge backe from him, and to forsake that passing loue and fatherly kindnesse of his. Marke that for one point.

Yet notwithstanding, when we see that God hath drawen vs to him, and that wee can finde in our heartes to let him vse his mercie and goodnesse towardes vs: then must wee knowe that the cause why his worde hath had such entraunce into our hartes, and why wee haue bin subdued to his obedience: was for that he hath reformed vs by his holy spirite. Let vs knowe that. And on the contrarie parte, when wee see the rebelliousnesse of the worlde, and howe men doe rancle against the Gospell, and are puffed vp with pride to aduaunce themselues against God: let vs consider that they bee looking glasses which God setteth before vs for our instruction, and that we also should be in the same taking, if God had not pitied our frowardnesse to correct it. Neuertheless, let vs vnderstand, that God dalyeth not with vs in sending vs his worde nowe adayes. And why? For it holdeth men so much the more conuicted, inasmuch as they become worse than wilde beastes, in that they woulde not by any meanes bee tamed for all his calling of them to him so familiarly, by meanes whereof their shame is so much the more discouered, so as the worlde knoweth what was hidden within them, which coulde not haue bene perceiued otherwise. Seeing then that we see this: let vs learn to say euer, that Gods worde is good and holy, and that it shoulde bee the very foode of life, if men turned it not to venim and poison through their owne naughtinesse their owne naughtinesse: by reason whereof their fault is such, as the blame thereof can in no wise be fathered vpon God.

Now let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faults, praying him to make vs feele them better, yea euen so farre as to bring vs to true repentance, that being subdued by his corrections, wee may learne to be sorie for our sinnes, and for the imperfections ỹ are in vs, vntill he haue throughly clensed vs of them, and deliuered vs quite from all the temptations of the flesh and the world. And so let vs all say, Almightie God heauenly father, &c.

On

On Munday the vj. of May. 1555.

The xiiij. Sermon, which is the fourth vpon the ſecond Chapter.

26. 27. 28. 29. Then ſent I meſſengers, &c.

30 But Sehon King of Heſebon would not let vs paſſe, for the Lorde thy God had hardened his ſpirit, and made his heart ſtubborne, to the ende to deliuer him into thy hand, as it appeareth at this day.

31 And the Lorde ſaide vnto mee, beholde, I haue begunne to giue Sehon and his land before thee; goe to, take poſſeſſion, that thou mayeſt poſſeſſe his land.

32 And Sehon came out againſt vs, he and all his people to fight in Iaſa:

33 And the Lorde our God deliuered him before vs, and wee ſmote him, and his ſonnes, and all his people.

34 And at the ſame time wee tooke all his Cities, and deſtroyed the men, women, and children in them, and we left him nothing remaining,

35 Sauing the Cattell which we tooke to our ſelues, and the ſpoyle of the Cities, which we tooke.

36 From Aroer which is vppon the banke of the Riuer Arnon, and the Citie which is vppon the Riuer, and vnto Galaad, there was not any Citie that could defend it ſelfe from vs. For the Lord our God had giuen them all into our hands.

37 Onely thou ſhalt not come neere the land of the children of Ammon, nor vnto any place of the Riuer Iabok, nor vnto the Cities on the hill, nor vnto any of all thoſe places which the Lord our God forbad vs.

WEe haue ſeene heretofore howe God being determined to harden Sehon, letted not for all that to cauſe him to be ſummoned, to the end he ſhold haue let the children of Iſrael paſſe without dooing them harme, and without ſhewing himſelfe to be their enemie. And therewithall it hath bene ſhewed, that GOD will ſende meſſage of peace vnto men: & yet notwithſtanding knoweth that the ſame ſhall ſtand them in no ſtead, but to make them vnexcuſable. After the ſame maner, the Goſpell is preached to a great nomber, who notwithſtanding doe but become the worſe for it, and God knoweth right well that no profite ſhall come thereof, but that they ſhall bee rebellious ſtill. Why then doeth hee call them to him? To bereaue them of all excuſe, and to lay open their malice and vngodlineſſe. For ſo long as men abide vndiſcouered, GOD ſeemeth after a ſorte to doe them wrong. But when he ſendeth them his worde, then bewray they themſelues what they bee, and their vnbeliefe is manifeſtly prooued. And ſo let vs vnderſtand that our Lorde knoweth well what the end of the preaching of his word ſhall be: ỹ is to 2. Cor. 2. 16. wit, that it ſhall become the ſauour of death to a great ſort: but yet will he not ceaſſe to appoint his worde to bee preached ſtill: and that doeth he for good and iuſt cauſe, namely to the ende that men ſhould bee the more condemned. But yet for all this, it is the preachers duetie to ofLuke. 10. 5. fer peace vnto all men, according alſo as our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt ſaith to his Diſciples, whereſoeuer yee come, offer peace: and if they that heare you bee vnworthie thereof, your peace ſhall returne to you againe. As if he ſhould ſay, There ſhall be no loſſe at al, you ſhall trie what is in men, and the friendlye greeting which you ſhall beare vnto them, ſhall be as a touchſtone, to the ende they may not be able to ſay, that God hath not viſited them nor had no care of them: and ſo ſhall they be proued to haue reiected his grace.

And herewithall wee bee warned, to ſeeke peace with all men as much as in vs lyeth, accordingly as it is ſaide in the Pſalme that wee muſt euen followe after it: ſo as it is not ynough for vs to bee friendly, and to indeuour to liue without anoying of any bodie, and without vexing or troubling any of our neighbours: but wee muſt labour yet further to ſeeke peace. If wee ſee there bee any vnrulye folke, wee muſt pacifye them as much as is poſſible. If wee ſee that Satan procureth vs ſtriſe and contention, wee muſt labour to remedie them as much as wee can: accordingly as our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt requireth of the faithfull, not onely that they ſhoulde bee peaceable themſelues, but alſo that they ſhoulde indeuour to ſet peace euerywhere. That then is one thing which wee ought to doe. And therewithall wee muſt bethinke our ſelues how S. Paul ſaieth, that wee muſt ſeeke peace, as much as in vs is. And by that ſaying he comforteth vs. If it ſo happen that wee can not make men our friendes, but ỹ although they haue no cauſe to complaine of vs, nor can ſay that wee haue done them any harme or wrong, yet they ceaſſe not to be malicious & bitter towards vs: we haue wherewith to comfort our ſelues, in ỹ we haue done the beſt we can to ſeeke peace. And therefore although Pſal. 34. 15. 1. Pet. 3. 11.

wee bee faine to liue among ſuch as ſeeke all the meanes they can to trouble and vexe vs: yet muſt not wee followe their malice to be like vnto them, but wee muſt alwayes doe our duetie
Pro 25. 22. & Ro. 12. 20 to maintaine peace and friendſhip. And if men will not bee wonne by vs: then ſhall our mildeneſſe and gentleneſſe turne to burning coales againſt them, wherewith they ſhall bee conſumed. Beſides this, the Lorde will maintaine our innocencie, and when he ſeeth that wee haue not aſſailed thoſe at whoſe handes we demaund not any thing, but rather haue laboured to ouercome euill with dooing good: let vs not doubt but he will aſſiſt vs with his ſuccour.

There is this further, that Moſes termeth it The word of peace, when men abſtaine from all euill dooing, and offer all right and reaſon: which wee ought to marke well: for many will ſay that they deſire nothing but peace: howbeit, that is but to their owne profite, and to their neighbors loſſe: and that is no meane [of peace in deede.] Deſire wee then to bee at peace? Deſire wee to haue agreement with them that dwell with vs? Let vs on our ſide deale vprightly: let vs abſtaine from all wrong dooing: let vs greeue no man, let vs drawe no mans goods to our ſelues, let vs yeeld euerie man that which is his due. Lo what peace is. And herein wee ſee that all the faire proteſtations which they make that are giuen to rauine and extorſion: are but lyes. For the holy Ghoſt hath tolde vs here, that there is no word of peace, but where vprightneſſe and iuſt dealing is obſerued, ſo as no man is vexed in any wiſe. And like as wee muſt indeuour to bee reaſonable towardes our neighbours, to maintaine friendſhip with them: ſo if they offer vs reaſon, wee muſt looke that we refuſe it not. For if wee bee vnmeaſurably hard to bee contented: the thing muſt needes be performed in vs which Pſal. 109. 17. is written in the Pſalme: that is to wit, he refuſed bleſſednеſſe, and it is farre off from him: therefore ſhall curſednеſſe couer him as a cloake, and it ſhall ſticke faſt to his fleſh and to his ſkinne. Would wee then that God ſhould bleſſe vs, and cauſe men alſo to beare vs fauour and friendſhip? Let vs on our behalfe ſeeke bleſſednеſſe to the vttermoſt of our power: and when wordes of peace are offered vs, let vs not goe ſeeke occaſions of controuerſie, to ſtirre vp ſtrife and debate. Thus ye ſee what wee haue to marke vpon that text.

Nowe let vs come to that which Moſes addeth. He ſaieth That Sehon King of Heſebon woulde not giue the children of Iſrael leaue to paſſe. And why? For the Lord (ſaieth he) had hardened his ſpirit, and made his heart ſtubborne. I haue told you alreadie, that although God forcſee that the meſſage of peace ſhall not preuaile: yet he ceaſſeth not to ſend it. But here Moſes expreſſeth yet a further matter: that God hardeneth mens hartes. And in the ende he addeth moreouer, that he doeth it of purpoſe to ouerthrowe them and deſtroy them, which is much more. Nowe this is verie ſtraunge geere at the firſt ſight. And that is the cauſe why men haue gone about to alter theſe textes: but in ſo doing they haue marred them, for it is all one when they would ſet ſuch a gloſe as this vpon it, that Gods hardening of Sehons heart, was no more but his promiſing that hee ſhould become hard hearted, and that he letted not the hardneſſe and ſtubbornneſſe of his hart, that is to ſay, he did let Sehon alone when he ſhewed himſelfe ſtubborn. Theſe are too feeble ſhiftes. For when as the ſcripture ſaith expreſſely that GOD hardened: it fathereth the verie worke it ſelfe vpon him. Againe, wee ſee how it ſaieth, Thou Lord haſt done it: and that in mo places than onely in this. Thinke wee that the holy Ghoſt wanted wordes wherewith to vtter his meaning, when he ſaide, I will harden Pharaos heart, and beholde, God hath hardened him? And againe when he ſaieth in the Pſalme that the Lord turned & conuerted their heartes vnto ſtubbornneſſe, when they roſe vp ſo againſt Iſrael? If men ſhould flee alwayes to this gloſe, God ſaieth that he will harden, that is to ſay, he will not hinder or impeache the hardening: to what purpoſe were that? Wee ſee it is a fond kinde of dealing, and the word Turne ſheweth it well. Behold, God turneth the heart. Whereas mens heartes were plyable and diſpoſed to courteſie, God turneth them and maketh them to be inflamed with hatred, ſo as they be the firſt that begin the warre. And what meaneth that? So then vnleſſe wee meane to dally and mocke with the holy ſcripture, we muſt not ſeeke ſuch ſhifts, but rather conſider after what ſort it is that God hardeneth mens heartes: and yet notwithſtanding is not guiltie of the hardneſſe that is in mē, nor can or ought to bee charged with the euill. Wee muſt come to that point. For let vs marke, that although God harden mens heartes, yet men faile not alſo to harden themſelues. And theſe two things may agree very well: that is to wit that a man ſhoulde harden himſelfe in his owne naughtineſſe, and yet not without Gods working in ſuch wiſe as the euill proceedeth not of him, ne ought to bee imputed to him, as I ſaid afore. And to proue that men themſelues ought to beare the blame and condemnation of their hard heartedneſſe, there needeth no long diſcourſe to bee made: for euery man carieth his owne inditement readie framed in himſelfe. As howe? Euen the wickedſt ſort doe giue euidence againſt themſelues: and although all the world would excuſe them, and that both great & ſmall did acquit them: yet haue they a hartbiting within them, which maketh them to perceiue, that whenſoeuer they offend or ſinne, they doe it willingly of their owne accorde, of a certaine lewdneſſe, and with their owne wil. There is not that man which knoweth not this. Euen the greateſt deſpiſers of God that are (ſay I,) euen they that are become as brutiſh as is poſſible to bee, haue the ſaid brondingyron ſearing within them, ſo as they knowe that their ſinnes come of nothing elſe than their owne ſelfemouing, and of their owne curſed and wicked affection. Seeing then that men doe feele themſelues guiltie: there needeth no more diſputing vppon that point.

Pſal. 105. 25.

But now let vs come to the ſecond point: that is to wit, how it is that God hardeneth men, without being partaker of their sinnes. Let vs marke, that sometimes the causes shall be apparant. And whensoeuer God punisheth men, wee must needes confesse that hee doeth it iustly: marke that for one poynt. Now one of the meanes which he hath to punishe men with all, is that hee blindeth them, that hee hardeneth their hartes, that hee sendeth them the spirit of giddinesse, that hee deliuereth them vp to Satan. These then are signes of Gods wrath and vengeance.

And therefore if there were any cause going before: wee must glorify him. And why? for hee doeth the office of a iudge: and for so doing there is no cause to carp and snap at him. It is Esa.19.14. sayd that God will send the spirit of drowsinesse
Rom.1.28. vppon men. And why? Because they haue misused his goodnesse, and the instruction that he gaue them. When wee see that this cause went afore: that is to wit, that men did wilfully shut their eyes, that they would not heare, and that they would not receiue any instruction, but rather labored to abolish Gods truth vtterly: is it not reason that they should bee giuen vp to the spirit of giddinesse? Nay moreouer, they will needes be wittie to mocke God: and we see a nomber of these skoffers, which are alwayes frumping, and to their seeming, God is but a babe. By reason hereof hee shaketh them vtterly of, in such wise as they become brute beastes. Now then, when that cause goeth afore: wee see that God executeth his Iustice and punisheth men in such sort, as wee can not but glorifie him. Marke that for one poynt.

True it is that sometime there shall be speci-
Rom.1.19. all causes: but the saying of Saint Paul in the first chapter to the Romans extendeth yet further. For there wee see that God hath iust reason to blinde all the world, and that if hee should doe so he should doe but the office of a iudge. For why? although the heathen had no doctrine preached vnto them: yet doe the heauens and the earth speake sufficiently vnto them, inasmuch as God doth shewe himselfe there. But who are they that honor and serue God, for all their inioying of the benefites which he bestoweth vpon them in this world? All are vnthankefull, all are malicious, wee cobble vp Gods riches here, and in the meane while regard not how much we be beholden to him, at leastwise to doe him homage for them. And therefore it is reason that he should giue vp men into a leude
Rom.1.24. 26,28. minde, (as sayth Sainte Paule) and that hee should deliuer them into wicked lustes, so as they should forget themselues, and ouershoote themselues, and giue ouer themselues to all vngratiousnesse, and to all maner of shamefull and horrible dealings. And why? For they honoured not their creator that made them, & had shewed himselfe so bountifull and mercifull to them. And therefore whensoeuer God hardeneth men, wee must thinke he hath iust reason to doe so, because our leawdnesse and vnthankfulnesse are to be found euery where.

But yet neuertheless, if there appeare no apparant cause, and that when we haue sought neuer so much why God hardeneth men, wee finde no cause at all: yet let vs not therefore cease to glorifie him, though wee see not the reason of his doings. As for example, a man might aske why Sehon was hardened rather than the Moabites, Edomites, and Ammonites? Ye see here foure nations betweene whom there was no oddes, I meane as in respect of naughtinesse. For if wee thinke that the Ammonites and Edomites, were better than the Amorrhits: it is but folly and a deceiuing of our selues. Then were they all as infidelles, and coulde haue found in their hartes that Gods people had bin vtterly sunk. But God boweth the heartes of the Ammonites and such others, to the end that they should not enter into warre. Hee meeketh and suppleth them, as if a wilde beaste were tamed: and in the meane while he hardeneth Sehons hart, pricking him and inflaming him foreward, to the ende he should come to giue battell. Whence commeth such diuersitie? Wee cannot alleadge any reason, our wit is too rawe and weake thereto. And againe, God concealeth his purpose from vs in that behalfe. What shall wee doe then? although wee be at our wits end in this case: let vs learne to doe God so much honor, as to acknowledge that hee is iust and vpright in all his doinges. And although the thing be straunge to our vnderstanding, and it seeme to vs that wee might speake against it: yet notwithstanding let vs forbeare to reply, and let vs humble our selues vnder the maiestie of our God. For truely the thing wherein he wil try mens humilitie, is that wee should glorifie him in al his works, yea euen though they agree not ne match not with our natural reaso. There
Rom.1.5.16 26. is not a truer obedience of faith than that. And if they which babble so much nowadayes against Gods prouidence, had learned but this one principle of honoring GOD by confessing that hee is righteous, and measured not his Iustice or righteousnesse by their owne brayne: there would be no more difficultie. But what? There are a sorte of proud beggers, which set themselues against GOD, and swelle at him lyke Toades. Insomuch that if they haue once taken a toy in their head, although GOD haue spoken the flat contrary: they passe not for that, neither will they surcease their rage for it. But as for our part, to the intent wee may be Gods true disciples, let vs bridle our wittes and hold them as prisoners and captiues vnder the doctrine of the holy scripture: which is, that God holdeth mens hartes in his hand, and turneth them to gentlenesse when hee listeth, as we see he did in Egypt. Behold, the Egyptians Exod.11.3. & 12.36. were ful of spite and crueltie, so as they ment nothing else but to haue vtterly destroyed the people of Israel. But yet in one minute of an houre, and euen in the turning of a hand, God wrought in such wise that they were chaunged. They yeelded vp all their vessell of golde and siluer at the cõmaundemẽt of ỹ people. To be short they did did more for the children of Israel, than the fathers would haue done for their owne children. And whereof came this? Euen of Gods changing of their hartes when hee thought good. Also on the contrary part, God holdeth mens hartes in his hand, to harden them as he listeth. And if this seeme straunge vnto vs: let vs acknowledge the weakenesse of our vnderstanding, and let vs alwayes first and formost confesse God to bee righteous, and therewithall reuerence his high and deepe secretes, sith wee cannot atteine vnto them. Thus yee see what we haue to remember in the first place.

Also wee haue to note the ende for which this was done. God (sayth Moses) was determined to destroy Sehon: GOD had already assigned him his iudgement: that was the cause why hee hardened him. It is not in this text onely, that the holy Ghost speaketh so. But when God sendeth his Prophet Esay, and telleth him that the people shalbe hardened and blinded, yea euen the more after their hearing of all the matters and warninges that should be giuen them: he addeth I will haue this people blinded, to the ende they conuert not and I should heale them. As if he should say, this people is not worthie to bee pitied at my hand, or to haue any mercy shewed them: and therefore they must dwell still in their destruction. And that they may doe so, I will harden their hartes, stop their eares, and blinde their eyes, so as they shall be past all amendement. Let vs vnderstand, that in so doing God hath alwayes iust reason: but yet is it not to be said, that therefore it is lawfull for vs alwayes to know it. If the reason be apparant to vs it is well, and let vs wey it throughly, acknowledging (as I tolde you before) that God executeth his iust vengeance vppon the sinners that haue offended him too much, and abused his patience and goodnesse, But howsoeuer the case stand, if wee see no reason at all, let his onely will and ordinance suffice vs, and let it content vs that he knoweth why hee dealeth so, though it be not his will to reueile it vnto vs, at leastwise till the day wherein the thinges that are now hidden from vs, shal be discouered vnto vs. For (as sayth Saint Paul) as now wee see but in part and darkely. And if wee knewe that: namely that wee be here as in a darke prison, so long as we be closed in with our mortall flesh: and againe that wee be earthly and must be faine to bee renewed ere wee can comprehend Gods secretes perfectly: it were enough to allaye the cackeling of such as nowadayes blaspheme the doctrine of election, so as they should humble themselues before God, to imbrace with all reuerence whatsoeuer is conteined in the holy scripture. But doe what we can, yet must wee passe that way. And therefore when wee heare that Gods will was to destroy Sehon, and ỹ therefore he hardened him: let vs assure our selues, that when it pleaseth God to drawe men to saluation, he turneth their hartes to make thē repent them of their sinnes, that they may bee sory for them and seeke to obey him. After that maner doth God alter the hartes of such as were malicious and froward, and reformeth them to his obedience, yea euen when he intendeth to saue them. Lykewise on the contrary part, when he hath vtterly appoynted them to destruction: he hardeneth them, so as there is no meane for them to admit any amendment, or to come neere it, but they repine against him and his doctrine, whereof they make as it were a deadly poyson. Lo after what sorte God worketh. True it is that mans naturall reason can neuer well brooke his doctrine: but wee must submit our selues with such humiltie in this behalfe, as wee 1.Sam.2.25. gainesay not the thinges which the holy scripture teacheth. Againe, whereas it is sayd, that the children of Hely hauing bin warned, receiued not correction at their fathers hand: it followeth immediately, because the Lord was purposed to slea them. By the setting downe hereof, wee see that God gaue them not the grace to conuert, because he left them in the destruction, wherein they were by nature: And that he so purposed, it was through his rightfull iustice. Here is no talke of I wote not what permission or sufferance, so as God should play the blinkard, or shut his eyes as these fantasticall fellowes imagine, which haue as much experience in the holy scripture as dogges: but it is sayd, that Gods will was to haue it so. Wherefore let vs learne, that when God hardeneth men, it is a signe that hee hath deliuered them to Satan, as past recouery. True it is that on the one part God serueth his turne by Satan and by wicked men, to deceiue the vnbeleeuers, ac- 1.Kin.22.20 cording as wee see that when it was sayd, who will be my messenger to deceiue Achab? the diuill offereth himselfe, and God sendeth him. Go (sayth God) and ouerrule thou all his false prophets, and let them bee all there to blinde this wretch that hath bin so rebellious against me. We see how God serueth his turne by Satan, & that all false prophets are sent by him. But yet should not this preuaile: for if men were well disposed, Satan should win nothing by his illusions, and al his wiles should be withstood: But 2.Thess.2.11 it is sayd that God giueth effectuall or workefull error: it is euen Saint Paules owne maner of speach.

1.Cor.3.9.

Now whereas he termeth it effectuall error, it is as much to say as men shall be so sorted, that they shall not be able to discerne any more, nor to perceiue the deceites, but shall become so brutish, as they shall fling and cast themselues headlong into destruction, and not iudge of any thing. It is God that blindeth them so, sayth Saint Paul. And why? Because he is minded to ouerthrowe them. Now I haue tolde you already, that sometimes the cause shall not be apparant as it is in that place of Saint Paul, who auoucheth it concerning such as hauing heard the Gospell, receiued it not, ne became the better for it, but reiected it, as wee see these wretches doe nowadayes, which trample the doctrine of saluation vnder their feete, through their vngodlynesse. And Saint Paul sayth it is good reason that God should so blinde them, as darkenesse might reigne ouer them, forasmuch

as they listed not to receiue the light. But sometimes the cause shall be incomprehensible: wee shall not perceiue why God worketh so; [wee shall not discerne] why hee will haue one to perish: rather than another. [In that case] let vs content our selues with his only goodnes, and confesse that he is righteous howsoeuer the worlde goe. Besides this, let vs learne to call vpon God, that it may please him to turne our hartes to good, so as when hee sendeth vs the message of peace, and offereth vs his fatherly goodnesse, wee may not onely heare it as the voyce of a man: but also be touched with it by him in our hartes. And in so dooing, let vs not doubt of his mercie, for hee witnesseth thereby that he hath pitie vppon vs, and prepareth vs, and chaungeth our hartes, to bowe them to his obedience. Thus yee see what wee haue to remember as in respect of this sentence.

Now Moses sayth, that Sehon came foorth to battell, & was ouercome, both he and all his people, because God had deliuered him to the children of Israel. Here Moses sheweth that the victorie which the people had of Sehon and the Amorrhytes, was of Gods meere grace. And it was meete also that the people should bee put in mind thereof, that they might perciue how God had gouerned thē. And this rehearsall is made, to keepe the people in awe, and to make them vnderstand, that if they did not serue and honor him all their lyfe long, and teach their children to doe the lyke: it were too wicked an vnthankefulnesse. And here wee haue two poyntes to marke. The one is generall, that wee must learne to yeelde God the honor of all the victories that hee giueth vs against our enemies. I meane not onely of Princes when they haue made warres, or woonne a battell in the field: but [euen of our selues also] when wee haue bin assayled by some peculiar person, and be escaped from his handes. When a man hath done vs any wrong, or put vs to some trouble, and wee bee deliuered from it: Let vs assure our selues it is God that hath giuen vs that vpper hand, to the end we should alwayes haue our mouthes open to yeelde him thankes for it: and that we should not onely doe it with the mouth: but also and specially shewe forth by our whole lyfe, how much wee bee bound vnto him. Yee see then that the thing which wee haue to marke, is that whensoeuer and how oft soeuer we scape from the malice of our enemies, God hath reached out his hand to succour vs, and by that meanes hath bound vs to him, to the intent wee shoulde haue the more courage to serue him and honor him.

The second poynt is, that looke what Moses spake to the people of Israel, the same doth hee say at this day vnto vs. For wee haue neede to be put in minde of Gods grace and benefites, that wee may bee the more moued to magnify his name and to giue our selues wholy vnto him, so as wee may neuer forget his benefites, to runne into any disorder. For wee see howe men doe easily sotte themselues, specially when GOD dealeth fauourably with them. Because our God dealeth gently with vs: wee thinke we may conspire to forsake him and forget him. And truely this prouerb which is common among men, namely that wee cannot away with our owne ease, is put too much in practise. And therefore it is for our welfare to be put in minde of Gods benefites, and to haue the remembraunce of them refreshed. And why? To the intent wee may be helde in awe of him, and serue him, & take courage to keepe our selues altogether vnder his subiectiō, assuring our selues that that is our souereigne blisse, and that forasmuch as hee neuer forsaketh his faithful ones, and those that leane vnto him, wee suffer him to be our protector, and play not the loose colts, so as wee should be forsaken of him at our neede. Yee see then that this declaration is directed to vs nowadayes.

As touching that it is sayd, That GOD had deliuered Sehon before them: it serueth to shewe the better, that inasmuch as they had an easie victorie, GOD gaue the greater brightnesse to his grace, as wee haue seene alreadye heretofore. I note this briefly, to the intent that this streine may bee layd to the other, which wee haue seene and expounded alreadie.

Had the people of Israell had much a doe to ouercome their enemies: they might haue imputed it to their owne force. O wee haue fought well, [might they haue sayd.] O there was great prowes in vs: for our enemies were very valiant.

But when as their enemies were driuen lyke chaffe with the winde, when they that we earst both strong and stout were dismayed, so as they had no more hart than women, but scattered away at the first shocke, and became so cowardly, as they might smite vppon them at their pleasure, so as the people were euen weary of sleaing them that were lyke enough to haue eaten them vp: What is to be sayd of it, but that God deliuered the enemies of his people, that is to say, that hee brought them thither as it were of purpose to take vengeance on them? Yee see then that the thing which is imported by this maner of Moseses speach, is the amplifying of Gods grace, to the ende that it might bee the better knowen of the children of Israel.

And whereas it is sayd, that all were put to the sworde, euen litle children and all: It might at the first blushe seeme a poynt of great cruelltie, that the children of Israel spared not euen the little babes. And what an outrage was that? For what though the king and the men had bin so froward as to deny them passage? Ought the women therefore to haue borne the smart of it, and their little babes too? We see and are warned hereby, that wee must not deeme of Gods iudgements after our owne fancie. For if wee will needes runne a head when God telleth vs that hee hath disposed a matter, and that wee will needes shoote foorth our bolte at euery turne: wee take vppon vs the office of GOD. For it is his right to iudge of vs, and not ours to iudge of him. And what will

will come of it, but that wee ſhall be confounded in our raſhneſſe and malapertneſſe? What a trayterouſneſſe is it, that mortall creatures ſhoulde climbe ſo high, as to giue iudgement vpon their maker? Therefore when there is any ſpeaking of Gods iudgementes, let vs learne to reſtreine our wittes from ſuch raſhneſſe as to ſay what we thinke good: and let vs conſider that all that euer commeth from God, is good and rightfull, though it ſeeme contrariwiſe to vs. And in deede, ſith wee ſee not a whit into the bottomleſſe deepes of Gods iudgementes: let vs aſſure our ſelues that wee doe but bewray the infirmitie that is in vs, and that in the meane ſeaſon God hath wherewith to maintaine his iuſtice, although he ſhewe it not to vs. And were the thing wel weied ẏ is written in Geneſis: we ſhould know that it was not without cauſe ẏ our Lord commanded the children of the Amorrhytes to be rooted out of the world. For euen in the time of Abraham, the Chananites were come to the full meaſure of all iniquitie, as it ſeemed: and we ſee examples enow thereof, in that they troubled Abraham ſo much. And yet for al that, God ſayd that their iniquitie was not yet full ripe. Albeit that men had condemned them: yet is God patient, and taryeth, and beareth with them, yea euen foure hundred yeeres after. Yee ſee then that God did beare with the wickednesſe of that people foure hundred yeeres: and ſhall wee ſay now at the foure hundred yeeres ende, how happeneth it that God dealeth ſo roughly with them? Wee would faine be pleading againſt God. If he vſe patience, wee ſay he is too ſlowe: and if he vſe extreme vengeance, wee blame him of crueltie. But contrarywiſe, if God execute not his iudgementes out of hand: let vs aſſure our ſelues ẏ therein he ſheweth his goodneſſe. And on the other ſide if he extend ſuch rigor as maketh vs abaſhed and afraide: let vs aſſure our ſelues that he doth it iuſtly and vpon good cauſe, although the ſame cauſe be not euer apparant vnto vs. So then, firſt of al, wheras here is mentiõ made of ſuch a ſlaughter of the Amorrhites as extended euen to the infantes: let vs aſſure our ſelues that ſeeing GOD telleth vs that hee hadde commaunded the people of Iſraell to doe it: wee muſt imbrace it without gainſaying, & it is not for vs to checke againſt it, vnleſſe we will be condemned for our diueliſh pride, in preſuming to pleade againſt our iudge, yea euen againſt our ſouereine iudge.

Gen. 5. 16.

Finally wee muſt not iuſtifie men when they aduenture any thing vpon their owne heades and for their owne pleaſure: but wee muſt put a difference betweene the things that concerne God, and the thinges that concerne men. For in the end of the chapter, Moſes ſaith expreſſely, According as the Lord our God had commanded. The if any thing come in our way, let vs inquire whether it concerne God or no. If wee perceiue that it concerne God: then muſt wee ſubmit our ſelues thereto, ſaying, Lord thou art righteous, let thine onely will ſuffice vs, without looking to haue any other reaſon: let it not be lawfull for vs to goe beyond that rule, foraſmuch as it is the rule of all right. Now then if we haue the diſcretion and skill, to diſcerne betweene God and men: then ſhall we not fayle to honor and glorify God, and to yeeld him the prayſe of Iuſtice and vprightneſſe: [and ſo ſhall wee lykewiſe] if wee indeuour to trye mens doings by Gods word as we be taught it. For good reaſon it is that the ſame ſhould ouerrule vs, yea and that all our deedes and thoughtes ſhoulde be ſo meaſured, compaſſed, and directed thereby, as wee may conſider thus with our ſelues: Hath God forbidden it? then is it a wicked thing, and therefore I muſt forbeare it: but doth God allow it or permit it? then let vs confeſſe that it is well done, without inquiring any further. Thus yee ſee what wee haue to remember for the concluſion of this text.

Now let vs kneele downe in the preſence of our good God with acknowledgement of our ſinnes, praying him to make vs feele them better, and to teach vs to condemne our ſelues vterly, (as in very deede there is nothing in vs but curſednesſe, and none but onely God deſerueth to haue al praiſe of righteouſnes & vprightnes yeelded vnto him) and ẏ euery of vs may not only confeſſe it with our mouths, but alſo ſigh for our ſinnes through true repentance, ſo as wee may returne againe vnto him, praying him to chaunge our wicked hartes in ſuch wiſe, that whereas now they be plunged in al naughtines, and ſtonehard: hee will vouchſafe to bring them to his obedience, and to write and ingroſe his lawes and commaundementes in them, ſo as we may ſeeke nothing but to pleaſe him, and to frame our ſelues wholy to his good will. That it may pleaſe him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs, but alſo to all people, &c.

On Tewſday the vij. of May. 1555.

The fifteenth Sermon which is the firſt vpon the third Chapter.

THen turned wee and went vp by the way of Baſan. And Og the king of Baſan came out againſt vs, he and all his people, to fight in Edray.

2 And the Lord ſayd vnto me, feare him not, for I haue deliuered him into thy hand, with all his people and land, and thou ſhalt doe to him as thou diddeſt to Sehon king of the Amorrhites, that dwelt in Heſebon.

3. So

3 So the Lord our God deliuered Og King of Baſan with all his people into our handes, and we ſmote him, ſo as nothing remained of him.

4 The ſame ſeaſon we tooke all his Cities, and there was not anie Citie which we tooke not: that is to wit, threeſcore Cities, all the Countrie of Argob, which is of the kingdome of Og in Baſan.

5 All his Cities were fenced with high walles, Gates, and Barres, beſides the vnwalled townes which were manie in number.

6 And wee deſtroyed them as wee had done to Sehon King of Heſebon, in rooting out all his Cities, men, women, and children.

7 But all the cattle and the ſpoile of the Cities, wee made a pray for our ſelues.

8 So at that time we tooke the land out of the hand of the two kinges of the Amorrhytes, which were beyond Iordan, from the riuer Arnon vnto Mount Hermon:

9 (Which Hermon the Sidonians call Sarion, and the Amorrhytes name it Sanir:)

10 [Euen] al the cities of the plaine, and all Galaad, and all Baſan, vnto Selcha and Edray: which are cities of the kingdome of Og in the countrie of Baſan.

11 For onely Og king of Baſan remained of the remnant of the Giants, behold, his bed which is a bed of yron, is it not at Rabbath among the children of Ammon? The length thereof is nine cubites, and the bredth foure cubites after the cubites of a man.

IF we ſhould take ỹ thinges that I haue read, but as a ſimple reporte of a ſtorie: there would be no profite at all in the reading. But if we be able to apply it to ſuch vſe, as God meant by his holy ſpirit: it is a very profitable leſſon for vs. It is declared here, that the people of Iſraell ſmote Og king of Baſan, as they had done Sehon king of the Amorrhytes. That (as ye ſee) is the ſtory. But wee muſt conſider to what purpoſe GOD meant to haue it regiſtred in his lawe, and publiſhed by Moſes, and brought againe to the peoples remembraunce. It was to the ende that the people ſhould knowe, that they had bin guyded by the hand of God, and that when they were deliuered out of the land of Egypt, they wiſt not where to haue become, vnleſſe GOD had continued his fauour towardes them, to put them in poſſeſſiō of the land which he had promiſed them for their inheritance. But now wee muſt marke alſo, that the people were not yet entered into the land of Chanaan: there was yet great hardneſſe in the matter. And if they had not truſted in God, they might haue bin ſo ſcared, as would haue cauſed them to turne head, and to murmur againſt God, and to forſake the land that had bin promiſed them. Therfore it was for them to be confirmed. And Moſes hath reſpect thereunto, in that he ſetteth before their eyes, the power where through they withſtoode their enemies: which was Gods aſſiſting of them, and his ouer throwing of their enemies. And now that I haue noted that it was Gods wil to haue this ſtory publiſhed and confirmed, to the end aforeſayd: it behoueth vs lykewiſe to come to our ſelues, and to apply it alſo to our owne vſe. For all was written for our learning. 1.Cor.10,11.

Then let vs marke, that whereas Moſes hath ſayd here, that Og king of Baſan was ouerthrowen: the people ſhould haue thought thus: Behold, God hath deliuered vs from a ſecond and a third death. For it had bin to no purpoſe to haue ſcaped out of Egypt, to haue bin ſet free from the bondage of Pharao, and to haue paſſed through the red Sea: all this had bin nothing, if our God had not ſtrengthened vs, ſeeing wee haue bin aſſayled by ſo mightie and ſtrong enemies, whome we had not bin able to reſiſt. And in good ſooth, wee ought to call to minde what hath bin declared before, that is to wit, that the people ran away as ſoone as their enemies came againſt them. And why was that? For it was not for them to looke for any ſuccour at Gods hand, becauſe they ran fourth at aduēture with ſuch fooliſh raſhneſſe. God had ſayd vnto them, yee ſhall not goe to battell: and yet would they needes hazarde the incounter.

Therefore it was meete that they ſhould bee made to knowe their follie to their coſt. Yet notwithſtanding, the people of Iſrael knewe wel enough by experience, that they were not of ſufficient power to withſtand their enemies. But now, for aſmuch as nothing was able to ſtand before them: therby it appeared that their obteining of the victorie was not by their owne ſtrength, neither coulde they boaſt thereof: but it was God that had wrought in that behalfe. And it behoueth vs alwayes to make the ſame compariſon, if wee wil well perceiue Gods grace and fauor towardes vs. For what is the cauſe that wee take our ſelues to be ſtrong and ſtoute, and yeede not God his due prayſe? It is for that wee bee bleared: when hee hath reached vs his hand, and when hee hath ſuccoured vs at ſome pinch, wee conſider not from whence that commeth. What remedie then? Let vs bethinke our ſelues thus: Go to, haue I not found my ſelfe ſore combred in very ſmall thinges? Haue not I bin daunted and ſtriken out of hart? And what was the cauſe thereof, but that God made mee to feele mine owne frailtie? Surely I ſhoulde bee neuer a whit valeanter now, than I was then: were it not that God gaue me his helpe. So then it is ſome where elſe than of my ſelfe, that I haue my ſtrength: and therefore it is not for mee to aduaunce my ſelfe through ouerweening: for God hath giuen mee a ſure knowledge of my feebleneſſe. Now then, I muſt thinke continually how to humble my ſelfe: and when he hath vpheld me by his ſtrong hand, I muſt acknowledge that that benefite came of him, and that hee will be glorified for the ſame. Yee ſee then that the intent why Moſes ſpake ſo to the people of Iſrael, was that they ſhould acknowledge that their ouercomming of their enemies, was not by the power and ſtrength of man, but by Gods fighting for them.

Neuertheleſſe, this ought to hauemoued them, not onely to honor God, but alſo to truſt in him, as I haue touched before. For it was not enough for the people of Iſrael to haue conquered the land of Baſan: for they had not yet paſſed the riuer of Iordan where their inheritance lay. Therfore it ſtood them on hād to be armed with newe truſt, and to proceede with full purpoſe to incounter their enemies againe. And whence might they haue ſuch hardineſſe? If they had taken it in themſelues, it had bin but a rage that God woulde haue condemned: but they muſt haue imboldened themſelues with truſt that God would not faile them. And how might they be ſure of that? By their owne experience which they had had therof. Why was it that God ouerthrewe as well Sehon, as Og king of Baſan? Becauſe he was the leader of his people, and had taken them into his charge and protection. And that was not to leade them onely to the banke of Iordan: but to performe the promiſe that he had made to Abraham. And therefore the people might conclude, that the victories which they had obtained already, were but an enterance to a further paſſage, whereby they might fully perſwade and aſſure themſelues, that God would continue with them euen vnto the ende. Euen ſo muſt we doe. If we perceiue any change in our ſelues, wee muſt acknowledge it to be the hand of God.

For ſometimes, yea oftentimes the faithfull ſhall finde themſelues aſtoniſhed and abaſhed vppon the ſudden, yea euen though there bee no great cauſe why. But thereby God warneth them of their infirmitie, to the ende they ſhould walke in awe and feare of him, calling vpon him, and vtterly diſtruſting their owne ſtrength. Agayne, when they ſee themſelues ſtrengthened they knowe that that commeth not of themſelues, neither are they ſo fooliſh as to be proud of it: but they magnify Gods goodneſſe and grace towardes them, and take courage vppon the ſame.

True it is [ſay they] that wee be wretched and ſilie creatures: but yet hath our God helped vs, to the end that wee ſhould truſt in him. Therefore let vs on forewarde as he commandeth, and let vs not doubt but hee will be the ſame man to morrowe that he is to day. The remembrance of his promiſe laſteth longer with him than for a day: and ſeeing he hath auowed himſelfe to be our father, it is not to ſhake vs off as the baſtes doe that forget their young ones, or as the fowles doe which forſake their byrdes whom they bred: but our God is a father to vs both in lyfe and death. Now then, let vs alwayes flee vnder the ſhadowe of his protection, and aſſure our ſelues that his power ſhall neuer bee diminiſhed towardes vs.

But wee haue alſo to marke how Moſes ſaith, That Og king of Baſan came flinging foorth to giue battell. wherein hee ſheweth that the people [of Iſraels] warre was iuſt and lawfull. For although they had expreſſe commaundement from God, to arme themſelues and to put Og king of Baſan to the ſword, not at their owne pleaſure, but vppon the authoritie of him that hath all power: yet was it Gods wil to miniſter a iuſt cauſe thereof vnto them, that they might be the more aſſured in their conſcience. And thereby wee bee warned (as I haue ſayd heretofore) not to attempt any thing againſt right and reaſon. If we will haue GOD to bleſſe our doinges, and to make them proſper, and bring them to good ende: let vs beware that wee ſtirre not ſo much as one finger vnaduiſedly, or contrarily to that which is ſhewed vs by Gods worde. For what is it that can make vs rightly hardye in all things? The hauing of a good warrant in our owne conſciences, that wee haue walked according to Gods commaundement, and gone no further than equitie and right will beare. If wee be ſure of that: then may wee looke for helpe from aboue, and wee ſhall not bee diſapointed. But if wee neglect the difference betweene good and bad, and runne to thinges vppon a head: it is good reaſon that God ſhoulde beguile vs, and that wee ſhould be confounded in our doinges. Thus yee ſee what wee haue to marke here, when Og king of Baſan came foorth as an enemie to prouoke the children of Iſraell, in ſuch wiſe as their warre became iuſt. For no doubt but this enemy was offered him of Gods hand, as wee ſawe that Sehon was yeſterday, whome God hardened becauſe hee was minded to ouerthrowe him. After the ſame maner happened it to Og the king of Baſan.

Now then, let vs learne to beware that wee pro-

prouoke not one man nor other, by giuing them cause to vexe and molest vs: but if wee haue any enemies, let them beginne the warre, and let vs on our side keepe the peace. Let that be a point for vs to beare away. For if wee begin the fray, by doing them wrong or violence: can wee looke for helpe at Gods hand? Can wee hope that he will fauor vs, when we be so out of order? No: and therefore let vs not goe about to purchase vs enemies: (the diuil wil raise vs vp but too many of thē: and God also on his side may chance to exercise vs, and worke in such wise as wee shall haue enemies enowe, that will seeke all the meanes they can to persecute vs:) but let vs for our part seeke to haue peace, to the vttermost of our power.

And besides this, let vs alwayes hope that GOD will assist vs, if the quarell that wee maintaine bee good and rightfull, and such as hee alloweth. These are the thinges which wee haue to remember in that it is said that Og aduaunced himselfe, and came forth to assaile the people of Israell, without demaunding any thing at their hand, euen to stop them of the passage that God had giuen them.

Furthermore let vs beare in mind that which hath bin sayd afore, namely, that the chiefe warre which wee haue, is against our spirituall enemies. Therefore whensoeuer Satan assaileth vs, and practiseth all the mischiefe that hee can against vs: let vs vnderstand that GOD is minded to exercise vs: but yet shall wee haue wherewith to beare out the brunt, forasmuch as wee shall be strengthened by the power of the holy Ghost. And for the bringing thereof to passe, let vs marke howe it is added here, that God sayth vnto Moses, Be not afraide: for I haue deliuered Og king of Basan into thy hand: therefore shalt thou doe to him as thou diddest vnto Sehon the king of the Amorrhytes. Yee see then that here is a promise giuen, to the ende that the people should rest vppon it, and not doubt any more of the victorie, inasmuch as God telleth them that hee will fight for them. And it behoueth vs to marke well this text, because that if wee be destitute of Gods promises: though wee protest neuer so much that wee trust in him: it is but a vaine and fond imagination. And it is not in men to promise themselues any thing. For by what right or title may wee holde God bounde vnto vs, so as wee may say, God shall help vs, we shall not faile to be succoured at his hand? It would be to fōd an ouerstatelynes, if men should forge hopes of their owne head after that sort. Nay wee must waite quietly that God shewe vs his wil, and when we once haue the word of his mouth, then may wee stand vppon it. Let vs marke then that there is an inseparable bond, betweene Gods promises and the trust that wee haue in him. The world doth in deede vse the wordes Faith, and Trust: Howbeit vnrightly. For men knowe the cōtrarie to that which they protest, because euery man conceiueth what hee listeth in his fancie, and considereth not what is the will of God. Therefore it behoueth vs to come backe to the order that Moses sheweth vs here: which is, that wee attempt not any thing before God haue first spoken it. For else, our meaning is but to transfigure him after our own pleasure, and looke as euerie man inuenteth follies in his owne heade: so woulde hee by and by haue God at his commaundement, to make him performe the things that hee himselfe hath conceiued. And what a dealing were that? What maiestie more woulde there bee in our God? Againe wee see our lustes are so outrageous, as is horrible: and yet shoulde God bee faine to daunce attendance at all houres, to doe the thinges that our imagination hath dreamed or doted vpon? Therefore let vs haue the modestie to looke vnto that which God promiseth. And when wee once haue that promise, we must no more reply against it, but bee contented with his speaking of the worde, and goe on boldly. Be not afraid (sayth the Lord) I will deliuer him into thy hand. And when our Lorde had sayd, I will deliuer him into thy hand: he added for a conclusion, therefore be not afrayd. But how must wee apply this doctrine to our instruction?

Ephe.6.12.

Rom.10.17.

First and formost let vs looke that God promise. If wee were combred with any perplexitie or anguishe, and knewe not whether God would leaue vs in the mire or no: wee might well bee afraide: and if wee would not be afraide, wee should be too blockish. But when God sayth vnto vs, my children, it is true that you be weake, you can doe nothing of your selues, and you haue too strong an enemie, by meanes whereof yee coulde by no meanes withstand him if yee were not helped and vpheld by me: but I tell you, your temptations shall not bee greater than you shall be able to beare, I knowe what your power is, I will giue you strength and courage at your need, I wil mitigate ỹ tēptations ỹ might ouerthrow you, and although the world and the deuill be starke mad against you, yet wil I bridle them, so that although you be roughly assayled, yet shall you ouercome them: trust thereunto. Hath God spoken as this man telleth vs? let vs neuer doubt of it. Not that wee can be vtterly exempted from all feare, so long as we liue in this world: Insomuch that although wee haue Gods promises, whereby we be assured that hee will neuer leaue vs, but that wee shall euer feele his helpe at our neede: yet must wee not thinke that wee shall be vtterly voyde of care and doubt, or that wee should not beware of the daungers that inuiron vs round about. No, but yet must not this feare so ouerawght vs, as wee should not take hart to call vppon God, and to rest vppon him, and to goe on still foreward. Therefore when as it is sayd, I will helpe thee, be not afraide: our Lord will haue vs to fight in such wise against all feare, as it may not so ouermaster vs, as to make vs giue ouer, and turne head, and start away, so as we should be vtterly dismayd: but rather ỹ in stōding in aw, we should also hope & take courage to go forewarde, forasmuch as we haue God on our side. Thus yee see what is to bee remembred here.

And let vs chiefly apply this doctrine to our ſpirituall battels which wee haue againſt Satan. For if the children of Iſraell could not vanquiſhe their enemies which were but men: how ſhall wee ouercome the prince of the worlde, and the infinite nomber of diuils, which are as ramping Lyons readye to ſwallowe vs vppe out of hand?

Iohn 14.30 & 1.Pet.5.8

What is our force to beate backe ſuch enemies? Againe on the other ſide, we needé neuer to ſeeke out of our ſelues wherewith to be ouercome. For euery of vs doth nothing elſe but labor to ouerthrowe our ſelues. All the affections and all the thoughtes that wee haue, are enemies to God and to our own ſaluation. Therfore although wee had no enemies to aſſaile vs without vs: yet are wee ouerthrowen already by our ſelues within. Yea verely, but when as our Lord telleth vs that his ſtrength ſhall dwell in vs: that is the thing whereat wee muſt take courage. And it ſhall be no preſumption to proceede after that ſorte, as the Papiſtes [beare men in hand: which] ſay it is a follie for men to aſſure themſelues, and that wee muſt alwayes hang in doubt. By meanes whereof they ſet vp their owne freewil, and al the other dotages inuented by themſelues, which are no better thã illuſions of Satan wherewith he hath bewitched them. And hereuppon they ſay yet ſtill, O, God will helpe vs. Yea but they haue not his promiſes: or at leaſtwiſe they regard them not. And in good faith they be forepoſſeſſed with this diueliſhe imagination, that they are able to doe much, and that they haue ſuch ſtrength in thé, as they may well bee Gods fellowes. And yet for all that, their hoping is but off and on at aladuenture. But in the meane while they accuſe vs of preſumption, when we reſt allonely vpon Gods promiſes, aſſuring our ſelues that we can doe nothing at all, and that there is not one whit of ſtrength in vs. Whereas wee wayte for the thinges which our good God hath promiſed vs of his owne free goodneſſe, euen without preſuming any whit at all of our ſelues, but onely hoping for the performance of that which hee hath ſpoken, accordingly as he hath vouchſafed to binde himſelfe by his promiſes: muſt it not needes be that the diuill hath put out the Papiſtes eyes quite and cleane, when they terme ſuch beliefe preſumptuouſneſſe, whereas it is grounded vpon nothing but Gods promiſes? [yes verily.] But as I ſayd afore, let vs goe on boldely, and not doubt but that God can deliuer our enemies into our handes. Although it ſeeme that they ſhould catch vs in their pawes, and vtterly deſtroy vs: yet hath God deliuered them into our handes before the battell: and with ſuch certeintie doth it become vs to fight alwayes againſt Satan. Truely if wee looke vppon the ſtate of the faithfull: it may well ſeeme that they be left as a pray, and that there is no way for them to ſtand againſt their enemies. But what for that? God hath already determined what he will doe. As for the execution thereof, it doth not appeare at the firſt: but when as the faithfull haue this promiſe giuen vnto them, I will deliuer thine enemies into thy hand: they muſt haue an eye to the thing that is yet hidden. And for the ſame purpoſe doth Saint Paul ſay, GOD wil ſhortly put Satan vnder your feete. And for the ſame purpoſe alſo doth he ſay in another place: that Satan hath his power and dominion in the aire. It ſhould ſeeme by this, that Satan is ouer our heads, and that he ſhould ouerwhelme vs. But beholde here on the other ſide, how God auoweth that hee hath put him vnder our feete; and that for all the skirmiſhes which he can make againſt vs, and for all the alarums that he can giue vs, yet ſhall he not get the vpper hand of vs, no nor once prick vs in the heele, but we ſhal tread vpon his head. Loe howe God hath aſſured vs of victorie. What is to bee done then? Let vs looke at Satan and all our ghoſtly enemies, as already vanquiſhed, and aſſure our ſelues aforehand that God will make vs to triumph in the middeſt of our battels, ſo as wee may glory in our God as though our enemies were already diſpatched, and wee rid quite and cleane of them. And why? For the inſight of our faith muſt reſt vppon his promiſe where it is ſayd, I haue deliuered thine enemies into thy hand.

Gen.3.15.

Moreouer, whereas Moſes reporteth, that the people did to Og king of Baſan, as they had done to Sehon king of the Amorrhytes: it is to ſhewe that the people were not cruel in putting the young infantes to the ſworde, and in leauing neither man nor woman aliue: though a man might imagine them to haue bin cruell at the firſt ſight. And why? Becauſe it was done by Gods commaundement. Now then, let vs come backe againe to that which hath bin touched alreadie: that is to wit, that when we paſſe not the bounds which God hath ſet vs, ne doe any thing vppon our owne heades, but onely obey his will: then although all the world accuſe and condemne vs, yet ſhall wee be quitte in heauen. And that ought to ſuffice vs. Why ſo? For God can well skil to maintain his authoritie againſt the pryde of all men: Though all the world were ſo fonde as to goe to lawe with God, and to finde faulte with his ſayings and doings: Let vs let them all alone. For as I ſayd, it ought to ſuffiſe vs, that God doth iuſtify vs. and if he acquit vs, we may laugh all the fooliſhe verdites of the worlde to skorne. But herewithall let vs beare away this leſſon, that is to wit, that God doe auowe all our doinges. And how ſhall wee be ſure that he will auowe them? [verely] if wee haue not followed our owne fleſhly reaſon, nor taken leaue to doe thinges vppon our owne head: but haue waited for Gods commaundement. Now then, if God haue giuen vs his warrant, and wee haue walked in his obedience: then are wee ſure that all ſhall goe well with vs, though the world finde neuer ſo much fault with vs.

Rom.8.31.

But wee on our ſide alſo muſt take warning that wee riſe not againſt God, as wee ſee theſe fantaſtical fellowes doe, who will needes bee ſcanning whether a thing be good or no, without inquiring whether it be of God or no: and ſo ſhould God be faine to reſigne his maieſtie. For hee cannot be GOD, if he bee not righteous. And if men might put his righteouſneſſe

to triall of inqueſt, ſo as it might bee lawfull for them to giue their verdit vpon it: then if they condemned any of Gods workes, his glorie were like to goe to wreeke, and he ſhoulde bee quite bereft of it. Wee ſee then what a treacherie it is, when men will take ſuch libertie to diſcourſe of good and euill at their owne pleaſure, without aſking counſell at Gods mouth. And on the contrarie part, although thinges ſeeme ſtraunge to our naturall vnderſtanding: yet muſt we ſo diſpoſe our ſelues, that if our Lorde doe once ſay, this is good, it is my pleaſure ſo to haue it: as ſoone as we haue that determinatiõ from Gods mouth: we on our part muſt hold our peace, not onely to forbeare all replying or grudging againſt him: but alſo to ſubmit all our owne reaſon thereunto, and to glorifie him with a good will, in this wiſe. True it is Lord, that if I ſhoulde iudge after mine owne fanſie, I might ſpeake frowardly and vntowardly: but I muſt haue mine eye vppon thee: and foraſmuch as I knowe thy will to be ſo, I muſt ſubmit my ſelfe to it, and acknowledge it to bee good and rightfull, yeelding thee this praiſe therewithall, that thou canſt not doe amiſſe. Surely this preſent example ought well to ſuffice vs. For who is he which would not at the firſt ſight condemne the children of Iſrael, for killing the little babes after that ſort? Did they any thing without Gods appointment? No: for Moſes ſaieth the contrarie. Therefore in condemning them, a man ſhould ſet himſelfe againſt God: And ſo fareth it commonly with vs. Wherefore if wee iudge of our neighbours, let vs not doe it vpon our owne braine, but let vs giue that authoritie vnto God, without replying againſt his worde, ſo as if he allow of any thing, wee receiue it immediately: for wee muſt haue this modeſtie of ruling our ſelues in all caſes according to his good will. And therewithall, if God now and then doe thinges which ſeeme ouer rigorous, yea and euen doe touch our ſelues very neere: let vs ſtoope to them. As for example, if wee be afflicted out of meaſure to our own ſeeming: yet muſt we not murmur nor fret at it. For in good ſooth what ſhall wee gaine by it? It will turne to our dubble confuſion. Nay, let vs pray God to frame vs to ſuch obedience, as wee may patiently receiue ỹ afflictions that he ſendeth vs, in ſuch wiſe as the thinges which ſeeme ſtraunge to our owne appetites, affections, and thoughtes, may bee deemed of vs to bee good, iuſt, and rightfull, bicauſe he willeth them. That is the point which wee muſt come vnto. To bee ſhort, let vs learne, not to bee wiſe in our owne conceite, nor to giue head to our affections: for thoſe two things are requiſite, if we intẽd to glorifie God in all his doings.

Nowe here is alſo that which Moſes addeth, concerning the Cities and the greatneſſe of them, and concerning the Countrie, and the great ſtrength of Og King of Baſan. Wee tooke (ſaieth he) threeſcore Cities, which were very well fortified, and furniſhed in ſuch wiſe, as there was no likelyhood that they ſhould haue bene eaſily taken. Moſes addeth theſe circumſtaunces, of purpoſe to magnifie Gods grace the more, that the people might perceiue ỹ their ſtrength came not flying in the aire, but that it was GOD that gaue it them. And that is a point well worthie to bee noted. For if it bee to vaunt of our owne proweſſe, we can ſkill well ynough to gather the thinges that may ſerue for the purpoſe. O (ſay wee,) I had ſuch a thing and ſuch a thing: I haue compaſſed my matters trimly: ſuch a crink was practiſed againſt mee a great way off, and I remedied it with ſuch a ſhift. See my cunning, ſee my policie: there were ſuch matches and ſuch againſt me, but I ſhifted well ynough with them all, ſo as I diſpatched them euerychone, and mine enemies wonne nothing at my hand. To bee ſhort, wee can ſkill to alledge all things that may giue a faire gloſſe and ſhowe to our owne vertues. But if it bee to glorifie God, for the reliefe that wee haue had at his hand: wee runne ouer it as it were vpon hotte coales (as they ſay) wee remember not the diſtreſſe that wee were in, the daunger that wee bee ſcaped out of ſeemeth to bee a thing of nothing. See what our lewdneſſe is. So much the more therefore doeth it ſtand vs on hand, to mark what is told vs here, that is to wit, that in all the benefites which wee haue receiued of God, we muſt conſider in what taking wee had bene, if wee had gone without them: and wee ſhall haue matter good ſtore wherewith to doe that, if we be not wilfully blind as wee are wont to bee. For was not the leaſt daunger that euer we fell into, ynough to abaſh vs? But when a thing toucheth vs any thing neere: ye ſhall ſee vs as ſore diſmaied as may be. In deede if wee bee once out of it, it is nothing with vs: but that is for want of minding it. Yet notwithſtanding if wee ſee but a mote or a flie whiſking by our eyes: by and by wee bee dazeled. But yet for all this, out of howe great things doeth God deliuer vs? He will ſuffer vs to goe downe as it were into our graue, and to be there as it were in a gulfe of death, ſo as which way ſoeuer we looke, we ſhal finde no way to ſcape out at, ſo deepely ſhall wee bee ſunk therein. And to what ende? Euen to the ende that God may make vs perceiue his power the better, when it pleaſeth him to ſuccour vs. So then, wee haue matter ynough and ynough to giue gloſſe vnto Gods grace, if wee bee not minded to ſhut our eyes maliciouſly of ſet purpoſe, or to thruſt the things vnder foote, which are too too manifeſt and apparant. Therefore let vs put this doctrine in vre which is ſhewed vs here by Moſes: that is to wit, that God will giue vs incredible victories, as he doeth alreadie, and that when wee haue them, wee muſt bethinke vs thus: Goe to, came this of our owne policie? came this of our owne ſtrength? No: it is God that hath done it. For when wee haue well examined all that is in vs: wee ſhall finde our ſelues to come ſhorte in all pointes, and that euen from the one ende to the other, our Lorde muſt bee faine to doe all in man.

And looke what Moſes reporteth here concerning the bodily enemies of the children of Iſrael, as in reſpect of the power of this world: that muſt wee apply to the power of Satan, and to all the ſhiftes that he hath againſt vs. If wee haue that diſcretion with vs, then ſhall we haue wherefore to magnifie Gods grace towardes vs, if wee conſider well whence wee bee deliuered, that is to wit, out of the pit of hell. For which of vs was able to breake the barres and bondes of Satan? which of vs was able to aboliſh the ſouereignitie of death? It ſtoode vs on hand that God ſhould worke there. Nowe it is ſo, that we were all ſhut vp in the bondage of ſinne, and conſequently that death reigned ouer vs. Satan had poſſeſſion of vs, ſo as none of vs could ſcape frō him. Wee could ſtirre neither arme nor legge, but it was to thruſt our ſelues ſtill further, and to ſinke our ſelues ſtill deeper. Seeing it is ſo: let vs vnderſtand, that when God brought vs out of the curſe, wherein all of vs are by nature: it muſt needes be that his meere grace wrought in that behalfe. And that is moe times than once, as Moſes ſpeaketh here of the threeſcore Cities. Wherefore let vs vnderſtande, that as ſoone as we be come to the end of one battell, ſtrait ways wee muſt enter into another: God helpeth vs to day: and if he hold not on dayly, yea if he make vs not to feele his ayde euerye minute of an houre: what will become of vs? If wee had had a thouſād victories, yet were one aſſault ynough to ouerthrowe vs. Therefore let vs learne to magnifie Gods grace towardes vs.

Ro. 3. 9. & 5. 12.

Eph. 2. 3.

And herewithall let vs marke alſo, that Moſes ſpeaking here of the ſtrength of Og King of Baſan, ſaieth: Behold, he had a bed like a Giant: and againe he ſaieth that he came of the race of the Rephaims. Which ſerueth to ſhewe more and more, that the people were as a ſheepe in a Wolues mouth. And if it were ſo with them at that time: what is it nowe with vs? For wee haue enemies which are much ſtronger and ſtouter in compariſon of vs, than had the Iſraeltes when they were to enter into the land of Chanaan. It ſhould ſeeme that they might eate vs vp at one bit (as they ſay.) Wee ſee what treaſons and conſpiracies they make: wee ſee that the more gratious and fauourable God ſheweth himſelfe to vs, the more doe wee ſeeme to take pleaſure in grieuing him, and in reiecting of his grace. And therefore let vs looke to it, that wee minde well this doctrine, if wee will haue God to giue vs victorie againſt Satan and all his aſſaultes. And beſides this, when wee haue concluded that God will ſtrengthen vs againſt all temptations: let vs not doubt but that he hath a care of vs alſo for this tranſitorie life. And if men goe about to roote vs out, let vs put our ſelues to his protection, and let vs looke to bee preſerued and defended by him: and no doubt but that if hee reached out his mightie arme in olde time, to ſuccour the people of Iſrael: his power is not abated, nor his goodneſſe diminiſhed, to doe the like for vs at this day. Thus ye ſee howe wee ſhall bee ſafe both in life and death, and as well in body as in ſoule, if our Lorde bee readie to ſuccour vs. But without that, wee muſt needes bee worſe than forlorne. Wherefore let vs looke that wee profite our ſelues by this doctrine, by putting away all pride and fooliſh preſumption, ſo as wee reſt wholy vppon God, and learne to exerciſe our ſelues in his promiſes earely and late, and to renew the remembrance of them, to the end that by that meane wee may bee armed againſt all temptations. Let not the diuell finde vs vnprouided when he commeth to aſſaile vs: but let vs haue wherewith to reſiſt him. And that we may ſo, let vs take to vs Gods worde, for when we bee armed with that, wee bee well ynough fenced to beate back Satan, and al ỹ euer he can practiſe againſt vs. And therefore it behoueth vs to be ſo much the more watchfull, that we may giue eare to this doctrine.

1. Tim. 4. 8.

Eph 6. 11. 17 & 1. Pet. 5. 9.

Nowe let vs kneele downe in the preſence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to make vs ſo to feele them, as wee may bee vtterly caſt downe by them, at leaſtwiſe to miſlike of them and to forſake them, ſo as our whole ſeeking maye bee to frame our ſelues altogether to the righteouſneſſe of our God, and to proceede more & more in his feare and obedience, vntil he haue ioyned vs fully and perfectly to himſelfe, beſeeching him to beare with vs in the meane while, and that foraſmuch as it is his will that wee ſhould bee in continuall warre in this worlde, he vouchſafe to ſtrengthen vs with his power, vntill he haue taken vs vp into his heauenly reſt, to make vs enioye the glorious immortalitie that hee hath promiſed vs. That it may pleaſe him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs, but alſo to all people, &c.

On Wedneſday the viij. of May. 1555.

The xvj. Sermon which is the ſecond vpon the third Chapter.

12 The ſame time wee tooke poſſeſſion of the land, From Aroer which is vpon the Riuer Arnon. And I gaue one halfe of mount Galaad with the Cities thereof to the Rubenites and Gadites.

13 And the reſt of Galaad and all Baſan, which was of the kingdome of Og, I gaue to the halfe tribe of Manaſſes: that is to wit, all the Countrie of Argob, and all Baſan, which is called the land of the Giantes.

14 Iair the ſonne of Manaſſes tooke all the Countrie of Argob, vnto the borders

ders of Geſſuri, and Machati: and called them after his owne name, that is to wit, Baſan Hauoth Iair, vnto this day.

15 And vnto Machir I gaue Galaad.

16 And vnto the Rubenites and Gadites I gaue from Galaad vnto the riuer Arnon, the middes of the riuer and the end, and vnto the riuer Iabocke, which is the border of the children of Ammon.

17 And the plaine, and the Iordan, and the borders thereof from Kenereth to the ſea of the wilderneſſe, that is to wit, the ſalt Sea vnder Aſdodphaſga towardes the Eaſt.

18 And the ſame time I commaunded you, ſaying: the Lorde your God hath giuen you this land to poſſeſſe. All you that are ſtrong men, goe armed before your brethren the children of Iſrael:

19 But your wiues, your children, and your cattell, (I know ye haue much cattell) ſhall tarie in your Cities which I haue giuen you,

20 Vntill the Lord haue giuen reſt to your brethren as well as to you, and that they likewiſe poſſeſſe the land which the Lorde your God giueth them beyonde Iordan. Then ſhall yee returne euerye man to his poſſeſſion which I haue giuen you.

21 And the ſame time I commaunded Ioſua, ſaying: Thine eyes haue ſeene all that the Lord your God hath done to theſe two Kings. So will the Lord doe to all the kingdomes through which thou ſhalt paſſe.

22 Feare them not: for the Lord is your God: it is he that fighteth for you.

HEre Moſes continueth ſtill his matter, to ſhewe the people of Iſrael the great good that God had done them, beyond their hope. For as I haue declared heretofore, the kingdomes of Baſan and Heſebon were as an ouerplus, beſides that which had bene promiſed to the fathers of olde time. God then ſhewed himſelfe more liberall than he had promiſed to bee, in that behalfe. Therefore it became the people to haue ſignified Gods grace, according as Moſeſes intent alſo was. Furthermore, to the intent the people ſhould not thinke that they had gotten and conquered that Countrie by their owne power and ſtrength: it is tolde them howe it was of neceſſitie that God guided them, conſidering that their enemies were much ſtronger than they, in reſpect whereof here is mention made of their ſtature, and the land is named ỹ land of Giants, to put the people in remembrãce and to make them conſider, ỹ they could nothaue compaſſed thoſe things, vnleſſe God had gouerned them. And ſo the whole matter is to be referred to this ende, that the people ſhould knowe Gods goodneſſe in deliuering them from the thraldome of Egypt, not onely in that he had giuen them the land which he had promiſed them for their inheritance, but alſo had added more than they looked for: that is to wit, ỹ two kingdomes that were beyond Iordan.

And nowe herewithall Moſes ſaieth, That hee gaue that Countrey to the Children of Ruben, and to the children of Gad, that is to ſay, to their Tribes, and to the halfe Tribe of Manaſſes. Not that Moſes offered them that Countrie in partition: but they did ſue for it, as is written more plainely in the two and thirtie Chapter of Numeri. In ſo much as it is ſaide there, that Moſes was angrie when he ſawe them ſo haſtie to bee aforehand, for it was reaſõ that the whole land ſhould firſt haue bene conquered, ere any partition had bin made. But therewithall it is ſaide, that the two Tribes of Gad and Ruben, excuſed themſelues for ỹ they had much Cattel, & it was a Countrie fit for graſing: & their deſiring to be ſetled, was not to ſeparate thẽſelues frõ their brethrẽ, or to be in better taking thã they. For they proteſted that they would goe with the reſt of the people, to fight with them againſt all their enemies, and that they would neuer reſt in the land that was aſſigned them, vntil all the reſidue were ſetled as well as they. Vpon the making of this promiſe, Moſes agreed vnto them. For before, he ſaid vnto them, behold, ye increaſe the heape for your ſinne. For heretofore when ye ſpied out the land, ye wouldnot enter into it at ſuch time as the way was opened for you. And nowe ye bring new lets: it ſhould ſeeme ye ſeeke nothing but to reſiſt God, and to ſhut his grace out of the doore. Moſes then ſpake ſharpely after this ſort againſt the children of Ruben and Gad, vntill they had ſhewed that their meaning was not to forſake their brethren, but to holde themſelues ſtill in the vnitie of the bodie, and in the meane while to leaue their Cattell at a ſtay, to the ende they might not bee too much combered with their wiues and children. And euen in this wee haue to marke the goodneſſe of God. For had not he beene the defender of them that were to dwell in that Countrie, what had come of it? Behold, a ſort of women and yong children are left behinde with their Cattell. Nowe we know that al the neighbours thereaboutes were deſirous to deſtroy the people of Iſrael, and a generall hatred or rather burning fire was kindled euery where againſt them. Therefore if the women and children had not bene preſerued vnder the hand of God, and vnder his protection: had they not periſhed a hundred times? And yet being ſo forſaken, they were not troubled by any man. Nowe then the people ought by all meanes to haue acknowledged Gods grace herein, to ſtrēgthen themſelues thereby againſt the time to come, and therewithal to vnderſtand that there was nothing of their owne to boaſt themſelues of, but that it was good reaſon that God ſhould be praiſed, and they acknowledge that all that good came of God. Thus ye ſee what the intent of Moſes was in this text.

And wee alſo in theſe dayes may well apply this leſſon to our inſtructiō. For ſeeing that God did ſo preſerue the women and little children, which were deſtitute of defence and ſuccour, & inuironed with enemies that were their nexte neighbours, and which were able to haue ſwallowed them vp at one chop, as I haue tolde you before: let vs aſſure our ſelues that our ſafetie conſiſteth not in the multitude of worldly defences. Though we haue neither wall nor bank, nor any thing elſe to defend vs: yet if God haue the leading of vs, and take the charge of our ſafetie, wee haue ynough, ſo as wee may defie all our enemies. Contrariwiſe, if wee bee deſtitute of Gods tuition: we may well prouide all the defences in the world: and yet wee ſhall bee neuer the neerer, all of it muſt needes tumble downe vpon our owne heades. Therefore let vs learne to call vpon our God, and to put our ſelues into his handes. And foraſmuch as he ſaieth that he will receiue the poore that are in aduerſitie: ſo as he promiſeth to ſupport thoſe that are deſtitute of all helpe and ſuccour of the world: let vs goe to him, aſſuring our ſelues that wee ſhall not haue the gate ſhut againſt vs. Be we once come thither: wee may boldly truſt that he will maintaine vs. And although wee be hemmed in with enemies on all ſides, and it may well ſeeme that we cannot eſcape their handes: yet will God be our defence, though there be nothing but vtter weakeneſſe in vs. Thus ye ſee what wee haue to remember vpon this example.

Yet notwithſtanding it is not to be doubted, but that herewithall Moſes doeth couertly vpbraide the children of Ruben & Gad, with their ouer great haſt. And although he accept their proteſtation, and thereupon doe graunt their requeſt: yet were they not to bee commended in that they ſought to haue their poſſeſſiō ſo ſoone in that Countrie. In deede their pretence was honeſt: but yet ſhould they haue helde thēmſelues ſtill vnder Gods prouidence, and not haue attempted any thing. So then, as wee haue ſeene here before, if wee will haue God to bleſſe vs, we muſt hold our ſelues ſimply to his word, without attempting any thing at all, ſo as wee ſteppe not one pace foreward to doany thing that he liketh not, ne ſwarue to the right hand or to the left. But the Rubenites would needes bee ſhifting aforehand, and ſought to ſettle themſelues before it was meete for them. They aſked not whither it were lawfull for them or no: they came not to Moſes with ſubmiſſion, ſaying, let it bee conſidered by generall aduiſe whether it be good or no: but they would needes determine the caſe themſelues at the firſt daſh. Wee haue great ſtore of Cattell ſay they: this Countrie is fit for vs: therfore it is meete that it ſhould be giuen vs in partition. Herein they are not in any wiſe to bee excuſed. True it is that they were made owners of that fat and fruitfull ſoyle: but yet did not God bleſſe them in al points. It had bin better for thē, ſpecially for the halfe tribe of Manaſſes, to haue bene ioyned with their brethren, than to haue had a poſſeſſiō ſo by themſelues. For by ỹ meane they were cut off from the tribe of Iuda: & they were bereft of ỹ preheminēce of being matched ẅ their brethren ỹ children of Ioſeph. And therfore if they had taried with the reſt, and waited Gods leiſure as they ought to haue done: it is certaine that they had bene bleſſed much more abundantly than they were, & conſequently the others to. Wee ſee how the Prophets ſpeake of thē: The fat Buls of Baſan (ſay they) haue their eys ſtopped ẅ greace. Bicauſe they liued at their eaſe in a fruitful & abundant Country, there was nothing but pryde and ſtubbornneſſe in them. Let vs learne therefore to forbeare the ſeeking of our owne commodities, and not be ſelfwilled in ſeaſing vppon one thing or other: but let vs tarie for the bleſſing of God. Wee ſee howe it fell out with Lot: for he had the like reſpect in chooſing to dwell in Sodom. That plaine was as an earthly Paradiſe: there was nothing but pleaſure, there was nothing but fruitefulneſſe in it. Lot gate him thither: but our Lorde made him to pay verie deare for his ſhotte. Although he was one of his choſen, although GOD pitied him euen to the ende, and although hee made his children to feele his grace notwithſtanding that they were begotten of inceſt: yet was hee chaſtiſed as he deſerued, for his tendering of his owne eaſe and commoditie too much. Hereby wee bee taught to brydle our deſires, and not to be ouer greedie vppon any fleſhly commoditie when wee ſee we may haue it at aduauntage. If God giue it vs, let vs accept it: but let vs beware that our affections be not too inordinate, as they cōmonly be. Thus much concerning the wordes wherewith Moſes vpbraided the children of Gad & Ruben and the halfe tribe of Manaſſes.

Pſa. 22. 13. & Amos. 4. 1.

Gen. 13. 10.

Now herewithall we haue to note this ſaying of his, That he gaue them the Countrie in partition. for it ſhould ſeeme that he taketh vpō him here to doe that which belonged to God. What was Moſes? Was the land his to giue? By what title could he bee named Lord of it? He is in that reſpect but as a member of ỹ body. True it is that God honoured him ſo much, as to make him the head of his people: But in the meane while how is the Land named? Gods reſt, that is to ſay, the land that God had aſſigned his people to reſt in. It is not ſayde to bee the reſt of Moſes, but the reſt of GOD. Seeing then that this land was in the hande of GOD: ſhoulde Moſes boaſt himſelfe of the giuing thereof? Wee muſt not thinke this ſtraunge: for when Gods

ſeruaunts ſpeake ſo, they chalendge not aught to themſelues, but ſhewe in what truſt they be put, and what charge is committed vnto them, by meanes whereof they ſeparate not themſelues from God. If a man be ſent from a prince with authoritie to doe the thinges that hee hath in commiſſion: hee taketh vppon him the name of the Prince as in way of borrowing, and ſaieth, I ordeine this, I appoint this, I commaunde this, I will haue this executed. And he that ſpeaketh after that manner, meaneth not to derogate his maſters authoritie. Euen ſo doe Gods ſeruauntes: for they knowe that hee hath ordeined them as his inſtrumentes, and imployeth them in his ſeruice, ſo as they doe nothing of themſelues, their maſter is hee that ouer ruleth them. That is the cauſe why Moſes ſaieth, that hee hath giuen them their portion: yea verily, not taking himſelfe as another mortal man, but as one whom God had ſet in his own place, and which did all thinges in the name of God. And ſo yee ſee what wee haue to beare in minde.

It is a verie profitable doctrine for vs: for it extendeth further than ſo. And for proofe therof, if wee had not the ſame rule: what woulde become of the gouernement of the Church? Wherefore are wee baptiſed, but to bee waſhed from all our ſpottes, that wee may bee pure and cleane before God, that wee may be members of Ieſus Chriſt, ỹ we may be clothed ẅ his righteouſnes, & (to be ſhort) that we may be renewed by the holy ghoſt? Nowe, lyeth it in ỹ mortall man that baptiſeth vs, to giue vs al theſe things? No, if we conſider him but as a man in his owne peculiar perſon. But ſith it is Gods will that the miniſters of his word ſhould baptiſe in his name: baptiſme muſt needs haue that vertue notwithſtanding that it be deliuered vs by the hande of a man. And againe, as touching the Lords ſupper, we ſee howe our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt doeth ſhew himſelfe there to be the foode of our ſoules. Nowe is there any creature that can make vs partakers of ſo great a benefite? No ſurely. But it is certeine that the ſupper is not a vaine thing: therefore when we come to receiue it, wee muſt conſider that the [miniſter though he be a] man is not ſeparated from Ieſus Chriſt. And in the preaching of Gods worde wee ſee the like. It is ſaide that the miniſters are ſent to inlighten the blinde, to deliuer priſoners, to forgiue ſinnes, and to turne mens heartes. Howe ſo? for thoſe are thinges that belong all onely vnto God. And in verie deede if a man ſhoulde goe about to bereaue him of the leaſt part of thoſe thinges, it were an vtter defacing of his maieſtie. For nothing is more peculiar to him than the forgiuing of ſinnes. Likewiſe doeth he reſerue to himſelfe the turning of mens heartes. Yet notwithſtanding hee communicateth all thoſe titles to ſuch as he hath ordeined to beare abrode his worde: telling them that he ſeparateth not himſelf from them, but rather that hee vſeth them as his handes and inſtruments. And in this caſe men muſt not muſe vpon the thing that they ſee, but they muſt lift vp their eyes aloft by faith. We ſee then what rule wee ought to drawe out of this text, where Moſes ſaith that hee gaue the lande in poſſeſſion. Namely that he treateth not of his owne perſon to vaunt himſelfe: but onely ſheweth, that hee had put the tribes of Gad and Ruben, and the halfe tribe of Manaſſes, in poſſeſſion of thoſe two kingdomes by Gods authoritie, according to the commiſſion that he had giuen him.

Howbeit to the ende that the profitableneſſe of this doctrine may bee the better knowen: let vs marke in one worde, that it expreſſeth vnto vs the power that is in Gods worde: namely that it is not a fleeting ſounde, but that it hath ſpeedy execution, accordingly as we ſee that when the Prophets threaten the citie Ieruſalem, they ſay they haue beſieged it and beaten it down alreadie. And howe is that? By dreames and viſions. This ſhould ſeeme to be a plaine mockerie. Yea, but in the ende it appeared, that it was not a rolling of their tongues onely, but that they ſhould not haue had a greater meane or power to raſe the Citie of Ieruſalem, though they had had a great hoſte of men. For by what meanes did the enemies bring it to paſſe? By vertue of the Propheſies. So on the contrarie parte, when they ſpeake of making the people to proſper: their manner of ſpeeche is, that all impedimentes are remooued, and their enemies ouercome. And howe is that? Becauſe Gods worde is vaine. So then, let vs vnderſtande that it is greatlie to our profite, to bee tolde that when Gods miniſters ſpeake, they caſt not foorth a fading ſounde, but ſuch a one as is matched with effecte: and therefore let vs bee edified thereby to our ſaluation. Sith wee knowe that the remiſſion of ſinnes is not preached vnto vs in vaine; it ought to aſſure vs. Come wee to a Sermon? Is Gods grace offered vs? Is it tolde vs that Ieſus Chriſt hath made amendes for vs, to ridde vs out of the curſednеſſe wherein wee were? When wee bee certified of theſe thinges, it is all one as if they were put into our handes. Why ſo? For when GOD ſendeth meſſengers to tell vs his will: hee matcheth ſuch force therewithall, as that the effect is ioyned to the worde.

Likewiſe when hee threatneth vs, let vs aſſure our ſelues that vengeance is in a readineſſe, as ſaith Sainct Paul. Let vs not thinke it a ſport and daliance when wee bee tolde of Gods curſe and wrath againſt the deſpiſers of the Goſpell, and againſt the diſobeyers of the ſame. Heereby wee ſee with what reuerence wee ought to reſort to Sermons. Alſo wee ſee in what taking all theſe heatheniſh ſort are, which come to Sermons as it were in ſcorne of God, with ſuch brutiſhneſſe as euen little children are aſhamed of them, inſomuch that there is neither feare of God nor honeſtie in them. Let vs be well aduiſed to ſhunne ſuch mens companies, and to abhorre them: aſſuring our ſelues that if wee learne not to miſlike of them, wee ſhall be intangled with them by becomming like them. Theſe (ſaye I) are the thinges which wee haue to remember, in that Moſes went not to exalt him-himselfe to deface Gods glorie: but shewed that God wrought by him and by his meanes.

Furthermore, whereas hee saieth that the children of Manasses, that is to say the halfe tribe, together with the whole tribes of Ruben and Gad bounde themselues by the promise
Num.32.27 that is rehearsed in the booke of Numeri, to goe before the Lorde that is to say in his presence: it is well woorth the marking: for it serueth to expresse the better, with what loyaltie they went to it. For if wee set not our eye vppon God there will alwayes bee some feynednesse in our promises, and in all our dealings, so as wee shall neuer goe to worke soundly and substantially. Wee knowe that naturally men are double harted, and that they paint and disguise their doings, insomuch that if it were possible for them, they woulde keepe no touch in any thing that they promise, longer than it were for their owne profite, or at leastwise vnlesse they were driuen to it for verie shame. To bee short, there wil bee no faithfulnesse in vs, except GOD ouerlooke vs, and wee looke vp to him in all our doings. And that is the cause why the men that were assigned their possession, did sweare to their brethren, euen in Gods presence, that GOD might bee a witnesse to punish their leaudnesse, if there were any guile, feyning, or treacherie at al in their case.

Hereby wee bee warned, that whensoeuer wee make any bargaine or couenant: wee muste not onely haue ame to the partie with whome wee haue to doe: but wee must also as it were set GOD among vs, and keepe our faith and promise to him that wee haue bounde our selues, as though GOD watched vs at euerie steppe, and that wee coulde not so soone worke deceite towardes any man, but that by and by GOD woulde steppe before vs to withstande it. That is the thing which wee haue to doe: but there are verie fewe of vs that thinke vppon it. For although the name of God bee called vppon, and solemne othes taken, and promises made autentically ynough, yea and that there bee order of Lawe to make vs feele his maiestie: yet doe most men shut their eyes, and in all the promises and othes that are made, [commonly] there is nothing sought but to deceiue one another. He that is suttleleast and fullest of shiftes, is the handsommest man: and such kinde of dealing is esteemed as a vertue. And why? For euerie man runnes gadding after his owne lustes and likings, yea & that in such wise, that they bee as blindfoldings to keepe vs from seeing God. Though wee thinke not vppon it nowe: yet will not God forget any of our deceites, spytes, trecheries, and falshoodes which wee commit against men. For hee hath tolde vs, that when an othe is taken
Exo.20.7.& Leuit.19.12 & Deut.23. betweene man and man: his glorie is defaced 21.& Ios.9. and himselfe openly mocked, if the promise be 19.& Matt. broken. Therefore let vs bee wel assured that he
5.33. wil not put vp such wrong, & that although wee bee neuer so blinde, yet will not hee play the blinkarde on his side, but will note and marke euery whit of it to bring it to account. And so yee see what wee haue to marke heere for one point.

By way wee see, that none but such as make lawful couenãts can make thẽ as in Gods sight. For as many as doe lewdly linke themselues together to helpe one another in naughtinesse, (as to confounde all right, to make wicked shiftes, to worke outrages, to oppresse men, or to maintaine themselues in their vnthriftinesse): as manie (I say) as conspyre after that fashion, are all faine to seeke lurkingholes: they are loth to shewe themselues to God or to come in his presence: nay they must rather shrinke away from him, but they cannot. Yet notwithstanding, the wicked sort doe fall asleepe, when they make those shamefull and detestable confederacies of theirs: they bee faine to holde themselues there as it were in the darke, and to shunne Gods presence as much as they can. So much the more then doth it stande vs on hande to remember this text, that in all our promises and in all our doings, wee may deale as in Gods sight, assuring our selues that hee is euer at hande to take notice of our couenaunts, and to beare witnesse of them, yea and to gouerne and direct all thinges aright, if wee proceede vprightly and soundely. And so yee see what wee haue to marke.

Nowe heere is yet moreouer a certaine vprightnesse to bee kept, whereof Moses speaketh when he commaundeth the Rubenytes and Gadytes to goe conquer the rest of the lande with their brethren, notwithstanding that they had their portion alreadie beyonde Iordan. Hereby wee be warned, first that if God haue vnyted vs in one bodie or corporation: one part of vs must not withdrawe our selues from the charges [of the common weale,] as if wee woulde say, let vs exempt our selues, and let the rest shifte for themselues: but it behoueth euerie man to imploy himselfe to the benefite of the whole state, and that hee which coulde shift for himselfe alone, shoulde not forbeare to take part with his brethren, and to put vnder his shoulder (as they say) to beare a peece of the burthen. This might bee declared more fully: but a glaunce will serue our turne well ynough, and the cheefest matter is, that wee must put it well in practise. Then let vs marke well, that if GOD
Rom.12.5. haue knitte vs into one bodie, wee must all doe the office of members, as we see howe the foote serueth the hande, the hande the eye, and euery other part imployeth it selfe according to his seuerall propertie and power, so as all redoundeth to the benefite of the whole.

Likewise muste wee obserue the same rightfull and reasonable order of dealing, when GOD hath set vs in one common weale. It was well knowen of the wretched Paynims, that there coulde bee no good ciuill order in the worlde, if euerie man were giuen to his
1.Cor.12.21 owne profite. If the hande shoulde separate it selfe and refuse to serue the rest of the bodie, and the rest of the members also: Yee see there woulde bee a good sort of pieces: but in the meane while they should all die and of necessity perish.

periſh. In like caſe is it with men when they will needes draw backe from the communion of life, which they ought to obſerue, and no man think vpon the common profite, but take it to be ſufficient that hee can profite himſelfe: for in the ende all muſt needes goe to hamocke. But this is chiefely to bee obſerued in the ſpirituall go-
1.Co.12.27 uernement of the Church, as Saint Paul ſhew-
Rom.12.5. eth it vs. For in the Church there is not onely a reſemblance of mans bodie, but the ſonne of God is our heade in verie deede. It is of him that wee bee, and of him haue wee grace and power, in ſuch portion and meaſure as it pleaſeth him to beſtowe vppon vs. Seeing it is ſo: let Eph.4.7.16. vs learne to maintaine peace and brotherlineſſe among vs. And that wee may ſo doe: let euerie of vs yeelde himſelfe to his neighbours, and let vs not be ſo wedded to our own peculiar aduantage, that we ſhoulde not take paine to pleaſure all thoſe with whome wee bee vnited. Neither let vs alledge, what haue I to doe with the bearing of ſuch a burthen as ſhoulde bee too heauie for mee, and which I cannot well away with? Let vs beware that wee holde not backe after that ſort, to maintaine our ſelues in ydleneſſe. For according to the abilitie that God giueth vs, ſo doth hee binde vs to ſerue our neighbours therewith. And why? For wee be al members of one bodie: there needeth none other reaſon to moue vs than that. So then, to be ſhort wee cannot be of our Lord Ieſus Chriſts flocke, vnleſſe wee conſider what he hath giuen vs, that wee may make the ſame profitable, and put it to 1.Cor.14.12 & Eph.4.12 the common edifying of the Church, as ſaieth Saint Paul.

As touching worldly conuerſation, let vs liue in ſuch wiſe with men, that as wee receiue good by them, ſo wee alſo on our ſide may looke to do good to them: ſo as there may be a mutuall anſwerableneſſe on both ſides. Nowe it is certaine that none of vs can forbeare his neighbours. Let a man bee of as good abilitie as he can wiſh, and yet neuertheleſſe he muſt ſtande in neede of other mens ſeruice in many thinges. Nowe, when hee knoweth that hee hath ſuch neede and neceſſity of other mens helpe: ſhould he drawe backe from his neighbours, or bee ſo nyce that hee will beare no burthen, but be loth to take any paine for the common weale? [It is no reaſon.] For if they that ſerue him ſhould bee at the ſame point, and bee as peeuiſh and proud as hee: muſt it not needes bee that all ſhoulde goe to wrecke? Yes: and therefore let vs learne, that in aſmuch as euen in the Church wee haue this bonde of ſeruing our neighbours: it behoueth likewiſe in reſpect of this preſent life and of all worldly affaires, to conſider with our ſelues ỹ inaſmuch as God maketh others to do vs good, and to profite vs diuers wayes, ſo as wee be ſuccored by them: we alſo ought to render the like againe on our ſide.

Now as concerning the people of Iſraels caſe, there was a ſpeciall conſideration in their conquering of the land of Chanaan. Why ſo? For it was not promiſed ſeuerally to the tribe of Iuda, or to the tribe of Beniamin, or to any of the other tribes alone: but generally to the whole ofspring of Abraham. Therefore it behoued this lande to bee conquered by them in common, and that afterwarde lottes ſhoulde bee caſt for it, as was done in the ende by Ioſua. But nowe that God commaundeth vs to follow one common trace, wee muſt applie this example to our ſelues, and conſider that the ſame rule which is ſet downe heere, is giuen to vs alſo. As howe? Doeth God commaunde, that we ſhould but euerie man ſeuerally for himſelfe reſiſt Sathan, and proceede more and more in the Goſpell? Is it not a common leſſon? [Yes.] Seeing then that God calleth vs ſo one with another, and will haue all to agree in one accorde, like good melodie: it is not for vs to ſeparate our ſelues any more a ſunder. Wherfore let vs conſider, that to aduaunce the kingdome of our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt and the ſaluation of all his: to builde vp his Church, and to make his Goſpell to proſper and floriſh: euerie man muſt not onely worke alone by himſelfe: but wee muſt alſo agree all in one, and drawe all by one lyne, and euery of vs ſtreine himſelfe to ſerue ſuch as haue neede of his helpe. And ſo wee ſee, that all ſuch as will needes builde ſo alone by themſelues, doe but worke confuſion. Of which ſort there are that thinke themſelues very able men, and that they coulde worke wonders to their owne ſeeming, inſomuch that they deſpiſe their neighbours, and woulde euen beare downe all other men before them to ſhew themſelues valiantfellowes, and that they doe a hundred fold more than all the reſt. And what commeth of ſuch pride, but ouerthrowe and confuſion? Let vs marke well therefore, that wee ſhall neuer ſerue God by furthering of the gladtidings of our ſaluation: vnleſſe we haue the ſaid concord, that we be readie and wel diſpoſed to helpe euerie man his neighbour, and that there bee one common eaſing one of another. Thus yee ſee what we haue to remember further vppon this ſtreine.

Now in concluſion it is ſaide heere, that Moſes incorageth Ioſua to be of good cheere, and to go through with the thing which he himſelfe might not do, that is to wit, to conuey the people ouer Iordan, and to conquer all the lande of Chanaan. But firſt of all hee ſetteth before him the victories that the people had had againſt Og king of Baſan, and Sehon king of Heſebon. Thou haſt ſeene (ſaith he) how the Lord hath deale with theſe two kings. He ſaith not, As you haue done to theſe two kings, [but as the Lorde hath done]. For as hath bin declared, here is no flattering of men, nor no tickling of their eares: for they bee but too forwarde alreadie in taking more vpon them than belongeth to them. Seeing then that men are ſo naturally giuen to ſelfeweening let vs vnderſtand that it is expedient for them to be meekened, and to bee bereft of all their pride and loftineſſe, to the intent they may knowe that they haue nothing of their owne. But this cannot bee done, without making them to vnderſtande, that whatſoeuer they haue, they are beholden to Gods meere grace for it. That is the cauſe why Moſes ſaith expreſly, Thou haſt ſeene with thine eyes, what God hath done vnto theſe two kinges. As if he ſhould ſay, If yee knowe not the power that God hath ſhewed you: of whom is it long? The matter is not darkſome of it ſelfe, it is altogether viſible and apparant. Therefore it muſt needes bee that your owne vnthankefulneſſe hindereth you, and that your malice blindeth you. Seeing then that God hath made you to perceiue his goodneſſe, euen as it were by eyeſight: bee you mindfull of it continually.

But let vs marke, that Moſes in incouraging Ioſua, doth not onely exhort the whole people to giue thankes vnto God, and to praiſe him for the benefites that they had receiued of him alredie: but alſo harten them for the time to come, to the ende they ſhould not doubt but that God woulde goe through with the thing hee had begonne. And the manner of his ſpeech ſheweth it ſufficiently. Thou haſt ſeene (ſaith he) howe thy God hath ſuccored & helped thee againſt thoſe two kinges. As much ſhalt thou doe to all the kingdomes through which thou ſhalt paſſe. As if he ſhould ſay, Yee haue ſeene trials enowe alreadie of Gods goodneſſe: and therefore ye cannot diſtruſt him, but you muſt be too too vnthankfull. For he hath ſhewed you what his power is, it is not for a pang and away, hee hath ſhewed you that he is faithfull in all his promiſes. Nowe yee knowe what he hath promiſed to your fathers: therfore looke you for the performance of the things towardes you, which your fathers hoped for, and bee yee conſtant in it. Think not that your God is weary of doing you good, or that in proceſſe & length of time hee waxeth vnable to bring the things to paſſe which he hath begun: no: but reach out your truſt to the vttermoſt, & aſſure your ſelues that hee wil likewiſe continue his goodneſſe and power towards you. Thus ſee wee what Moſes meant.

Howbeit foraſmuch as the incomberances were greate: hee ſaith expreſly to the people, Be ye not afraid: and vnto Ioſua, Feare not. Wherin hee ſheweth that wee muſt not meaſure Gods grace by our owne vnderſtanding. For when thinges ſhall ſeeme to vs vnpoſſible: God will finde meanes to ouercome all thinges that are againſt him to the worldward, ſo as they ſhal not hinder him to bring al his matters to perfection, and to execute his determination.

But to the intent to gather the ſumme of the doctrine that is contained in this texte: let vs marke howe it is not without cauſe, that Moſes directeth his ſpeech to Ioſua. For albeit that the doctrine belong to the whole bodie of the people: yet was it meete that Ioſua ſhoulde bee incouraged, as heade and Capteine of the people: For it may happe that a people ſhall be well diſpoſed: and yet marre all for want of good guiding, accordingly as wee ſee howe al things goe to hauocke and to wracke, when the heades and gouernours are not ſuch as they ought to be, yea euen although there appeare good diſpoſition in the people: inſomuch that when things goe amiſſe, a man ſhall heare ſighings and groanings, and euerie bodie ſeekes to goe the right way, ſo that if it lay in priuate mens powers to remedie diſorders and vices, they woulde ſurely doe what they coulde. Two or three vnthriftes are ynough to trouble a whole common weale when they once ſet vppon it and the diuel driues them forward, if the gouernours ſet not ſtay in the matter. And therefore it is not for naught that Moſes directeth his ſpeech preciſely to Ioſua. For (as I ſaide) it importeth ſo much the more, ỹ ſuch as are in publike authoritie ſhould bee well diſpoſed, that they may the better guide the whole bodie. But for aſmuch as it ſhalbee ſpoken of yet more at large hereafter: I doe but touch the thing briefely, to haue a ſhort concluſion of this text.

Furthermore whereas it is ſaide, That God which ſmote Sehon king of the Amorrhytes and Og king of Baſan, will doe the like to all the kingdomes of the lande that he promiſed to Abraham: let vs marke (as I ſaide afore), what when God hath made vs to feele his gracious goodneſſe: he will ſtill giue vs courage for the time comming, to the ende wee may not doubt but hee will holde on continually: And that as we haue founde the force of his power by experience heeretofore: ſo we may aſſure our ſelues of it to the ende: not doubting but that if wee doe as hee commaundeth vs, he will bring all our enterpriſes to good and happie iſſue, ſo long as they bee according to his will. For without that, wee ſhoulde become too vnthankefull and churliſh, burying his goodneſſe towardes vs, and ſhutting our eyes, that wee might not ſee it. And if wee ſee ſuch chaunges as may abaſh vs: let vs returne to that which I haue ſaide: that is to wit, that we muſt not meaſure Gods power by the worldly meanes that trouble vs, neither muſt we ſtande ſcanning after this ſort, and ſaye, howe can that come to paſſe, how may that be poſſible? Let vs not put forth any ſuch allegations: for wee muſt yeelde this praiſe vnto God, that although thinges be vnpoſſible to vs, although wee haue neuer ſo great daungers to paſſe, although thinges bee farre out of order as wee wote not where to become: yet will God prouide for them. Then let vs reſort vnto God in that behalfe, acknowledging ſuch power in him, that although all our wits faile vs, yet wee put the matter into his hande, aſſuring our ſelues that hee can bring it to paſſe. That is the thing which we haue to marke here. And without that, what woulde become of our ſaluation? True it is that God hath ſhewed himſelfe heretofore to bee our guide and king, and therein wee haue the more cauſe to magnifie his grace. Neuertheleſſe, when wee come to the point that we ſhoulde hope for Gods helpe, and that his ſuccour ſhall not faile vs at our neede: wee muſt ſhut our eyes at all ſtoppes, and refer all thinges into his hande, waiting for the accompliſhment of his promiſes. Seeing he hath bound himſelfe to vs of his owne free goodneſſe: let vs put him in truſt with the euentes of the thinges that ſeeme vnpoſſible vnto vs. And if we doe ſo, then may wee certainely thinke our ſelues ſafe againſt all the aſſaultes of Sathan and all his champions. And though they practiſe all that euer they can to ouerthrow vs: yet ſhal we not be as men diſcomfited and forlorn, but God will worke in ſuch ſort for vs, as wee ſhall not needs to feare but that he will bring our ſaluation to perfectneſſe: and albeit that to our ſeeming it bee vnpoſſible to bee done, and that we cannot finde any way out by reaſon of the hinderances that let vs: yet will he alwayes make vs to ouercome them. Thus yee ſee how we ought to put this leſſon in vre.

Nowe let vs kneele downe in the preſence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to doe them away, and to correct them immediatly that we may obteine forgiueneſſe of them: and that for aſmuch as wee cannot yeelde our ſelues ſo wholly to him, as hee might guide and gouerne vs according to his holy will: it may pleaſe him to ridde vs of all our wicked affections, and of all the luſtes of our fleſh, that wee may frame our ſelues vnto his righteouſneſſe, and in the meane while be borne withall in our infirmities, vntill he haue taken vs hence to himſelfe. And ſo let vs all ſay, Almightie God heauenly father, &c.

The xvij. Sermon, which is the third vpon the third Chapter.

23 And at the ſame time I prayed vnto the Lord, ſaying:

24 O Lord God, thou haſt begun to ſhew thy ſeruant thy greatneſſe and thy mightie hand. For what God is there in heauen or earth, that can doe according to thy workes, and according to thy mightineſſe?

25 I beſeech thee let me goe and ſee the good lande that is beyond Iordan, and this goodly mountaine, and Libanus.

Deut.1.37. I Tolde you heretofore that Moſes made mention how God had bereft him of the benefite and honour of entering into the land of promiſe, for the ſinne of the people. Nowe he rehearſeth the ſame matter againe, howbeit to another ende. For it was conuenient that the people ſhould be done to vnderſtande, that they ſhoulde not alwayes haue ſuch a leader. To the intent therefore that the exhortations which Moſes maketh, might be the better receiued, and the people take the better heede to them: hee telleth them that he muſt leaue them, and that he ſhall not haue leaue to paſſe ouer Iordan. That is his meaning, wherof I ſhal ſpeake more fully hereafter. In the meane ſeaſon, let vs ſee what he ſaith here. Firſt of all he reherſeth that he beſought god, that he might enter into the promiſed lande. But hee had alredie had the ſentence of condemnation, that hee might not goe. It ſhoulde ſeeme then that he reſiſteth God as much as in him lyeth, and that hee cannot finde in his heart to admit his ſaying. And in deede wee cannot vtterly excuſe him that hee did not amiſſe. For we cannot bee tickled with ſo ſmall a deſire contrarie to Gods will: but wee bee by and by blameworthie. But when wee be ſo bolde as to come vnto God, to make a requeſt cleane contrarie to his will: then is the offence double. And why? For the foundation of all our prayers is faith. But there can bee no faith without Gods promiſe. Who ſo then commeth to caſt out his pangs, & deſireth of God the thing that hee knoweth ſhall miſlike him: doth he not paſſe his bounds? Doth he not goe cleane contrarie to that which the rule of praying will beare? Yes. Now, this was ſeene in Moſes, and therefore it followeth that hee did amiſſe. And indeede the aunſwere ſheweth it. For like as God was angrie with him before, becauſe he had not glorified him in the ſtrife that the people moued for want of drinke: ſo is hee angrie with him nowe againe. Though we had none other witneſſe, euen this ought to ſuffice vs, that God doeth expreſly ſhutte the gate againſt him for the time to come, that he ſhoulde no more returne vnto him. Heereby wee bee done to vnderſtande, that wee muſt bee earneſt in repreſſing our deſires, and in bridling them. For hardly is there any man to bee founde, that euer yeelded himſelfe ſo pliable to obey God, as Moſes was, Let vs ſeeke on all ſides, [and yet ſhall we not finde one.] It is certaine that Mo was an excellent mirrour of meekeneſſe, and ſuch a one as had his minde vtterly brought downe, ſo as he ſought not to followe any thing which was not commaunded him from aboue. And yet for all that, it appeareth that he coulde not ſo reſtraine and ouermaſter himſelf, but that there was ſome exceſſe in his affections. If this befell to Moſes who had beene accuſtomed to obey God in all pointes: howe ſhall we do which haue profited ſo euill in that behalfe? So then, we ſee heere a deede which ſheweth vs what the cheefe exerciſe and ſtudie of Gods children is: namely to ſubdue their affections, that it may not befall them to deſire any thing, but ſuch as they knowe doeth pleaſe GOD. For that is the onely rule whereby to diſcerne good from bad. Marke that for one point.

Moreouer wee muſte not ſtaie vppon the outwarde apparance. If wee haue a deſire to a thing, although the ſame ſeeme good and iuſt, yet muſt wee not thinke that it is therefore lawfull. For if wee looke vppon Moſes deſire, euerie of vs will ſay it was holy. Yea and wee maruell howe it was so refused, considering that hee spake not so much for himselfe, as for the common profite of all the people. For his desire tended to none other ende, but that the people might haue beene the better stablished and confirmed in Gods grace. Hee sawe the vocation wherevnto hee had beene ordeined, to bee most excellent: hee had executed it alreadie by the space of fortie yeeres: hee sawe the hardest was yet behinde: hee was acquainted with the peoples vices: hee knewe the power of mind that was giuen vnto himselfe: hee was sure hee had purchased greate credite nowe long agoe: Loe heere the causes why hee wished to haue entred into the land. For being a man of sixescore yeeres olde, hee was not wedded to this present life. And besides all this, wee knowe that inasmuch as hee had beene taken vp heeretofore into the mountaine, and had tasted there of Gods glorie: he was not intangled with transitorie delightes, nor with any worldly thing. Yee see then that Moses had no respect to himselfe, but woulde faine haue accomplished his office, in setting the people in possession of the heritage that had beene promised them, and by that meane haue stablished the seruice of God in the holy lande. Who woulde not say that this was a good desire, considering howe it tended to the glorifying of GOD, and to the procuring of the welfare of the whole people? Loe heere the two principall endes where vnto the whole life of man shoulde tende. And yet notwithstanding, Moses did amisse. Why so? for hee resisted God. It ought to haue suffised him, when hee had once hearde that GOD woulde not bee serued by him in that case. Albeit then that the desire that hee purposeth bee excellent in it selfe, and ame at a good and rightfull ende: yet doeth it not faile to bee worthie of blame. The reason is, because hee submitted not himselfe to God.

Nowe then, wee see the thing that I saide afore: that is to wit, that wee may nowe and then haue faire colours to desire this or that: but in so doing wee may goe too farre, yea and indeede wee shall not obtaine our requestes. Why so? For obedience must goe before: and without that wee cannot builde, but to our ruine and confusion. And it is a thing verie requisite. For men cannot bridle themselues from being wise in their owne conceites: insomuch that if wee take a thing to bee good: wee cannot bee perswaded to the contrarie, GOD cannot winne so much at our handes as to getre the masterie of vs. So much the more then behoueth it vs to take paine to holde our selues wholly in awe, to the end we build not any thing which God alloweth not, but that wee alwayes haue that marke before our eyes, and rest wholly vppon it.

Nowe if it bee so that the desires which of their owne nature are good, holie, and commendable, doe neuertheless become sinfull and blameworthie, when they aduaunce themselues against God: what are they when wee couet euill thinges, and giue heade to our fleshly lustes? Wee see that the thing which GOD hath forbidden vs is euill, and yet notwithstanding wee take leaue to desire it: is this to bee excused? Nowe then, to the intent wee may take profite by this doctrine, let vs marke that although our desires to see to, are as good as can bee: yet must wee abstein from them vnlesse God doe like of them. For at that ende muste wee beginne. And furthermore, that if wee ought to correct our desires, though there bee no likelihoode of euill in them: we ought much more to bee well aduised that wee cast not forth our bubbles when wee bee tempted to euill, and when wee be caried away to fleshly lustes. All that geere must bee killed starke deade, seeing it is not lawfull for vs euen to wish the thing that is good, except wee haue leaue of God. But we must then specially obserue this lesson, when wee goe about to pray: for as I haue saide alredie, the foundation of all our prayers is faith: and what importeth that? Euen that we should heare God speake. If wee pray at all aduenture, doubting whether wee shall obtaine the thing that wee require or no: it is but hypocrisie and it shall not boote vs at all, saith the holy scripture. It standeth vs then in hande, to bee well assured when wee come before God, so as we beleeue certainly that our praying is not in vaine, and that wee shall not bee disappointed of the thing that wee require. And that is the point where in the prayers of the Christians doe differre from the prayers of the infidelles. For the infidelles and vnbeleeuers may well flee vnto God, and crane this and that at his hande: but what for that? they bee euer wauering, and wote not whether they shall obteine or no. For they depende not vppon the promises. But as for vs, wee must assure our selues of the loue of our God, & that he is much redier to graunt than wee bee to require, yea and that hee is so pitifull and hath such a respect of our miseries and necessities to relieue them, that he euen preuenteth vs. Wee must bee throughly perswaded of this when wee pray. But how shall we knowe it? Wee must not beare our selues on hande that wee holde God bounde vnto vs, and that wee shall make him to graunt all our desires: for what a malapertnesse were that? And what an honouring of God were it, if euerie man shoulde say, I trowe God will do whatsoeuer I list to commaunde him? But we must rest vppon his promises. Yee see then that faith is requisite in our prayers: that is to wit, that no man thrust forth himselfe vpon his owne heade, but that hauing the promise whereby God allureth vs vnto him, wee goe vnto him boldely, not doubting but that hee will keepe touch with vs. Seeing it is so: wee must note nowe that al our praiers are faultie, if they bee not ruled by the wil of God. For when wee presume to aske of him whatsoeuer comes in our heade, there is no promise for vs to trust vnto in going to it so without aduise. And therefore for asmuch as we passe our bounds, wee be neuer a whit furthered by it. Thus ye see that in praying we must alwayes cõsider what god permitteth vs, & what his will is y

we shoulde aske of him: and that wee must euer haue this modestie and soberneſſe with vs to aske counsaile of him, as though his spirit spake in vs, and indyted vnto vs the verie forme of Matt. 6. 9. our prayer. And for that cause hath our Lorde Iesus Christ made as it were a summe of all the requestes which wee ought to make vnto God. For although wee bee not tyed to those words, to say hollowed bee the name of God, his kingdome come, his will bee done, &c. yet must we referre all our desires, wishes and requestes to those sixe articles, which are conteyned in the praier that our Lord Iesus Christ hath giuen vnto vs. And although the Fathers of olde time had not the same rule; yet were they alwayes gouerned by Gods spirite, to keepe them from wandering from the thinges that are taught vs at this day, so as all their prayers were conformable to the rule that our Lorde Iesus Christ hath giuen vs. Nowe then we see, that all such as take leaue to pray what they list, doe not direct themselues to God as they ought to doe, and therefore are they likewise disappointed of their desires. And for the same cause is it, that I haue tolde you, that in all our prayers wee must be well aduised, that the thinges bee lawfull according to Gods worde. But nowe there are some thinges which God hath promised without exception, and those wee may demaunde without condition. Whensoeuer wee haue offended him, (which thing wee neuer cease to doe) wee must resort to the remedie, praying God to forgiue vs our sinnes and to shewe vs mercie. God hath assured vs that hee is redie to doe it. And seeing he hath promised it, our comming to him to seeke fauour must not bee as though we wist not what woulde be the ende of our request: but wee must bee fully resolued that hee will shewe vs fauour indeede. Yet notwithstanding, if therewithall wee desire him to release his chastisementes: that is nowe another thing. For hee may well pardon our faultes, but yet in the meane while hee wil not cease to subdue vs, vntill he perceiue that our vices are corrected. I meane not as the Papists doe, namely that God pardoneth the fault, and reteineth the punishment still, as they haue surmised, saying that when God forgiueth men their sinnes, hee ceaseth not in the meane while to execute his rigor vpon them as a iudge. It is nothing so. But God chastiseth vs for our sinnes after hee hath forgiuen them, howbeit, not in way of punishment, but to make vs looke better to our selues & to be warer hereafter, so as we become not so vnconstant as to returne to the selfe same fault againe. Then if God perceiuing vs to haue neede to be tamed, doe list to chastise vs: if wee require of him simply & without condition, that he should by and by withdraw his hand: that request were out of square. For why? He perchãce sendeth vs some sicknes or some other crosse, & hee knoweth that it is not ynough for vs to bee sicke a two or three dayes: and therefore the disease must continue and increase, vntill wee bee throughly clensed of it. Therfore when we make any requests vnto God, he must haue the moderating of them. Why? For we know not his will: I knowe not what is meete for mee, neither hath God giuen me any promise of it: nowe must I in this case stay my selfe, and referre my selfe to God in praying to him, I must patiently waite for such issue as he shall thinke good, and I must yeelde my selfe as a prisoner wholly to his will, vtterly forsaking all mine owne affections. Now then we see that where wee be not sure of Gods will: wee must not warrant our selues any thing vppon our owne heades, but wee must goe to it with condition, that God shall doe to vs as hee listeth. And therewithall wee must pray him to make vs thinke wel of al his doings, and to deale so with vs as wee may agree there vnto: howbeit, not as inforsed, but of our owne accorde. Thus yee see what we haue to remember vppon this example of Moses. Sith it is so: let vs beware that we pray not for any thing, which we knowe doth displease God and is condemned of him. As howe? If we should desire him that we might liue euer in this worlde: we knowe we be created to another ende, yea and we cannot be his children, but we must be as pilgrims in this world, as saith the Apostle. Seeing it is so: he that shoulde desire to liue alwayes here, should renounce the kingdome of heauen, separate himself from god, and barre himselfe from all accesse vnto him. So then yee see heere a thing that were cleane contrarie to the manner of praying aright: as much is to be saide of all our sinfull lustes. Wee knowe what God hath forbidden vs: if we deale to the contrarie, is it not as if wee shoulde play the chafed bulles or wilde beastes? And suppose wee that such manner of praying prouoketh not Gods vengeance against vs? Is it not a heynous treason to him, seeing wee cannot deuise to abuse his name more falsly? Therefore wee must alwayes looke wel about vs. Seeing the case standeth vppon the finding out of the will of our God: wee must (I say) be well aduised what he promiseth vs, & then shall we haue our requests graunted vs.
He. 11. 13, 16

Yet notwithstanding wee haue to marke, that when Moses desired God that hee might goe ouer Iordan: hee did it not wilfully of purpose to disobey God. For hee had humbly receiued the condemnation that wee sawe, whereby GOD had banished him from entering into the lande of promise: but as nowe he forgetteth himselfe, and this escapeth from him. When as wee see this, let vs marke that wee had neede to bee so much the more diligent in examining our owne wishes, to witte whether they bee conformable to Gods wil, and squared throughout by the rule of his worde or no. For wee may well protest that our intent is to bee subiect to God, and wee may well say it without dissimulation: but yet in the meane time wee shall not cease to bee intangled in wandering imaginations, and our wittes shall vanish away. If Moses being a man wholly bent to obey GOD, were so farre ouerseene, as to confounde himselfe in his owne request: what shall wee doe? For wee haue a great sort of thicke and darke cloudes, which dimme our ſight that wee cannot ſee cleare. And therefore let vs ſharpen our wittes, that we may conſider what is lawfull for vs to demaunde with godlineſſe, and what liketh God according as hee ſhall haue declared it vnto vs. Thus yee ſee what wee haue to beare in minde. And if wee chaunce at any time to ouerſhoote our ſelues through heate, and to require the thing which wee cannot tell whether wee ſhoulde obtaine or no: let vs by and by correct it with this addition, My God, thy will bee done. As for example, A man hath his childe or his wife ſicke, or he is in ſome other perplexitie: Alas my God (ſaith hee), and hee caſteth forth ſome vehement affection, ah my God, wilt not thou pittie mee? muſt I bee thus afflicted with extremitie? Well, when hee hath made this requeſt, he muſt acknowledge that there is a fault in it. And let vs not excuſe our ſelues by ſaying, As for me, I neuer meant to withſtand God or his will: but when wee once knowe the fault, let vs goe and adde this correction, Alas my God, indeede ſuch is my deſire, that thou knoweſt to what end it is: but yet for all that, it becommeth me to yeelde thee thy principall ſeruice which thou preferreſt before all others: that is to wit, obedience, ſo as I humble my ſelf wholly in this caſe vnder thy hande. Euen ſo Lorde, diſpoſe thou of mee and of all mine at thine owne pleaſure. Ye ſee then that in examining our requeſts, when we doubt whether God like of them or no: we muſt enter into this conſideration, that God ought to ouerrule vs, that we may yeeld him his deſerued honour, and all our affections bee ſo bridled, as he may haue the maſterie of vs. That is the true manner of praying, if we intend to be hearde.

But by the way we muſt alſo marke the thing that is ſet downe heere. Moſes to the intent to obtaine his requeſt, ſaith, Lorde thou haſt begun to ſhewe thy ſeruant the highneſſe of thy mightie hande. When Moſes ſpeaketh after that faſhion, it is a kinde of proteſting that his putting of himſelfe forth to pray, is not for any ſeruice that he hath done to God: hee alledgeth not any ſuch thing. No: but he proteſteth that God had ſhewed him fauour alreadie, and therefore he deſireth him to continue it ſtill. And it is a point that wee ought to marke wel, namely that when we come vnto God, the beſt reaſon that wee can alledge vnto him, to winne our requeſts at his hande, is to ſay, alas Lorde, wee be exceedingly bound vnto thee alredie. If a mortall man haue done vs a good turne, wee may well bee aſhamed to be alwayes hanging vpon him: but it is not ſo towards God: For he neuer ceaſeth to do vs good: neither can hee bee dreined drie in doing good, as creatures ſhould. And yet notwithſtanding, if wee ſhould return three or foure times to a man that hath done vs good or pleaſured vs, we might ſay: Sir, the goodneſſe that you haue ſhewed mee heretofore, for the which I think myſelfe greatly boũd vnto you, maketh me bold to repaire vnto you againe, euen to increaſe my dette to you the more. If wee might ſay ſo to mortall men: much more ought wee to ſay it vnto God, for vnto him wee can alledge no deſerts, nor any thing elſe of our owne. Therefore wee muſte followe that which is ſhewed vs heere, ſaying: Lorde, ſeeing thou haſt begunne to do vs good, goe through with it. For God bindeth himſelfe to vs in doing vs good: not that he is tyed to it of neceſſitie, we muſt not ſtep to him with ſuch luſtineſſe as though hee owed vs any thing: but after as we haue felt the experience of his goodneſſe and grace towardes vs: wee may bee ſo much the more familiar with him. And that is the thing whereon wee muſt caſt our eye: and it is alſo the thing wherein GOD is rightly glorified by vs. When I come vnto him and ſay, Ah Lorde, true it is that nothing I am, nor nothing I can: I haue nothing in mee but vtter naughtineſſe: neuertheleſſe, foraſmuch as I haue found thee bountiful to me heeretofore, & thou haſt ſhewed thy ſelfe good to me ſo many ways: therefore doe I reſort vnto thee ſtill. Beholde, by my ſo doing, GOD (ſay I) is glorified, both for the time preſent and for the time to come. And dit is not onely Moſes that hath vſed this manner of praying: Wee ſee it was common among all the auncient fathers. Howe often ſee wee it vſed in the Pſalmes: and wee ſee alſo that Iacob did the like. Lorde (ſaith hee) I am ſtuffed full of thy benefites: when I conſider the good that thou haſt done mee, I cannot but acknowledge that thou haſt vſed wonderfull mercie towardes mee: and yet for all that, I am faine nowe to repayre to thee ſtill. Wherefore let vs learne, that if Moſes being a man of GOD, yea and ſuch a one as had ſo excellent recorde of the holy Ghoſt, alledged not any deſertes of his, ne vaunted of any worthineſſe of his owne parte, in his praying vnto GOD: much more ought wee to confeſſe that wee bee not worthie to open our lippes vnto him: and to ſtoope and to diſcharge our ſelues of all ſelfeſtimation when wee come vnto him, ſo as wee preſume not vpon any thing that is in our ſelues. Marke that for one point.

Pſal. 30.7. Gen. 32.10

But though wee bee vnworthie to pray: wee haue well wherewith to imbolden vs, by reaſon of the greate number of benefites that wee haue receiued at Gods hande. For his reaching out of his hande vnto vs, is not to doe vs good for one day, but to continue, and to giue vs acceſſe to reſort to him againe to morrowe. In ſo much that when GOD hath once beene gracious to vs, thereby hee ſheweth that hee woulde haue vs to come ſtill to him, ſeeing hee hath ſhewed vs the way and opened vs the gate.

So then, let vs learne to call to minde the great number of benefites, whereby GOD hath vttered his loue towards vs, to ſtrengthen our ſelues withall, that wee may take heart to warrant our ſelues by true faith, that hee will heere vs at our neede. And ſurely, as for them that minde not Gods benefites: they bee at their wittes ende when they come to the pinche. And the ſame is the verie cauſe why we be ſo colde in praying, and why we

goe to it so vnlustily, not knowing whether wee shall obtaine aught or no, or whether our prayers shall bee in vaine and vnprofitable or no. Why so? For wee bethinke vs not of the promises that GOD hath made vs, and (as yee would say) of the hansels which he hath giuen vs. He hath assured vs oftentimes that wee shall neuer come vnto him amisse: and we thinke not vppon it at all. Our owne vnthankfulnesse therfore, is the let that wee haue not a true and right trust in him, and that wee cannot repaire vnto him to say, Lorde, I doubt not but thou art mercifull to mee, and admittest mee alwaies vnto thee, but not for any worthinesse of mine. Neuertheless I beseeche thee remember the benefites that I haue receiued at thy hand: for it is vpon that trust that I come vnto thee: hoping that as thou hast shewed thy selfe gracious and bountifull to mee heretofore, so thou wilt continue still vnto the ende. Thus ye see what wee haue to remember in that Moses saieth, Lord thou hast begun to shewe thy seruaunt the highnesse of thy mightie arme.

Now Moses speaketh here expressely of Gods highnesse and greatnesse, and of the mightie power of his hand. As if he should say, that God had made him to feele an extraordinarie working, and that the grace whereby hee was induced to pray vnto GOD, was a speciall one aboue that which euerie man feeleth. For God had vttered an vnaccustomed maner of power, so as they were no common thinges which he shewed vnto Moses. That then was ỹ cause why he desired to bee brought into the lande of promise. As if he had saide, My God, thou knowest that thou hast chosen mee, not as some other person among vs, but as an elect vessel: & therefore forasmuch as thou hast vsed mee in thy seruice, nowe vouchsafe to bring me into the land. And herein wee see, that Moses desired this, not so much for his owne sake, as for the whole peoples sakes, that all of them might haue fared the better by it. For it was a thing that might haue troubled ỹ weaklings, to see the leader of ỹ people die. Ye see they were a people that were ouerbold, at leastwise in rashnesse: but yet when they should obey God, they were seene to be cowardly ynough: and when Moses died, it was ynough to haue made them vtterly vnweeldie, insomuch as it might haue caused great offence among them. What meaneth this [might they haue saide?] The Lorde was determined to put vs in possession of the lande: and why doeth he nowe bereaue vs of him whom he had ordeined to bee our guide? Moses hath bene his lieuetenant vnto this houre, and nowe he goeth away to die. It should seeme then that God had altered his minde, and intended not to goe through with the thing he had begun. Moses had an eye to all this. And therefore, if we looke no further, we see so much ỹ more, that his desire was good and holy: but his fault was, that being condemned of God, whereas he ought to haue held him to it and not to haue gone any further to reply against it: he did it not.

Moreouer he addeth therewithall, What God is hee in heauen or earth, that hath done according to thy workes, and according to thy mightie power? This manner of speache to say, What God is he in heauen or earth, seemeth perchaunce to be fond. For is there any other GOD, than hee that had published his lawe by the hand of Moses? If hee alonely bee God, then is this comparison superfluous, yea and euen fonde, and to no purpose. But wee haue to note that in speaking so, Moses meant not that there is a multitude of Gods, so as euerie of them wrought according to his owne abilitie and power, and that the GOD of Israel surmounted all the rest, and was mightier than they all: Moses had no such diuelish superstitiō in his head. For he knew well ynough ỹ there is but onely one God, euen he that had reuealed himselfe to their father Abraham, the verie same which had shewed by his deedes, that he is ỹ euerlasting & vnchangeable God: but he spake so as in respect of men. Although men do generally confesse that all good commeth of God: yet ceasse they not to forge idols after their owne fansie: insomuch ỹ in sted of resorting to the true God that made heauen & earth, which reuealed himselfe to the fathers: they wander away after their own imaginations (as saith S. Paul,) and fal to deuising of they wote not what. As soone as we conceiue any whit of the diuine Maiestie: by and by wee bee gadding after idols, and turne away from the liuing God. And thereupon came it that euerie nation had his God. If man had asked them, what intende ye to doe, yee wretched soules? [they woulde haue answered,] wee intende to serue God. But yet for all that, they worshipped idoles. And why? For they turned away from the simple essence of God, and worshipped the things which they had set vp in their owne dotages and fooliſh conceites. According wherunto, when any of thē had any welfare or prosperitie, they would say, God be praised, God hath done vs this good turne: but in the meane while they fathered all vpon their idols. If a mā had said to the Egyptians in the time of Moses, now sirs ye haue had a fruitefull yeere, yee haue gotten in good store of Corne and Wine, and whence comes all this? [They woulde haue answered,] it is GOD that hath helped vs. And yet notwithstanding they worshiped an Oxe, they worshipped bruite beastes, yea and euen Serpentes and the herbes of the earth. It was as brutish a kinde of dealing as might be. Although this people was sharpe witted and suttle aboue all others: yet were they become so brutish, that they gaue ouer themselues to all the abominations of the worlde. To bee shorte, when they had either peace, or health, or abundaunce of wealth: they woulde say God, God: the worde God ran trotting euerywhere: But in the meane while euerie man had a God by himselfe. Such a one was Baal Peor (of whom wee shall speake hereafter) which was the GOD of the Ammonites. Thus did Idolatrie reigne euery where, and euerie man had his Patrons and gods by himselfe. In consideration whereof Moses saith, Of a trueth Lorde, men abuse thy benefites, and when thou doeſt them good, (as in deede all proceedeth from thy hand:) they do vtterly forget it, or marre it, or belie it. For they beare themſelues on hande that they receiue thoſe things of their Gods, that is to ſay of their idols, which are but leaſinges and dotages. And ſo are men vtterly ouerſeene. But Lord, howſoeuer the world fareth, thou haſt vttered ſuch a power towardes vs, as all the Heathen muſt needes haue their mouthes ſtopped, ſo as they cannot ſaye, Theſe are Gods that haue wrought as great miracles as the God of Iſrael. If thy deliuering of thy people bee compared with all the benefites which thou haſt beſtowed vpon men: it will appeare that thou art the ſouereigne God, & that thou haſt ſhewed forth thy mightie arme in ſuch wiſe, as all other Gods muſt needs be caſt down. Deut.10.17. & Pſal.50.1 & Eſa.45.21 Thus ye ſee what Moſeſes meaning was. And the Scripture ſpeaketh often after that maner, as though it graunted men their errour. As if we ſhould ſay, put the caſe, or admit: not that it is ſo in deede, but to come by degrees, to the thing that is to be proued. As for example: if we haue to doe with ſome Papiſt: to the intent wee may teache him according to his rawneſſe, wee will ſay: Go to, in praying vnto God, let the one ſide haue Ieſus Chriſt for their aduocate, and let the other ſide haue the Virgin Marie with the reſt of their Heeſaints and Sheeſaints: and let vs ſee which is the better. For when a man comes vnto God, and ſetteth Ieſus Chriſt before him: he is aſſured by the holy ſcripture, that it is Chriſts office to bee the meane betweene God and him, and to make interceſſion for him. And ſo, hee that prayeth in the name of Ieſus Chriſt, is thoroughly ſure that he goeth not to worke at all aduenture. But as for him that takes the Virgin Marie or any other patrone, he ſhall bee beguiled when he thinkes himſelfe moſt ſure to be heard: for why, he hath no warrant. Now then, which is beſt? Wee ſpeake after that maner to the Papiſtes, not that wee meane it is lawfull to haue patrones: for then ſhould we abuſe Gods name. It is ſaid, that in praying wee muſt bring nothing of our owne head, but faith muſt be our foreleader, and it is as the key to open vs ỹ gate. Neuertheleſſe wee vſe ſuch maner of ſpeache to the vnbeleeuing and ignorant ſort, to draw them by little and little. So then, Moſes maketh not compariſon of the God of Iſrael, as though hee had conceiued in his imagination that there was a ſwarme of Gods, and that euerie of them wrought according to his abilitie: No: he knew well ynough that there is but onely one God; but foraſmuch as he ſawe men ouerſhoote themſelues in that behalfe: he ſaieth that although all other Nations imagine themſelues to receiue benefites at the handes of their Gods: yet notwithſtanding, the God of Iſrael had vttered himſelfe with ſuch power, as he onely ought to bee worſhipped, and men might well vnderſtande that none reigneth but onely he, and that the gouernment of heauen and earth belongeth to none but onely to him, and all men might ſee by the myracles which he had wrought, that all creatures are in his hande. That then was the meaning of Moſes.

Let vs marke further, that when the fathers of olde time, did by reaſon hereof deſpiſe idols and all thoſe that worſhipped them: God did ſhewe himſelfe to them alſo, after a mightie faſhion. Their ſaying is, where are the Gods that can doe like the God of Iſrael, which hath vttered ſuch a mightie power? And in deede wee ſee no viſible ſubſtaunce of God: but his will is to haue vs knowe him by his ſhewing of himſelfe in his workes: that is the way that he will haue vs to conceiue him. Seeing then that God hath vttered his mightie power: it is our duetie to magnifie him and to worſhip him in ſuch ſorte, as wee defie all the idols that men haue forged to themſelues, and laugh all the things to ſcorne that haue bene brought in by the worlde. For why, there is nothing but vanitie and leaſing in them. But foraſmuch as wee be not of ſufficient capacitie to iudge of Gods workes, though they be preſent afore vs, ne can come right vnto him, except he guide vs thither by his worde: let vs learne to hold our ſelues to this doctrine. Therfore whenſoeuer God maketh vs to perceiue his mightie power: let vs bethinke vs of our owne rudeneſſe and infirmitie, and by and by take his worde to vs, to exerciſe vs therein. And let vs not play the Paynims and wretched Infidels, who are harping vpon ỹ word God with their mouth, and in the meane runne trotting vp and downe knowing not what God is in deede. Let vs then followe the infallible trueth. And ſeeing that God hath reuealed himſelfe vnto vs, yea euen in ſuch ſort as wee can not be deceiued nor beguiled: let vs learne to ſtay thereupon, and to holde vs to it throughout. Let vs not bee ſo fond headed, as not to profite our ſelues by the benefites that God beſtoweth dayly vpon vs, and by the which he will be glorified: let all ſuperſtition and Idolatrie bee beaten downe, and let Gods trueth haue full ſcope: let all inuentions of men ceaſſe, and let the world know which is the liuing God. Thus ye ſee after what manner wee muſt proceede: that is to wit, when wee once know God, wee muſt worſhip him, wee muſt goe to the perfection, which is onely he, and whatſoeuer is ſet vp on the contrarie ſide againſt him, it muſt bee brought to naught. For it is not poſſible for vs to worſhip God as wee ſhould doe: except wee put all things vnder foote, which men haue forged and imagined in their owne braine. Wherefore let vs learne to exalt him in ſuch wiſe, as nothing may impeach or darken his preheminence. And foraſmuch as wee knowe not of our ſelues howe wee ſhould glorifie God to yeeld him his deſerued honour: let vs take his worde for our guide, and fetch light at his trueth which is in the holy ſcripture, to the ende wee may knowe that there is none but onely God to whom we ought to reſort, and that it is onely he to whom wee muſt yeeld all praiſe and thankſgiuing.

Pſal.115.4.8 & Eſa.45.16 & Deut.4.7. 34.& 32.39 & Ier.14.22

Nowe let vs kneele downe in the preſence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to make vs feele them better than wee haue done heretofore, that we may returne vnto him with true repentance: and that

for-

forasmuch as our nature is so corrupted, we may fight without ceassing against our owne desires, and holde them in such awe, as wee may seeke nothing at his hand but that which wee knowe that he alloweth and liketh off: not doubting but that in the meane while he will shewe himselfe bountifull towardes vs in prouiding of all things for vs which are meete for vs and necessarie to our saluation, so as we may learne to submit our selues to him, glorifying him, and giuing him thankes for all his benefites, in such wise as his bounteousnesse be not buried, but euery of vs acknowledge more and more howe much he is bound vnto him, and yeelde him praise for the same. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs, but also, &c.

On Fryday the x. day of May. 1555.

The xviij. Sermon which is the fourth vpon the third Chapter.

26 And the Lord God was angrie with mee for your sakes, and heard mee not, but said vnto mee, be contented, speake no more to mee of this matter.

27 Get thee vp to the top of Phasga, and lift vp thine eyes towardes the West, the North, the South and the East: and beholde with thine eyes: for thou shalt not go ouer this Iordan, 28 But charge Iosua, and strengthen him, and imbolden him: for hee shall goe ouer before the people, & put them in possession of the land which thou shalt see.

29 And so we abode in the valley against Beth-phogor.

I Told you yesterday, how it was not any fleshly lust that moued Moses to desire to goe into the promised land, but a holy zeale, to the ende that ỹ people might haue bene the better confirmed in the grace of God. And that it is so, a man may gather by this speache, where he desireth expressely to see the good Mountaine and the Libanus. For it is verie certaine, that Ierusalem & the Countrie about it, were neither the best, nor the fairest, nor the fruitfullest of all Iurie. There were other soyles, which were both richer and pleasanter also. And yet doeth Moses preferre Libanus and the good Mountaine before all the rest. And no doubt but he meaneth the Mountaine Morea. Wee see then that he rested wholly vpon the thinges that were spirituall, bicause God had reuealed vnto him that the Temple should bee builded there, & that it was the place which God had chosen to bee worshipped and called vpon there. That was the cause why he set all his minde vpon it. And therefore let vs marke, that Moses desired not to enter into that land, to fill his belly there, or to liue in delight and pleasure there: but onely to stirre vp himselfe the more to knowe Gods grace, which he had tasted alreadie in spirit, and likewise to help the people by his example. Yet for all this, he is refused, howbeit not in such wise as if God had vtterly reiected him: but as in respect that hee intended to chastise him by depriuing him of a temporall benefite. And thereby we be yet more confirmed in the thing that was treated of yesterday: that is to wit, that albeit our affections be not alwaies wicked, yet they shall not alwaies be graunted vs, when God intendeth to humble vs, For sometimes we may haue offended him: and he must be faine to cut vs off from his benefites. True it is that our saluation abydeth alwaies certaine: but as for our present state, it appaireth so farre as wee can see, insomuch that whereas God made vs to feele his fauour most abundantly and in verie large measure: we haue but a small peece of it. If this befell to Moses: let not vs thinke it straunge if God deale after the same maner with vs.

Nowe whereas Moses saieth That he was not heard: it is to be referred to this speciall sute of his. For God doeth neuer quite shake off his faithfull ones when they call vpon him, at leastwise generally: for he is alwayes mercifull to them, and their praying to him is not in vaine. But yet for all that, he graunteth them not euery particular thing that they aske of him. It may so happe that a faithfull man, shall make some request in his prayer vnto God, (yea, for as was said yesterday, there is not a harder thing than to bridle our selues in such sort, as wee passe not our boundes:) there may some such request (I say) slip from a faithfull man, as shall bee good in it selfe, and yet notwithstanding, God shall not vouchsafe to graunt it. Then is he not heard in that behalfe: but yet shall not his prayer bee vaine and vnprofitable. For though he obteine not in that point: yet ceaseth he not to bee in Gods fauour, neither doeth God faile to regarde his necessities. So then let vs note, that all the prayer of Moses was not reiected at Gods hand, as though he had obtained nothing at al of him: but onely as touching that point, wherein it behoued him to haue denial at Gods hand. That is the thing which he meant here. Matt. 7. 7. 9.

But it is said expressely, That the Lord was angrie with him for the peoples sake, as we haue seene alreadie heretofore. Wherein he meaneth not Deut. 1. 37.

altogether to iustifie himselfe: but he doeth it to the end that the people should finde their owne fault, and humble themselues vnto God. If Moses had meant to vphold that he was not in any fault, nor blame worthie: he had couertly accused God. For is it written, that he that sinneth shall beare his owne punishment. Then must it needes bee, that Moses was not cleare: or else that God did him wrong in punishing him for the peoples sake. But I haue declared heretofore, that he glorified not God as hee ought to haue done. In deede this appeareth not by the storie: for it should seeme there, that he did his ductie as well as could be wished: but only God is the competent iudge thereof. Although Moses could not be condemned by his wordes, nor by any outward signe: it is ynough that God findeth fault with him, and auoweth that he yelded him not his due honour. Ye see then that Moses was faultie: and that Gods banishing of him out of the lande of promise, was for his offences sake, so as he coulde not say that he had not deserued such punishment.

Why then doeth he lay the blame vppon the people? As I saide afore, it is not to cleare himselfe, but to make the people to knowe their owne euill dealing: yea and also to consider, that seeing Moses being so excellent a man, and a man chosen of God, did suffer such reproch and dishonour: they themselues ought to be the more cast downe. Thereby then the people is warned to thinke the better vppon their owne faulte. And in verie deede this offence of theirs was verie grieuous and exceeding great. For we knowe that Moses had an earnest zeale to serue God, and that it was his whole seeking. Neuertheless the murmuring that rose among the people for want of water, was as a tempest to carie Moses away. Beholde, Moses is as a rocke, he is wholly setled in Gods seruice: and therefore it must needes be that the peoples rising in vprore was with horrible violence, euen as if a rocke were shaken with some tempest. And so wee see that the people were vtterly destitute of all patience and as good as starke mad, and that it could not be but that the diuell possessed them, seeing that the fire of it did euen sindge Moses. Also this punishment of his sheweth how great the peoples offence was. What had Moses done? For his owne part he desireth nothing but to liue & die in glorifying God. And yet notwithstanding, God setteth a marke of infamie vpon him for all ages to see, in restraining him out of the promised land. Sith it is so: what punishment doe the people deserue, which were the cause of the mischiefe and the chiefe authors thereof?

Nowe to apply this doctrine to our vse, let vs take good heede that we driue not others to doe amisse, least the whole blame light vppon our owne neckes. Not that our thrusting of any man out of the way can quit him: for God will neuertheless correct him for it: but howsoeuer the world goe, we shall be guiltie of al the sinnes that wee haue occasioned. This ought well to bridle vs, to the ende that no cause of stumbling proceede from vs. And besides this, let vs consider that if God haue giuen vs gouernours that labour to discharge their dueties: if we vexe them in such sorte as they swarue or start aside from the right way: wee shall yeeld account of it before God, and at the last his curse will light vpon our heades. Hereby all folkes are warned to liue simply & peaceably in obedience to their superiors, specially when they see them disposed to serue God: to the ende that they may take courage, and continue & increase in goodnesse. And if we fall to raising of trouble and disorder: surely if they that haue committed but halfe a fault be corrected, wee shall bee dubble punished, and answere for all the inconuenience, as of a trueth wee deserue well to bee charged with it before God. Thus ye see what wee haue to marke vpon that speach, where Moses telleth the people againe, how it was for their sakes that ỹ Lord was angrie with him.

Nowe let vs returne to the matter which wee begunne withall: that is to wit, that although GOD chastised Moses by bereauing him of a temporall benefite: yet was that no impeachmesit to his saluation. And so meaneth he by these woordes, Bee contented, and speake no more to mee of this matter. In saying bee contented: he doeth him to vnderstande that he hath wherewith to content him, forasmuch as God is still mercifull to him, & acknowledgeth him for one of his, and taketh him still as of his housholde, & casteth him not out of his kingdome. Seeing that all these thinges abide vnto him still: hee sheweth him that he ought to rest without greeuing of himselfe ouermuch. And it is a very notable and profitable point: namely, that we ought not to be too sorrowful and grieued out of measure, so long as GOD bereaue vs not of the substaunce of our saluation. Wee heare what answere Saint Paule had, when he was afflicted, yea and euen buffeted by Satan, and God had cast him downe in such sorte, that he was as one at the point to bee troden vnder foote. Now he besought God to be deliuered from such temptations: but answere is made him at Gods hand, Let my grace suffice thee. GOD telleth him hee will assist him, but as for the comberance, he must beare it still. Therefore let vs learne to put a difference betweene the thinges that are of the substaunce of our saluation, and the appurtenances which are in deede the tokens of Gods loue and goodnesse, but yet may bee forborne of vs whesoeuer God thinketh good, whether it be to chastise vs, or to trie our patience, or to any other purpose, that he deale so with vs. As for example: the things ỹ are of the substance of our saluation are these: that God forgiue vs our sinnes, that he keepe vs vnder his protection, ỹ he dwell in vs by his holy spirit, ỹ the light which he hath giuen vs by his Gospel be not quenched, & that we may take him for our father, to cal vpon him and to flee to him for refuge. So then, the substaunce of our saluation, is ỹ the seede of faith abide continually in vs, that God guide & gouerne vs by his holy spirit, and that he make vs feele his goodnesse, so as wee rest thereupon. But yet for all this, many temptations may befal vs, yea euen ſuch as may pluck vs back from calling vpon God. Not that they can ſhut vs quite out from him: but yet they may ſo comber vs, as wee ſhal not be able to reſorte to God ſo freely as wee woulde. Againe, wee ſhall be toſſed with many ſorrowes and many hartbytings. On the one ſide wee ſhall haue ſickeneſſe, and on the other ſide pouertie: beſides theſe, men ſhall doe vs wrong, and diuers other inconueniences, and to be ſhorte, wee ſhall in effecte doe nothing but pyne and languiſhe. In deede if God delt ſo mildely with vs, as wee might alwayes haue our mouthes open to prayſe him, ſo as there were nothing but myrth and eaſe in our lyfe: wee ſhould perceiue his loue the more playnely. But yet in the meane while, although wee be afflicted, although wee haue much anguiſhe and griefe: yet doth the ſubſtance of our ſaluation continue ſtill. What is to be done in this caſe? Let it content vs that GOD is our father. Although he handle vs not as wee woulde wiſhe, but rather cleane contrariwiſe: ſo as in ſteade of ſweeteneſſe, wee finde bitterneſſe, and hee graunteth not our requeſtes at the firſt choppe, but hideth himſelfe from vs in our afflictions, as if hee had forſaken vs, and giueth vs not meate and drinke at our pleaſure: [finally] when all thinges faile vs: yet let it ſuffice vs that wee haue ſtil the warrant of our adoptiõ, & that God ceaſeth not to take vs and auow vs for his children. Theſe (ſay I) are the thinges wherewith we muſt content our ſelues, in ſuch wiſe as all thinges elſe muſt bee borne patiently by vs. And that is it which wee haue to marke vppon theſe wordes where GOD ſayth to Moſes, bee contented.

But the vnbeleeuers haue not this prerogatiue: God ſhaketh them off quite, if they cry he giueth deafe eare to them, neither ſaith hee to them for their comfort, bee contented: but hee letteth them chawe vppon the bridle, ſo as they bee in horrible vnquietneſſe and vexation, and haue not wherewith to aſſwage their ſorrowe. For they beleeue not that God beareth them a fatherly good will, nor that hee receiueth them into his fauour. So, now wee ſee more clearely the thing that I touched briefly before: that is to wit, that Gods refuſing of the faithfull, is not an vtter reiecting of their prayers, as though their calling vppon him had not booted them at all: but hee graunteth them generally that which is good for their ſaluation. And as for in the reſt, he cutteth them out their morſels, ſo as hee graunteth them not whatſoeuer they wiſhe, neither were it for their welfare that hee ſhoulde ſo doe.

Therefore muſt wee beare this leſſon ſo in minde, as wee may bee able to put it in vre: that is to wit, that if wee obteine not all that euer wee faine would at Gods hand: but that when we reſort vnto him, he ſuffreth vs to linger ſtil in our miſeries & eaſeth vs not of our troubles at the firſt, ſo as we dragge our winges after vs as they ſay: we muſt bethinke vs of this, that wee muſt be contented. And why? for it is good reaſon that wee ſhould yeelde to the good pleaſure of our God, ſeeing hee reſcrueth this ineſtimable benefite and priuiledge to vs, that wee be ſtill muſtered in the aray of his children.

And beſides this, let vs aſſure our ſelues that God furthereth our ſoules health, in refuſing to graunt vs the thinges that he knoweth to be vnmeete for vs. Wee ſee that diuers times hee granted ỹ diſobedient their deſires: but that was not to their benefite. It had bin much better for them to haue gone without them, and that God had ſayd them flat nay of them. Contrariwiſe, when hee denyeth our requeſtes, and maketh vs to perceiue that it is not reaſon that our luſtes ſhoulde raunge vnbrideled, and wee haue all that our fancie runnes vppon: his making of vs to perceiue all this, is to our benefite. As for example, if a childe haue a fickle head, (as commonly all children lacke diſcretion) and deſire his father ſome fond or euill thing: if his father let him haue his ſwindge lyke a gooſe: hee putteth the halter about his neck, by cockering of him too much. But if hee ſhewe him a grim looke, and make him perceiue that he is a light-headed boy, without wit or diſcretion: his child will be the better for it afterward, and this correction whereby his fooliſhe appetite is repreſſed, wil do him good. Euen ſo doth God towards vs: for hee knoweth it is much better for vs to haue our luſtes ſubdewed, than to giue them too much libertie. And that is ỹ cauſe why he did ſo preciſely deny Moſes requeſt. Num. 11. 18.

Wee knowe that if euer man obteined fauor in Gods ſight, it was Moſes ineſpecially aboue all other. For God did him the honor to ſhewe himſelfe familiarly vnto him face to face, as a friend doth to his companion: for ſo doth the ſcripture it ſelfe report: and yet yee ſee his requeſt was refuſed: [for it was ſayd vnto him,] Speake no more to mee of this matter. Hee doth [as it were] threaten him. Now if Moſes were thus dealt with: let vs vnderſtand that wee ought not to take it too much to hart, if God deale roughly with vs nowadayes, and make no haſte to ſuccour vs, but rather that to our ſeeming the miſerie increaſeth dubble, after wee haue prayed vnto him. Let vs not thinke the matter ſtrãge: for it ſhall turne to our benefite. To be ſhort, let vs learne to beare all temporall corrections patiently which God ſendeth vnto vs. Although our condition waxe woorſe and woorſe to the worldward, although wee haue a heauy burthen to beare, although wee haue many harde and grieuous thinges to indure: yet notwithſtanding wee muſt come to this poynt, that foraſmuch as they bee but temporall chaſtiſements, wee may well holde our ſelues quiet, for our ſaluatiõ abideth ſtil vnappayred. And although wee obteine not ſome thing which wee aske: yet muſt wee not thinke our ſelues vtterly barred from it, vntil our Lord ſhewe vs by ſome euident ſigne. As how? When a man is in trouble, he repayreth vnto God, and craueth mercie, and yet he findeth no reliefe, but in ſted of eaſement he findeth himſelf torméted dubble. Exod. 33. 11 his miſerie is increaſed. But yet for all this hee muſt not be diſcouraged, but continue ſtill in praying vnto God. And therewithall wee muſt conſider thus: God knoweth to what end hee doth it. And his delaying to grant vs our requeſt, is to ſhewe vs that although hee ſuffer vs to languiſh in our aduerſities: yet doth he not forget vs nor diſdayne to be our father ſtill, but onely teacheth vs to obey him and to bee ſubiect to him. After that manner then muſt wee behaue our ſelues in praying. When it ſhall ſeeme that wee haue loſt our time in calling vpon God: yet muſt wee ſtill come backe to this comforte, ſaying: No, God ſheweth mee that it is not meete for mee to aske whatſoeuer I thinke good, but that I muſt come and put my ſelfe into his hands with all humbleneſſe, to receiue what hee thinks good, and to holde all my deſires in obedience vnto him. Seeing that hee ſheweth mee this, it behoueth me to frame my ſelfe thereunto, and to take that to bee beſt for mee which hee ſhall vouchſafe to ſend mee. Thus ye ſee what wee haue to remember in the text where God telleth Moſes that hee wil not haue him to ſpeake any more of his going into the lande of Chanaan.

But yet for all that, he ſhewed him the land a farre off. And no doubt but that the ſight of Moſes reached beyond the ordinarie ſight of nature, and beyond all that hee coulde conceiue Deut. 34.7. within kenning. True it is that in the end of this booke it is ſaid, that euen in his old age, although hee was then ſixeſcore yeeres olde, yet his ſenſes were not appaired, but continued ſtil in their full ſtrength. Neuertheleſſe, when as it is ſayd, that he extended his ſight ſo far, as that he could view al the countryes of the lande of Chanaan: [it is euident] that God gaue him ſight aboue the power of nature. And all this tended to this ende, that Moſes might bee aſſured, that Gods deliuering of the people was not to the ende to leaue them in the midway, or to leaue his promiſe vnperformed which hee had made to his ſeruaunt Abraham. And his aſſuring of Moſes thereof, was not onely for Moſes owne ſake, but alſo for all the peoples ſake, to incourage the weaker ſorte, that they might take hart to enter the more boldely into the poſſeſſion of their inheritance after his deceaſe, not doubting but that God would ſtill reache them his mighty hand. That was the cauſe why this great ſight was giuen to Moſes. And wee muſt not maruell that God ſhewed him the land of Chanaan after that ſort: ſeeing he had alreadie reueiled mount Sion & Morea vnto him in ſpirite. Moſes then was confirmed by all meanes, not for himſelfe onely, but chiefely for the edifying of the people. Here by the way wee bee taught, to receiue ſuch taſte of his grace as hee giueth vs, though wee haue but ſome little feeling of it, and inioy it not yet to the full. Moſes ſtanding vppon the toppe of the mountaine, ſaw the land a far off: it behoueth him to ſtay there, and to thāke God for that ſight. Lykewiſe ſometime God will make vs to feele his grace very ſlenderly, at leaſtwiſe in reſpecte of our deſire: for we would fayne haue our fill of it, wee would haue him to giue it vs more plainely: but that would not bee good for vs. Why? Sometimes wee might not call vppon him: but all thinges ought to be ſubmitted to his will. Yet notwithſtanding, wee may chaunce to ſee ſome little ſparke of Gods grace a farre of, or elſe perhaps hee will make vs to feele it: but that ſhall bee ſo ſlenderly, as it ſhal ſeeme that his intent was but to prouoke our appetite, and to whette our wit, and not to content vs.

But yet muſt wee bee contented to receiue whatſoeuer hee giueth vs. Although our fleſhe woulde cary vs further: yet muſt wee reſtraine our ſelues as priſoners, and in ſo doing followe the example of Moſes. For if Moſes had bin lyke to ſuch as are impatient and fall to ſtryuing againſt God: hee would haue held skorne to go vp into the mountaine. It is to much purpoſe (would hee haue ſayde) for mee to goe breake my ſhinnes in climbing vp this hil, to goe ſee the moonelhine in the water. I can forbeare ſuch a ſight. After that faſhion would they deale, which are not yet come to ſuch meekeneſſe, as to bee as lambes and ſheepe. But Moſes ſhewed well, that notwithſtanding that he was the ſhepheard of the people, yet was hee alſo a very ſheepe in deede, ſo as GOD might guide and gouerne him as hee liſted. When hee ſayd to him, get thee vp into the hill: hee knewe hee ſhould haue no more but a ſight of the land, and that the ſame ſight ſhould be a renewing of his griefe, ſo as hee ſhould ſigh at it and might ſay, Alas I am baniſhed from the poſſeſſion of this good land, which I ſee before my face: my deſire is but to make a ſteppe ouer this Iordan, and I am forbidden it. He knewe this. Yet notwithſtanding foraſmuch as God had commaunded him, hee receiued his grace, yea and hee receiued it with ſuch affection, as hee replyed not to the contrary. Not that hee coulde not haue founde in his hart to haue had it otherwiſe: but for that hee did thruſt his owne will vnder foote, to the ende that GOD might haue the whole maiſterie of him. Therefore let vs learne to bee meeke. When our Lord is ſo minded to bring vs vnder awe, and graunteth not the thinges that wee coulde lyke of: let not vs on our ſide refuſe or diſdeine the ſmall taſte of his grace which hee giueth vs, waiting till hee giue vs a larger diſcouerie and fruition thereof. For in this worlde wee muſt bee exerciſed after that maner: and we muſt apply al our indeuer therevnto. Inſomuch that if GOD giue vs not ſuch knowledge of his grace as wee may holde it (as yee would ſay) in our handes: or as wee may haue our fill of it: or as wee may triumph in it: yet muſt wee call vppon him ſtill, And if he giue it vs droppe by droppe, and therewithall wee haue ſtore of griefe and ſorrowes, [ſo as we might ſay,] what will become of this? why doth not GOD admitte me more familiarly vnto him? Why doth hee not inriche mee with his goods? why doth hee not beſtowe his benefites vppon mee in greater meaſure? when wee bee in ſuch caſe, wee muſt come to this poynt, [that wee may say,] hee dealeth no worse with mee than he delt with Moses. So then let vs patiently accept this maner of Gods dealing, which he vseth to humble vs: and in the meane season let vs not forbeare to hope further. For if wee perceiue not out of hand whither wee tend: let it suffice vs that God sheweth vs a farre off, the good which hee hath prepared for vs. And if wee haue not the fruition of it in this world: let vs be contented that he hath layd it vp for vs in heauen, and that it can not faile vs there: as in very deede the land of Chanaan was vnto Moses as a signe and sacrament of the kingdome of heauen: and yet hee did but see it a farre off. Neuertheless, howsoeuer the case stoode with him, hee had still a warrant that God woulde not bereaue him of his inheritaunce in heauen. That was the poynt that hee rested on: and so must wee doe too.

Hee addeth that he must instruct, strengthen, and incourage Iosua, for it is hee that must leade the people of Israell. Hereby the obedientnesse of Moses is yet better warranted vnto vs. For how many are there to bee seene, which woulde bee loth to imploy themselues in dooing the thinges that God commaundeth them, vnlesse GOD gaue them the honor as well as the charge? But Moses resigneth the honor and dignitie that hee had receiued: God putteth him out of office. Hee should haue bin the leader of the people, to bring them into the land of Chanaan, and ye see hee is deposed from his office with dishonor and shame. Now had hee bin as one of these worldlings which know not what it is to giue ouer themselues playnely vnto God: or had hee bin as a nomber are, who being caryed away with ambition and vainglory, wil alwayes needs be had in estimation: hee woulde neuer haue yeelded to doe any thing to Iosua. But behold, God telleth him here, thou must resigne thy state to Iosua, and thou must instruct him, to the end hee may bee set in thy place: and knowe thou that hee is worthie to bee my lieuetenaunt, to leade my people into the possession of their inheritaunce. Sith wee see that Moses was ready hereuppon to giue ouer his authoritie, so as God should bereaue him thereof, and yet hee himselfe not onely bare no grudge to Iosua his seruaunt when hee sawe him exalted in his roome: but also instructed him, and sought to surrender his owne gratious giftes vnto him, as if hee should haue plucked al the good out of his owne hart, to haue sayd vnto Iosua, take here that which belongeth vnto thee, to the intent that all may redound to the welfare of the people, and I hencefoorth become as a poore naked man: sith wee see (say I) that Moses was at that poynt: haue wee not an euident proofe that hee regarded not himselfe? and that hee sought not any thing else but that God might be glorified? and that when hee had finished his course, the people might still haue a faithful man to guide and gouerne them? Specially seeing that euen in his lyfetime, when hee sawe Gods grace florishe and increase in a meane person which was set in preheminence ouer him, he not onely enuied him not, but also was willing to helpe & further him, that hee might be able to execute his charge when hee were succeeded in his place? This verily is written in commendation of Moses: but it serueth also for our instruction, to the ende wee may learne to submit our selues to our God: that whensoeuer he listeth to exalt others in our place, wee may be glad of it, wishing that the same may redound to the benefite of ỹ people, and indeuoring to helpe those whome God hath chosen and elected, so as hee may alwayes reigne & gouerne, and that whensoeuer it pleaseth him to exalt men, it may suffice vs that hee be glorified in them, and none of vs be selfewilled in that behalfe, but all in generall seeke the maintenaunce of the whole body of the Church in her state, and the benefite, welfare and prosperitie of the same. Thus yee see what wee haue to remember vppon this text.

Furthermore let vs mark also, that whereas Moses is commaunded to strẽgthen Iosua: therein God sheweth vs the effectuall woorking and force of his worde. The incouraging of a man, specially to so excellent a worke, is no small matter. And by what meane is that done? By good teaching, and by holy exhortations. Thus are there two thinges to be noted in effect. The one is ỹ such as are set in authoritie haue neede to be instructed and strẽgthened, that they may be able to doe their duetie. The second is, that Gods word hath this vse and propertie to frame those which els should be vnmeete, and to strẽgthen them when they be weake: and to be short, to make them fit in all poynres to execute their office, and whatsoeuer is appoynted them by God.

Therefore let them that are called to any charge or authoritie looke wel to themselues. For they be not abler men than Iosua was, who had done a notable act already now forty yeeres agoe, in outstanding the rebellion of the whole peeple, notwitstanding ỹ they would haue stoned him, and that he sawe so great, and (as ye would say) so infinite a multitude against him, which was not of an hundred men, neither of rascalles, or of no estimation, but there were moe than sixe hundred thowsand men that did set themselues against him: and yet for ali ỹ he bare out the brunt, with inuincible constancie, and maintained Gods quarell. Iosua had done this deede fortie yeeres afore: and yet notwithstanding he is faine to be incouraged stil, he is faine to receiue newe instruction, hee is faine to be confirmed yet better and better. Now thẽ, what shall those do which are as sillie beastes, & can doe nothing? If a man examine them thorowly, although there bee some good seede of vertue in them, alas, they come farre shorte of the perfection that was in Iosua. Then if they cannot finde in their hartes to be taught, and to be strengthened that they may the better serue God: are they not worthie to be put to reproch, so as they may not discerne what vprightnesse and iustice meane, but commit so grosse crymes as euen little children may laugh them to skorne, and all the worlde bee

Deut. 17.1. Wherfore let them ỹ are called to any charge, whether it be to ỹ ministring of Gods word, or to the executing of Iustice as touching earthly gouernment, or to be maisters or fathers: let them all (euery one in his owne vocation) vnderstand, that they haue neede to bee instructed, or else that they cannot furnishe out the place to performe their duetie. Let that serue for one poynt. Now were this well obserued: wee should not see so many skorneful persons as there are. For vnder color that a man is aduaunced to some authoritie, he may no more be spoken to: for hee cannot bee but wise ynough, seeing he is in authoritie. But it is cleane contrary, as we see here, and as God hath also well shewed, in that hee hath giuen Kings a speciall commaundement to haue the bookes of his law about them, as wee shall see in due place hereafter.

And now must we also note the second point, which hath bin touched already: that is to wit, that if we purpose to be wel taught, if we purpose to bee confirmed, if wee purpose to be wholy disposed to doe the things that our dutie requireth: we must repaire to Gods schoole. For hee hath giuen the power and efficacie to his worde, not onely to teach vs to knowe what is good, and to giue vs wisedome and skill: but also to make vs strong to goe through with our affaires as wee ought to doe, so as we be able to withstand all euill, and to ouercome all the stoppes and lettes which the diuill shall thrust in our way. To bee short, to the end wee may bee able to compasse all thinges well, and to goe through with the thinges that God commaundeth vs: let vs bee ready to harken vnto God, and be willing to receiue instruction by his worde. And it is certain, that if wee haue that, it will neuer faile vs, for it is a good scholemaister. But (as I said) it is good reason that men should continue in their beastlynesse, and that GOD should discouer their shame, when they will not submit themselues to him, but are so stately that they thinke it a needelesse thing to be taught, because they be no young children any more. Alas, that is euen the very cause why god withdraweth his blessing from them. But contrarywise, let vs doe as Iosua did. If God bee so gracious vnto vs as to teach vs: let vs bee ready to receiue instruction, and then shall we be inuincible. Albeit that Satan doe practise all that euer he can against vs: and albeit that the wicked bee as barres to stop vs, so as by all lykelyhoode wee can not set foreward one step, no nor stirre one finger: yet shall wee bee strengthened by the power of God, so wee followe the order that is shewed vs here.

Now for a conclusion, it is sayd of Moses and the people, that they abode in the valley ouer against the Temple of Pheor. For Bethpheor is as much to say, as the house of ỹ Idole Pheor: and the word House is put for a Temple. This is not set downe for nought: for it was Gods will to ad this as the vpshot of condemnation vnto Moses, that hee was fain to haue the Temple of an Idol continually before his eyes, He was chosen to leade the people of Israell into the land of Chanaan. And it is certaine that hee himselfe murmured not against God, ne letted the people from comming there: but yet for all that, when it came to the poynt that hee should haue made the water to come out of the rocke, he went not to it cherefully, but was (as yee would say) ouergreeued in his minde, so as he gaue not glory vnto God. By meanes wherof whereas Gods seruice should haue bin set vp in the lande, and whereas there should haue bin such a melodie in calling vppon his name, as al superstitions should haue bin rooted out, and as all the thinges that had bin shewed him in the mountaine should haue bin put in practise, that Gods maiestie might haue bin seene shining in the middest of the people: in stead of hauing so goodly and (as ye would say) angelicall order: he is faine to tary hard by a temple of Idols, he is faine to see himselfe as it were defiled with it, he is driuen to beholde the abhominations that were dayly committed by the heathen as it were in despite of God, he is driuen to see the true religion ouerthrowen: and this could not bee but a great hartbreaking to him, and worke a terrible vexation in his minde. Now vppon this example wee haue to gather, how it is not for naught that our Lorde causeth vs to see thinges that ought to offend vs and to cast vs into great heauinesse. And why? For we be not worthie to see his seruice throughly in good order, and to see his religion purely and soundely obserued, so as he might bee worshipped with one common consent throughout all the world. We bee not worthie to inioy such a benefite. For the full perfection of all felicitie that wee can haue in this world, is that GOD be serued and honored, and that in such wise, as all superstitions, al abuses, and all other things that may corrupt his seruice, bee layde downe. But for examples sake, wee see at this day how God mingleth many of his faithful ones among the Papistes, where they be faine to behold abhominations dayly with their eyes, and are held in so strait bondage, as they dare not open their mouthes to speake against them. They see God s temples turned into no better than brothelhouses, and fraughted with so fowle and filthie baggage, that it were much better that Temples or Churches were neuer spoken of, than to haue such as are in the popedom. But yet this are ỹ poore faithful ones driuen to behold. And why? For they be not worthie to see such reformation as they desire, God intendeth to humble them, and hee knoweth to what ende. And least wee should perke vp aboue other men to say, heere is no corruption: alas, what are we? Though there be not open Idolatrie among vs, is there not a horrible cõtempt of God by swearing, and a rebelling against his worde? Is there not such a beastlynesse to bee seene in a great nomber, as it were much better for them to become Turkes and Heathen men, than to pretend the name of Christianitie which they abuse so shamefully? Are they not seene to bee manifest despisers of God, and to bewray themselues in such sorte, as euen little children may discerne cerne it? Now then ſith wee ſee ſuch corruptions among vs: let vs vnderſtand that they bee the rewards of our ſins. And therfore let vs bewaile our caſe, aſſuring our ſelues that Gods ſuffering of ſuch minglemangle among vs, is to make vs perceiue that wee deſerue well to be ſo intangled. Yea, which woorſe is, wee ſee this come to paſſe, euen where the Goſpel was purely preached. Is not the helliſh corruption of the Interim returned againe? Doth not the worlde ſee how idolatrie is ſet vp againe by it? And think wee that this is happened without Gods iuſt puniſhment? Now therefore let vs looke well to it, that lyke as it was Gods wil to humble his ſeruant Moſes and al the people, by facing them with the temple of a curſed idoll: ſo lykewiſe nowadayes, ſith wee ſee ſo great corruptions, ſith wee ſee religion diſguyſed, ſith wee ſee on the one ſide idolatrie, and on the other ſide loſeneſſe and occaſion of ſtumbling: let vs vnderſtand that all this commeth through Gods iuſt vengeance, by reaſon of our ſinnes. Wherefore let vs humble our ſelues and mourne, vntill it pleaſe God to ſet al thinges againe in ſuch order and plight, as wee may all call vppon him with one common accord, foraſmuch as the ſame is the ende whereunto hee hath ſet vs together, and for the which hee hath redeemed vs ſo deerely with the bloud of his ſonne.

Now let vs kneele downe in the preſence of our good God with acknowledgement of our ſinnes, praying him to mortify them more and more, that wee may learne to be ſo ſubdued, as our whole ſeeking may be to obey him, and to glorify him in all thinges that hee liſteth to doe, and that in the meane while we may not be wedded to our owne affections and fleſhly luſtes, but that although wee haue neuer ſo many incomberances in this world, & neuer ſo many meanes to turne vs from the right way: yet notwithſtanding wee may goe through with the courſe of his calling, vntill hee haue deliuered vs from all Satans trappes, and from all thinges that hee ſetteth afore vs to make vs turne head, and to hinder vs from going forewarde to our ſaluation, euen till wee bee come thither. That it may pleaſe him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs but alſo &c.

On Wedneſday the xv. of May. 1555.

The nineteenth Sermon which is the firſt vpon the fourth Chapter.

NOw then O Iſrael, hearken to the ordinaunces and Lawes which I teache you to doe, that yee may liue and goe in and poſſeſſe the lande, which the Lord God of your fathers giueth you.

2 Ye ſhall not adde anie thing to the word which I command you, neither ſhall yee take anie thing from it, to intent yee may keepe the commaundementes of the Lord your God which I commaund you.

THe concluſion ỹ Moſes maketh here, is wel worthie to be marked: for it maketh for the matter which hath bin expounded hererofore: that is too wit, that wee haue neede to bee prepared to the obeying of our God, becauſe wee bee diſobedient of our own nature, and our affections drawe contrarie to his will, inſomuch that whereas hee will haue vs to walke vprightly, there is nothing but vtter lewdeneſſe in vs. Againe, if wee happen to haue any good diſpoſition & deſire to walke after Gods commaundementes: wee ſtart away incontinently in the turning of a hand, and there is no conſtancie in vs towardes any good. On the other part, wee haue a ſorte of fooliſhe dotages, which cary vs away, ſo as wee will needes bee euer diſputing with God, yea and be wiſer than hee. Therefore haue wee neede to be ſubdued and humbled by al meanes, or elſe God ſhall neuer be able to welde vs. For this cauſe it is ſayd, that the people heard not the lawe publiſhed vnto them one day onely, but that they were often times put in minde of it. And that foraſmuch as they were ſtubborne, GOD had ſubdued them by many chaſtiſementes, as by leading them about in the wilderneſſe the ſpace of fortie yeeres, to inure them to obedience: and by trying them diuers wayes, to teach them that it was no reſiſting of ſuch a maiſter.

After that Moſes hath treated of all thoſe thinges: hee ſayth, Harken now O Iſraell, what I tell thee in the name of God. As if hee ſhould ſay, it is time now or neuer for you to begin to walke in obedience, that yee bee no more lyke wilde folke as yee haue bin, that yee giue not head to your wicked luſtes, that yee bee not ſo fierce as to ſhake off Gods yoke, and that ye ſtick not to your owne fond inuentions which make you to runne aſtray: but that yee beare well in minde what yee haue indured. For if yee cannot yet bowe your neckes to ſubmit your ſelues to your GOD: in the ende hee muſt be faine to breake you, if ye will not bowe. Now heere yee his voyce, ſayth hee. And wee muſt apply this to our vſe. That is to ſay, Seeing it is now a great while agoe ſince wee began to heare the worde of God: wee muſt not bee ſtill as young nouices, we muſt not bee lyke the young bullockes or Steeres which cannot yet skill what it is to beare the yoke: but wee muſt bee throughly acquainted with obeying. If they that neuer were taught Gods trueth bee wildeheaded and cannot finde in their heartes to ſtoope at the firſt, but runne gadding heere and there after a number of worldly vanities: it is not to bee wondered at. True it is that that ſhall not ſerue to excuſe them: no ſurely: for ſeeing that God hath created vs to the ende to ſerue and honor him: wee ought to giue our ſelues wholy vnto him, euen from our mothers wombs.

Neuertheleſſe if wee be ſomewhat ſtraunge for want of teaching: it may bee borne withall among men. But if at the end of twentie yeeres, when wee haue had our eares continually beaten with the Goſpell, ſo as GOD hath ſpoken vnto vs earely aud late, and [cryed out vnto vs] to waken vs: wee abide ſtill at our Abſie, and wot not what rule or doctrine meaneth: muſt it not needes bee ſayd that wee bee of too vntowarde a nature? Yes: and that is it which the Apoſtle meaneth in ſaying, yee ought by this time to haue bin great doctors in reſpect of the time that yee haue gone to ſchoole: and beholde yee bee ſtill rawe and vnlearned, ſo as it ſhoulde ſeeme that GOD neuer ſpake to you. According then to the time that God of his grace ſhall haue beſtowed in teaching of vs by his worde: let vs learne to yeelde our ſelues the more teachable, and to ſhewe that he hath not loſt his labor, but that we haue profited well in his ſchoole. And this poynteth at vs ineſpecially. For howe long time hath the Goſpel beene preached among vs? ſo as wee heard nothing elſe euery day, but what Gods will is. Nowe then, it is good reaſon that wee on our ſide ſhould not bee ſo ſtraunge, but that wee ſhoulde conſider, that wee ought not to bee ſtill newe to beginne, in the things that haue beene tolde vs ſo often alreadie. And againe wee muſt profite alſo as well by chaſtiſementes as by teaching. If GOD haue humbled vs in any wiſe, becauſe hee ſeeth that wee cannot otherwiſe bee ſubdued vnto him, ſo as hee hath tamed one with ſickeneſſe, and another with pouertie, after what faſhion ſoeuer GOD hath made vs to feele his hande: let vs looke well to it that wee profite our ſelues thereby, and that this word Now which Moſes vſeth here, be wel printed in our hearte and minde. So that if wee haue bin ouerſeene, if wee haue not at the firſt bin ſo well diſpoſed to liue as it becommeth vs, if wee haue not bin ſo forewarde as wee ought to haue bin in running to our God when hee hath called vs: at leaſtwiſe let vs not continue ſo hardharted and ſtubborne to the vttermoſt.

But nowe let vs ſee in effect what Moſes requireth here. Hearken O Iſrael (ſayth he) to the ordinances and ſtatutes which I teach thee to doe, that thou mayſt liue and enter into the land which the Lorde thy God giueth thee, and poſſeſſe it. Here Moſes declareth that our lyfe ſhall alwayes bee full of diſorder and confuſion, vntill wee haue yeelded ſo much authoritie vnto God ouer vs, as to haue the [whole] guyding of vs, and that wee haue made our account to reſt ſimply vpon his worde. To bee ſhorte, wee bee taught heere, to rid our ſelues of all ſelfeweening, and that when the caſe concerneth how to liue well, wee muſt not ſtep to it vppon our owne head, and after our owne fancie, to ſay, this ſeemeth good to mee. Whereat muſt wee then begin? At learning, as Moſes declareth. And therefore hee that giueth eare vnto God, to receiue whatſoeuer is tolde him from him, ſhall bee well learned. But on the contrary part, vntill ſuch time as wee haue heard our GOD ſpeake, and that hee haue performed the office of a teacher towardes vs: it is certeine that our life ſhall be quite out of order. Wee may well flatter our ſelues as ignorant wretches doe, who beare themſelues in hand that the worlde goes as well with them as is poſſible, when in the meane while they be no better than bewitched, ſo as there is neither wit nor diſcretion in them. Ye ſee then that the thing which wee haue to marke vppon this text, is that if wee meane not to leade a diſordered lyfe, and ſuch a one as God vtterly miſlyketh: wee muſt hearken vnto him. And heere it appeareth of what valewe good intents (as they terme them) are: whereof I will treate more at length anon. For if it behoue vs to heare God ſpeak, before we lift vp one foote to goe foreward: what will become of vs when euery of vs is wedded to his owne fancie, and when our luſtes are ſo wilde? Doth it not appeare that God refuſeth all ſuch thinges in one worde? Againe, Moſes telleth vs that God on his ſide, will teach vs faithfully, ſoundly, and perfectly: conditionally that we refuſe not to be ruled by him and to obey him. And hee vſeth mo wordes than one. For he could haue ſayd, hearken to the Lawe, or hearken to his commaundementes: but hee ſayth, hearken to his ſtatutes and ordinances. And in other places he ſetteth downe Statutes, ordinances, commaundementes, and rules. This is not a ſuperfluous ſpeach, but it ſerueth to expreſſe the better, that it is long of none but our ſelues that wee be not well and faithfully taught. But what for that? Men are ſo luſtie, as they cannot temper themſelues to ỹ ſimplicitie of Gods worde, to ſay that it ſhall ſuffiſe them to be gouerned by God, and to receiue whatſoeuer is ſet before them in his name. Men cannot abide ſuch modeſtie: but are alwayes itching after their owne inuentions, and yet in the meane while doe ſtill arme thẽſelues w̃ ſtartingholes: according as we ſee nowadayes ỹ a number doe grant ỹ holy ſcripture to be good, but they ſay alſo ỹ it is expedient to ſupply ỹ wants ỹ are in it: & ỹ is a

curſed blaſphemie, inaſmuch as it accuſeth God of ouerſight, or elſe of enuie, for not ſetting downe all that is requiſite to our ſaluation. But yet ſhall this ſaying holde, ſpyte of all the world, that the lawe of God is a full and perfect doctrine wherein there wanteth not any thing: and that if our lyfe bee ruled thereafter, it is certeine that there ſhall no fault bee able to bee found in it: and that wee cannot walke after that manner, but that if the worlde condemne vs, God will not faile to allowe of vs: and that ought to bee enough for vs.

But herewithall Moſes ſheweth the ende alſo why hee taught the people: not to the end that euery man ſhould knowe what was good, and then make no further account of it: but to the ende that their liues ſhould bee anſwerable thereunto. God then ſetteth vs downe a doctrine of practiſe as they ſay. And therefore it is not enough for a man only to knowe Gods word, but hee muſt alſo be transformed into it by beholding it as Gods image, as Saint Paule ſpeaketh thereof. To what ende then doth God ſpeake vnto vs? not to the end we ſhould but nod at it or liſten with our eare to it, to ratify his ſayings by ſpeach or by ſignes: but to ỹ end we ſhold giue proofe by our whole lyfe that hee is our father and maiſter, and that hee hath all prehe-minence ouer vs: and that whereas wee bee his creatures, we bee his children too. Let vs marke well then, that our comming hither to heare Gods worde, muſt not bee to goe away as wee came: but if our life bee chaunged, and that wee haue learned to frame our ſelues according to that which God hath tolde vs: that is the very right vſe of it. Otherwiſe wee doe but vnhallowe Gods worde, and wee ſhall be found guiltie of high treaſon towards him, for diſappoynting of the operation thereof. But what? So little is this obſerued nowadayes of ſuch as name themſelues Chriſtians: that in ſtead of performing the thinges that are commaunded them, they vouchſafe not to come where they may bee taught one worde, but which woorſe is, doe ſhunne all learning.

2. Cor. 3. 18

There are to be ſeene which can brag well enough that they be faythfull: and yet there nedeth none other tryall to knowe what they bee, than their manifeſt deſpiſing of Gods woorde more than the Turkes or Iewes doe. For theſe haue yet ſome reuerence of religion, but the diuells that are among vs, come to ſermons lyke dogges and Oxen, without any honeſtie or modeſtie.

Otherſome come thither to ſleepe, ſo as it ſhould ſeeme that their meaning is to ſpite God openly and to ſpit in his face: it ſhould ſeem that they be deſirous to ſhew ſome ſigne of their leawdneſſe and beaſtlyneſſe, how deteſtable they be. To be ſhort although they ſpeake it not, yet doe they beare a marke in their foreheades for all men to beholde with their eyes, that they ſeeke to deface Gods glory to the vttermoſt of their power. Another ſorte doe make countenaunce to hearken, and yet make but a flim-flamme of it (as they ſay). For what ſhall a man finde in all their life? Nothing but deſperate diſobedience. But yet for all that, Gods worde hath not chaunged his nature. Wherefore if wee looke not about vs to frame our ſelues accordingly thereunto, wee muſt needes come to account, for defyling ſo holy a thing, which GOD hath ordeyned to ſo worthie and noble an vſe.

And herewithall Moſes addeth, that God requireth not any thing at our handes in reſpect of himſelfe, or for any profite that he ſhall haue by it, but for our owne welfare. To the ende (ſayth hee) that thou mayſt enter into the land that is giuen thee for thine inheritaunce, and poſſeſſe it. Herein Moſes proteſteth, that God looketh not for any reward at our handes, for hee hath no neede of any thing: but it is for our profite, that hee would haue vs to ſerue him. Hee could well ynough forbeare vs: but yet is hee deſirous to haue vs, and hee woulde that wee ſhoulde ſuffer him to gouerne vs. Seeing then that God in all reſpectes ſheweth ſuch loue and regarde of our welfare: are wee not woorſe than wilde beaſtes if wee bee ſtill hard to yeelde, and cannot finde in our hearts to come to him but againſt our willes? If God ſhould but onely commaund vs after a preciſe faſhion, yet were we bound to do what ſoeuer he biddeth vs: yea and although hee ſhould vſe the greateſt rigour that could bee, yet might not wee refuſe to doe our duetie towardes him. But hee forbeareth that authoritie of his, as though hee yeelded vp ſome part of his right, and vſeth another maner of ſpeach, [as if hee ſhoulde ſay,] you owe mee all thinges, for yee bee mine: and yet for all that, the ſeruice which you doe mee ſhall bee accepted in ſo good woorth, as yee ſhall perceiue that I take yee for my children, yee ſhall feele my gratious goodneſſe and benefites in all ſortes, and to bee ſhorte yee ſhall not looſe your labor. Seeing then that God ſtoopeth thus vnto our rudeneſſe: ought not wee to bee rauiſhed at ſo great goodneſſe? And although we had all the lettes in the world againſt vs: ought it not to ridde them all quite away? Otherwiſe, what an vnthankefulneſſe were it?

Therefore let vs learne, that whenſoeuer God matcheth promiſes with his commaundementes: it is to win vs by gentleneſſe, becauſe hee ſeeth vs ſo ſlowe as is pitifull, and therefore he allureth vs as a father that flattereth his children as ye would ſay. That is the ỹ thing which wee haue to gather here.

Now if wee conſider this leſſon well: wee ſhal not ſay as the Papiſts doe, That ſeeing God promiſeth reward to ſuch as ſhall haue ſerued him, it appeareth thereby ỹ we deſerue, and that God is as wel bound vnto vs, as we to him. But cleane contrariwiſe, Gods promiſing vs, to doe vs good, is not for that our ſeruice can deſerue aught at his hand, nor for that hee is or can be beholden to vs for any thing: but his ſhewing of himſelfe ſo freehearted towardes vs as to forbeare his owne right, proceedeth of his owne free beſtowed goodneſſe, as I haue declared afore. Surely the Papiſtes doe well ſhew themſelues to be puffed vp with diueliſh pride, when they preſume after that ſorte to abuſe Gods fatherly goodneſſe. He could doe no more, except he ſhould make vs cockneyes as I haue ſayd already: and yet notwithſtanding, mortall men which are but carion and dung, fall to aduauncing of themſelues and ſay it is a token that God is bound vnto them. Now then let vs beare in minde, that the promiſes which GOD ſetteth afore vs to prouoke and incourage vs to doe him ſeruice, ſerue not to ſhewe that he oweth vs any thing, or that we can deſerue aught at his hand: but they be a record vnto vs of his free beſtowed goodneſſe, inaſmuch as hee byndeth himſelfe to vs of his owne good will, notwithſtãding ỹ hee can not be any way indetted vnto vs.

Moreouer it behoueth vs to marke that in ſpeaking, Moſes ſetteth ỹ lawe in the firſt place, to the ende to leade the people yet further. For by the lawe wee knowe our duetie and how wee Matt.22.37 ought to liue: that is to wit, that wee ought to loue God with all our heart, with all our minde, with all our affections, and with all our powers: and that wee ought to loue our neighbors as our ſelues. Now when we once know this: we muſt ſee whether wee bee able to doe it or no. But ſo vnable is any man liuing to diſcharge himſelfe thereof: that wee cannot ſo much as ſtirre one finger to begin it. Therefore are wee all guiltie before God. And what is there to be done? We muſt flee for refuge to his grace, and therewithall beſeech him to be mercifull to vs in forgiuing vs our ſinnes: and moreouer to vouchſafe to reforme vs foraſmuch as hee ſeeth that wee be not onely weake but alſo vtterly vnable to doe any good, becauſe there is nothing but corruption in vs: And finally that when he hath made this lawe to bee preached vnto vs, hee vouchſafe alſo to ingraue it in our hartes, and to giue vs ſuch a minde as wee may ſeeke to ſerue him. This is the maner of proceeding which wee haue to beare in minde, in that it is ſayd that the lawe is preached vnto vs, to the ende wee ſhould ſerue our God: as in deede the ende whereto it tendeth is to ſhewe men what they ought to doe.

Nowe herewithall let vs examine all our owne abilities, and wee ſhall finde our ſelues ouerwhelmed, and that wee bee all of vs curſed and damnable, if God added not a remedy to 1.Cor.15.56 Ro.3.19.& 4.15.& 6.14 drawe vs out of the curſe which the lawe bringeth vppon vs. And therefore Saint Paul ſheweth that if men will needes holde themſelues to the lawe, they ſhall bee damned without any further hope of ſaluation. And why? for it is written, hee that doth theſe thinges ſhall liue Leuit.18.5. & Ro.10.5. in them. Now then (ſayth Saint Paul) let euery man looke into himſelfe, and examine his whole lyfe: is there any man that is able to vaunt that he hath fulfilled Gods lawe? No, wee be all diſobedient. Seeing the caſe ſtandeth ſo, Rom.3.9. Rom.6.2. 3. & 10.4. there is no more life in the Lawe: but wee muſt rather flee to the free forgiueneſſe of ſinnes, and ſpecially beſeech God to giue vs power to doe that which we can not. And ſo whereas the Papiſtes doe make themſelues drunken with their diueliſh imaginations of meritorious works and ſuch other lyke thinges: let vs vnderſtand that after our Lord hath allured vs by gentleneſſe, he addeth a ſecond grace: which is, that albeit we be not able to performe his commaundementes throughly in all reſpectes, yet he beareth with vs as a father beareth with his children, and imputeth not our ſinnes vnto vs, but receiueth our halfe ſeruices as though they were whole and perfect, not for any worthineſſe that he findeth in them, but becauſe he purpoſeth to play the father with vs. Marke that for another poynt.

Beſides theſe, there is a third grace which hee vſeth: which is, that hee ingraueth his lawe in our hearts, inſomuch that whereas he ſeeth our hearts to bee as harde as ſtone or ſtithies, hee maketh them as ſoft as fleſhe, and 2.Cor.3.3. meeketh them ỹ they may be obedient. And hee not onely prepareth vs after that maner to Phil.2.13. ſerue him: but alſo giueth vs diſcretion, power, and performance. Sith wee ſee this, let vs put all meriting or deſeruing out of minde, and let vs not be ſo preſumptuous as to aduaunce our ſelues any way: but as wee haue iuſt cauſe to abaſe our ſelues, ſo let vs w all humblenes giue the glory vnto god. Thus ye ſee what we haue to do, ỹ we may take profit of ỹ doctrine cõteined here.

And immediately hereunto Moſes addeth, That men muſt purely and ſimply followe the doctrine that hee commaundeth, without putting any thing to it or taking any thing from it. To the intent (ſayth hee) that yee may keepe the commaundements of your God which I inioyne you. Before wee proceede any further, wee muſt marke the authoritie that Moſes taketh to himſelfe in this text. Hee had ſayd heretofore, I teach you: and now hee ſayth, I inioyne or commaund you. And why is that? To ſhewe that hee ſpeaketh not in his owne name, but as ſent frõ a greater maſter, in reſpect wherof it is meete that euery man ſhoulde wholy ſubmit himſelfe to him without gaineſaying. And here wee ſee how all true ſhepheardes ought to behaue themſelues, and all ſuch as haue charge to preach Gods worde, or haue the gouernment of the Church: that is to wit, they muſt be ſure that God hath ſent them, ſo as they attempt not any thing of their owne head, but ſpeake as in the name of God, and vtter all their ſayinges as on his behalfe. Being once at that ſtay, then muſt they alſo maintaine Gods maieſtie, and deale in ſuch wiſe as the doctrine may be receiued with all reuerence, and no man ſtep vp to incounter it. To bee ſhorte, there are two thinges requiſite in all good ſhepheardes. The one is, that for their part they muſt not burthen men with any tyrannie, nor inuent lawes to tye their conſciences, thereby to bring them in bondage, nor forge any doctrine vppon their owne head, but faithfully deale foorth the thinges that are committed vnto them. Haue they that? Then let them aduaunce the thing which they know to proceede of GOD, ſo as they ſuffer not the heauenly doctrine to bee ſkorned, but ſhewe men that they ought to reuerence GOD, and to ſubmit themthemſelues to his word, and let them withſtand all loftineſſe that vaunteth it ſelfe againſt him. After which maner we ſee how God ſtrengtheneth his Prophets, telling them that they muſt Ier.6,1.2. not paſſe for any mans greatneſſe, nobleneſſe, or aught elſe, but rebuke the Mountaines and ſet themſelues againſt the Hilles: that is to ſay, let them not ſhrinke for men, but let them ſhewe ỹ the word which they bring, and which is committed to them, is as it were Gods roayll mace, at the which all creatures ought to ſtoope and to bow their knees. Ye ſee then that all miniſters of Gods word ought to ſeeke thoſe two things.

But yet for all that, wee ſee the cleane contrarie. For ſuch as raigne with roughnes and churEzech.34.4. liſhneſſe (as Ezechiel termeth it) paſſe not to keepe this rule of Moſes, which is, to ſerue God purely. For wee ſee that the Pope and all the filthie rable of his Clergie (as they terme themſelues) are euer thundering, and would not haue men in any wiſe to open their lippes againſt any point [of their doctrine,] but that they ſhoulde without any gainſaying obſerue whatſoeuer they liſt to ordaine. Yea marie, but in the meane while whence haue they their ſtuffe? whence do they preach it? It is ynough for them that they
1.Pet.5.3. may lorde it, & they beare themſelues on hand that they may hold the poore ſoules vnder their tyrannie, which were redeemed with the bloud of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt. But neither Moſes nor any of ỹ Prophets did euer giue themſelues ſuch libertie: for they ſpake in Gods name, without ſetting foorth any thing of their owne. Let vs then learne to hearken to ſuch as come in the name of God, and diſcharge their duties vnfeignedly. Againe we ſee that ſuch as ſhould maintaine Gods trueth, doe let all ſlippe, and though they ſee neuer ſo much diſorder: it greeues thẽ neuer a whit, neither doe they paſſe though all goe to hauocke. And why? Bicauſe they haue no zeale at all to aduaunce the Maieſtie of Gods word. Alſo on the other ſide wee ſee a nomber that vaunt themſelues to bee Chriſtians, which can as much skill of the reuerence that Moſes ſpeakes of here, as if they had bene brought vp in a ſwines ſtie or on a dunghill. Are there not a nomber to be ſeene which will ſay continually, tuſh, you haue nothing to doe to command mee? Yes: and you my friend are a verie brute beaſt in ſo ſaying, for if I haue not to doe to command you, you haue no more Chriſtianitie in you than is in a dogge. For when wee preach Gods word, to what end is it? That God ſhould bee the ſeruaunt? or the maiſter? Let that be well conſidered. Speake wee in our owne names? Or ſet wee foorth any thing that is not giuen vs in commiſſion by God? Now, he will haue vs to repreſent his perſon: and yet we muſt neither command, nor beare any ſway at all for theſe raſcalles and vnthriftes, which aduaunce themſelues with exceeding vnſhamefaſtneſſe to fight againſt God. But what? Ye ſee what the Chriſtianitie of Geneua is, where the Goſpell hath bene preached this twentie yeeres, inſomuch that ỹ verie walles ought to ring of it, and the verie pauing of the ſtreetes ought to beare ſome marke of Gods trueth: and yet theſe wood beaſtes continue ſtill in their groſſe and barbarous rebelliouſneſſe, ſo as they be worſe than bulles with their hornes, or I wote not what other beaſtes. Yet notwithſtanding it cannot be wyped out of Gods Regiſter, but that whenſoeuer Gods worde is preached, both great and ſmall muſt receiue it, at leaſtwiſe if we acknowledge it to be Gods truth. Yea and we muſt receiue it with ſuch reuerence, Mal.1.6. as to thinke thus with our ſelues: beholde, it is our God that ſpeaketh: and if he be our maiſter, doe not we owe him all reuerence? If he bee our father, doe not we owe him all honour? What is to bee done then, but onely to ſhewe by our deedes, that our whole ſeeking is to bee ruled quietly by him? Thus yee ſee what we haue to remember here, in that Moſes ſpeaketh not as in the perſon of a mortall man, but taketh vpon him the authoritie to commaund: howbeit not as chalendging any thing to himſelfe, but as being deſirous to be heard, becauſe he was a faithfull ſetter forth of Gods lawe: ſhewing alſo that he had vengeance readie prepared for all ſuch as would checke againſt him, or reiect the doctrine that he did ſet forth.

He ſaith yet further, that men muſt neither adde any thing to that which he commaundeth, nor take any thing from it, to the ende they may keepe Gods commaundementes. Whereas he ſaith that nothing muſt be added nor diminiſhed: it is to ſhewe the thing that I touched euen nowe: that is to wit, that God mindeth to try our obedience, by reſtreining vs from fetching our windlaſſes, and from ſcoterloping ouer the fieldes, to raught at euerie thing that we like off: and to hold vs faſt tied and bound vnto his word. Then is it not ynough for vs to receiue that which God ſendeth vs, and to allowe it as good: but wee muſt acknowledge it to be our whole wiſedome, (as ſhal be added hereafter in this Chapter) ſo as wee be not skilful to mingle any thing with Gods word, but conclude thus with our ſelues: Seeing God hath ſpoke it, it is not lawful for mortal mẽ to interlace any thing w̃ it, but they muſt be contẽted with ỹ which they haue heard of ſuch a maiſter. This is in effect the meaning of Moſes. And this Deut. 5. 32. is not ſaid in this place onely: wee ſhall ſee it re- & 12. 32. peated againe hereafter in the twelfth Chapter, and in other places, and the ſcripture is full of it. And yet we ſee there is not any thing worſe kept, than this preſent exhortation. And what is the cauſe thereof? That men doe take it for a principle, that they haue alwayes ſome reaſon with them, and that they bee of ſufficient abilitie to gouerne themſelues as they ought to doe. Thus then doth pride take the firſt place, when men will needes diſcerne betweene good and euill after their owne fanſie. Contrariwiſe Gods will is to be wiſe for vs, & that we as ſillie ſheepe ſhould hearken to our ſhepeheardes voyce, and quite forget the ſufficiencie which the vnbeleeuers imagine themſelues to haue. Let vs thinke, there is nothing in vs but errour and follie, there is nothing but vanitie and leaſing, vntil our God haue taught vs. That is the point that God wold bring vs to. But it is exceeding hard for men to reſtaine them ſelues continually from being puffed vp with this fond ouerweening of ſelfe-wiſedome. And therewithall is mingled curioſitie: Our eares itch to heare this and that, wee make diſcourſes, we haue our imaginations, and a nomber of things do runne in our heads. Why ſhould not this be good, ſay we? Why ſhould not that bee lawfull? Bicauſe then that curioſitie hath taken ſo deepe roote in our mindes: therefore cannot God hold vs to the pure ſimplicitie of his worde. Beſides this, wee haue a ſorte of naughtie affections, which turne vs away from God, and are al of them enemies to make warre againſt God, ſo as wee cannot ſo much as thinke a good thought, but we bee full of vice and corruption. That is the cauſe why wee cannot hold our ſelues in obedience vnto God. And yet notwithſtanding, when wee haue offended him a thouſand wayes, doe wee fall to amending of any whit of it? Yea marie, but after what faſhion? After our owne guiſe. Wee lay on plaiſters that make the ſore worſe, as wee ſee hath befallen in all ages. For the Prophets fought againſt theſe ſame vices without ceaſſing. Although the people of Iſrael had the lawe with ſuch ſtrait reſtraints as ye ſee here: yet were their fingers alwaies itching to intermingle ſome inuentions of their own therewithall. The Prophets cried out, how now? Shall your God neuer ouerrule you as his flocke? He hath purchaſed you by deliuering you from the bondage of Pharao, he hath giuen you his lawe, hee hath helped you a nomber of wayes beſides: and yet ye cannot finde in your hearts to liue as he will haue ye. And wherefore was this people ſo vnruly? Firſt bicauſe of pride, (which, as I told you, hath reigned in men in all ages) for that the Iewes would needes be able to rule themſelues. For they were of opinion, that whatſoeuer ſeemed good to themſelues, ỹ ſame ought to haue bene allowed of God. The verie ground frõ whence they tooke their boldnes, to make al the chãges [of Religion] ỹ happened among thẽ, was their gaſing about them, [& their thinking w themſelues] wee ſee that our neighbours do thus. Hereby ſuperſtition gat ful ſcope, ſo as they ran gadding after the idoles of ỹ heathen. And when they ſawe that they had troden Gods lawe vnder foote: Oh (ſaid they) this muſt be amended. And howe? By dubling ỹ miſchiefe from time to time. Wee ſee the like in the Popedome: and would God wee had the wit to profite our ſelues by ſuch examples and lookingglaſſes. For what is the chief point that troubleth Chriſtendome at this day? Wee demaund that men ſhould heare God ſpeake: and that thereuppon there ſhould no doctrine be receiued that is deuiſed at the pleaſure of men, but that the world ſhoulde ſubmit it ſelfe to God, that the holye ſcripture ſhould be taken as the doctrine of perfection: and that wee ſhould acknowledge it to bee Gods trueth, whereunto it behoueth our whole life to be framed, wout adding or diminiſhing. That is our demand. On the cõtrarie part, it is certaine that all Poperie muſt needes fall to the ground, except mens inuentions may haue their full courſe, ſo as Gods word may bee mingled, turmoiled, ſtuffed, yea and euen falſified ỹ mens deuiſes. And yet notwithſtanding the Papiſts are ſo ſhameleſſe ſtill, as to vpbraide vs that we will needes be too wiſe in our owne conceits. Yea marie, but wherein? When it comes to the triall, wee deſire no more but that Gods worde may not in any wiſe be diminiſhed, and that the thinges which wee thinke good of our ſelues ſhould not be admitted, but that wee ſhould forſake whatſoeuer is of man, and thruſt it vtterly vnder foote and aboliſh it, ſo as onely God may bee exalted. Is it our intent to be ouerwiſe, when we confeſſe, firſt of all that there is nothing but fooliſhneſſe in men, and that ſuch as will needes be skilfull and wittie [of themſelues] are ſtarke mad, inaſmuch as they can not put themſelues wholly into Gods hand, to bee gouerned by him as he liſteth? And yet notwithſtãding, that is the thing wherein wee differ. And that is it that ingendreth moſt ſtrife in theſe dayes, bicauſe the Papiſtes cannot yeelde to this reaſon, that God ſhould bee obeyed according to his worde, and that men ſhould be contented to bee taught by him in his ſchole. In deede they will not bee ſo bolde as to denie that Gods lawe is holy and rightful: but yet to their ſeeming, God hath ſpoken but by halues, & men had neede of a higher and profounder doctrine, and of ſtraiter lawes. But it is not ſaid here, that men ſhould but onely heare what God ſaith, & afterward do what they liſt themſelues: No, God giueth them no ſuch choiſe. For what a thing were that? He ſhoulde not onely admit vs to bee his fellowes, but alſo giue vs ſuperioritie ouer him. And ỹ were euen a turmoiling of heauen & earth togither, & a helliſh cõfounding of al things. Yet notwithſtãding, ſuch hath it bin, & ſuch is it ſtill among the Papiſts at this day. For notwithſtanding that they graunt Gods Law to be holy and righteous: yet they ceaſſe not to turmoile it with whatſoeuer ſeemes good to themſelues. O (ſay they) this is the commandemẽt of our mother holy Church, this is a doctrine of hirs ỹ muſt be obſerued, this is a good deuotion, this is a law of hirs, this is an ordinãce. To be ſhort there is no ho. And is this an obeying of ỹ which Moſes ſaith here? So then let vs learne to giue attentiue eare to this exhortation, ſeeing it is not for nought ỹ it is ſo often repeated vnto vs. And if ỹ Prophets in old time had ſo hard hold w the people for this vice: let vs aſſure our ſelues ỹ we alſo ſhall euer be vnruly & wildheaded, vntill our Lorde haue tamed vs by long handling, & made vs to ſticke to this groũd, That it is no more lawfull for vs in any wiſe to adde any thing to his law, than it is lawfull for vs to take any thing from it. Now in deede the Papiſts alledge ỹ this was ſpoken to the Iewes: but ỹ as for vs, we be now vnder the law of libertie. But they ſpeake like beaſts. For when the Goſpell is named the Law of libertie: it is not ment ỹ God layeth the bridle in our neckes, and that we may henceforth followe our owne ſwindge: but (as I ſaid afore) it is bicauſe it beareth with vs, & continueth not the extreme rigor of curſing vs, whẽ wee haue not performed Gods commandemẽts in all pointes to the full. In that reſpect is ỹ Goſpell

Rom. 5. 12. & 8. 2. & Gal. 5. 4.

pell named the lawe of libertie. Neuertheleſſe foraſmuch as God hath more fully reuealed the things vnto vs, which were hid for a time: & foraſmuch as wee bee taught much more largely now adayes, than the Iewes were: there is much more reaſon why wee ſhoulde holde our ſelues more in awe, and walke reuerently before God. For in compariſon of vs, the Iewes had a verie ſlender teaching: and yet notwithſtanding, they bee forbidden to put any thing to it. And ſhall we then preſume now adayes to adde any thing to that which God hath left vs, when he hath reached out his trueth farre and wide, and that beſides his lawe and Prophets, we haue this further perfection, that he hath ſpoken to vs with open mouth by Ieſus Chriſt? What a preſumptuouſneſſe were that? Beſides that we ſhould offer wrong and diſhonour to the lawe: we ſhould alſo blaſpheme the Goſpell. And therefore let vs vnderſtand, that Gods ſpirit hath not ſpoken it for any one time onely: but that he meant to deliuer it for a rule to continue to the worldes end when he ſaide, Put not any thing to that which I commaund you, neither take any thing from it. When he ſaieth, Put not any thing to it: It is to ſhewe vs that onely God muſt bee wiſe, and haue authoritie to gouerne vs, ſo as we muſt not ſticke to our owne fooliſh deuotions, which wee had in the time of our ignorance, when wee were wretched blind Papiſtes. Then let vs learne to holde vs to the ſimplicitie of Gods worde, and let our onely wiſdome bee to obey that which he ſaieth, that he may haue all preheminence. And like as God forbiddeth vs to adde any thing to his worde, ſo doeth he forbid vs to take any thing from it: and not without cauſe. For if wee will needes obey God but in part, & in the meane while exempt our ſelues from whatſoeuer wee liſt: it is ſuch a partaking, as ſhall neuer bee admitted. Accordingly as now adayes wee ſhall ſee many, which will bee contented to obey, ſo farre foorth as it pincheth them not ouer neere: but if it be a thing that trouble them, they ſeeke to bee rid of it, and fret and chafe againſt it. But it is not for vs to proceede after that maner. For as I ſaide, like as God forbiddeth to adde any thing to his doctrine: ſo forbiddeth he to take any thing therefro. He that ſaide, Thou ſhalt not commit adulterie (ſaieth S. Iames) hath ſaide alſo, Thou ſhalt not ſteale. And therefore let vs bee well ware, that we rend not Gods lawe in pieces. For it is not for mā to put the things a ſunder, which God hath put together. And let vs aſſure our ſelues we can not breake Gods law in any point, but we violate Gods Maieſtie which is contained therein. That then is a thing which we haue to remember vpon ỹ text. For otherwiſe we ſhall not be able to keepe Gods commandements, ỹ is to ſay, we ſhal not yeeld God ỹ authoritie which he deſerueth. As for example, when the Papiſtes obſerue Gods lawe: how go they to work? They leaue it behinde them, & in the meane while reſt vpon the commandemēts of their Mother holy Church. And wherevpō ground they thēſelues? Behold, there comes mee an idole, euen a ſtinking carion, & he loades them with a law. A Papiſt imagins himſelfe to bee a little Angell, if he keepe ỹ ordinance of a worme ỹ is but dung: and he will ſay it is Gods law. Nowe I pray you, in ſo dooing what preferment yeeldeth he more to God, than to creatures? Is it not apparant, that in that caſe God is as it were raūged in aray, to be but companion with men? Now ſurely ſuch obedience of ỹ Papiſts is diueliſh, bicauſe it ſetteth vp mē in Gods ſted. Therfore let al ſuch dealing be done away, yea and let vs abhorre it vtterly.

Finally let vs marke, ỹ whereas Moſes ſaieth, That thou mayſt enter into the lande & liue: it is not meant ỹ God giueth vs any payment or wages, as though he were bound vnto it: but ỹ he muſt euermore haue the ſouereigntie of vs, & we bee ſubiect to him, forſaking all our wicked affectiōs which may turne vs away frō following his commandements. And although he ſpeake to vs by the mouthes of men: yet let not vs ceaſſe to honour him in the Maieſtie which he vttereth by his woorde, but let vs learne to holde our ſelues wholly thereunto, without ſwarning one way or other, & let vs giue ouer all our owne wit & reaſon. Againe, let all our luſtes be ſo beatē downe, as wee attempt not in any wiſe to ſtand againſt God, but walke before him in ſuch reuerence & lowelineſſe, as we may giue proofe that wee bee his people in deede, and that we take him for our father and ſoueraigne Prince.

Now let vs kneele downe in ỹ preſence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faults, praying him to make vs feele thē more & more, yea euen in ſuch wiſe as we may come to ſubmit our ſelues to him with true repentance, & proceede therein more and more, vntil ſuch time as being quite rid of all our fleſhly corruptions and clothed againe ẅ his righteouſnes, wee be made partakers of the immortall glory whereunto he calleth vs dayly by his word. And ſo let vs al ſay, Almightie God heauenly Father, &c.

Matt. 19. 6.

On Munday the xx. of May. 1555.

The xx. Sermon which is the ſecond vpon the fourth Chapter.

3 Your eyes haue ſeene what the Lorde did to Beelphegor, for the Lorde thy God hath rooted out all the men from among you, which walked after Beelphegor.

4 But you which haue cleaued to the Lorde your God, are all aliue at this day.

5 Beholde, I haue taught yee ordinances and lawes as the Lorde my God commaunded mee, that you ſhould doe thereafter in the land which you are entering into to poſſeſſe it.

6 Keepe them [therefore] and doe them: for that is your wiſedome and vnderſtanding in the ſight of the Nations, who hearing of all theſe ordinances ſhall ſay, ſurely it is a wiſe and vnderſtanding people, it is a great Nation.

GOd ſheweth his great goodnes in labouring to drawe vs to him by gentleneſſe: and great alſo is his grace if he draw vs to him by force, when he ſeeth that wee cannot otherwiſe bee ſubdued. And that is the cauſe why he not only ſetteth his promiſes before vs, but alſo addeth threatnings, ſhewing vs his rigour, and making vs alſo to feele it: euen to the ende to win vs by ſome meanes or other. But yet doeth all this redound to our welfare, and God ſheweth howe much he tendereth vs, euē in that he is ſo ſharp and rough towardes vs. For if wee coulde ſuffer our ſelues to bee led gently by him, ſurely ſuch is his nature that he would deale that way with vs, according to his owne ſaying that he is a kinde hearted and pitifull God, foreward to ſhew mercie, and of long ſufferaunce. When God intendeth to ſhewe what good will he beareth vs, he alledgeth all the properties of a good Father. Then will he neuer vſe any roughneſſe, vnleſſe he bee inforced, bicauſe he ſeeth vs dul vpon the ſpurre, and is faine to prick vs, or elſe wee would neuer goe on our way. Therefore when we come to reade the holy Scripture, let vs alwaies haue this before our eyes, that our Lordes deſire is to drawe vs to him by gentleneſſe, if wee bee plyable: and therevpon let vs humble our ſelues vnto him, and not looke to haue him deale roughly with vs, but followe him quietly as ſoone as he hath ſhewed vs that he is willing to receiue vs. And if we haue bin ſo farre ouerſeene as to haue giuen deafe eare to all his promiſes, and not to come at his call: at leaſtwiſe it were not meete for vs to bee drowſie ſtill, when he addeth his threatnings to waken vs. Therefore let vs vnderſtand that it is time for vs to yeeld our ſelues to God then or neuer. And that is the cauſe why that in this text, Moſes putteth the people in remembrance, of the puniſhments that God had laide vpon ſuch as worſhipped the idole of Ammō which was called Beel-phegor. But we haue yet one point more to mark, which is, that God ſpareth vs and puniſheth others, to the intent wee ſhould learne wit at other mens coſt, as they ſay. If God ſhould ſtep to vs at the firſt daſh, and correct vs as ſoone as wee haue done amiſſe, or tell vs that we ſhould looke for vengeance at his hand: yet ought we to take it as a token of his fatherly goodneſſe, as I ſaid afore. But his will is to beare with vs, and he ſetteth the ſaide chaſtiſements before vs, to make vs knowe that his puniſhing of offenders is not without cauſe, & that wee ought to take the ſame for a warning to our ſelues. And ſo doth Moſes vſe it here. For he ſaith not, God will puniſh you if ye offende: but hee ſaieth, Ye haue ſeene howe they were puniſhed which worſhipped Beel-phegor. Nowe therefore, preuent Gods wrath, and tarie not till he be angrie with you, & ſet on fire: but cleaue ſimply to his word, and let the corrections that he hath ſhewed you auaile you, & not bee ſhewed you in vaine. Thus ye ſee the third point which wee haue to marke: that is to wit, that our Lorde vttereth not his threatenings vnto all men, but ſheweth vs howe he puniſheth the vnbeleeuers, to the intent that wee ſhoulde not bee of their nomber, leaſt wee ſhould be wrapped in the ſame condemnation with them. And it is the ſame thing that S. Paul ſheweth. For after he hath tolde the faithfull, that they muſt abſtaine from couetouſnes, theft, whoredome, drunkenneſſe, and ſuch other like things, yea and euen from all manner of looſeneſſe and wantonneſſe: he addeth, be not deceiued, for Gods wrath commeth vppon the vnbeleeuers for ſuch things. He ſaieth not that Gods wrath ſhall come vpon them: but he tempereth his ſpeach and ſaieth, Conſider that God puniſheth the vnbeleeuers for ſuch cauſes, and therfore ſeparate your ſelues from their nomber and companie. After the ſame maner ſpeaketh he likewiſe in the tenth of the firſt to the Corinthians. After he had tolde them how God had puniſhed idolaters, rebels, and ſuch as had coueted vnlawfull things: he addeth that thoſe thinges are written for vs, that we might ſee and behold Gods iudgements as in a liuely picture, & keepe our ſelues from falling into the like puniſhment. Nowe therefore let vs come to that which Moſes rehearſeth here: Your eyes (ſaieth he) haue ſeen what the Lorde did in the caſe of Beel-phegor. In ſaying ſo, he telleth not the people a tale that ſhall doe them no good: but he doeth them to vnderſtand, that Gods vttering of his vengeaunce againſt ſuch as had worſhipped that idole, was to giue a generall leſſon to all men: and therefore that they ought to thinke themſelues worthie of dubble blame in that behalfe, foraſmuch as they had fared neuer the better by Gods ſcourges, but had ſhut their eyes all the while that he was about to warne them to their benefite and welfare.

Eph.5.5.6.

1.Cor.10.6.

Nowe remaineth to apply this geere to our vſe. When God ſendeth any trouble vppon the world: let vs vnderſtand that it is not without cauſe that he is ſo ſore diſpleaſed. For if we conſider the offences and miſdeedes that haue bene committed: wee muſt needes conclude ẏ God ſheweth himſelfe a iudge in puniſhing ſinnes. But doeth that ſerue onely for them that feele the ſtrokes? No: Gods will is to ſhewe his iuſt vengeance generally, that men may learne to ſtoope to him, and to walke in feare of him, and to giue thēſelues no more to prouoking of him. To be ſhort, all the chaſtiſementes that wee ſee in the worlde, ought to ſerue for our learning:

Eſa.26. according to this ſaying of the Prophet Eſay, O Lorde, when thou executeſt thy iudgementes, the dwellers of the earth ſhall learne righteouſneſſe. For when God winketh, and puniſheth not the wicked and vnrighteous: men take leaue to doe euill, it ſeemeth that all thinges ſhoulde ſcape vnpuniſhed, and euerie man beareth with himſelfe, accordingly as all of vs are naturally too much inclined to flatter our ſelues in our ſinnes. But when wee perceiue that GOD calleth mens ſinnes to account, and that all thinges are inrolled before him, he ſheweth him ſelfe a iudge in puniſhing men, whereas they thought they had beene forgotten: then behold, wee be wakened, ſo as euerie of vs beginnes to bethinke himſelfe, or at leaſtwiſe it were good reaſon that he ſhould do ſo. True it is that Gods iudgementes doe ſometimes paſſe before our eyes, and wee make none account of them, by meanes whereof wee can fare neuer the better for them: but vnhappie are wee when we bee ſo blinde. And why? For (as I ſaide) Gods intent is that other men ſhoulde take example, by his chaſtiſing of thoſe that haue offended. Yea and euen the worldly iudges obſerue the ſame order, inſomuch that when they puniſh a theefe, or a murderer, or any other euill dooer, they doe it not alonely to be reuenged of ỹ euil that he hath done as in reſpect of himſelfe: but alſo to ſet him forth as a lookingglaſſe, to the intent that all other folkes ſhoulde ſet a watch ouer themſelues, and abhorre ſuch crimes, and not ſuffer them to haue their full courſe and ſcope. And thinke wee that God goeth yet any further? So then, let vs ſuffer our ſelues to bee amended at other mens coſt, and let vs haue our eyes open to beholde the puniſhments that he ſendeth. And nowe in theſe dayes, muſt it not needes bee that wee be worſe than aſleepe, if wee bee not mooued at the great number of corrections that God ſendeth? Wee ſee howe the whole worlde is in maner paſt recouerie, and (as the Prophet Eſay Eſa.1.6. ſaieth) there is not one whit of ſoundneſſe from the crowne of the head to the ſole of the foote: Gods ſcourges runne abrode euerie where: euerie man complaineth, great and ſmall lament: On the one ſide wee ſee warres, famine, and peſtilence, (and thoſe thinges happen not by caſualtie:) and on the otherſide euerie man bewaileth his owne priuate caſe. And why ſo? Wherfore doe wee not knowe the hande that ſtriketh vs? Wherefore doe wee not conſider that God ſheweth himſelfe a iudge towardes vs, to make vs returne vnto him? For mens ſinnes are not vnknowen, we ſee well that the whole worlde is out of order, and that God muſt bee faine to put to his hand. And yet in the meane ſeaſon wee abide ſtill blockiſh, but wee ſhall be helde the leſſe excuſed for it in the ende. And why? For it may bee tolde vs to our ſhame, that our eyes haue ſeene howe God warned vs: it was long of none but our ſelues that we were not brought to repentance. Seeing that GOD did laye his iudgementes open to our ſight, and wee marked them not: wee muſt needes bee puniſhed the ſorer for ſuch negligence, becauſe we haue played the deafe and blinde folkes, when GOD went about to bring vs gently to him. And ſo the thing that Moſes ſpake to the people of Iſraell, is written to our vſe in theſe dayes. For it is as much as if the holy Ghoſt ſhoulde tell vs, that when God puniſheth men, bee it generally or particularly: we muſt not be purblinde, in that caſe, but bethinke vs well and ſee whether wee our ſelues haue not deſerued the like: and thereupon bee ſorie for our ſinnes, and not tarie till God drawe his ſworde againſt vs, but hye vs apace to him ſeeing hee warneth vs to returne. And for the performing heereof, let vs vnderſtande that the calamities which light vppon the worlde, come not by haphazarde, but from heauen, and are corrections for the offences where into the worlde hath ouerſhot it ſelfe.

Nowe Moſes ſpeaketh heere by name of Beelphegor, which was the ydoll of the Ammonites, as is ſaide afore. And the worde Baal betokeneth a Principal, a Maſter, or a Patrone: which thing is well worthie to bee marked. For when wee heere ſpeaking of the ydolles of the heathen, they ſeeme to vs to bee farre other thinges than thoſe that wee ſee noweadayes. But the Scripture ſheweth vs that they bee in manner all one. And why? For the heathen were not ſo groſſe and dulwitted, but that they knewe there was a certaine ſoueraine maieſtie which had created heauen and earth, and helde ſoueraine Dominion ouer all thinges. But therewith all they woulde needes haue vndergods and meane gods whom they termed their Patrones, as they doe nowadayes in the Popedome. Againe there was another ſort of gods, whom they thought to haue the charge of ſeuerall Countries: for euerie countrie had his ydol. And ſo alſo this worde Baal was the name as yee woulde ſay of a God that had the gouernance of a whole countrie, and ſerued to get men fauour at the great Gods hand. Nowe it may ſeeme at the firſt bluſh, that this was no defacing of Gods glorie, nor any impeachment to the continuall ſeruing and worſhipping of him: and yet is it ſuch a corruption as he cannot abide. For he will haue all preheminence to himſelfe, and hee will not haue men to giue him or aſſigne him any companion, as we ſhall ſee hereafter where Moſes will ſay, The Lorde thy God is the onely God. Againe, when men make ſuch mingling, and will needs haue a multitude of gods: we ſee how god ſpeaketh of it in the twentith of Ezechiell. Goe your wayes (ſaith he) I giue yee ouer, ſeeing yee haue other Gods than me: go ſerue the diuel altogether, for I will haue nothing to do with you. Let vs mark wel then, that Gods ſeruice can neuer be kept in his pureneſſe, except all ſuperſtition be laide downe, and men holde themſelues ſimply to his worde, without inuenting of any thing, & without intermingling of any thing deuiſed of their owne braine. Thus yee ſee that the true and pure religion, is the exalting of the only one God, ſo as his glorie is not darkened by adding any companion vnto him.

Deut.4.35.

And

And nowe hee ſayeth expreſly, You that haue cleaued to your God are all aliue this day. This ſerueth not ſo much to make the people gladde: as to ſhewe them that ſeeing they bee ſo greatly bounde and beholden to their God, they ought to ſerue him with the greater zeale. Moſes then telleth the people thus: Yee haue ſeene Gods wrath: and what hath preſerued you from it hitherto? For yee might haue beene ouerthrowen and deſtroyed as well as they that worſhipped Beelphegor. Knowe yee therefore that your continuing vnto this day, is through the free fauour of your God. And therefore looke that yee ſerue and honour him as hee deſerueth, ſeeing hee hath mainteined you after ſuch a faſhion, and againſt all hope. Nowe this warning belongeth vnto vs, becauſe we liue not to any other ende than to ſerue our GOD, and woe bee to them which being in this worlde doe rauen vp Gods benefites, and knowe not to what ende, but are heere as brute beaſtes. So then let vs marke well, that as long as we bee in this worlde, God will haue vs to doe him homage for our life, and [to vnderſtande] that we bee bounde to him [for all thinges,] and to make that our marke to ſhoote at, according to this ſentence often ſpoken in the ſcripture, I ſhall liue and goe into the temple of the Lorde. Yea & when Ionas was come out of the Whales bellie, and euen when hee called vppon GOD being there as in a gulfe of hell: hee ſaide not I will liue and make good cheere, but hee ſaieth that hee ſhal yet againe ſee the temple of God. And what to doe? to giue him thankes for prolonging his life after that ſort. Therefore let vs marke, that in al the benefites which we receiue at Gods hande, he bindeth vs ſo much the more ſtreitly vnto him, to the intent that we ſhoulde indeuour to ſerue him, and to giue our ſelues wholly vnto him, and to walke in the obedience of his righteouſnes. This is it in effect which Moſes meant to note.

Pſal. 5.8. & 118.17. Ionas. 2.5.

And hee ſetteth downe afterwarde, that hee had giuen them ſtatutes and ordinances according as God had commaunded him. Wherein hee proteſteth that hee had beene a faithfull deliuerer of the doctrine which hee did ſet forth, to the end that the people might not receiue it as the doctrine of a man, but conſider howe it was God that had ſpoken it, and ſo imbrace it with all reuerence. And heereby wee ſee that GOD doeth euermore reſerue to himſelfe, the right of gouerning vs as in reſpect of the ſpirituall gouernement of our ſoules. True it is that God woulde there ſhoulde bee ciuill policie in this worlde, and hee hath put men in commiſſion for the ſame: but in the meane while hee will haue none but onely himſelfe to haue power to lay lawes vppon vs. When the caſe concerneth his owne ſeruice, and religion, and ſpirituall thinges: then muſt onely he himſelfe bee heard, and no man muſt vſurp his office or meddle in it, nor no man ſteppe in to adde one word. For if euer any man in the worlde was worthie to bee hearde: was not Moſes ſo excellent, that hee might well bee formoſt and chiefe? Yes: for wee ſhall ſee heereafter, that there neuer was ſuch a Prophet in the worlde, neither before him nor after him, euen to the comming of him that is aboue al Prophetes, that is to wit, the ſonne of God. And yet for all his worthineſſe, Moſes holdeth himſelf in the number of thoſe which ought to herken vnto God without ſetting forth any thing of his owne deuice. Seeing it is ſo, whoſoeuer taketh vpon him to make lawes to rule mens ſoules, ſhall goe to confuſion with his diueliſh preſumptuouſneſſe and ouerweening. To bee ſhort, when any doctrine is to bee followed, let vs on our ſide looke that wee bee ſure that it proceedeth from God, & that our faith be groũded on him alone, ſo as wee hang not vppon mortall men, nor vppon any creature. For there woulde bee no ſteedineſſe. Thus yee ſee that the firſt point which wee haue to marke vppon this text, is that Moſes proteſteth that hee commeth not in his owne name, nor ſetteth vp Lawes at his owne pleaſure, but receiued the thinges at Gods hande, which hee taught. And for th at cauſe he ſaith, the Lorde my God commaunded mee. True it is that the people might haue ſaide ſo as well as Moſes, according alſo as Moſes addeth oftentimes, The Lorde your God. But here hee appropriateth the title of God to himſelfe, ſaying, The Lorde my God. And whie? It is like as in a Countrie where there is a Prince, euerie man may well ſay, yondſame is the king, yondſame is the Prince: and yet notwithſtanding, they that are of his houſholde or beare any office may adde theſe wordes ouer, the King my maſter, or they may ſaye, the Prince my maſter. And why? For they bee his officers or his houſeholde ſeruauntes. After the ſame manner delt the Prophetes. As for example, Eſay in his ſeuenth chapter ſpeaking to Acaz, ſaieth: Yee houſe of Dauid, is it not ynough for you to [greeue men, but yee muſte alſo] tempt my GOD? Heere yee ſee howe Eſay ſetteth himſelfe alone. And why? for hee is Gods officer, and hath his commiſſion to bee his Prophet We ſee as much in Helias. And Saint Paul likewiſe incrocheth vppon the tytle that is common, and ſayeth, The Goſpel which I haue receiued of my God. Whereby hee ſheweth that hee was ordeyned to be an Apoſtle. Euen ſo is it in this text, where Moſes declareth that hee was not a Prophet of his owne making, ne came foorth at auenture, but that GOD had called him to that ſtate, and committed that charge vnto him. The reaſon then why wee muſte giue eare to men that teach vs, is becauſe they bee ſent of God, ſo as hee diminiſheth not his owne authoritie, ne diſchargeth vs to goe where wee liſt, but will haue vs alwayes ruled by his word.

Deut. 34.10. 1.Pet.5.4.

1.Ki.17.20. 21.

Rom.1.8.9.

Nowe Moſes addeth immediatly, that hē hath ſet foorth the ſtatutes and ordinances, to the ende that the people ſhoulde doe them, when they were come into the lande to poſſeſſe it. Wherein wee ſee the ſame that hath beene ſhewed heeretofore; that is to wit, that God wil not haue mē to dally with his his doctrine, but to imbrace it with all reuerence, and to obey it by framing themselues thereafter. Wherefore let vs bee well aduised, that if wee will bee well taught at Gods hande, wee must serue him all our life long. For without wee doe so, wee shall be condemned of false abusing the doctrine, which was giuen vs to kill our vices and to alter our lewde and inordinate lustes, As often then as we come to heare Gods worde, let vs alwayes haue this before our eyes, that his will is to bring vs home to himselfe, and not to haue vs wander after our owne wicked lusts and likings, but to bow down our necke vnder his yoke to yeelde him obedience. And heereby weesee howe the Gospell is vnhallowed nowadayes. For wee haue our eares sufficiently beaten with the thinges that wee ought to doe: but who is hee that doeth but so much as lifte vp his finger, to streine himselfe to serue God? The number of them is verie small. But there is great store of them that take greater libertie to doe euil vppon the preaching of the Gospell, and in their opinion God is much beholden to them, in that they suffer his worde to bee preached, themselues holding scorne of it. But needes must such vngodlinesse and diuelish pride bee horriblie punished. Why so? For the worde that GOD sendeth vs, is the seede of life which ought to yeelde fruite in vs: and yet for all that, wee make no reckening of it, but trample it vnder our feete, and wee become starke blockes. And it is not ynough for vs to bee a barren grounde that beareth no fruite: but wee doe also bring forth the fruites of bitternesse, as God complayneth by his Prophet Ieremie: insomuch that yee shall see a great number that doe euen spite God and rancle in malice against him, seeking nothing else but to kindle his wrath more and more. Such folke must needes looke for dreadful damnation and mercilesse vengeance.

And truely like as Moses hath declared here that hee came not in his owne name: so also, his protesting that hee had inioyned them the lawes and ordinances as GOD had vttered them vnto him, sheweth that men cannot deuise to spite God more openly, than by striuing against his worde. Indeede they will alledge that their intent is not so, like as wee see in these dayes that these scorners of God which make none account of any doctrine, doe dosse with their hornes like madde bulles against all good gouernement and policie, and would faine that there were nothing but vtter desolation in the Church: and yet notwithstanding to couer themselues, they will [not sticke to] say, what, doeth the matter concerne the Gospell? who is he that woulde not mainteine it? Yea if the diuels of hel maintain it. We see some such among vs, yea euen which shew themselues much wickeder than the Papists. And the diuel also must needes be faine to shew his furie, and the libertie that God hath giuen him against such despisers. But all is well if they can couer themselues alwayes with this faire excuse, that they mind not to fight against the Gospel, but against the preachers. Nowe seeing they bee at that point, wee must fall to scanning of the matter, to wit whether the preachers doe set foorth any straunge doctrine, whether they haue put forth any forged dotages, or whether they haue set vp any lawes at their owne pleasure. If it be found that the ministers preach Gods worde purely: that they are glad and faine to aduaunce the kingdome of our Lorde Iesus Christ: that they procure the same to the vttermost of their power: and that they seeke to haue such order in the Church, as God may alwayes be worshiped, and good policie bee maintained among men: with whom haue they to do, which striue here against? And we must bee faine to come to the protestation that Moses made, saying: What are wee Moses and Aaron? What haue wee set foorth, which wee haue not receiued of God? What cause haue you to mooue this sedition and vprore, in saying that yee cannot abide that wee shoulde reigne ouer you? What is the souerentie, what is the dominion which we woulde haue ouer you? Wee desire nothing but that God bee obeyed, and that hee haue the authoritie and preheminence that belong vnto him. Loe howe Moses spake of his time. And after the same maner speake wee nowadayes to these roysters, which seeke to bring all to confusion, vnder shadowe and pretence that they intende to mainteine the Gospell, whereas it appeareth that they make a flatte mockerie of it, and raile against it. Yet for all this, they that haue any taste of Religion, wil defie such plages, and separate themselues from them, least God wrappe them vp with them in the same condemnation: and they will looke to make the knowledge profitable which they haue receiued, yea and with all humblenesse receiue the thinges that are taught them by men, so they bee sure that they come from God. Thus yee see what wee haue to remember vppon this sentence.

Exod.16.7.

Nowe afterwarde hee commaundeth them to keepe these thinges and to doe them. And why? for (saith hee) Beholde your vnderstanding and your wisedome in the sight of all Nations, is that you bee taught of your God. Whereas he saith, ye shall keepe them therefore and doe them: it is a conclusion well worthie to bee noted. For must it not needes be that men are starke madde, when they haue no minde to heare God at such time as hee teacheth them? What are wee that GOD shoulde take the paine to doe the office of a teacher towardes vs? Is it not a great stooping downe from his highnesse? But seeing that God doth so lessen himselfe, as to stoope to our rudenesse to teach vs: shoulde wee let his worde fall to the grounde and despise it? So then let vs vnderstande, that whensoeuer wee bee spoken to in Gods name, we ought to tremble vnder his maiestie, yea and to imbrace his worde with all reuerence, truely, hartily, and zealously. For it is but a counterfait worshipping of God, if we be not as Lambes, suffring our selues to be led by his onely voice: and it is certaine that if we followe not after him as soone as hee doeth

but make a ſigne, wee be wilde beaſtes, and hee will not knowe vs for any of his. And ſo wee ſee what authoritie the name of God carieth with it: inſomuch that when Gods worde is ſet afore vs, wee muſt all caſt downe our heades, and bowe downe our neckes to receiue the yoke that is laide vpon vs, and ſeeke by al meanes to pleaſe him and to be obedient to him.

Nowe Moſes returneth to that which I touched at the beginning: namely, that God indeuoureth to drawe vs to him by gentleneſſe: and hee ſheweth it heere to the people of Iſrael, in telling them of the excellent prerogatiue that had beene giuen them. For beholde heere (ſaieth God) this is thy wiſedome and thine vnderſtanding in the ſight of all nations. Wee knowe that naturally it is a griefe to men to be counted beaſts. And why? For they knowe that the thing wherein they differ from beaſtes, is that they haue diſcretion and reaſon in them. God to the intent to make vs excell Oxon, Aſſes, Dogges, and Swyne, hath printed his image in vs. And wherein conſiſteth this image, but in the hauing of diſcretion to deſcerne betweene good and euill? And therefore it is not to bee maruailed at, though men couet to bee ſkilfull, and to haue wiſedome and abilitie to iudge. But yet for all that, there are verie fewe that ſeeke rightly to haue a true iudgement, inſomuch that al doe rather turne away and wander after their owne fancies, and become brutiſh in themſelues. Yet neuertheleſſe, (as I ſaide afore) wee make great account of the hauing of diſcretion and wiſedome to iudge betweene good and euill. But heere Moſes ſheweth, that men are vnable to rule themſelues. In deede wee weene yes: but it is but a weening, yea and an ouerweening. For our life is vtterly out of order, and there is nothing well ruled in it, vntill GOD haue ſhewed vs the way, and that wee haue profited in his ſchoole. That is the thing where vnto Moſes ſeadeth the people as nowe. All men [ſayeth hee] are deſirous of knowledge, and loath to bee as brute beaſtes. Becauſe they bee ſhaped after the image of God, they woulde faine haue diſcretion, that they might know how to liue.

Nowe it is ſo that GOD giueth you diſcretion and wiſedome, by vouchſafing to ſet his worde before you. So then, bee not ſo vnthankefull towardes him, as to miſuſe ſo ineſtimable a benefite. Suffer GOD to make you profite in ſuch wiſe by his worde as yee may bee skilfull and wiſe, and not wander any more. Wee ſee now in effect the meaning of Moſes.

Nowe haue wee to gather vppon this text, what the weakeneſſe of mans minde is. True it is that our father Adam receiued vnderſtanding and power to diſcerne betweene good and euill in his creation: but after hee had ſinned hee was after a ſort blinded. And wee likewiſe are corrupted, ſo as wee diſcerne in a manner nothing at all. Wee take white for blacke, as it appeareth by our corrupting of the whole ſeruice of GOD by our ſuperſtitions. True it is Ro.2.14.15 that God hath left vs ſome diſcretion, ſo as we knowe it is euill to commit theft, whoredome, murther, &c. but yet notwithſtanding, wee be daſeled in ſuch wiſe, that our inſight is not ſo cleare and ſure as to make vs walke aright. Yee ſee then after what ſort men are marde, and it is the thing that the ſcripture ſheweth vs, inſomuch that the wretched Paynims and ſuch as Ep.4.17.18. knew not God, could not but be plunged in darkneſſe and ſo deſtitute of reaſon, as they coulde not diſcerne any more. That is the firſt point which we haue to marke.

And when as Moſes intytleth Gods worde and his lawe to bee our wiſedome: thereby hee ſheweth that wee haue no wiſedome in our ſelues, ne knowe howe to behaue our ſelues, but are as brute beaſtes, vntill ſuch time as our Lorde haue taught vs. That is another point. And were the ſame well borne in minde, ſurely men woulde not bee ſo bolde to inuent things after their owne liking, but woulde hold themſelues ſoberly and meekely vnder Gods worde. And ſo much the more neede haue wee to mind this texte, becauſe wee knowe there is no other wiſedome in vs, than to ſubmit our ſelues teachable vnto God, and to harken what hee ſaith to vs, to ſticke thereto quietly, refuſing all that euer we can conceiue of our owne head. According wherevnto Sainct Paul ſaieth, that 1.Cor.3.18. 19. wee cannot bee wiſe before God, vntill wee be become fooles in our ſelues: that is to witte, vntil we know that there is nothing but vanitie & leaſing in our owne vnderſtanding, and therefore that wee muſt giue ouer all that we thinke good, and not knowe aught but that which God commaundeth. And therewithall, as Moſes ment heere to bereaue men of all ſelfeweening, to the intent they ſhoulde ſtoope and ſubmitte themſelues vnto Gods worde: ſo on the contrarie parte hee ment to ſhew that when men haue Gods Lawe for their rule: they ſhall want nothing, but all ſhall bee well and perfect. That is a ſeconde point which we haue to note. I haue told you alreadie that men muſt vnderſtande, that there is not one droppe of ſounde iudgement in them, but that to become wiſe, they muſt yeeld themſelues wholly vnto God. It is not ynough to knowe this: for wee might partly heere GOD, and afterwarde adde thereto of our owne, as we ſee the Papiſts haue done. They will not ſaye that the Scripture is falſe, (howebit that they themſelues doe falſifie it moſte wickedly: and yet for all that they bee inforced ſpite of their teeth to ſay ſtill, it is the worde of God:) But they woulde faine mingle their owne lawes with it: whereby it is euident that they haue made ſuch confuſion, as a man cannot diſcerne betweene the holy ſcripture, and their fancies. And why [haue they done ſo]? Becauſe that to their ſeeming there is ſome want in Gods worde, and hee hath not taught thinges perfectly ynough: but that is a curſed blaſphemie. For Moſes, to giue due authoritie to Gods worde, ſaieth expreſſlie that it is the wiſedome and vnderſtanding of ſuch as heare it, and taſte of the doctrine that is conteyned in it. As if hee ſhoulde ſay, ſay, couetniot to knowe further than your God ſheweth you. Holde yee there: for thoſe are your boundes and liſtes, and whoſoeuer paſſeth them confoundeth heauen and earth together. So then let vs learne, that when God is ſo gratious as to teach vs, it behoueth vs to yeelde ſimplie to that which he ſaith. And how may that bee done? Verily if wee take thinges whole as hee telleth vs them, and not by halfe as wee ſee theſe braue laddes doe, which would cut off Gods authoritie from him by the waſte. Well, ſay they: Let the Goſpell be preached: but if there bee any thing that wee miſlike, let that be laide away, ſuch doctrine muſt bee let alone. Yea? Shall God then be ſubiect to mens fancies, ſo as they ſhall receiue nothing but what they thinke good themſelues? What a madnes is that? Now when we ſee ỹ theſe raſcals aduaunce themſelues after that ſort: let vs on our ſide learne to giue eare to God in all points, and to make no exception to reſtreine his authoritie, but to receiue obediently whatſoeuer proceedeth from his mouth. Let that ſerue for a principle. And againe, when we once know what is in the holy ſcripture, let vs reiect all the reſt as ſtraunge and baſtardeſtuffe. For our Lorde hath not taught vs as it were an Apſie, to ſende vs to a greater and excellenter maſter than himſelfe: For what a preſumptuouſneſſe were it [to think,] that God hath ſhewed vs but onely the firſt enterances, and that men muſt leade vs higher? What a compariſon were that? And yet notwithſtanding it is the thing that is done in poperie. For the Pope ſaith, that the lawes which hee hath made, are the reuelations of the holie Ghoſt, whereof our Lorde Ieſus ſpake when hee ſaide to his diſciples [I haue many thinges to ſay vnto you,] but yee cannot beare them all away as nowe. Verily as who ſhoulde ſay, that God had giuen but ſome ſmall enterances in his Lawe and his Goſpell: and that the Pope were inſpired aboue the Prophets and aboue Chriſt himſelfe to bring a much more exquiſite doctrine than theirs. Wee ſee then that the diuell hath paſſed all meaſure in this behalfe. Wherefore let vs learne to knowe nothing but that which we receiue from aboue, and which it pleaſeth God to ſhewe vnto vs. Take that for a principle. Moreouer, if this was verified of the lawe of Moſes: let vs aſſure our ſelues there is much more reaſon that it ſhoulde properly be iuſtified and verified of the goſpel, ſo as they which haue profited therein, may aſſure themſelues that they haue perfect learning, wherein to beholde euen the heauenly giftes, as Saint Paul ſpeaketh of it. And therefore let vs humble our ſelues when we ſee our Lorde ſo gratious to vs, as to teach vs familiarly as it were with his owne mouth. This is it in effect, which we haue to remember vpon this ſtreine. In deede it deſerueth well to be laide foorth more at length; and I muſt touch it againe hereafter: neuertheleſſe I will now conclude with a complaint. I ſee walkers yonder, & I knowe for what their comming is, except it be to ſhew a contempt of God and his word, which is an intollerable lewdeneſſe. They come babling heere to the doore, and that not twiſe or thriſe, but more than a dooſen times. It ſheweth well that they deſpiſe God manifeſtly. Such is the honour of Geneua, that when the Goſpell is a preaching, men come euen to the Church doore to make a flatte mockerie of it, and after the ſame manner alſo is baptiſme honored heere: and it is too common a dealing.

Therefore let vs kneele downe in the preſence of our good God, with acknowledgement of the innumerable faultes which wee haue committed againſt his maieſtie, and for the which wee bee woorthy of eternall death if hee pittie vs not: And therfore let vs pray him to ſhedde out his mercie vppon vs: and that we may the better feele the ſame, let vs beſeech him to vouchſafe to traine vs ſo vnto him henceforth as hee ſubdue all our ſtubburnneſſe and all the wicked luſtes of our fleſh, and reforme vs in ſuch wiſe to his obedience, as wee may fare the better by the chaſtiſements that he ſendeth vs: and therewithall graunt vs the grace to receiue our Lord Ieſus Chriſt for our guide and ſhepheard, and to heare him as our teacher and maſter, like as hee ſpeaketh to vs daylie by his worde. That it may pleaſe him to graunt this grace, not onelie to vs, but alſo to all people and Nations of the earth, &c.

2. Cor. 3.18.

On Tewſday the xxj. of May. 1555.

The xxj. Sermon, which is the third vpon the fourth Chapter.

6 Which you ſhall keepe & c.

7 For what Nation is ſo great, that hath Gods comming ſo nie it, as the Lord our God commeth vnto vs, in all thinges that we call vpon him?

8 And what Nation is ſo great, that hath ſo righteous ordinances and lawes as all this lawe is, which I ſet before you this day?

9 Therefore take heede to thy ſelfe, and keepe thy ſoule diligently, that thou forget not the thinges which thine eyes haue ſeene, nor let them depart from thy heart all the dayes of thy life, but teach them to thy ſonnes, and ſonnes ſonnes.

10 Forget not (say I) the day that thou stoodest before the Lorde thy God in Horeb, when the Lorde saide to me, gather me the people together.

IT was declared to vs yesterday, that forasmuch as GOD seeth that we know not howe to liue: hee taketh paine to teach vs, and doth it in such sort, that as manie as list to obey his doctrine, haue a perfect rule to deale by. And at this day it is long of none but our selues, if we be not wise and well aduised to guide our selues. For wee haue a God that will not faile vs, and his worde is a sure rule for vs. But heere in wee see mens leawdnesse and vnthankefulnesse, in that they cannot finde in their heartes to submitte themselues vnto God, but will needes bee wise in their owne conceit, and still follow their owne inuentions. Yet notwithstanding this maxime cannot bee rased out by men: namely, that wee haue neither wisedome nor discretion, except wee haue profited in Gods schole. And therefore we be warned heereby, to holde our selues simplie to Gods commaundementes. For as soone as wee fall to adding of any thing to Gods worde, it is by and by but corruption: and when wee bee out of those boundes, wee can doe nothing but stray. Neuertheleſſe, a man might make a question heere, howe Moses coulde say that the people of Israel should bee counted sage and wise among all Nations: seeing wee knowe that the heathen did glorie in their owne follies and superstitions, euen in despite of the lawe. Seeing the Infidels were so proude that they reiected the good learning [of the Lawe,] and rested vppon their owne fonde toyes, it shoulde seeme that this was not accomplished in such wise as Moses speaketh of it heere. But wee must wey well the speech that is set downe heere: that is to wit, that the nations which shoulde heare the Lawes in such wise as God had giuen them, shoulde say, beholde heere an excellent and noble people: Nowe as for those that held scorne of Gods law, and were caried away with pride and ouerweening, did they euer vnderstande what Moses had saide vnto the people? No. So then, yee see that the question is resolued in this wise: namely that as many of the heathen, as had knowen and tasted well the doctrine that God had deliuered to the people of Israel, confessed (as truth was) that Gods chosing of a certaine people for himselfe, was a great and singular priuiledge. But verie fewe of them vouchsafed to consider that: for all of them lay weltring still in their owne dung. And although it was apparantly seene that the people of Israel had a seuerall lawe and Religion by themselues: yet did all men shut their eyes and stoppe their eares. And that was the cause why they made no reckening of so great a benefite.

Rom.1,22.

Now herewithal Moses sheweth in two things, how greatly the people ought to haue esteemed of the grace that was giuen vnto them. For let vs (saith he) bee compared with the rest of the worlde: and it shall not bee founde that those which worshippe Idolles doe finde such power among them as to bee succoured at their neede, or that their Gods whom they call vppon, bee so familiar with them. There will no such thing be found. For as soone as we pray vnto our God, and resort vnto him: wee feele him neere vs by and by. Yee see then an inestimable benefite. Againe, wee haue his lawes and Statutes which hee hath giuen vs, wee haue his righteous ordinances: all others doe but goe astraie. True it is that they weene they do wel: but in the meane while they haue no certaintie in their religion: for they haue no trueth concerning God. Therfore let vs consider the good that hee hath done vs, to the ende wee may inioy it. For all this is treated of by Moses, to the intent it shoulde bee applyed vnto vs, and we learne to serue our God with greater zeale, and to holde our selues in awe. For the setting of his benefites and gratious giftes afore vs, is one of the wayes whereby God intendeth to winne vs to him. And it is a shame for vs if wee serue him not, seeing hee hath chosen vs and adopted vs to bee his children. Thus much concerning the first part, where it is saide that other nations haue no Gods that come so nigh them.

Psal.50.15.

This saying (as I haue touched afore,) is meant of Gods helping of his people of Israel as ofte as they called vppon him: yea and oftentimes also euen before they required it, after which manner wee see that hee dealeth with vs also. Hee thinketh vppon vs whyle wee bee asleepe, hee watcheth for vs, and hee maketh vs to feele his succour at our neede. Neuertheleſſe, in telling them that God will succour vs, euen in all thinges that wee require at his hand: his intent is also to incourage folk to call vppon God, and to make them to blame themselues for their owne negligence whensoeuer they bee destitute of helpe and succour at Gods hande: and to doe vs to vnderstande that Gods forgetting of vs, is for that wee flee not to him for refuge as wee ought to doe, ne seeke vnto him, who is alwayes readie to helpe vs at our neede. Thus yee see that the intent of Moses was to exhort the people to prayer and supplication, and therewithal to shew that God had alwayes shewed himselfe at hande vnto such as had returned to him.

Esa.65.1.

It is not so with any of the Gods of the heathen. If this saying were well obserued, the wretched worlde woulde not ouershoote it selfe so farre as it doeth. Wee see what windlasses men make to seeke saluation: but there are very few which goe right forth vnto God, and yet doeth hee allure all of vs: the way and the gate is open. Whereof is it long that wee goe not on? It is for that euen of nature wee desire to bee deceiued. Wee see howe all men doe deuise patrones and aduocates to themselues, and

it ſeemeth to them that they cannot bee diſappointed, when they haue their owne deuotions after what ſort ſoeuer it bee. Thus doe men wilfully beguile themſelues, and runne gadding vp and downe. But when they haue toyled themſelues neuer ſo much, in the ende they finde themſelues ouer weried, & yet ỳ they haue gained nothing by all that euer they did. Wee ſee then howe it is not without cauſe ſaide, that if wee looke well to our ſelues, none of all the wretched vnbeleeuers which torment themſelues to atteine vnto God, and holde not the right way thither, haue ſuch aduauntage as wee haue. For whenſoeuer we call vpon God ſimplie Pſa.145.18 and according to his worde, wee be neuer diſappointed.

But now let vs come to that which Moſes addeth concerning ſtatutes and laws, which is the principall point of this ſentence. What people is there (ſaith he,) which hath ſo righteous ſtatutes and ordinances as we haue? Truely if a man would haue beleeued the heathen, they thought verie well of themſelues in their owne dotages, and they bare themſelues in hand that there was nothing but ſounde perfection in them. But yet for all that, it is a wonder to ſee howe they became ſo dull. They that otherwiſe were of great skill and ſharpewitted, were become ſo brutiſh in their ſuperſtitions, as euen little children might iuſtly haue beene aſhamed of them. But the light muſt be faine to ſhine in the darke: or elſe it will neuer bee poſſible to diſcerne a right. And for proofe thereof, what is the cauſe that the heathen are ſo hardened in their owne dotages? It is for that they neuer knewe Gods Lawe, and therefore they neuer compared the trueth with the vntruth. But when Gods lawe commeth in place, then doeth it appeare that all the reſt is but ſmoke: inſomuch that they which took them ſelues to be maruelous wittie, are founde to haue beene no better than beſotted in their owne beaſtlineſſe. This is apparant. Wherefore let vs marke well, that to diſcerne that there is nothing but vanitie in all worldly deuiſes, we muſt knowe the Lawes and ordinances of God. But if we reſt vppon mens lawes, ſurely it is not poſſible for vs to iudge rightly. Then muſt wee needes goe firſt to Gods ſchoole, and that will ſhewe vs that when wee haue once profited vnder him, it will be ynough. That is all our perfection. And on the otherſide wee may deſpiſe all that euer is inuented by man, ſeeing there is nothing but fondneſſe and vncertainty in them. And that is the cauſe why Moſes termeth them righteous ordinances. As if he ſhoulde ſay, it is true indeede that other people haue ſtore of ceremonies, ſtore of rules, and ſtore of Lawes: but there is no right at all in them, all is awrie, all is crooked. True it is that they perceiue it not: and what is the cauſe thereof, but for that it is not poſſible for them to diſcerne good from euill, without Gods worde which is the trueth? Howe ſoeuer wee fare, wee cannot do the thing that is iuſt or right, except wee haue firſt learned it at Gods hande. And if wee haue beene ſo farre ouerſeene as to allowe our owne doings, let vs not goe on ſtill, for God will diſallowe euerie whit of it, becauſe wee muſt take all our rightneſſe at his trueth. In this caſe it is not for euerie man to bring his owne weightes and his owne balance: but wee muſt hold our ſelues to that which God hath vttered and doth vtter. True it is that Moſes doeth greatly magnifie the people of Iſraell heere: but yet neuertheleſſe we muſt vnderſtande, that the priuiledge which is ſo greatly magnified heere, did nothing aduantage thoſe which reiected the lawe and profited not themſelues thereby. The Iewes are termed heere a wiſe and skilfull people, a noble people, a people that hath nothing but excellency and worthineſſe in them. And why ſo? Becauſe God had choſen them, and vttered his iudgementes and righteouſneſſe vnto them. But yet for all that, on the other ſide they be termed blinde and deafe. And why? Becauſe they did what they coulde to haue quenched the light that God had kindled for them. We knowe that they were taught by the doctrine which conteined their whole wiſedome. And therefore when they deſpiſed it, they coulde not be but dubble blinded inſomuchthat the ignorance of the heathen and infidels, was nothing in compariſon of theirs that had ſo reiected Gods grace, when it was put into their handes: And that is a point well worthie to bee weyed. The Iewes do arme themſelues yet ſtill at this day with the ſame texte, when they liſt to commende themſelues. Tuſh, ſay they: it is ſaide that wee bee men of vnderſtanding, a people of great wiſedome, a people of paſſing nobilitie and worthineſſe. This is true, if they had helde faſt the treaſure that God gaue them, and kept it well. But ſeeing they bee fleeted away from the law, or rather ỳ a veyle is caſt before their eyes, becauſe of their reiecting of Ieſus Chriſt: yea and ſeeing that euen before his comming, they diſobeyed the Prophetes and became hardharted againſt the doctrine of ſaluation that was brought to them: it coulde not bee but that (as I ſaide afore) they muſt needes become more ignoraunt than all the reſt of the worlde. For if the heathen bee as good as deſtitute of reaſon, becauſe they haue not beene in Gods ſchoole: needes muſt they to whome GOD hath ſpoken, and yet are diſobedient therevnto, needes muſt they (I ſay) bee ſtriken with the ſpirite of diſineſſe, and bee caried away by the diuell, and become as wilde beaſtes, ſo as they ſhall not offende of ſimple ignorance as they doe which neuer hearde any thing, but of wilfull rage more than beaſtly. Euen after that manner is it happened to the Iewes. And it is the verie ſame thing wherewith the Prophete Eſaye vpraideth them in his two and forteeth chapter, ſaying: Hearken ye deafe, ſee yee blinde. And why ſpeaketh hee to the deafe and blinde, to heare and ſee well? Hee addeth the reaſon by and by, ſaying: yee haue ſeene ynough, and yee haue hearde ynough: but yee haue not regarded it.

Iſa.42.18. 2.Cor.3.14 16. Eph.4.18. Iſa.42.18. 20.

Alſo God complayneth of his paines taken in teaching of his people, and of loſing his labour therein. For (ſaieth hee) haue not I done workes ynowe among you? Yes, but what for that? You haue had neither eares nor eyes. And nowe if yee bee compared to the reſt of the worlde, yee paſſe all the heathen and vnbeleeuers in blindneſſe. And why? For yee haue had teaching ynough and too much. And his vpbraiding and blaming of them, is not for that they had not ſufficient experience whereby to haue beene dewly taught: but for that they did ſhut their eyes, and woulde not profite themſelues by the thinges that GOD ſhewed them.

Seeing that the Iewes are thus blamed by the Prophet, notwithſtanding that Moſes had reported them to bee a people of wiſedome and vnderſtanding: let vs come to our ſelues, and conſider that if this bee happened to the naturall braunches, what ſhall become of the impes [that are graffed into the tree,] as Saint Paul Rom.11.17. ſpeaketh of it in the eleuenth to the Romanes. It is certaine that the Iewes went before vs in Exod.4.22. preheminence, or at leſtwiſe they had the birthryght in Gods Church, and haue it yet ſtil. And Ep.2.12,13. which more is, at ſuch time as wee were ſtraungers vnto God, they were his houſeholde folke, Rom,9.4. and in his houſe and Church. Yet notwithſtanding, euen after they had beene inlightened as wee ſee heere, they were condemned of greater blindneſſe than the wretched Painims that neuer had any taſte of the trueth, nor any one ſparke of good knowledge. And why? for they had made themſelues vnworthy of ſuch a benefite. But God in theſe dayes ſheweth himſelfe more familiarly to vs than he did to the fathers
2.Cor.3.18. in the time of the lawe. For in the Goſpell his face ſhineth foorth in ſuch wiſe, as wee may behold it to be transfigured into his glorie. Is not our Lorde Ieſus the liuely image of God his father? And doeth not hee ſhewe himſelfe in ſuch wiſe in his Goſpel, that we may diſcerne him as well as if he dwelt among vs? Nowe then, if wee haue not our eyes open to receiue this doctrine, nor bee diligent to profite in the ſame: muſte not the vengeance which the Prophet Eſaye ſpeakes of, light vpon our heads? that is to wit, Eſa.42.20. that wee ſhall be more blinde and brutiſh than the heathen, for as much as wee haue ſeene and woulde not ſee? And in good ſooth wee knowe it without his telling vs thereof. Looke me vpon the Turkes: they haue ſome reuerence to their religion, and ſo haue the Papiſtes alſo, & yet are both of them cut off from the Church of God through their own fault, but yet are they not ſo much to blame as wee. Therefore when men ſlide backe againe after they haue once knowen the Goſpell, yee ſhall ſee them become like dogges, ſo as there is no more honeſtie nor feeling of God in them, but they bee vtterly bewitched, and growe into the ſenſleſneſſe of 1.Tim.4.4. minde which Saint Paul ſpeaketh of, namely that they make no remorſe of conſcience at any thing. And wee neede not to goe farre to ſeeke examples hereof. For euen among vs there are diuers to bee ſeene, who hauing vnhallowed Gods word after that ſort, are become ſtarke madde and fall at defiance with GOD, being poſſeſſed with ſuch diueliſh rage, as there remaineth not any more ſhamefaſtneſſe in them. Therefore when wee ſee this geere, we ought to quake at it and to ſay, Loe howe GOD reuengeth the contempt of his worde. And therefore let vs beare in minde, that when God hath bene ſo gratious to vs as to doe the office of a ſcholemaſter among vs, and to teach vs by his word: it behooueth vs to followe the light thereof. For if it bee put out through our naughtineſſe: it muſt needes bee that wee ſhall become more dull of vnderſtanding, than all the reſt of the worlde whiche neuer wiſt what GOD or true Religion is. Thus yee ſee what wee haue to marke as in reſpecte of this ſentence.

Nowe Moſes addeth immediatly, Take heede to thy ſelfe and keepe thy ſoule diligently, that thou forget not the thinges which thine eyes haue ſeene, nor let them euer depart from thy heart: that is to wit, the day wherein thy God made thee to appeare before his Maieſtie in the valley of Horeb. There hee taught thee his lawe, when hee willed mee to make you all to appeare together before him. Therfore be mindfull of that day, and let it neuer be forgotten. Nowe when as Moſes ſaith take heede to thy ſelfe & keepe thy ſoule: Hee ſheweth that hee cannot ſufficiently expreſſe the eare which wee ought to haue to walke in the feare of God, and to make and keepe good watch, for feare of ſtarting from him, leaſt the diuell harrie vs abrode and make vs become as ſtray ſheepe. Nowe if this bee not ſuperfluous, what needeth any more to quicken vs vp withall? See howe God ſpeaketh heere: hee ſaieth not onely, take heede to your ſelues: but alſo, take heede to your ſelues and take heede to your ſoules. That is to ſay, vppon perill of your liues take heede to your ſelues and watch well, that yee bee not taken vnwares. And this is not ſaid without cauſe: for wee ſee howe frayle wee bee. Although God haue giuen vs ſo ſure a foundation, as wee can neuer be ſhaken downe if wee holde vs to it: yet doe wee nothing but totter, and euerie thing of nothing maketh vs to reele. Seeing then that our nature is ſo vnconſtant, and wee ſwarue ſo eaſily from Gods trueth: let vs aſſure our ſelues that this exhortation is not ſet downe heere without cauſe. Againe, wee ſee alſo howe wyly the diuell is, and howe many meanes hee hath to beguile vs, and wee are eaſily ledde to giue eare to ſuch as ſeduce vs. Alſo there is great policie vſed to deceiue vs: inſomuch that the couſiners doe ſhroude themſelues euen vnder the name of GOD, in their foiſting in of their falſe doctrines and errours: and the diuell diſguiſeth himſelfe by transforming himſelfe into an Angel of light (as S. Paul ſpeaketh of him): 2.Cor.11.14 and hee aſſaulteth vs not ſome one way onely, 1.Pet.5.8.
but when hee perceiueth that hee hath miſſed on the one ſide, hee runneth ſtreight to the other, ſo as wee haue no ſooner withſtoode one aſſault, but wee muſt by and by come to another. Seeing then that wee on our ſide are ſo fraile, and the diuell hath ſuch ſhifte of wyles and ſlyghtes to beguyle vs: we may well aſſure

our ſelues it is not for nought that Moſes willeth vs here to beware, euen vpon perill of our ſoules. But what for that? Wee ſee neuertheleſſe how ill this doctrine is put in practiſe. For wee bee carefull ynough for the thinges that concerne this earthly life: inſomuch that wee ſtande alwayes vpon our gard for feare of being taken vnwares, and on what ſide ſo euer a man come to aſſaile vs, he can not enter vpon vs, for wee are euer armed: but as concerning Gods worde, wee forget that out of hand. True it is that men will come to ſome Sermon nowe and then for faſhions ſake: but when they come home againe they neuer thinke more of it, it is quite out of their remembraunce, it goes in at the one eare and out at the other, as ſaieth the prouerb: ſo that [in the ende] they finde themſelues emptie and hungerſtaruen, bicauſe they made none account of the warning that is giuen vs here. So then, let vs learne to bee more watchfull and to keepe better warde: and let vs weigh well this ſaying, That we muſt take heed to our ſelues. Why ſo? For if wee doe not keepe good watche and looke well about vs: wee ſhall wonder to ſee how ſoone the Diuell will haue ſnarled vs in his ſnares. Moreouer foraſmuch as it is very harde for vs to doe ſo, and wee ſee that at one time or other wee bee quickly thruſt out of the way: let euerie of vs take good heede to himſelfe, and rowſe vp all our wittes, and gather them about vs, applying them earneſtly to this care & wareneſſe which Moſes ſpeaketh of here.

And he ſaieth purpoſely, Take good heede that thou forget not the things which thine eyes haue ſeene, and beware that they neuer depart from thy heart. Whenas he ſaith, The things which thine eyes haue ſeene: thereby he meaneth that the people are vtterly without excuſe, if they regarde not the thinges that God had ſhewed them, according to his former vſing of the ſame maner of ſpeach. Deut. 3. 21. And whereas he ſaieth that our eyes haue ſeene, it ſerueth to expreſſe the things which our Lord hath ſhewed vs tootoo euidently, ſo as wee cannot alledge ignoraunce, nor ſay, this or that was too high or too darke for mee. Thine eyes haue ſeene it, ſaieth Moſes. As if he ſhould ſay, No no, ye neede not to bee great Clerkes nor Doctors in this behalfe, ye neede not to bee verie ſuttleheaded: our Lordes manifeſting of himſelfe vnto you hath bene in ſuch ſorte and ſo euidently, that euen the verieſt idiotes and rudeſt ſorte of you haue perceiued the things that he told you. And in good ſooth, although Gods worde conteine wonderfull ſecretes: yet notwithſtanding they bee ſo manifeſt vnto vs, as wee may bee able to conceiue them, at leaſtwiſe if we our ſelues bee not in the fault. For wee ſee howe God lowlieth himſelfe and ſtoopeth to our rudeneſſe, bicauſe he knoweth what wee bee able to beare. Nowe then ſeeing it is ſo: let vs but open our eyes, and when God hath once ſhewed himſelfe to vs, let vs take good heede that wee forget him not: for [if wee doe,] wee ſhall bee vnexcuſable, and our vnthankefulneſſe will bee manifeſt and ſufficiently prooued. Againe he ſheweth that it is not ynough for vs to haue ſome light remembraunce of it ſwimming in our braine: but it muſt bee well rooted in our heartes: And after that maner ought Gods worde to bee ſowen in vs. It is not ynough for vs to haue ſkill to talke of it, and to bee able to ſay, I knowe this & that: but wee muſt holde faſt the thinges inwardly which wee haue heard outwardly. Nowe then, if Gods woorde bee ſetled in our heartes, and raigne there: then haue wee good remembraunce of it. But if wee bee not touched with it, nor haue any willingneſſe to keepe it: it is all one as if wee had neuer heard of it. Thus ye ſee what we haue to marke concerning this ſpeach of Moſeſes, where it is ſaide, that the thinges which wee haue once knowen muſt neuer out of our mindes.

But foraſmuch as God had vttered himſelfe diuers wayes to the people: it behoued Moſes to ſhewe his meaning more particularly in this text. And therefore he addeth, The day wherein thou waſt before the Lorde thy God, thou diddeſt appeare before God in the valley of Horeb, at which time hee commaunded mee to ſummon you, and to call you all togeither. Albeit then that God had ſhewed himſelfe to the people of Iſrael by diuerſe myracles, by ſundrie kindes of ſightes, and alſo by diuerſe reuelations as in reſpect of his worde: yet doeth Moſes bring backe the people here, chiefly to the lawe, and to the ſolemne day wherein the lawe was publiſhed. And that is according to the matter that wee haue ſeene. In ſo much that if wee haue not that grounde, wee ſhall but builde in the aire, and all that euer can bee ſaide vnto vs will ſlippe from vs. The grounde that I meane is the ſubmitting of our ſelues vnto God, to bee guided by his worde and to bridle our ſelues thereby, ſo as he alone may haue the whole authoritie and maiſterſhip ouer vs, and wee become his true Diſciples in ſticking to his pure doctrine. That then is the cauſe why Moſes doeth make ſpeciall mention here of the ſolemne day wherein the lawe was giuen to the people of Iſrael. For he ſawe well that it woulde not haue booted at all to haue vppened neuer ſo many thinges by parcellmeale, if he had not ſet downe the chiefe groundwoorke, which is that men muſt ſuffer themſelues to bee gouerned by Gods lawe. Likewiſe at this day, when wee ſhall haue diſputed at large of a nomber of pointes, if wee doe not firſt and formoſt winne that men ſhould obey God, and make them to knowe that his woorde is the right trueth whereunto they muſt holde themſelues: to what purpoſe is it? They will bee ſtill wauering and vnconſtant, accordingly as wee ſee howe a great nomber will bee taſting of this and that, and can finde nothing whereon to reſt. And why? For they know not the firſt point of Chriſtianitie, which is, that the holy Scripture is our whole wiſedome, and that wee muſt hearken to God ſpeaking there, and not adde any thing thereunto. Nowe then, vntill ſuch time as wee bee come to that point, wee ſhall bee euer chaunging, and doe nothing but totter and wauer like Reedes. And for the ſame cauſe doeth the Prophet Malachie ſaye, Be mindeful of the Law that was giuen you by Moſes Col. 1. 28. Mal. 4. 4.

Moſes in Horeb. For it was Gods will that thencefoorth there ſhoulde bee an intermiſſion, ſo as a certaine time ſhoulde paſſe wherein the Prophetes ſhoulde ſpeake no more till the comming of our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt. Nowe in the meane while the Prophet Malachie ſaith, Bee mindefull of the Lawe that was giuen. As if hee ſhoulde ſay, yee can not doe amiſſe if ye hearken to your GOD, and ſuffer your ſelues to bee taught by him: but you ſhall haue perfect learning, for it is vttered there. Now therefore wee ſee what the meaning of Moſes is, and howe wee ought to apply the ſame to our owne vſe: that is to wit, that aboue all thinges wee muſt aſſure our ſelues, that our Lorde hath vttered himſelfe vnto vs in ſuch wiſe, as he will be a good and faithfull teacher vnto vs, if wee bee good ſchollers vnto him. And therefore let vs ſettle all our wittes to the obedience of faith, ſo as wee preſume not to adde any thing to that which GOD telleth vs. When wee bee once come to that point, then ſhall wee bee guided foorth from point to point, and from degree to degree to our perfection: but yet muſt we haue the foreſaid groundworke, before wee can build well.

Nowe let vs come to this ſaying of his, Call to minde the dayes wherein yee were before the Lorde. This ſaying importeth much. For although that GOD did then teſtifie his preſence in the valley of Horeb, as wee ſhall ſee hereafter: yet notwithſtanding whenſoeuer hee ſpeaketh vnto vs, wee appeare before his iudgement ſeat, though wee haue no viſible myracles. And it is all one as if a Prince being ſet to hold a Court of eſtate, ſhould cauſe his ſtatutes and ordinances to bee proclaimed by the ſounde of a trumpet, to the intent that all men might haue knowledge of them. After the ſame manner doeth GOD deale in this caſe. For when he vouchſafeth to haue his worde preached vnto vs, it is as much as if he ſummoned vs to him, and called vs to his throne, there to appeare euerie man for himſelfe, to yeelde account as before our iudge. And (as I told you) this importeth much. For wee bee greatly deſtitute of wit and reaſon, if this moue vs not to heare Gods worde with other reuerence than wee haue done. If we conſidered well, that when wee come to a Sermon, or when wee take the Byble in our handes to reade, God citeth and ſummoneth vs, ſo as wee cannot caſt our eye vppon his word, nor receiue ſo much as one worde that is vttered to vs in his name, but that his Maieſtie is preſent there with it, and wee our ſelues are preſent in his ſight. If wee thought well vppon that: I pray you ſhould wee not bee otherwiſe prepared and humbled to yeeld our ſelues teachable? Should wee not bee in another manner of forewardneſſe than wee are ſeene to bee? Therefore if wee come hither with ſuch coldneſſe, as it were but for orders ſake, or when in reading of the Byble, ſome of vs are caryed awaye with fonde curioſitie, ſome thinke themſelues diſcharged to Godwarde with the hauing of two or three ſentences, and otherſome make but a paſtime of it: doeth not this dealing of ours ſhewe well, that wee neuer taſted of this ſaying? Namely, that if GOD ſpeake vnto vs, wee muſt come before him and feele his Maieſtie, to be as it were beaten downe vnder it, to the ende to ſubmit our ſelues the better to his woorde. That is one principall point.

Beſides this there is alſo an aſſemblie that Moſes ſpeaketh of, howe he was commaunded to gather the people togither. For it hath bene Gods will to keepe that order from the beginning for the better exerciſing of vs in the vnitie of faith. True it is that he could well teache vs euerie one alone by himſelfe: and in deede he vſeth that way too, ſo that whether he inſtruct vs by teaching, or giue vs grace to profite by reading, it may well bee done by our ſelues alone: but yet therewithall there is the common order, which he will haue to continue inuiolable. And why? Foraſmuch as wee haue all one faith, and haue neede to bee tyed and knit togither in one: GOD vſeth this meane of teaching vs all as it were by one mouth, and maketh vs to meete togither as it were in one bodie: and that, not onely to the ende that a great multitude may take profite at one mans mouth, but to the ende wee ſhoulde knowe that there is but one rule, one trueth, one God that ſpeaketh, and which cauſeth vs to bee of one accorde and one melodie in that behalfe, in ſo much that when euerie man holdeth in with his neighbour, it is bicauſe there is a right conformitie. That then is the thing whereunto Moſes had reſpect, in ſaying that God commaunded him to aſſemble the people, as he that was his Leiuetenaunt. Hee gaue the Lawe generally to the intent that the people might by that meanes bee taught to thinke thus with themſelues: behold, our God will haue vs to bee of one accord in him, and to bee one bodie wholly conformable to his worde, ſo as euerie man ſhift not for himſelfe like bandes that were ſcattered and put to flight in battell, but linck togither in one right and holy vnion. And this is not for one time onely: but it muſt be put in vre vnto the worldes ende. For it is Gods will that his Goſpell ſhould bee publiſhed. And how? Not in hudder mudder and in folkes eares: but he will haue men to bee taught openly, and to meete togither, yea and their meeting to bee to the ende that he bee preached, ſo as there may be a good vnitie of faith, & that the mark whereat all of vs doe ſhoote, may bee to bee gathered and knit togither in our head Ieſus Chriſt, who is the bond whereof S. Paule ſpeaketh, which proceedeth of the common preaching. Wherefore let vs learne that wee can not bee rightly of Gods houſholde, nor of his flocke, vnleſſe wee meete togither, and that our meeting be not only a comming togither in the Church, but alſo a continuall linking togither in vnitie when we be gone thence, and when euery of vs is alone by himſelfe from companie, ſo as wee ſhewe that Gods gathering of vs togither vnto himſelfe is not in vaine, but that there is a right brotherhood among vs, to come all vnto him in ỹ name of our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt. For the diuell ſeeke⁊ by

Eph. 4. 5.

Eph. 4. 11. 12

by all meanes to breake that bond, as wee see he hath laboured in all ages to stirre vp sectes to rend asunder the bodie of the Church, and it is the thing that he striueth to doe in these dayes more than euer he did erst. And if hee cannot obtaine that false doctrines may haue their full scope to make hauocke of all thinges: yet will he sowe darnell among vs, so as in stead of being vnited, wee shall bee heauing one at another, or at leastwise as good as drawen a sunder, so as our bond shall not bee straite and well knitte togither. When wee see the matter in that taking, let vs vnderstande that it is a practise of the diuels driuing. And why? Gods intent is that we should bee gathered togither before him, yea euen before him. For the wicked wil wel ynough make leagues and confederacies: howbeit, that is but to spite GOD: and in verie deede they turne their backes vppon him, and hide themselues from him, and by all meanes possible eschew to come at him, for they haue no liking at all of him. But wee on our side must come togither in the presence of our God. Sith it is so, let vs bee afraide to shrinke a sunder, and let not the Diuell separate vs as wee see hee laboureth to doe: and he knoweth that hee shall haue ouerthrowen the principall point of our saluation, if he may winne that at our handes. And therefore let vs abhorre all such sowers of discorde in the Church of God. Wee see nowadayes, that in stead of assembling togither, there are diuerse which seeke nothing but to scatter Gods flocke: and wee neede not to goe any further than to this present place. We perceiue howe these rascalles doe nowadayes serue the diuell as though they tooke wages of him, or were vtterly solde to bee his seruauntes. A man may see whereat they shoot. There needeth no gessing or coniecturing, there needeth no great inquirie of the matter: let a man but looke vppon their doings, and he shall finde that their whole seeking is to breake al vnion, and to pluck asunder the things that haue beene knitte togither in the name of God. If GOD did euer worke myraculously in any place: he woorketh here as myraculously as in any place of ỹ world, and hee sheweth the power of his woorde as mightily as may bee. Goe whither ye will, and such as are scattered from all other places, resort hither to shrowde themselues as it were vnder Gods winges, and to bee as it were one flocke gathered togither in his name. And what doeth the Diuell on the contrarie parte? There is nothing else but banding, that the wicked may shed abroade their venim and poison. And howe? Euen by vnioyning the thinges that GOD had ioyned. In deede they will not say it: but the thing it selfe is too apparant, and there needeth no long disputing or discoursing of the matter, if a man doe but open his eyes he shall see it. And it is a great shame that it is suffered and winked at: for the matter is too open and manifest. Yet notwithstanding it is not our Lordes will that the thinges which he hath knitte togither shoulde bee so vnhappily rent a sunder, and all bee put out of order after this sort. Wherefore let vs abhorre such plagues, and beseeche GOD to rid his Church of them & the world too, by powring out his vengeance vppon them, seeing it appeareth that they bee vtterly reprobate, and that there is no meane to reclaime them againe. God so thunder downe vppon them, as men may knowe howe highly hee esteemeth the vnitie of the faith, and his Church be maintained in true brotherhood and concord. And in the meane season let vs labour to bring this to passe: and if wee bee true members of Iesus Christ, let vs doe the cleane contrarie to that which wee see the wicked doe. For sith that they doe straine themselues so to put all thinges to hauocke: let vs on our side walke on in good vnion, and looke that wee come togither in the presence of our God, and that in such wise as his woorde doe maintaine vs in good agreement, and cause vs so to serue him, and wee being conuersant one with another in good brotherly friendship, may bee followers of the fatherly goodnesse of our GOD, whereby he gathereth the thinges togither which were scattered asunder before.

Matt. 19. 8.

Nowe let vs fall downe in the presence of our good GOD with acknowledgement of our faults, praying him to make vs so to feel them, as wee may repent vs of them aright and seeke the remedie of them, which is, that he cleanse vs from all our affections and lustes, making vs to renounce all our owne desires in such wise, as we may no more bee giuen to our owne fansies and likings, but seeke altogither to bee ruled by his woorde, and to profite therein after such a sorte more and more, as our whole wisdome and perfection may be to be ruled altogither by ỹ same. That it may please him to graunt this grace not onely to vs, but also to all, &c.

On Wednesday the xxij. of May. 1555.

The xxij. Sermon, which is the fourth vpon the fourth Chapter.

and I will make them to heare my words, which they shall learne, to the end they may feare mee all the dayes which they shall liue vppon the earth, and that they may teach their children.

11 Then came yee and stoode vnder the hill, which burnt with fire vnto the middes of the skie, and there was darkenesse, cloudes, and mist.

12 And the Lorde your God ſpake vnto you out of the middes of the fire. Yee heard the voyce of his wordes: but you ſawe not any image beſides the voyce.

13 Then declared he his couenant vnto you, which hee commaunded you to doe, that is to wit, the tenne verſes, and hee wrote them vppon two tables of ſtone,

14 The ſame time the Lorde commaunded mee to teache you the ordinaunces and Lawes, to the ende yee ſhould doe them in the Land which you goe into to poſſeſſe it.

WE Declared yeſterday after what maner wee muſt come together in the name of God, to appeare before him. For the meeting of the wicked is to make confederacies, and it is apparant that their ſeeking is but only to conſpire againſt God and all goodneſſe: but yet their meeting is by hiding themſelues from Gods preſence, & they would faine turne their backes vppon him, ſo as he ſhoulde not ſee them. Truely they doe but looſe their time: for all things muſt needs come to account before God. And if mortall men eſpie their wicked practiſes, ſo as they perceiue that their banding of themſelues is but to ouerthrowe all order: the ſame muſt needes bee knowen to the heauenly iudge, from whom nothing is hidden. If their lewdneſſe appeare euen to little children: thinke they that God hath his eyes ſtopped? But it behoueth vs on our ſide to preſent our ſelues before God in all our meetings, to the intent that he may ſit among vs, & wee bee taught as it were by his mouth and gouerned by his hand. Furthermore foraſmuch as wee ſee that the wicked ſeeke altogether to rend aſunder the vnion of the Church: let vs indeuour ſo much ẏ more to come togither in Gods name. For wee can not prooue our ſelues to bee his children, if wee haue not the marke whereof Moſes ſpeaketh here. And thereby it may bee iudged, that ſuch as paſſe not to haunt the companies of Chriſtians, when they meete together in the name of God to heare his worde and to pray vnto him: are but as dogges, and deſerue not to bee reckened in the common aray of mẽ, but are to be abhorred as dung and filth, bicauſe they haue cut off themſelues from Gods houſe. Thus yee ſee what wee haue to remember concerning that text.

Eccle.12.14. Heb.4.13.

And nowe Moſes addeth, that if we minde to fare the better by the meetings that are made in the name of God: Wee muſt hearken to the things that he telleth vs, and that muſt bee to the ende that wee may feare him, that is to ſay, to the ende wee yeeld him al reuerence, and it may appeare that wee take him for our Father and God. For if we thinke to content God with ceremonies, we deceiue our ſelues, as they doe which could finde in their heartes to haue no Religion at all, and therefore reſort hither, ſome but once a moneth, and otherſome as ſeldome as may bee. There are alſo which come hither vpon the Sundayes and Wedneſdayes as it were for faſhions ſake: but in the meane while doeth it appeare that they bee any whit edified in the feare of God? Doeth it appeare that their comming hither to crowd themſelues into the flocke, doth any whit amend them or make them the better? Nay rather they become the more venemous againſt God, & therefore their comming to infect Gods houſe, is to their greater condemnation: for they bee vnworthie to come here, they bee no better than ſwine. Therefore our comming to the Church muſt be to another ende: that is to wit, that wee may profite in the feare of God. Nowe (as I haue touched alreadie) this feare importeth that he ſhoulde ouerrule vs, and that wee ſhould bee ſubiect vnto him. And for the ſame cauſe alſo doeth Moſes match theſe two ſayings together, namely that wee muſt doe the things that God commaundeth vs, and alſo, that wee muſt feare him. Many men thinke they feare God well, whẽ they haue ſome fond deuotion towardes him, as wee ſee in Poperie, where euerie man ſayes that his intent is to ſerue God: but after what faſhion? Eueñ euerie man after his owne fanſie. But ẏ obedience which God requireth at our hands in yeelding our ſelues wholly to his worde, and the reuerence which wee owe him as to our Father and King: are things vnſeparable. Wherefore let vs marke well that if we be minded and deſirous to come together as wee ought to doe: Gods worde muſt haue all authoritie ouer vs, ſo as our receiuing thereof bee not onely to confeſs it with our mouth, but alſo to frame our liues wholly thereafter. For if wee will needes liue after our owne ſwindge, and euerie of vs doe what ſeemeth good to himſelfe: God holdeth ſcorne of vs and diſclaimeth vs, though wee proteſt to feare him and ſerue him [neuer ſo much.] For it is no reaſon but that he ſhould be heard, ſpecially ſeeing he taketh paine to teach vs. That therfore is the firſt point.

Againe let vs vnderſtand that our keeping of Gods Lawe, and our walking according to his will, doe not aduauntage him at all: for what can he receiue at our hands? But it is to the end that the world may know that we feare him, that is to ſay, that wee take him for our maiſter, & that we would faine be wholly his, and that he ſhould gouerne vs. That is the effect of the matter that Moſes ſheweth here. Howbeit foraſmuch as Churches are oftentimes defiled with hypocrits and wicked folke which crowde in couertly, who notwithſtanding are worthie to bee euen thruſt out of the world: Let vs marke what is ſaide in the fiftieth Pſalme, where God declareth that he ſeparateth his [true ſeruantes] from ſuch as falſely abuſe his name: ſo as his voyce thundereth to ſummon thoſe that feare him aright, and haue

haue not couenanted with him vnfeynedly, nor ſerue him onely with Ceremonies, but alſo in very deede: them will he aſſemble together. And on the contrarie part, hee vpbraydeth thoſe that take his name in their mouth, and yet notwithſtanding doe take part with robbers, murderers, theeues, and traytours. Therefore when men will needes match GOD and the diuel together after that faſhion, as it appeareth that moſt men doe: God complaineth of it, and proteſteth that it ſhall not ſcape vnpuniſhed. Now if he ſhewe ſuch a ſeparation aforehand: Let vs
Matt. 25. 33 bee well aſſured, that when the day commeth wherein the Goates ſhalbe put aſunder from the Lambes, the ſhame of ſuch as haue preaced after that ſorte into Gods Church ſhall then bee diſcouered, and they ſhalbe abhorred of all creatures as they deſeruc. But in the meane while let vs ſee that wee ſeparate our ſelues from them as neere as we can: and when we ſee ſuch vncleanneſſe, at leaſtwiſe let vs beware that wee miſlike them, and let vs pray God to rid and cleanſe his Church of ſuch infections. Howſoeuer the caſe ſtand, let vs be mindeful of the thing that Moſes ſpeaketh in this text, whenſoeuer we intende to meete together in the name of God.

Afterward hee addeth, that when wee our ſelues haue walked in the feare of God, euery of vs muſt teach his children to do the lyke. Wherein we ſee that it is not enough for euery man to diſcharge his duty in liuing orderly himſelfe: but that we muſt (to ỹ vttermoſt of our power,) procure the cõtinuance of Gods honor and ſeruice after our deceaſes. And in good fayth, is it reaſon that Gods name ſhould be buryed with our death? We know how
Eſa. 40. 6. 1. Pet. 1. 24. Iude. 25 flightfull our lyfe is: but Gods glory muſt indure for euer without decaying. Therfore let vs learn our owne duetie: that is, to walke righteouſly all ỹ time of our lyfe, and to indeuer to traine vp our children aright, ſo as religion may floriſh and proſper when wee be dead, and God be alwayes honored in the world, that his name may be called vppon purely. And that is the very cauſe alſo why God commaundeth fathers ſo ſtraightly to teach their children. For he coulde well ſend his creatures into the worlde, though no man had any ſpeciall care of them: but hee chargeth fathers to bring vp their children. And why? To the ende they ſhould knowe that they muſt yeelde an account of them. And for the ſame cauſe alſo doth he communicate his name Mal. 2. 10. vnto them. For the title of father belongeth to himſelfe alone: but yet hee honoreth men ſo much as to grant them the name of fathers. And Matt. 23. 9. to what ende? That they ſhould be the earneſter and carefuller in teaching their children their dueties.

So then, let vs doe our indeuour, that there may remaine a good afterſpring after our deceaſe, ſo as Gods Church may floriſhe ſtill, and his name be worſhipped from age to age. And wee ought to labour ſo much the more in that behalfe, becauſe wee ſee how the diuil practiſeth to ouerthrow all that euer is builded in the name of God. So farre of is it that the fruite which ought to come of the Goſpel doth ripen: that men doe labor to plucke it vp, or elſe to marre it and to turne it out of the owne kinde. Sith wee ſee this, ought we not to bee the more prouoked to doe the duetie that is commaunded vs here? Without going any further, what is to be ſeene heere among vs? The Goſpell hath bin preached to vs now a long time: and yet for al that, what maner of ones are they which haue bin borne of all this time, to whome God hath graũted the grace to be ſuckled with Gods word euen from the teate, and to bee brought vp in it lykewiſe, ſo as they being then but little babes, did neuer ſee any of the diueliſh abhominations of poperie, and therefore ought to bee euen throughly ſoked in the doctrine of ſaluation? what maner of ones are they? doth it not appeare that moſt part of them are ſo frowarde, as if they were the brood of Serpents? The world may ſee that they deſpiſe God openly, and commit ſuch wickedneſſe and lewdeneſſe, that there is much more honeſtie and more ſhewe of Religion among the Papiſtes, than there is among theſe. Seeing then that thinges are ſo farre out of order, and the diuill indeuoreth to put all to hauocke, ought we not to be the more inflamed to doe our indeuer, that there may remaine at leaſtwiſe ſome little ſeede after our deceaſe, ſo as the remembraunce of the Goſpell be not vterly aboliſhed, nor the thing that hath bin ſet vp ſo happily in the name of GOD and by his wondertull power, be decayed and pulled downe againe by the enemies? Now then, ſeeing that God hath graunted vs the grace and priuiledge to bee called to the hearing of his worde, and to haue it ſet forth in the pure ſimplicitie among vs: let vs vnderſtand that we be the more bound to ſerue and honor him, not onely ſeuerally for our owne partes, but alſo by teaching our children, and by taking paynes to make them alſo to liue vertuouſly, ſo as the doctrine which they ſhall haue heard in their youth bee not loſte nor marde, as wee ſee too much by experience. And generally let vs all haue this regarde, that ſuch as come after vs may agree in the true religion, ſo as there may be no chaunge. But ſo far off is that from being done, that the enemies of the trueth, (I meane the houſholde enemies and not the Papiſtes, for they bee farre woorſe than the Papiſts,) think they ſhall neuer come time enough to ouerthrowe all order and to pull downe all that GOD hath ſet vp here. Sith wee ſee it is ſo, let vs vnderſtand that wee ought to bee as earneſt in building vp to the Lorde as the diuill is in pulling all downe. For let vs not miſtruſt but that Gods power is ſtronger than al the fiendes of hell. Thus yee ſee what wee haue to note vppon this ſtreyne: but the chiefe matter is the putting of it in vre.

And now Moſes addeth, that GOD ſhewed himſelfe to his people with dreadfull tokens, which were able to haue aſtoniſhed them. For hee ſpake to them (ſayth he) from the middes of the fyre. And therewithall there was a great clowde, darkneſſe, and miſte. By theſe wordes Moſes ſheweth that the lawe was not brought without good warrant: for it was accom-accompanied with wonders that were able to aſtoniſh the whole worlde. And to what purpoſe ſerued that, but to make it certainly knowē that the lawe came from heauen, and that God was the author thereof? According whereunto Exod.19.16 18. it is ſayd in Exodus, that when God appeared after that ſorte in a thicke cloude, and a flaming fire, making the ayre to rore and the mountaine Sinay to ſhake, and the ſound of trumpets to be heard: all thoſe thinges (ſayth he) were done of purpoſe to make you hearken to your Lorde God, and to knowe that it was hee that ſpake, and that whoſoeuer receiueth not the doctrine that I haue brought you, muſt fight againſt the maieſtie of God. But [if he doe ſo:] he ſhall finde God too ſtrong for him. Thus yee ſee what belongeth to this text. And ſo wee ſee now wherefore Moſes made mention of the cloude, darkeneſſe, and miſt: namely to the ende it ſhould be knowen, that the lawe was not put forth but by the authoritie of the liuing God, and that men might be fully aſſured that it came from heauen.

And let vs mark by the way, that Gods choſing of the ſigne that is mentioned here, was to do vs to vnderſtand, that we muſt not inquire of his maieſtie further than he giueth vs leaue. GOD ſhewed not himſelfe in any viſible ſhape, leaſt it might bee thought that his eſſence or being had ſome ſhape, whereof we will treate to morrowe by Gods leaue: but hee did ſet a cloude, darke-
1.Tim.6.16 neſſe, and miſtineſſe before him. And why? To the ende that wee ſhoulde learne to be humble, and to know that hee dwelleth in vnapprochable light. Wee knowe howe curious and ouerbolde men are, for they woulde faine knowe what Gods being or ſubſtance is, and ſearche out euery whit of him by inchmeale, and that ſo preſumptuouſly as though they would puſhe vp their hornes into heauen. Such is their nature. But God will haue vs to worſhip him in feare and humilitie, as good reaſon is it ſhould be ſo. And he withdraweth himſelfe the further from vs, when wee inquire further of him than hee commaundeth vs. For otherwiſe were it not all one as if we would make him our vnderling? What preheminence ſhould he haue if he were ſo ſhut vp in mans conceit? Therefore to expreſſe ſo great and ſo exceſſiue raſhneſſe, hee did ſet a darke clowd before him. But wee muſt marke, that whē God did ſet darkneſſe before the eyes of the people, it was not to the intent to be vtterly vnknowen, but to hold the people in awe, that they ſhould not preacenie the hill where the fire and flame appeared that are ſpoken of in Exodus as is ſaid afore: and therefore was there a great and thick clowd hard by the people. That then was the meane which God vſed to ſhewe himſelfe to the people. Marke that for one poynt.

The other poynt is that God did vtter himſelfe in ſuch maner, as the people ſought no further than was lawfull for them, but helde themſelues contented with ſuch diſcouerie as was giuen vnto them. And theſe two poyntes are well woorthie to bee marked. For many men when they liſt to excuſe their ignorance, will ſay that wee ought not to be inquiſitiue of Gods ſecretes: No truly, but yet is it not meant that we ſhould bee brute beaſtes. Wherefore hath GOD created vs after his owne image, Eph.4.24 but to the intent that his trueth ſhould ſhine forth in vs? And yet notwithſtanding, it is as a common prouerbe that hath reigned and doth reigne ſtill in the popedome: inſomuch that the foundation whereon they haue grounded their implyed faith, is that they muſt not knowe any thing, but that it is enough to beleeue as the Churche beleeueth. And in the meane while they wote not at what marke they ſhoote, nor what God they worſhip, nor how his name is to be called vppon. But as I touched afore, Gods meaning is not that men ſhould ſo aboliſhe and deſtroy the grace that hee hath put into them, for it were an vtter defacing of his image in diſpite of him: but rather after as hee cōmeth neerer vnto vs & we vnto him, ſo wil he haue his Image ȳ more knowen in vs & his trueth ȳ more ſhine foorth there. Let vs vnderſtand then that Gods intent is not that men ſhould be ignorant of him, but to vtter himſelfe in ſuch wiſe, as we may be able to diſcerne him from the idols that haue bin forged, ſo as wee may take him for 1.Cor.8.5.6. our father, and aſſure our ſelues ȳ we be called to Eph.1. the knowledge of his truth, and ȳ we may boldly Eph.3.12. reſorte vnto him to call vppon him, and to ſeeke ſuccour at his hand. After that maner was it Gods will to manifeſt himſelfe to the people of Iſraell at the ſetting foorth of the lawe: and after ȳ ſame maner continueth he ſtill at this day.

But yet for all that, the clowde is ſtill before his face, to make men knowe their owne rudeneſſe. Againe foraſmuch as wee be ouerfickle and would knowe dubble as much as is lawfull for vs, inſomuch that wee attempt to knowe the things that are vnpoſſible to bee knowen: therefore did God caſt a great and thicke clowde betweene himſelfe and the people. And if wee were throughly perſwaded hereof, it would be as a key to open vs the vnderſtanding of ȳ whole holy ſcripture. For why? Whenſoeuer we came to the reading or hearing of it, we ſhould be ſure that our Lord ieſteth not when hee ſpeaketh after that maner, and when hee proteſteth thus by his prophet Eſay: I haue not ſpoken it in ſe- Eſa.45.19 crete, neither haue I ſayd it in vaine, that men ſhould ſeeke mee. Therefore whoſoeuer heareth mee, and receiueth the trueth that I tell him, ſhall not bee diſappointed in ſeeking mee. Thus ye ſee that wee ſhall profite, if wee beare well in minde that GOD manifeſteth himſelfe vnto vs, ſo farre foorth as is behoofefull for our ſoules health. And beſides this, wee ſhoulde with all ſingleneſſe reuerence the thinges that we comprehend not, wee ſhould euery of vs walke according to the meaſure of his faith, and wee ſhould continually indeuor to come neerer and neerer vnto him and to gather ſtrength. And moreouer if the thinges were too high for vs: very well, wee would (as Saint Paul warneth vs in the third to the Philippians) Phil.3.15 tary till God ſhewed them more playnely, and yet in the meane while not ceaſe to glorifie him.

him. But we ſee the clean contrarie. For vnder pretence that Gods word ſeemeth dark, many ſhrinke from it, and make a defence of it to excuſe their ignorance withall. Otherſome againe doe ruſh foreward with diueliſh preſumptuouſneſſe, to ſeeke out thinges that God hath not reuealed, and through vnſatiable deſirouſneſſe of knowledge, doe picke out newe queſtions euery minute of an houre, and if they may not ſee all thinges at will, they bend their hornes againſt God as wee ſee theſe raſcalls doe, which ſpewe out their blaſphemies when Gods ſecrets ſeeme ſtrange to them after their owne fancie. If they conceiue not Gods eternall election, if they perceiue not how he choſeth the one ſort & refuſeth the other euen according to his will: if they vnderſtand not how hee diſpoſeth of his creatures, and that nothing happeneth but by his good will: by and by they fall to fretting and chafing, yea and they dare euen murmure againſt God and would haue all thinges raſed out of the holy ſcripture, which agree not with their fantaſtical braine. So much the more therfore doeth it ſtand vs on hand to remember well what is tolde vs here: namely that God caſteth a clowde before our eyes. And why? To the end wee ſhould be ſober in inquiring of him, and indeuour to profite according to his teaching of vs: for it belongeth him to knowe what is for our behoofe: and moreouer that wee ſhoulde alwayes walke according to the meaſure of the faith which he ſhal haue giuen and imparted vnto vs. Thus much concerning the clowde.

And now ſeeing the Lawe was giuen with record that God is the author thereof: Let vs in theſe dayes learne to rule our ſelues thereafter, and not call the thing any more in queſtion, which wee ought to bee moſt aſſured of. Secondly if wee compare the lawe with the Goſpell, let vs vnderſtand that there is much more reaſon why wee ſhould humble our ſelues, and reuerently receiue all that is conteyned in the Goſpell. For although the lawe was ratifyed with ſo many miracles: yet did it not fayle to ſtryke the people in feare, and to bring them in greate vexation of minde, inſomuch that they ſayd, Let not the Lorde ſpeake vnto vs, for then are wee all dead. And why? For if a man looke no further but to Gods commaundements, there is nothing but curſing. By reaſon whereof men beholding themſelues bound to things vnpoſſible, and perceiuing that God wil be their iudge: muſt needes be caſt downe, yea and driuen to vtter deſpaire. After that manner was the lawe deliuered to the people. But ỹ Goſpell nowadayes is friendly vnto vs. For there God calleth vs to bee of his houſhold, not for any deſert of ours in performing the thinges that he commaundeth, but of purpoſe to beare with vs as with his children, foraſmuch as he hath adopted vs in our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt. Seing then that God allureth vs to him ſo louingly, haue wee not the more cauſe to receiue the doctrine of ſaluation with all reuerence, conſidering that it is the meſſage of lyfe, whereas the lawe was a recorde of death to terrify the people, I meane the people of the Iewes?

And as in reſpect of miracles, wee are ſure ỹ the Goſpel hath bin warranted w̄ moe, than euer ỹ lawe was. And beſides the miracles ỹ haue bin wrought, behold, Ieſus Chriſt in whom dwelleth all glory and maieſtie, is come into the worlde to beare witneſſe thereof. Seeing then ỹ we haue the Goſpell & the doctrine of Ieſus Chriſt, who hath ỹ fulneſſe of ỹ Godhead in him: ought not we to be more humbled vnder the obediẽce of ỹ Goſpel, than ỹ people of olde time were vnder the ſubiectiõ & bondage of the lawe? yes: and therfore is it ſayd, ỹ heauen & earth were both ſhaken, as ỹ prophet Aggeus ſpeaketh of it, ſaying that ỹ earth was throughly ſhaken at ỹ publiſhing of the lawe. And the Apoſtle alledgeth ỹ ſame text in the Epiſtle to the Hebrewes, ſaying: but now muſt all be ſhakẽ, & the power of God muſt vtter it ſelfe farre greater in the Goſpell. So then let vs learne that if the clowde and darkeneſſe which appeared at ỹ time to ỹ Iewes, ought to haue taught them to obey God & to ſubmit themſelues to his lawe: much more ought the ſame to preuaile w̄ vs at this day: ſpecially ſeing wee haue not a darke clowde: for (as ſayth S. Paule) there is not ſo much as any veile before vs, but wee haue ỹ image of God ſhining forth, and wee ſee him as it were face to face. Seeing then ỹ God doth nowadayes appeare to vs after another maner than he did to ỹ fathers, ſo as he ſheweth vs his liuely image in our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt, to the intent we ſhould beholde him for our father and Sauiour, and in ſtead of the dark clowde we haue nowadayes the great light of ỹ Goſpel: Let vs aſſure our ſelues that we ought to be ỹ more deſirus to obey him in al things. That is the thing which we haue to remember here.

Herewithall let vs alſo wey this ſaying that is ſet downe here: namely, that the people ought to haue reſted altogether vppon the voyce that was vttered vnto them, as the very marke whereby God will be knowen. To morrowe it ſhall be declared more at length, why God would not haue any viſible image: but yet notwithſtanding wee muſt at this preſent, wey well this poynt, that GOD did vtter foorth his voyce. And why? To the intent that thereby the people ſhoulde bee reſtreyned as with a bridle, and conſider with themſelues that their eyes muſt not be wandering and gaſing about, to ſeeke any ſhape of God, but that their eares muſt be attentiue to heare his voyce, ſo that whenſoeuer God ſpeaketh, men muſt be as it were impriſoned to it, and content themſelues to be taught by him. Therefore when we come before the Lorde, accordingly as it is ſayd that they which meete together in his Church doe appeare before him: let vs note that wee muſt make account of his voyce, [and think thus with our ſelues.] What come we hither to doe? Whereas the Papiſtes gaſe vppon their Church walles, and fiske about after their fooliſh ceremonies and after murlimewes of their own making: inſomuch that although they thinke they pleaſe God, yea and hold him bound vnto them, yet they doe but play the brute beaſtes in ỹ behalfe: Let vs haue Gods word as ỹ certaine mark that he ſitteth in ỹ middeſt of vs, & is [alwayes]

at hand with vs. After that maner must wee thinke, if wee will not erre: for the true marke for all the faithfull to shoote at, when they assemble together in the name of GOD, is to haue his voyce as a warrant of the presence of his maiestie. And of a trueth, lyke as the eare was the cause of the withdrawing of the first man from God: so must it drawe vs to him again at this day. What was it that banished our father Adam out of Gods kingdom? What caryed him away from the hope of lyfe, but his eares which receiued the voyce of Satan, and the falshoode that was put to him? Now then, lyke as wee be separated from God by that damnable voyce, when wee haue yeelded vnto euill: so now wee knowe that the onely meane to bee called vnto God and to enter into his house, that wee may be of the number of his children: is to heare Gods voyce and therby to be vnited vnto him. Thus muche concerning that worde.

Gen. 3. 17.

Moses addeth thereunto, that at the same time God published his couenaunt which hee had made afore, and commaunded Moses to bring them the ten Articles in two tables, charging him to teach the people his lawes and iudgementes, that they might doe them. Hereby wee see againe that which I haue touched heretofore: that is to wit, that God will not haue his doctrine to be as a dead thing, but to bee of power to reforme vs, so that wheras naturally wee be froward and giuen to all naughtines, wee must be subiect to him in such wise as his righteousnesse may raigne in vs. To that intent was the lawe set foorth. True it is that the lawe being writte in two tables of stone, could not be kept vnlesse God subdewed the hardnesse of mens hartes by his holy spirit: and therefore it serued as a figure to shewe that the lawe ought to be written in mens hearts, though they be neuer so hard. Those stones then were as an image of our heartes. For as God auoweth by his prophet) wee haue such a hardnesse in vs, as hee can neuer bow vs till wee be softened. Neuertheless lyke as hee ingraued his lawe in the stones: so also doeth hee print the same in vs when it pleaseth him to touche vs by his holy spirit. And this was done at the same time that the lawe was put foorth. And here yee see why comparison is made betweene the Gospell and the lawe. God tolde the people how it behoued thē to know thēselues, for such as they were in deed, that is to wit ỳ they were hardned in naughtinesse, stubborne, and ful of all corruption, so as there was no concord nor agreement betweene the thoughtes and affections of them, and the righteousnesse of himselfe. And for proofe thereof, let vs marke that there are two thinges betokened by that which Moses rehearseth here. The one is the goodnes that GOD hath shewed in setting forth his lawe. For it is not enough for men to be taught: that will not boote them vntill such time as he subdew them. Wee may haue our eares beaten long enough with the doctrine of the Lawe, but wee shall continew still giuen to our owne naughtinesse: and therefore it shall be but labor lost and mispent to preach Gods word vnto vs. And why? For it will slip out againe, and so shall wee continewe alwayes lyke our selues. That is one thing that is betokened vnto vs.

2. Cor. 3. 3.

Iere. 31. 33.

Rom. 8. 6. 7.

Colos. 1. 21.

And therewithall God hath shewed, that yet notwithstanding, the setting foorth of his worde in that wise by the mouth of a man, is not in vaine, for it serued to put the people againe in hope of thinges that were yet hidden, wherof wee haue not onely a full sight, but also the effect and accomplishment, by the comming of our Lorde Iesus Christ, according as it is sayd by the prophets Ieremie and Ezechiel, that God will make a newe couenant, after another maner than that which he made with the fathers of olde time. For that couenant (sayth he) was soone broken, because they had no holde of themselues: but I wil ingraue my lawe in your heartes. God then did testify this newe couenant by Moses in mount Sinay, which our Lord Iesus Christ hath performed by his comming into the worlde, and which is offered vnto vs still euery day. And therefore let vs learne that when wee come to be taught, it must not be to any other ende than to be renewed by God, so as hee put away the hardnesse that is in vs, and soften our heartes after such a sorte, as wee may stoope vnder him to receiue his yoke, and hee holde vs in awe, because wee be so fickle that we would start away from him euery day, if hee gaue vs not steddie constantnesse to goe through with our vocation. That is a thing which wee ought to marke well. And why? Euen to humble vs, and to make vs knowe that although GOD spare our liues yet should they bee turned into death, if hee should let vs alone in our owne plight, and not adde a second grace in reforming vs by his holy spirite. And therewithall let vs be of good comfort, forasmuch as wee see that nowadayes wee haue not onely the auncient figures, and the tables of stone wherein God wrate his lawe: but also that hee worketh effectually by his holy spirit, as Saint Paul sheweth in the thirde to the Colossians. Seeing then that God worketh after such a sorte, as wee perceiue that our heartes are no more stony, forasmuch as wee be willing to stoope vnder him, and desirous to honor him, insomuch that although there be many lettes and hinderances in vs, (as wee see that the flesh striueth continually against goodnesse:) yet notwithstanding our Lord giueth vs the grace to be sorie for our infirmities and sinnes, being desirous to eschewe them, indeuoring to withstanding, and inforcing our selues with all our heartes to serue him: Let vs acknowledge the singular grace that hee vouchsafeth vppon vs, and therewithall let vs learne to preace boldely vnto him, and not to stand aloofe vnderneath the hill as is sayd heere. And it is the same thing that the Apostle sheweth in the Epistle to the Hebrewes when he sayth, that wee be not come to the mountaine where there was nothing but fire, where nothing was heard but thundering and tempest, where lightninges flashed, where trumpets sounded, and where there was nothing but terribleneſse: wee be not

Col. 3. 9. 10.

Ier. 31. 31. 32. Eze. 37. 26.

Heb. 12. 18. 22. 23. 24.

come to that mountaine: we bee not nowadaies called to bondage: but wee bee heere in the presence of our God, where we haue friendly felowship with the Angels: wee be matched and knitte in companie with the holy fathers, and with the soules whom God hath already taken out of the world: and we be all called to the end we should with open mouth call vppon God as our father. Then if we bethink our selues hereof, let vs goe boldly to our God.

Moreouer let vs alwayes beare in minde how it is tolde vs here, that Gods inioyning of vs to keepe his lawe, is by way of couenanting with vs. And that ought to giue vs the more courage. True it is that if God did simply vse his authoritie, euen in shewing vs our duetie towards him, and delt with vs by playne rigor, saying, yee must obey mee spyte of your teeth: yet ought wee to doe it, and it were not meete for vs to gainesay him. But now when wee see that Gods subdewing of vs vnto him is in such wise, as hee vouchsafeth therewithall to be our sauiour and father, couenaunting as it were by mutual consent with vs, and binding himselfe to vs in requiring vs to come to serue him: ought it not to moue vs greatly, if wee were not woorse than blockishe? Ought it not to prouoke vs to giue our selues ouer to our GOD, seeing that hee vouchsafeth to ioyne with vs? yes: and therefore let vs alwayes marke well this word Couenaunt. And that worde ought specially to touch vs to the quicke in these dayes, when wee compare the lawe with the Gospell. For if God in those dayes made a couenaunt with the people of olde time: it is Hebr. 8.6. in farre other taking with vs nowadayes, that is to say, infinitly better. And for proofe thereof, the pledges of those times were earthly, and serued to keepe folke alwayes in feare. True it is that God did alwayes set to his mark, so as the auncient fathers had an eye to the Lorde Iesus Heb. 11.2. Christe, and were not destitute of this warrant, that hee of his free goodnesse was their Sauiour: howbeit that was done but (as yee would say) aloofe. But nowadayes God vttereth his couenant vnto vs so largely, that wee be sure of the forgiuenesse of our sins: and that although there be many thinges amisse in vs, although wee haue a number of incomberaunces by reason of our infirmities, although wee limpe and hang our winges, yea and although wee stumble and take many a fall: yet shall not all this let him to vse that inestimable goodnesse of his stil towards vs, whereof hee speaketh by his prophet: namely that hee will not deale roughly with vs, no more than a father doth with his children. Ier. 31.3. Seeing then that wee perceiue that our Lord of his free fauour accepteth our seruice though it bee vnperfect and full of faultes: wee ought to bee the more willing to giue our selues vnto him euen with all our power. And sith wee see it hath pleased him to stoope so lowe, as to shewe himselfe to be our father and teacher, dealing more familiarly with vs than hee did in old time with the fathers vnder the lawe: let not vs on our side be slothfull in comming to him, but let vs labor the more earnestly in his commaundementes, and striue to withdrawe our selues so from the worlde, as nothing may keepe vs from atteining to the holy vnion, which is conteined in the couenant that God hath made with vs on the behalfe of our Lorde Iesus Christ.

Now let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good GOD with acknowledgement of our sinnes, praying him to make vs feele them better, that wee may mislyke of them in such wise as after wee haue condemned our selues for the, our whole seeking may be to feele the mercie that hee hath promised vs, not onely in not imputing our faultes to vs, but also in correcting them by the power of his holy spirite, that wee may all liue in his obedience. And so let vs all say, Almightie God heauenly father, &c.

On Thursday the xxiii. of May. 1555.

The xxiij. Sermon, which is the fifth vpon the fourth Chapter.

15 Therefore shall yee take good heede for your selues, that yee saw no maner of image in the day that the Lorde your God spake vnto you in Horeb, from the middes of the fire:

16 That you marre not your selues, ne make you anie grauen image, or representation of anie portraiture, bee it the likenesse of man or woman,

17 Or the lykenesse of any beast vppon earth, or the lykenesse of any byrd that hath winges, which flyeth vnder the skye:

18 Or the lykenesse of any thing that creepeth on the ground, or the lykenesse of any fishe that is in the water vnder the earth.

19 Also that when thou liftest vp thine eyes vnto heauen, and beholdest the Sunne, and the Moone, and the starres, with all the hoste of heauen: thou bee not deceiued and bowe downe before them, and ſerue them, ſeeing the Lorde God hath imparted them to all people that are vnder the whole heauen.

20 But as for you, the Lord hath taken you and drawen you out of the yron fornace of Egypt, to be vnto him a people of inheritance, as you be this day.

WE haue ſeene already heretofore the care that God had of his people, in willing them to take heede to themſelues, and to watch well for their ſoules. For by thoſe words he ſheweth howe deare & chare our ſoulehealth is vnto him. Here we ſee the like againe. Take heede to thy ſelfe (ſaith he) and keepe thy ſoule. If God did not beare a ſingular good will to men, he would not ſpeake ſo. And therefore wee haue a ſure and infallible warrant that God ſeeketh our ſaluation, to the end that we on our ſide ſhall thinke vppon it alſo. But wee muſt marke therewithall, whereof he treateth here: that is to wit, of the worſhipping of God purely without diſguyſing of his maieſtie. Then is it a token that the ſame belongeth chiefly to our ſaluation, and that wee runne to ruine and deſtruction when we ſwarue aſide from the pure religion, and fall to deuiſing of any thing that beſeemeth not God. If wee doe ſo, the diuell reigneth among vs, and GOD muſt needes forſake vs. Wherefore let vs learne that the holding of religion purely & in ſuch ſorte as God alloweth it, as a thing of no ſmall importance. For this kinde of ſpeach were vnexpedient, if to make images were either lawfull or but a ſmall and light fault: and ſurely God would not ſpeake ſo vehemently as he doth. And therefore whenſoeuer the caſe concerneth the worſhipping of God, let vs marke well that it is one of ỹ principall poyntes of our ſaluation, & that men muſt not preſume in this behalfe to take leaue to doe what they themſelues thinke good, but rather this warning that is ſet downe here muſt induce vs to walke in feare and carefulneſſe. For what a ſhame is it, that our Lord ſhall tell vs wee muſt ſtand vpon our garde: and we in the meane while ſhall runne at rouers, as though wee needed not to paſſe greatly for the matter: And that God ſhould ſo procure our welfare, and we make none account of it? And ſo ye ſee what we haue to marke vppon thoſe termes.

But now let vs come to the chiefe matter of this ſentence. You ſawe not (ſaith he) any image or portraiture, in the day that the Lord ſpake to you in Horeb. Take heede therefore that yee marre not your ſelues, by making you any carued image, or the lykeneſſe of any thing, whether it be of man or woman, bird or beaſt, woorme or fiſh: Beware of al ſuch thinges. For your God hath ſhewed himſelfe to you in ſuch wiſe as was expediẽt, and not in any ſhape. So then let vs beare this leſſon in minde, namely to worſhip him in ſpirit, becauſe hee hath not a body, nor any thing in him that can be repreſented by the things that are ſeen with our eyes. Now this doctrine is cleare enough of it ſelfe, if men would followe it, and that the world would not wilfully reſiſt ſo certeine a thing. But this pride hath bin in all ages and reigneth yet ſtil at this day, that men will needes haue a preſence of God after their owne faſhion and deuice. But ſurely their wittes are fleſhly, by reaſon whereof they conceiue and imagine of God after their owne nature, and thereuppon make images vnto him. Neuertheleſſe it is not for vs to counterfeit God, or to attribute any thing vnto him but it belongeth to him to vtter himſelfe: and therefore we muſt but onely receiue that which hee ſheweth vs, and hold vs wholly thereunto.

Exod. 32. 2. Rom. 1. 23.

Now let vs marke the grounde that Moſes taketh here: that is to wit: At ſuch time as God ſpake vnto you in mount Horeb, hee ſhewed not himſelfe in anie viſible ſhape. In ſpeaking after that maner, Moſes ſheweth that we muſt not be haſtie aforehand to conceiue what wee our ſelues thinke good, but muſt tary till God ſhewe himſelfe. Take that for one poynt. For if men will needes giue way to their owne fleſhlie reaſon in that behalfe, they ſhall ouerthrowe themſelues and breake their neckes with their ouer much haſte. But on the other ſide Moſes ſheweth, that GOD did manifeſt himſelfe in ſuch wiſe to his people, as there is no cauſe why men ſhould any more ſay, how ſhall wee knowe God? How ſhall wee be ſure that hee is neere vs? How ſhall wee worſhip him? How can wee call vppon him? God therefore hath cut off all occaſions of fond curioſities, by ſhewing himſelfe to his people. And the ſame agreeth now fitly vnto vs. For when God publiſhed his lawe in mount Horeb: although he had then choſen the ofspring of Abraham: yet was it his intent to giue foorth a doctrine that ſhould continue to the worlds end. Then let vs vnderſtand, that God in manifeſting himſelfe by voyce, meant to barre all images, not onely in reſpect of the Iewes, but alſo in reſpect of vs too. And therefore wee ſee that their beaſtlyneſſe is ſo much the greater, which nowadayes mainteine this corruption concerning images in the Popedome: for they alledge that this was ſpoken for the Iewes & not for vs: Verily as who ſhould ſay that Gods manifeſting of himſelfe by voyce, and not in ſhape of man or of any other liuing creature, ſerued not for all ages, but onely for the people of olde time.

Againe, what is to bee ſayd of the reaſons that are alledged through the whole holy ſcripture? ſerued they but onely for a time? or rather ought they not to ſtand faſt for euer? Beholde, Eſay vpbraideth the Iewes, that they had diſfigured the maieſtie of God. And why? To whome haue yee likened me, ſayth he? The complaint ỹ God maketh is this: dooth wood or ſtone reſemble me? As for them, they be but dead & corruptible thinges. Doth it not wel appeare then, that diſhonor and wrong is offered to my being, when men goe about after that ſorte to repreſent mee vnder ſuche ſhapes?

Eſa. 40. 18, 25. 59.

Now

Now is God chaunged ſince that tyme? Is hee not the ſame that he was? Then if hee had no lykeneſſe to wood and ſtone in olde tyme: neither is hee lyke them now. And therefore it followeth that this neither ought to be nor can bee reſtreined to any one time, but muſt continue, for euer: Furthermore whereas the Papiſtes alledge, that Gods reſtreyning of idolatrie ſo ſtraitly, was becauſe the Iewes were ſo much inclyned to ſuperſtition: I would with all my hart that it were in their power to amend men and to drawe them from their error. But what? The world ſees it is all one ſtill. For if euer the Iewes were fleſhed in their fooliſhe vanities: the world is neuer a whit amended now, but rather become woorſe. As ſoone as men doe thinke vpon God, by and by they wil needes haue ſomewhat that reſembleth their owne kinde, and thereupon they fall to making of images. And when they once haue any thing to gaſe at, they cling to that, and their deuotion is tyed to it, ſo as they neuer goe about to lift vp their heartes to heauen, to worſhip God and to call vppon him. Wee ſee this with our eyes. What a beaſtlyneſſe then is it to ſay, that onely the Iewes were forbidden to worſhippe images, that it is lawfull for vs nowadayes to doe it? Yea, but we ſee how the new teſtament alſo doth ſpeake of it. For the reaſons as well of Moſes as of the prophetes which wee haue touched already, are alledged by Saint Paul, who ſaith that men went aſtray or rather vaniſhed away in their owne imaginations, and turned al things vpſide down, and falſifyed Gods trueth, whēſoeuer they made any counterfeit of him, whether it were in the lykeneſſe of man or of beaſt. Doth Saint Paul ſpeake there but onely of the Iewes? Yes: and euen in the Sermon which hee maketh in the ſeuenteenth of the Actes, hee ſpeaketh not to any one people alone, but to all the heathen vniuerſally. And to the ſame purpoſe he alledgeth them a ſaying of their owne heathen wryters. For it is written by a heathen Poet, that wee bee Gods generation. Saint Paul reaſoneth hereuppon, if wee be the generation of God, is it either comely or reaſonable that wee ſhoulde make him any image either of woode or ſtone, golde, or ſiluer? None of theſe thinges can reſemble him. But wee muſt marke that when this poore heathen man ſpake after that faſhion, he meant not that wee reſemble God either in eyes, or in noſe, or in eares, but in ſoule, foraſmuch as wee haue reaſon to diſcerne between good and euill, vnderſtanding to conceiue and comprehend thinges, and are ſo excellent aboue all brute beaſtes, that there is no creature in the world ſo noble as man. That is the thing wherein we reſemble God. But now, with what paynting can mans ſoule be expreſſed? Seeke all the cunning that can be, & what portraiture can be made thereof? And yet for all that, what are our ſoules? They be but as little ſparkes in compariſon of the infinite brightneſſe that is in God. Our ſoules are created, and God is without beginning: He is the ground and welſpring of all thinges. Our ſoules are weake, ſubiect to ignorance, ſubiect to ſin, and ſubiect to many wicked luſtes. But God with his infinite being and maieſtie is the perfection of all vertues. To be ſhort, as oft as we thinke of him, wee ought to be rauiſhed into wondering and aſtoniſhment. So then, is it not apparant that men are worſe than mad, when they wil needs take vpon them to ſhape out Gods being, ſeeing that no ſhape can be made of their owne ſoules, which are nothing in compariſon of him? For ſeeing that S. Paul ſpeaketh ſo to ỹ heathen, I pray you do not the Papiſtes ſhewe that their meaning is to reproue him of ignorance, and of the miſapplying of Gods lawe? Or elſe muſt they not needes be confounded in their blaſphemies? Yes: and therefore let vs marke well, that this doctrine ỹ God will not haue any maner of image made of him, ſerueth not for two or three dayes, but for all euer. And there is euen one reaſon which ought to ſuffice vs, which I alledged euē now out of the prophet Eſay. How now, ſayth God? conſider who I am. If I liſted to gripe ỹ whole world, I need not to ſtretch out my hād for the matter, For though I kept my hand ſhut, yet could I hold all the world cloſe in it, as a little grayne of duſt. It is true that God hath no handes, for he hath no bodie: but his ſpeaking ſo is by a ſimilitude. As if hee ſhould ſay, doe yee thinke me to be like any creature? No: for all the world is nothing in compariſon of me. It is but as a grayne of duſt in a mans hand: & you your ſelues are here beneth as a ſort of frogges and graſhoppers. Now then, if yee will needes make ſome puppet to repreſent me, is it not as good as a defacing of my glory, & a ſpyting of me to ỹ vttermoſt of your power? Wee ſee that God is a ſpirit as the ſcripture declareth: & ſhall wee then goe about to make him a bodie? It is he that giueth lyfe to all thinges: & ſhall we go take a dead thing to repreſent him thereby, and ſay: There is God? When we haue ſhaped out a ſtone or a peece of wood, and made it a noſe, eares, and all the reſt of mans limbes, yet hath it no feeling at all: and ſhall wee neuertheleſſe ſay, Behold, there is God? What a dealing were that? For the ſame cauſe is it ſayd in the pſalme: Are idols remembraunces of God? In deed men make them mouths, and they haue feete, handes, noſes, & eares, but yet haue they no power to goe, nor any other abilitie, they be but corruptible & dead things. And is there any remembrance of God in thē? Serue they not rather to leade men into error & beaſtlyneſſe, ſo as they ſhould make no more account of God? The very heathen men thēſelues could ſtill to ſay it: not that they did practiſe it in deede: but God wreſted ſuch woordes out of their mouthes, to ỹ intent they might all be conuicted. And albeit ỹ neither Moſes nor ỹ prophets ſpake vnto them: yet was it Gods will to condemne thē by themſelues. Ye ſee then how it is a ſufficient peremptorie reaſon, that inaſmuch as there is no lykeneſſe betweene God and any of all the ſhapes that can be made to repreſent him withall: hee hath wrong done vnto him, and it is an abacing of his maieſtie and glorie, when men doe make images of him after that ſorte.

And therewithall let vs alſo beholde mens madneſſe. Is it in mans power (as ſayth the prophet Eſay) to take a logge of wood, and with part thereof to goe heate his ouen, or to ſeethe fleſhe in a potte, or to bake his bread, or to warme himſelfe: and to take another parte of it, and to faſhion a noſe and eares vppon it, and to ſay vnto it: Thou art my God, and thereupon to worſhip it? Now when men make Gods, that is to ſay remembraunces or repreſentations of God, at their owne pleaſure, becauſe they liſt to put a difference between two or three peeces of wood[to prefer one before another,] and ſay, behold, this is GOD: is it not too great a beaſtlyneſſe? yes, and the very heathen men themſelues haue affirmed it, as I haue declared. Behold, a Paynim, a blinde wretch that was before the comming of Ieſus Chriſt, ſayth: Since the time that images came into the world, there hath bin nothing but errour, and it hath bin the meane to make men brute beaſtes, and to turne them away from the truth. Seeing that euen blinde men knewe this, or rather that God did caſt foorth thoſe words by their mouth: is it not a horrible condemnation to ſuche as terme themſelues Chriſtians, if they take not heede to it? Another heathen man bringeth in an idoll ſpeaking thus: The Carpenter or Carſuer (ſayth hee) was in doubt what to make of mee: in the ende hee thought beſt to make me a God, and ſo am I now worſhipped. See how this blinde wretch skoffeth at the beaſtlyneſſe that was among men, and yet hee himſelfe ceaſed not to worſhip idols ſtill. But what? God wreſted this acknowledgement from him by force, to the ende that all mankinde ſhoulde bee condemned, and that there ſhoulde bee no more excuſe. But as for vs, wee will vaunt our ſelues to be taught by Gods word: and yet we will not knowe ſo much as the ſillie infidels haue ſpoken. And truely, are not wee warned by them? If wee heare not the Prophets and Apoſtles: at leaſtwiſe yet ought thoſe heathen men to teach vs to our ſhame. Therefore it muſte needes be that wee bee woorſe than bewitched by Satan, if wee conſider not all theſe reaſons, ſpecially ſeeing they be of Gods owne alledging, who will haue men to receiue them euen with all reuerence, as at his maieſties hand, and that for a further confirmation hee addeth the ſayings of the infidels which I haue alledged. And therefore let vs forbeare to take that vppon vs which belongeth not to vs, that is to witte, the choice and libertie of making images of God, for men to worſhip, or to caſt the wood into the fire to make the potte ſeethe, and ſuch other lyke thinges. For it is too much againſt reaſon.

Furthermore, let vs alſo take heede to our ſelues. For aſſone as we begin to intangle our ſelues in our own imaginations: by and by there foloweth a ſea of foliſh thoughts, which make vs to run gadding heere and there, ſo as they carry vs quite & cleane from God. If men knew their owne narure: ſurely they durſt neuer aduenture to make any image. I told you at the firſt, that wee ought to know God, & that the ſame knowledge would be a good bridle to holde vs in ſimplicitie, and to make vs to preuent all ſuperſtitions. And when wee enter into our ſelues, that alſo ought to teach vs well, that it is a turning of all thinges vpſide down, when wee make any Image of God. For what is the cauſe that men are ſo eagre to haue ſome repreſentatiō of God: but for that they cannot mount vp into heauen, for aſmuch as their wits goe groueling downeward, and are alwayes wedded to the earth? And therfore would they haue God to come downe vnto them. Now it is true ỹ God commeth downe vnto vs: howbeit, that is after his owne maner, and not at our appoyntment. And he muſt bee faine to ſtoope vnto vs, becauſe we cannot moūt vp vnto him: but yet he keepeth ſuch a faſhion & meaſure, ỹ therewithall he lifteth vs vp to him. We for our part could finde in our hearts ỹ God were (as ye would ſay) vnder our feete, ſo as wee might treade vppō him: And ỹ is the cauſe why we haue idols. For ỹ beginning of idolatrie ſpraīg of this, ỹ men feeling their own infirmitie, would needes haue God in ſuch wiſe as their owne wit was able to brooke. Now their wit ſtyeth not high, but rather rucketh beneath vpon ỹ groūd. And therefore although men had no idols at all: yet is idolatrie in them, & they haue ỹ ſeede of ſuperſtition, inaſmuch as they would haue God to faſhion himſelfe to their lyking. Nowe then ſeeing ỹ this naughtineſſe is rooted in vs alreadỹ: muſt not ỹ miſchiefe become dubble, whē we meete w̄ an obiect? that is to ſay, when we haue any thing to ſet vs foreward, & whē any new occaſiō is miniſtred? So thē, if there be any idols or images to portray or repreſēt God: it cannot be but ỹ men ſhalbe dubble ſeduced. Seing they be to much inclined thereto of nature: it is a great inforcement whē they be further driuē foreward by ỹ thing ỹ they beholde. Therefore if we wiſt it were ſuch a vice, ſurely we would abhorre idolatrie, knowing ỹ it turneth vs quite away from God. And for the ſame cauſe doth the prophet Ieremy ſay, that there is nothing but doctrine of falſhood in Idols: and the prophet Abacuck verifying the ſame, & comparing idols with the liuing God, ſayth that they be a ſchoole of lyes.

But yet for all this, the Papiſtes will affirme that images are laymens bookes: and that becauſe all men cannot reade nor are clearkes, there muſt be ſome helpe for the ignorant. Very well: if a repreſentation of God be made, that is a booke, that is as good as the Byble, ſay the Papiſts: and it is their chiefe ankerholde that they flee to in this caſe. True it is that this ſhifte is not of their owne deuiſing: it was deuiſed by a man not wicked of himſelfe, notwithſtanding ỹ he was ſomewhat atteinted with the corruption of papiſtrie. For he was a Pope himſelfe, howbeit not when the Popedome was in ſuch plight as it is nowadayes: but yet when it had already bin greatly corrupted, and the world was ſore degenerated. Nowe then, this good man Gregorie thought it good to haue images, and that they would be as bookes for the vnlearned: & this haue the papiſts receiued as if it were ỹ oracle of ſome Angel from heauen. But contrariwiſe ỹ Prophet

Ieremie auoweth that all the doctrine of idols is meere falſhood, and likewiſe Abacuck in the ſecond Chapter ſaieth that they teache nothing but lyes. Were it lawfull for a man to coine falſe money on his owne head, becauſe he can get none of the right ſtamp? No: but yet hath God giuen his word to all men, ſo as he hath vouchſafed not onely to ſpeake to great Clerkes, but alſo to ſtoope to the rudeneſſe of the little ones. And for all this, men ſtoppe their eares, and ſay they can not knowe God but by a Puppet: and vnder that pretence they will needes haue it lawfull for them to beely the thinges that God hath reported of his owne being. Foraſmuch then as wee haue warrant that there is nothing but falſhood in images: let vs ſend home ſuch Bookes to the diuell: for it is certaine that he is the author of them, and that they came all out of his ſhoppe. And herein we ſee how that curſed Counſell which allowed images, was firſt caried away. For theſe were the worſhipfull reaſons that they alledged for the hauing of images. It is not ynough (ſaide they) that men bee taught by the eare: but their eyes alſo muſt haue ſome inſtruction too. And thereunto they wreſted this ſaying of the Pſalme, Wee haue heard and ſeene: that as wee haue heard Gods worde, ſo muſt we alſo haue ſome thing to looke at: and (as I ſaid) they referre this looking, vnto images. But contrariwiſe the Prophetes meaning is, that God (beſides his vttering of himſelfe to his people by his word) had beſtowed ſo many and ſo apparant giftes of grace vppon them, as they might well ſay, Our God hath ſufficiently aſſured vs that he was our Sauiour, not onely by his promiſes, but alſo by the deede it ſelfe whereof we haue had experience. And yet notwithſtanding vnder colour of that text, theſe raſcals will needes beare men in hand, that God muſt be repreſented by puppets.

But if they will needes that there muſt be viſible images: our Lord hath giuen vs as many of them as he knewe to be for our behoofe. When we haue Baptiſme, is it not a viſible image of the thing that is ſpirituall? that is to wit of the waſhing which we haue by the bloud of our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt, when wee bee renewed by his holy ſpirit? And haue we not a repreſentation of the heauenly myſterie ſet foorth to vs in the Lordes ſupper? Yes: but yet for all that wee muſt not make any image at all of Gods being. And why? for it were not for our profit as I haue declared afore: but it would rather turne vs away to lyes and beſotte vs in all manner of ſuperſtition. God therefore knowing that the hauing of images is an vntoward thing and as a deadly plague: hath not liſted to giue vs any, but rather holdeth vs back to this, that hauing ſuch ſignes as may conuey vs vpward, we ſhould trauell towardes him, howbeit without hauing any repreſentation of his being. Thus ye ſee that the thing which wee haue to remember in effect, is that although the ſcripture did not expreſſely forbid vs to haue any image or bodily repreſentation of God: yet the reaſons are ſuch as wee ought to worſhippe God in ſpirite, and to flye vp aloft into heauen, and not to ſticke faſt here belowe. Why ſo? For in knowing God, we muſt conſider his Maieſtie, how there is no proportion or likeneſſe between him and the creatures. Therefore it is but a miſſhaping of him when we make any bodily image vnto him: he that is the welſpring of life cannot be repreſented by a dead thing. If wee goe this way to worke, then ſhall wee neuer bee marred nor imbaced, but rather wee ſhall ſeeke God in ſuch wiſe, as he hath vouchſafed to vtter himſelfe vnto vs, and we ſhall not bee ſo ſhettleheaded as wee bee. For as ſoone as wee haue taken any toy in our heades, wee bee ſo doted and intangled, that wee thinke the ground beares vs not. If wee knewe this (I ſay,) wee ſhould be ſoberer. But what? The world muſt ſhewe it ſelfe blind as it is, and be ſotted with this drunkennes of Idolatrie, to bee caried away thereby, that it may euer turne away from God. For although men be naturally contented to haue ſome Religion: yet ſeeke they by al meanes not to come at God, I meane in trueth. They will well ynough ſay alwayes, God is to be worſhipped, and our intent is to doe ſo, wee muſt reſort vnto him. But how? Whereas they ſhould ſeeke God in heauen by faith: they will needes goe about the buſh. Verie well ſay they, wee will haue ſome image of God. And that is all one as if they ſhoulde ſay, Behold, here is a God that ſhall not trouble vs: for wee will deale well ynough with him at all times, he ſhall not ſpeake a worde; he ſhall but onely make a mowe. See how the world making countenaunce to ſeeke God, doeth drag backe from him as much as is poſſible, ſhrouding themſelues vnder this pretence, that it is ynough to haue a repreſentation of God, & that his power ſhall neuertheleſſe be infinite ſtill. But nowe we haue to marke, that God is not contented with ſuch reaſons, foraſmuch as he hath tolde vs that it is not lawfull for vs to haue any image of him to repreſent him withall. And ſhall wee reply againſt him when wee haue the woorde of his mouth? What ſhall we win by it? When wee haue pleaded our fill, ſuppoſe wee that wee haue any deuiſes in our braine, that can make God beleeue that he conſidered not all thinges well? No: and therefore (to be ſhort) as many as couet to haue any image of God, bewray themſelues to bee ranke rebels againſt him, they bewray a diueliſh malapertneſſe, in that they preſume to forge and ſet vp Gods after their owne fanſie: yea and they bewray their owne beaſtlineſſe alſo, in that they doe againſt nature. For they would allow God ſuch a repreſentation, as agreeth as fitly to him, as if they ſhoulde liken him to a ſticke, or I wote not what elſe. Men therefore doe in all reſpectes ſufficiently ſhewe themſelues to be vnexecuſable, when they turne ſo away after their images.

Eph. 5. 26. Rom. 6. 4. 1. Cor. 12. 13

But by the way wee haue to marke further, that all manner of images and repreſentations are not meant here. For our Lord ſaieth expreſly that he ſhewed not himſelf to his people any otherwiſe than by his onely voyce, and therefore that it is a corruption to make images. If this ſhould be drawen to conclude, that it is not lawfull to make any picture at all: it were a misapplying of Moſeſes teſtimonie, as ſome doe, who being too ſimple in this behalfe, doe ſay it is not lawfull to make any image: that is to ſay, it is not lawfull (to their ſeeming) to paint any ſtorie or to make any portraiture. But when the holy Scripture ſaieth, it is not lawfull to ſhape any reſemblaunce of God, bicauſe he hath no bodie: it extendeth not ſo farre: for it is otherwiſe as concerning men. Now then looke what wee ſee, that may wee repreſent by picture. And therefore let vs ſee that wee apply the textes againſt the Papiſtes as wee ought to doe, that we may bee armed to prooue our caſe iuſt. But yet muſt wee bee fully reſolued of this, that if any man goe about to expreſſe Gods Maieſtie by any ſhape: he doeth him wrong, and it is high treaſon to him, becauſe he is vncomprehenſible in his glorie. Marke that for one point. Now wee ſee that the Papiſts haue gone about to expreſſe God by ſhapes: therefore it followeth that they haue marred all Religion. And whereas they alledge that there were Cherubins painted vppon the vaile of the Temple, and that two likewiſe did couer the Arke: it ſerueth to condemne them the more. When the Papiſtes pretend that men may make any manner of image: What, ſay they? Hath not God permitted it? No: but the imagerie that was ſet there, ſerued to put the Iewes in minde that they ought to abſtaine from all counterfeiting of God, inſomuch that it was a meane to confirme them the better, that it was not lawfull for them to repreſent Gods Maieſtie, or to make any reſemblance thereof. For there was a vaile that ſerued to couer the great Sanctuarie, and againe there were two Cherubins that couered the Arke of ỹ couenant. Whereto commeth all this, and what is ment by it, but that when the caſe concerneth our going vnto God, we muſt ſhut our eyes and not preace any neerer him, than he guideth vs by his word? Then let vs hearken to that which he teacheth, and therewithall let vs bee ſober, ſo as our wits bee not tickliſh, nor our eyes open to imagine or conceiue any ſhape. That is ỹ thing which God meant to betoken in his Law. And ſo are we the more confirmed in the doctrine that I ſpake of. But as for the images which the Papiſtes make of their Heeſaints and Sheeſaints as they terme them: there is other reaſon to condemne them. For GOD hath forbidden two things. Firſt the making of any picture of him, bicauſe it is a diſguiſing and falſifying of his glorie, and a turning of his trueth into a lie. That is one point. The other is, that no image may bee worſhipped. But nowe, doe not the Papiſtes worſhip images? If they ſay, it is requiſite ſo to doe, for it is a continuall ſtirring vp of the peoples deuotion: that is too fond a reaſon. For firſt of all, when we come to the Church, it can not be but that we ſhall be caught in ſome errour, if wee haue neuer ſo little occaſion offered vs. For (as I ſaide) although there bee no image at all to drawe our eyes: yet are wee inclined to earthly imaginations euen of our ſelues, and wee nouriſh ſuperſtition in vs of our own nature. Now then if we be furthered and thruſt foreward vnto euill, ſo as wee finde as it were ſpurres to pricke vs foreward: I pray you ſhall wee not bee as good as madde? Therefore the ſetting vp of images in Churches is a defiling of them aforehande, and can ſerue to no purpoſe but to drawe folke from the pure and true knowledge of GOD. Againe, to what end doe the Papiſtes ſet vp images in Churches? Is it to haue knowledge of their Hiſtories? No: but there ſtandes a ſort of puppets with demure countenaunces, as it were to ſummon folke to come to doe them homage: inſomuch that an image is not ſo ſoone ſet vp in a Church, but by and by folke goe and kneele downe to it, and do a kinde of worſhip to it. And can a man deuiſe to teare the Maieſtie of our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt, and to deface his glorie more, than by ỹ thinges that the Papiſtes doe? Beholde, they paint and portray Ieſus Chriſt, who (as wee knowe) is not onely man, but alſo God manifeſted in the fleſh: and what a repreſentation is that? Hee is Gods eternall ſonne, in whom dwelleth the fulneſſe of the Godhead, yea euen ſubſtantially. Seeing it is ſaid, ſubſtantially, ſhould wee haue portraitures and images whereby the onely fleſh may bee repreſented? Is it not a wyping away of that which is chiefeſt in our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt, that is to wit, of his diuine Maieſtie? Yes: and therefore whenſoeuer a Crucifix ſtands mopping & mowing in the Church, it is all one as if the Diuell had defaced the ſonne of God. Yeſee then that the Papiſtes are deſtitute of all excuſe. Againe wee ſee howe they behaue themſelues: the images are worſhipped among them, as if God were preſent there in his owne perſon. Where ſaye they their Pater noſters, but before ſome puppet? And yet are they not contented with that: for they will needes make idoles of al things, yea euen to the verie Sacramentes: inſomuch that they haue falſified them, to drawe the worlde from the right Religion. Is there a more abhominable idol, than that which they haue inuented vnder pretence of ỹ Supper of Ieſus Chriſt? No: for they ſay, that GOD is there, and there he muſt bee worſhipped. So then, no maruaile though they abuſe their puppets and pictures after that faſhion, ſeeing they haue bene ſo bolde as to peruert the thinges, that God hath appointed to the furtherance of our faith.

1. Tim. 3. 16. Coloſ. 2. 9.

And by the waye let vs marke, that the true meane to ſeeke God after ſuch ſorte as he vttereth himſelfe, is, that after we once knowe him, wee doe alſo conſider that hee ſtoopeth to our rudenes, and yet ceaſſe not to ſeeke him by mounting vp higher, and by conceiuing the thinges ſpiritually which the Sacramentes doe ſhewe vs. It is true that by them God commeth downe to vs: howbeit, that is not to hold vs downe here beneath ſtill: but to make vs flie vp aloft vnto him. It is all one as if hee ſhoulde reache vs his hand and ſay, Come to me, and worſhip me ſpiritually. Wherefore let vs learne to ſeeke GOD euermore aboue vs, and not to tie him to our fleſhly and earthly vnderſtanding.

Now finally Moſes ſheweth the vnthankfulneſſe of the worlde in ſeeking new Gods, and in conueying conueying ouer of the Maieſtie of the liuing God to dead creatures. It was a verie common thing in the Eaſt Countries, to worſhip the Sun and the Moone and the Starres, bicauſe that to their ſeeming they were not as the earthly creatures are, nor had any corruption to be ſeene in them, nor were ſubiect to ſuch changes as men, beaſtes, trees and waters are, for we ſee howe all things vnder the ſkie are chaungeable: but ſeemed to bee things immortall and incorruptible. Yea verily, ſo ſeemeth it to men that are become brutiſh, and haue not the wit to goe to the creation, to knowe that God hath giuen the Sunne, Moone & Starres ſuch nature and proprietie as he liſted: but yet for all that, howſoeuer thoſe creatures fare, they bee liueleſſe. But here Moſes rebuketh the wicked fantaſticalneſſe of men in worſhipping the Sunne. They ſawe there a kind of Maieſtie. Oh (ſaid they,) theſe lightes of the skie are excellent thinges: ſurely there is ſome Godhead in them: therefore muſt wee needes worſhip them. But in ſo doing (ſaieth Moſes) mē became vnthankefull towardes God. For why? What is the Sunne? Our Seruant: & the Moone is our Handmaide. And for proofe thereof, was not the Sunne ordained to giue vs light? Is not he our Candleſticke? Yea and beſides that he is the Candleſticke, he is alſo the Candle it ſelfe, euen to doe vs ſeruice. It is true that God coulde well giue vs light without the meane of ỹ Sunne: but hee meant to ſhewe howe greatly he eſteemeth and loueth vs, in that he hath put ſuch ſeruants vnder vs, and aduaunced vs ſo high as to make the Sunne the Moone and the Starres to doe vs ſeruice. Now then, ſith wee ſee that God hath made his heauenly creatures ſubiect to vs after that faſhion: are wee not too churliſh and vnkinde if wee worſhip him not? Is it not a refuſing of the good turne that God hath done vs, and a ſhutting of our eyes to reiect his gratious fauour, as if they would ſay in deſpite of him, wee will not acknowledge the good that thou haſt done vs? In deede we ſee ỹ the Sunne & Moone doe ſerue vs: but yet will wee not take them for our ſeruants. Muſt it not needes bee that men are become ſtarke diuels, when they bee ſo froward & malicious, as to refuſe the receiuing of ſo great a benefit at Gods hand? That then is the thing that Moſes ſheweth here.

Cap. 2. 15.

Moreouer he addeth for a concluſion, that the people of Iſrael excelled all other Nations. It is true (ſaith he) ỹ God hath vouchſafed to make ỹ Sun & Moone ſeruants to the whole world: but thou excelleſt all other nations of the earth, inaſmuch as he hath choſen thee for his inheritance. And ſeeing it is ſo: ỹ oughteſt at leaſtwiſe to worſhip him as thy God, & to feare him and reuerence him as thy father, & in any wiſe to beware that thou defile not thy ſelfe w̄ the abhominations of idolatrie. For what a thing were it, if a Kinges ſonne ſhould refuſe to be in his fathers palace, & go keepe company w̄ ſome ſwineherd, yea or go wallow abrode w̄ brute beaſts, & fall to wrooting vp of the ground to eate filthy things like ỹ ſwine thēſelues? What a thing were it? But Moſes telleth vs, ỹ thoſe whō God hath choſen to bee his people, do the like, whē they go to caſt thēſelues downe before creatures. Therefore let vs learne to worſhip our God in ſpirit & trueth, and to doe him homage, & to acknowledge the good ỹ hee doth vs, ſpecially for that it hath pleaſed him to adopt vs to bee his children, through freebeſtowed adoption in our Lord Ieſus Chriſt.

Iohn 4. 24.

Now let vs kneele down in the preſence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faults, praying him ſo to open our eyes, as wee may no more aduēture to deuiſe any thing after our own fleſhly vnderſtāding, but reſort altogither to his holy word whereby he hath reuealed himſelfe to vs, & alſo receiue his Sacraments wherby we be yet better confirmed in his knowledge, ſo as our whole ſeeking may be to follow the pureries that is ſet forth in his doctrine, ỹ no error may lead vs away frō him nor from the pure religion ỹ hath bin taught vs: And in ỹ meane ſeaſon, ỹ as we do him homage in ſpirit, ſo likewiſe wee may ſerue him w̄ all our heart, aſſuring our ſelues ỹ wee can not ſerue nor worſhip him by any Ceremonies or outward things, w̄out yeelding him the honor & praiſe ỹ he requireth. And finally that it may pleaſe him to correct all ỹ idolatrie & ſuperſtitiō in the world, & to rid it in ſuch wiſe frō the earth which he hath appointed to ỹ vſe of men: as his name may be purely called vpon there. For the performāce wherof, it may pleaſe him to raiſe vp true and faithful miniſters of his word, &c.

21 And the Lorde was angrie with mee for your woordes, and ſware that I ſhould not paſſe ouer Iordan, nor goe into the good land which the Lord thy God giueth thee to inherit.

22 For I ſhall die in this land, without paſſing ouer Iordan: but you ſhall paſſe it, and poſſeſſe that good Land.

23 Beware that ye forget not the Couenant of the Lorde your God which he hath made with you: and that ye make ye not any grauen image, nor the likeneſſe of any thing which the Lord your God hath forbidden you.

24 For the Lord thy God is a conſuming fire and a ielous God.

YEsterday I began to ſhewe mens vnthankefulneſſe, in that they cannot finde in their heartes to profit themſelues by the benefits that God putteth into their handes, as this preſent example ſheweth ſufficiently. Beholde, God hath ordained the ſtarres of the skie to doe vs ſeruice. There ought wee to eſpie his infinite goodneſſe towardes vs, howe greatly he loueth and eſteemeth vs, in that he hath made ſo noble creatures our ſeruaunts. But in ſtead of magnifying our God, and of worſhipping him as wee ought to doe, we cleane contrariwiſe fall to deuiſing of ſome errour and idolatrie in our heades. After which manner the Gentiles tooke occaſion to worſhip the Sunne and the Moone, bicauſe they ſawe the great benefites that were receiued by them. Yea, but therewithall they ſhoulde haue mounted vp higher, and haue conſidered ẏ God is the author of them, and that the Sunne and Moone and the Starres are but inſtrumentes of Gods fatherly loue towardes vs, and haue not any power which proceedeth not from him. Furthermore let vs marke that men ſinne not in this behalfe through ſimple ignorance, but through wilfulneſſe, bicauſe they can not finde in their heartes to yeeld themſelues to God with a ſingle minde. For if we intend to ſerue the liuing God, we muſt not goe to it by windlaſſes, but we muſt go right foreward. But when men ſee themſelues ſo pinched: they ſeeke ſtartingholes, and deuiſe new faſhions of ſeruing God on their own head, ſo as they neuer come neere him. And that is the cauſe why the worlde hath euer gone aſtray, and loued better to followe lawes of their owne inuenting, than to cleaue to Gods pure doctrine, and to reſt vpon the ſame, as wee ſee is done ſtill at this day in Poperie. What is ẏ cauſe that the ſuperſtitions which reigne there, doe ſeduce men ſo much, and make them to bee ſo farre ouerſeene? Euen for that it is eaſier for mẽ to ouerrunne a fewe gay Ceremonies, than to ſerue GOD rightly and with a ſingle meaning heart. Behold, God will not bee outfaced with a ſort of pelting trifles, but commaundeth vs to walke ſoundly before him, ſo as wee forſake our owne imaginations and deſires, and ſeeke to bee gouerned by him & to haue his holy ſpirit reigne in vs. Surely it is a verie hard thing to forſake our owne reaſon, ſo as we ſhould not bee wiſe in our owne conceites, to behaue our ſelues after our owne liking, but yeeld that there is nothing but vanitie and vntrueth in vs, and learne to humble our ſelues. That (ſay I) is a thing contrarie to our nature: for we haue a fond beliefe that we bee wiſe of our ſelues. But God on the contrarie part will haue vs to be bereft of our ſelfe-wit and ſelfreaſon, and to giue ouer our ſelues to be gouerned by his ſpirit. Alſo our affections do carrie vs away, in ſo much that mẽ would faine haue the bridle laid looſe in their necke to do all maner of euill, and that God ſhould giue them leaue to doe what they liſt. Nowe our affections are ſinnefull, and God will haue vs both to condemne them and to reſtraine them, ſo as wee may bee as priſoners in that behalfe, and with maine force withſtand whatſoeuer carieth vs away to euill. But ye ſee that men liſt not to ſerue God with that condition. Againe wee bee commaunded to loue our neighbour as our ſelfe. Whereas we bee giuen to ſeeke euerie man his owne profite: God pulleth vs from it, and contrariwiſe will haue vs to procure the welfare of our neighbours. And whereas wee bee giuen to ſuttletie, to ſhifting, and to all maner of naughtineſſe: he will haue vs to deale plainely, and to lay aſide all deſire of reuenge. If any man doe vs harme or wrong: the world ſees how hotte wee bee to acquite like for like. But Gods will is that in ſuch caſes we ſhould yeeld him ſuch ſeruice, as to forgiue the wrongs quietly that are done vnto vs. Againe whereas we bee deſirous to runne at rouers in taking our delightes and pleaſures: Gods will is that we ſhould but waifare through this world, ſtill hauing our eye vpon the euerlaſting life: that we ſhould mortifie whatſoeuer is earthly in vs: and that although he giue vs ſome commodities and eaſe, yet our vſing of them ſhoulde bee but as it were in running by them. Moreouer he will haue vs patient in all our aduerſities. If it pleaſe him to keepe vs occupied with neuer ſo many croſſes, he will haue vs to beare them meekely. Theſe thinges are good & holy: but mãs nature ſtriueth altogither againſt them. And what doe men in ſtead hereof? It is a much eaſier matter to haue a ſort of gawdies, & gewgawes. Churches are fraught full of idols, and they be worſhipped with great pompe, ſo as they bee throughly perfumed, beſenced, & painted, and a nomber of ceremonies are done vnto them: there is great ſolemnitie, with goodly chaunting on the one ſide, and with ringing of peale vpon peale vppon the belles on the other ſide: there is ſcudding frõ aultar to aultar: there is faſting on this day, and forbearing of fleſh on that day: there is trotting to ſhrift, and gadding on Pilgrimage: men found Yeeremindes, and cauſe Maſſes to be ſung by note. Thus ẏ world raunging away from GOD, will neuertheleſſe needes ſeeme to be duetiful towardes him. [And all is] bicauſe we be ſo froward, that we couet nothing but to mocke God with our hypocriſie, and that he ſhould hold himſelfe contented with our dooings, which are no better than rattlebagges to pleaſe babes withall. So then let vs mark, that in ſtead of worſhipping God, the world is giuen to fondneſſe and ſuperſtition, and yet notwithſtanding that it doeth it not ſo much of meere ignorance, as for that it cannot abide to be obedient as were requiſite, and therefore it goeth to worke by windlaſſes, and ſeeketh by all meanes to ſtray from the right way. To be ſhort, we ſhall finde that men are alwayes guiltie of wilfulneſſe in committing idolatrie, and that it is vaine for them to ſhrowd themſelues vnder pretence of ſimplicitie. For contrariwiſe they bring it with them of nature, and they will needs be deceiued, and ſo they be. And therefore doeth God blind them alſo. For (as ſaieth S. Paul) it is reaſon that ſuch as liſt not to ſerue their maker, ſhould bee vnderlinges to the creatures: and that ſuch as

cannot finde in their hearts to beare the yoke of God, ſhould indure the tyranny of the diuel, as is come to paſſe, and as we ſee accompliſhed ſtil at this day in the vnhappie Popedome. Now therfore let vs mark wel the thing ỹ I haue ſaid alredie: ỹ is to wit, that mẽ inſteed of being thankfull to God for the good ỹ he hath done thẽ, do turn his creatures to their own decay & condẽnation, & falſely abuſe them: for they peruert ỹ vſe of thẽ cleane contrarie to Gods meaning. And this is ſeene to be done, not only in the Sunne and the Starres according to that which Moſes ſaith here: but alſo in all other things whatſoeuer. So much the more therefore behoueth it vs to watch and to ſtand vppon our garde, as it is ſaide heere, to the end that in vſing of gods benefits, we may euer haue our eyes vpon him to doe him homage for them, and neuer be turned away from him.

Moreouer let vs marke the ſaying that Moſes ſetteth down here, namely, Leaſt thou fal, leaſt thou be prouoked. Hereby he ſheweth ỹ wee haue in vs the ſeede of falling: that is to ſay, ỹ we haue ſuch a crabbednes in vs, ỹ as ſoone as we haue neuer ſo ſmal an occaſion, by & by we be downe, yea & we do euen ſeeke occaſion when none is giuen, as I ſaid afore. Wheras god hath ordeyned his creatures to do vs his ſeruice, and the ſame ſhould be a help to guide vs vnto him, ſo as we ſhold be the more prouoked to loue him, becauſe he ſheweth himſelf ſo good & louing a father towards vs: we take occaſion therat to ſtumble. His dealing is as though he ſhould ſet vp a ladder for vs: or make a paire of ſtayers for vs to goe vp vpon: & we fal to iuſtling againſt it. Greeces & ſtayers are made to helpe vs: but if a man fal to ruſhing & daſhing againſt thẽ, he may hap to break his legs & to hurt himſelf, & he ſhal rather be hindered thã helped vp by them. Euen ſo deale we. For gods meaning is to draw vs to him by his creatures, and we fall to ruſhing againſt them wilfully and as it were in deſpite. Now then it ſtãdeth vs on hand to mark will this ſaying, ỹ we may looke the better about vs, to profite our ſelues by the thinges that God giueth vs for our helpe and furtherance to bring vs vnto him. Thus ye ſee what we haue to beare in mind. But now we ſee that Gods goodnes extendeth euen to the vnbeleeuers & infidels, according as it is written, that hee maketh his Sun to ſhine both vppon good and badde. Likewiſe in this place Moſes ſaieth, that God hath imparted the light of the Sunne and the Moone, together with their influences and properties, not onely to ſuch as vſe them well, but alſo to all folke vnder the cope of heauen. Nowe wee knowe that at that time all Nations were ydolaters, and there was no truth nor knowledge of God among them: and yet notwithſtanding God ceaſed not to do thẽ good for al that. And it is an excellẽt token of his goodnes aboue all ỹ he ſendeth them the light of the Sun, & maketh the ſtars to do them ſeruice. Thẽ let vs marke wel that although god was neither worſhiped nor knowen of the heathen: yet failed he not to do the office of a father towards them, and alwas to their condemnation. For inaſmuch as they abuſed his benefites in ſuch wiſe, & could not finde in their hearts to looke vp vnto him: it muſt needs be ỹ they were ỹ more vnexcuſable.

But yet herewithal let vs mark wel the condition ỹ Moſes ſetteth downe here, As for thee (ſaith he) thy God hath rid thee from the yron furnace of the thraldome of Egypt, to the intent that thou ſhouldeſt be vnto him a ſure people & an inheritance. Although ỹ Moſes haue declared that the vſe of the ſun & of the ſtars is common to al folks: yet doth he ſhew that they bee ſpecially appointed to the people whom God hath choſen. As if he ſhould ſay, that the order of nature is common to al ỹ world: we ſee that both great & ſmal are partakers of ỹ benefites that God beſtoweth: the earth bringeth forth corne wine and al other things, to ſuſteine both ỹ faithful & the vnfaithful: the wicked & the deſpiſers of God do eat & drink as wel as we: nay (which more is) we ſe they abuſe gods creatures with al exceſſe, & haue more abundance of them than ỹ faithful: for he that knoweth ỹ God ſuſteineth him, wil vſe his meat & drinke and al other things ſoberly & meaſurably, & he wil conſider ỹ he muſt not vnhallow the things which god hath ordeined to a good & moderate vſe. But what do the wicked? There is nothing with them but crãming, as if they were minded to ſpyte God of ſet purpoſe. But yet for al ỹ, it is Gods will that the propriety of his creatures ſhoulde belong to vs. And after what ſort? Euen to vſe thẽ as his true & lawfull heires, and to haue them ſo warranted as we may auow ỹ the things which he giueth vs are our own, & belong vnto vs of right, & that we poſſeſſe thẽ by iuſt title. And ſoothly there is not a more ſingular benefite than this. For although ỹ wicked do cram themſelues with gods benefits til they burſt, as I ſaid afore: yet haue they always a hartbyting within, ſo as they know not by what right they eat & drink, nor can ſkil to deſire God to ſuſtaine them. Nay verily, we ſee they coulde find in their harts, ỹ al remẽberance of god were aboliſhed. For when they make good cheere (as they terme it), they muſt minde nothing but to play the brute beaſts. But contrariwiſe when we cõſider in our eating & drinking, ỹ it is god which feedeth vs: it is a warrant vnto vs ỹ hee is our father, and that he taketh vs for his children. And ſurely (as I ſaid) there is not a treaſure that deſerueth greater eſtimation, thã ỹ growing of corne, and wine in the world, & the increaſe of cloth & other things ỹ ſerue for mans vſe, together with the fruition of al the other creatures wherof god hath giuen vs the ſight & hearing, to inioy them al in ſuch wiſe, as we may ſay, ỹ the world is created for vs, & that our God will not haue vs deſtitute of any thing at all, but hath prouided for all our neede, and ſheweth himſelfe ſo liberall to vs, as we haue indeede iuſt cauſe to magnifie him, & to be rauiſhed with wondermẽt at the ſight of ſo great goodnes. This thẽ is the cauſe why Moſes ſaith here namely, but as for thee. After he had generally declared ỹ god cauſeth his mercie to extende euen to the infidels & vnbeleeuers: nowe ſpeaking to the choſen people, O (ſaieth he) you haue a ſtate of preheminence, you haue a much more ſingular priuiledge then ỹ ignorant & blind wretches haue. For why? They wote not by what title they poſſeſſe the good thinges which they haue. But your God wil haue the world to belong by right vnto you: for as all the faithfull are his chil-

children, ſo bee they heires of his good thinges likewiſe. Therefore we muſt conclude, that if the vnbeleeuers be to be condemned for abuſing the benefits which God hath beſtowed vppon them: much leſſe excuſe is there for vs that are taught in his lawe and doctrine. Thus yee ſee what we haue to marke.

But withal let vs alſo beare in mind the leſſon ỹ is ſet downe here: that is to ſay, to know and feele this, that when we inioy Gods creatures, we poſſeſſe them as our heritage, & yet that this is not for any worthines of our owne: (for we muſt not here imagine any deſert of ours,) but becauſe our God hath choſen vs, as it is ſaide expreſly here. Moſes ſaith not, Thou thy ſelfe haſt gotten this priuiledge: but he ſaith, Thy god hath take thee. He referreth all to that free election of God, at what time that it pleaſeth him to chooſe vs to himſelfe: that he ſheweth himſelfe to be our father, ỹ he adopteth vs to be his children, and will haue vs to be of his houſhold and that we ſhould be as it were his flocke. Therefore let vs marke wel that we haue not any thing which we can ſay is our owne for any deſert of ours, but onely becauſe it hath pleaſed Gods goodneſſe to haue it ſo.

Moreouer Moſes ſetteth downe two thinges here: Thou waſt taken from the yron furnace, & now thou art become Gods people and his inheritance. Here he ſheweth what the ſtate of the people was before God choſe them to himſelfe: and alſo to what dignitie they were exalted afterward. Now although we haue not ben fetched out of Egypt: yet doth the thing that Moſes ſpeaketh here belong to vs. For in what caſe are wee, as long as
Rom. 5.12. God letteth vs alone? Are wee not accurſed, if we continue the children of Adam? And if God ſhake vs off, are wee not vnder the tyrannie of Satan? Doeth not ſinne reigne in vs? Doe wee not ſee here a furnace much worſe than the furnace of Egypt? And he vſeth here a ſimilitude in calling it an yron furnace, as a place that was ſo to conſume the people, as there was no remedie for them to get out of it. If a furnace be once inflamed, and that the ſame be made of yron, muſt not a man needs periſh out of hand if he be caſt into it? If a furnace be but of bricke: yet do we ſee howe ſore it burneth. But here is mention made of a furnace of yron. Therefore it is all one as if God ſhoulde ſay, Thou haddeſt no hope to get out of that thraldome, thou waſt as a people vterly forlorne: and yet haue I deliuered thee from it after a wonderfull manner. And now
Eph. 2.5. 1.Pet.1.18. Ro. 5.8.10. at this day, coulde wee ſcape out of that bondage vnto Sathan, vntill ſuch time as God deliuered vs out of the ſame? Muſt not that curſe haue altogether lien vppon vs ſtill, if we had not remedie from elſe where, that is to wit, from the mercie that God hath ſhewed vs in our Lord Ieſus Chriſt? So then let vs marke, that here we be warned to thinke vppon our beginning, that ſo we might alwayes know from whence God hath deliuered vs, and in what taking we were when it pleaſed him to chooſe vs. [Which thing if we do,] we ſhalbe aſhamed of our owne wretchednes, yea & we ſhalbe euen aſtoniſhed to ſee how we had bene vtterly damned, if our God had not pitied vs. And thus much for one point.

Secondly let vs conſider againe, that our God thought it not ynough to haue deliuered vs from ſuch a bottomleſſe pit, and from ſo horrible confuſion: but hee hath alſo made vs his heires, and 1.Pet.2.9. likewiſe vouchſafed to take vs for his heritage. What are wee, or what can God receiue at our hands? [Nothing:] and yet doth hee call vs his heritage, to ſhewe howe dearely hee loueth vs. Like as a man loueth a peece of grounde that findeth and maintaineth himſelfe and his houſholde, and ſetteth as it were his heart vpon the ſame: ſo doeth our Lorde ſhewe that he delighteth in vs, yea euen in vs that are but wormes and rottenneſſe, and which haue nothing but al manner of ſinne and corruption in vs. Wee ſee then hereby that Moſes ment to magnifie Gods grace, to ỹ end that being humbled in our ſelues by beholding the miſeries wherout of we be waded, we might againe and againe magnifie Gods goodneſſe, in that hee thought it not ynough to rid vs out of the bondage wherein we were, but alſo hath ſet vs in ſo high degree, as to chooſe vs to be his children. And beſides, by terming vs his owne heritage, he ſheweth that he will haue his hart as it were faſt tied vnto vs. Thus ye ſe what we haue to remember vpon this text or place.

Immediatly herevnto Moſes addeth, that the Lord was angrie with him, becauſe of the peoples words, and that he had ſworne to him that he ſhould not paſſe ouer Iordan to goe into the lande of promiſe. But as for you [ſaith he] you ſhall paſſe ouer, and inioy the poſſeſſion thereof. Moſes doth ſtil vpbraide the people with Gods bereauing of him of the inheritance that was promiſed to all their tribes, not ſo much for his own fault, as for the common fault of them all in murmuring againſt God: but yet hath Moſes a further meaning. He ſpeaketh this as it were by the way, yea as hauing reſpect to this, that he ſhould ſhortly die: and forasmuch as he himſelfe might no: inioy the lande, hee had a care to inſtruct the people, to the end that they might abide in Gods couenant, and continue ſtedfaſt in it, without ſwaruing aſide, or without any changing of religion to peruert the doctrine that had beene giuen them. The effect then is, that Moſes being at the point of death doth as it were make his laſt will, & hath ſo much the more care of the peoples welfare, for feare leaſt they ſhould ſtart away after his death, as he had ſeene them doe oftentimes in his life. And he interlaceth this particular matter that I ſpake of: namely that their words were the cauſe that he ſhould die before he paſſed ouer Iordan, and before he entered into the lande of promiſe. For as I haue touched heretofore, Moſes ment not to iuſtifie himſelfe: for indeede he was greatly blameworthy before God, & ſurely God neuer vſeth any crueltie towards ſuch as are his. Now, the caſe is ſo, that Moſes is ſhut out of the land with an oth: therfore muſt it needs bee that he had offended. But his doing of this, is to the intent that the people on their ſide ſhould think the better vpon the fault that they had committed. And in good ſooth, ſo ought all faithful teachers to do. that is, they ought to touch sinners to the quicke, that they may haue remorse of their sinnes, that they may crie to God for mercie & aske pardon therof, that they may be sorie for thē, that they may misslike of themselues for them, that they may hate them, and vtterly forsake them. For when men are flattered in their vices, first they bee hardened in them, and take alwayes greater libertie to do euill: secondly they thinke not that euer they shal come to account before God: and finally they neuer forsake the world that so they may glorifie God, & consider or feele how much they be bound & beholdē to him. By this means thē is Gods mercie defaced, & his grace slippeth away and is vtterly abolished. Besides this, there is yet a greater enormitie, namely that men goe on still from euil to worse, vntil they be falne into vtter confusion. Now then for this cause it is the dutie of such as haue the bearing abrode of Gods word, to exhort their hearers continually to consider their sins and to search thē throughly. And to what end? Not only to make them barely ashamed of them: but also to make them hūble themselues before God, & to goe forward continually in repentāce, ỳ so they may learne to misslike of their faults, & to glorifie God when they wholly repaire to him for refuge, by asking him forgiuenes of the offences that they haue committed. But what? There are very few that can a way with this order of teaching: for there is not so wicked a man, but he would be flattered. And the world seeth that as soone as a man speaketh, some gnash their teeth & seeke nothing else but to bite him: and othersome though a man do but by the way glaunce at their faults which are too too farre out of al square, feare not to check him, or to stand with him face to face in the maintenance therof. But yet for all that, the rule which God hath appointed vs, vs I say which haue the charge to beare abrode his word, is that we must dayly labor in warning our hearers, to cal themselues to account, and to examine well their owne faults, that they may be sorie for them.

When as he speaketh of hearers: we our selues are comprehended in ỳ number: for we must not condemne others, & exempt our selues: but he ỳ speaketh to others, must first stick & look to himself & cite himself before God. But yet neuertheless we must proceede in this order, ỳ we must al of vs be summoned before God, & haue our indirement redy framed & made, and not tarie til God pronounce the sentence of condemnation vppon vs, but euery of vs play the iudge against himself, & that, not by saying in a word or two, I haue done amisse: but by being throughly wounded within, so as we be ashamed of our misdeeds. After this fashion must wee deale. In the meane season if we perceiue ỳ the wicked cannot away with any correction, but conceiue rancor against Gods word, as we see these despisers of al religiō do, who cannot abide that any mā should rebuke them, let vs not maruell at it, for if they bee pinched, by & by they spit out their poison like toads as they be: But if we purpose to shewe our selues to be Gods children, let vs learne to suffer correction willingly, & to haue our sins laide afore vs, ỳ we may cōdemn them. For our acknowledging of thē, wilbe a mean to haue them buried before god. Thus ye se what we haue to note vpō ỳ text.

But now let vs come to Moseses chiefe intent which I haue touched afore. I shall not go into this good land, saith he, And therfore I warne ye continue stedfastly in the covenant of God, so ye yet neuer forget it, to worship idols in his stede, but serue him, seeing he hath once chosen you, & vouchsafed to shewe himself your god & father. Heere we see ỳ Moses was not cruel of hart, though God chastised him roughly. And here we see how the faithful ought to behaue thē selues. That is to say, if God punish them, yet must they not therefore cease to loue him, and to go forward in their course still, yea & to giue ouer themselues wholly vnto him. As soone as the wicked feele but one yrke of the rod with Gods hand, and by and by they kicke against him, and if they may scape from him, they play the horse that hauing shaken of the bridle casteth his rider downe, & afterwards becōming as if he were mad, he stormeth as though no mā were able to lay hold on him, or to restrain him: Euen so play the wicked, which can neuer abide ỳ God shold chastise thē and tame them, to hold thē in obedience to him. If he make thē to feele their sins, they burst out into impatiētie, & thervpon fal by and by to rebellion & furie. But contrariwise, when our Lord visiteth vs with afflictions: we know it is not for vs to stay far from him, nor to take occasion to scape his hands: but rather to submit our selues quietly to his seruice, & to keepe our selues from these tentations ỳ run ofttimes in our heads. If we fal to scanning, so as we say to our selues, how now? must I for seruing of god haue so hard & cumbersome a condition? It should seeme ỳ he is minded to discorage me: Let vs beware of such conceits, & rather follow ỳ example of Moses. He saw himself bereft of ỳ inheritance ỳ had bin promised to ỳ whole people, he saw he had as it were a marke of reproch for euer, as though God had withered him: for wher as God had chosen him to bee the leader of his people, & to supplie his roome in bringing to thē that welfare that they had loked for so long time: now towards his death he must bee disgraded at Gods hand, and be banished from the possession that was as a pledge of the kingdome of heauen. True it is that Moses continued and doth continue still an heire of Gods kingdome: but he had not that earthly pledge of it, that was set before the people. He saw, that of six hundred thousand persons, (for the whole multitude was so manie) there was not one among them al that was worthier to enter into the land than himselfe. Therfore he might haue stormed thus with himselfe: Howe nowe? I see I haue taken great payne in leading this people, God hath wrought so manie miracles by my hand, I haue yet stil such zeale to the honor of God and to ỳ welfare of his people as I neuer cease to procure the same, & therwall I may well say God hath granted me ỳ grace to walke more roundly than al ỳ rest: and yet notwstanding must I be barred out of ỳ land, & the residue enter into it, which haue not taken so much paine as I nothing neere? Moses might haue bin in a chafe & chawed vpon his bridle saying: wel, seeing seeing I haue taken so much paine, & God ment to serue his turne by me heretofore: it is ynough for me, I am contented with that which I haue done, but notwithstanding I will giue ouer my roome, and seeing that he will not set me aworke any longer, let him serue his turn by some other. Moses might wel haue entred into such fancies. But what? Notwithstãding ỳ God lifted to abace him so before men, by bereuing him of the benefite that he esteemed aboue al other, and to preferre the meanest and miserablest of the people before him who was so excellent a Prophet: yet ceased he not to discharge his duetie, and to goe through with it still. And we see with what carefulnes he goeth about it. My friends (saith he) although I must dye here, and God cutteth me off from you as touching the bodie: yet notwithstanding I will discharge my selfe both towards him and you, and seeing it hath pleased him to make me his minister to teach you his doctrine, I will neuer faile to doe my duetie. In deede he might haue twytted the people, as them that had caused God to lay such punishment vppon him: but yet for all that hee ceaseth not to serue God and to loue the people still, which (as I said) had caused him to be disinherited of the Land that was promised to Abraham.

Therfore hath Moses good right to say, Because of your words God sware that I should not go ouer Iorden to enter into this good Land. Neither murmuring nor blaspheming proceeded from Moses: Nay (which is more) we see he crucified himself whé he saw that god was not honored as he ought to haue beene: whereas on the contrarie part there was a froward & wilfull people, which could not be brought into order by any meanes. It seemeth then indeede ỳ Moses had iust cause to be angrie with the people, seeing that God had punished him so grieuously for their disobedience. But yet for all that, a man may see hee sheweth himselfe still a father towardes them, and taketh them as his children, for hee knewe to what state he was called. True it is that he vsed sharpnesse and rigour in due time and place, specially when it behooued him to shewe the people their offences. We see that Moses was [in that behalf] as a burning fire: we see howe vehemently he rebuketh the despysers of God and the Rebels. But when ỳ was once ouer, he shewed himselfe alwayes to beare an affection of loue, towards such as could abide it. As for example, God had now punished the people by the space of fortie yeres, insomuch that they which had brought punishments vpon the people, and had beene the authors of sedition, were alreadie dead and their carkesses were rotten in the wildernes: & yet now behold, Moses pitieth the children that were descended of them, and ceaseth not to loue them. So then let vs marke, that if God call vs to the preaching of his word, the vnthankfulnesse of such as ought to heare it, must not stay vs from procuring their saluation as much as in vs lyeth. Moreouer let vs not forbeare to pronounce Gods iustice against the wicked. And though there be some that are vtterly wilful & past hope of recouery, whose diseases are vncurable: wel, yet let vs do our duetie towardes them: let vs cite them to Gods iudgement, & let our doctrine serue for their condemnation to sende them to hell. And in the meane while, looke where we can reclaime them that haue done amisse: let vs giue good heede therto and bestow our labor thereon. Behold yet what we haue further to remember out of this place.

And herewithall wee see also, that when Gods seruants perceiue themselues to bee neere their ende, they must be the carefuller to stablish the doctrin which they taught in their life time. And why? For we see how men do easily slip away, & that euen such as haue shewed some good signe, will anon after start aside, if they be not helde in with a dubble reine as they say. And when a seruant of God seeth ỳ in his lifetime he was greatly hindered in the maintenance of Gods seruice, and had much adoe to represse euil: what should he thinke but that the diuell will take possession after his death, if God remedie not the matter? Therfore such as haue felt and found by experience in their lifetime, how painefull a thing it is to maintein the church, ought eué for this cause to take so much the more paine & trauell when they draw towards their death, to cause the syncere religion to be mainteined in his pureneſſe, that men being once set in a good course, may not swarue away from it. Beholde the example which Moses sheweth vs.

And besides this let vs mark also that he doth not only discharge himselfe here at his death, by vttering some sodaine speach, or by shewing some signe of zeale onely: but that he stood vpon this, and did most vrge it, to wit, all his life long that the people might bee edified in the feare of God. For yee shall see a number that are negligent all their lifetime: and yet they thinke that if they do but once exalt God and make a faire protestation at their liues end: it is ynough. But Moses delt not so. For hee neuer forgate the commission that was giuen him, but continued throughout in preaching to the people. Neuertheleſſe, whatsoeuer he did all his life long: yet when he sawe his death at hande, hee inforced himselfe the more, and burned the whotter in earnestnesse of zeale, because of the vrgent necessitie aforesaide. Wherefore let those whom God hath ordeined to preach his worde, looke well that they discharge their duetie al their life long. And that when they shall haue done their indeuer to stablish the true religion, and brought to passe that God is honoured, and that they haue builded Gods Church as much as they coulde, and taught those to walke in the feare of God which were committed to their charge: let them indeuer to seale vp al the same doctrine, & to cause it to continue after their decease. This thé is another thing which we haue to remẽber.

Also let vs marke further, that seeing Moses was so carefull for the people of Israel: wee also haue neede to bee vpon our watches. Do we see that God taketh away a man that hath serued faithfully in his time? Then let vs bee sure that anon after, the diuell will indeuour to marre al, and that he will soone make some breach to enter vpon vs, if we be not lustily vpholden & kept.

And

And there is not a more profitable leſſon than this ſame. For wee knowe not how great a good turne God doth vs, when he giueth vs ſuch men as ſeeke nothing elſe but to hold vs in aw of him, and to bring to paſſe that hee may reigne ouer vs, and we liue vnder his obeyſanee. On the contrarie part, when our Lord taketh ſuch out of the worlde as are able to builde his Church: wee bee careleſſe of it, and this careleſneſſe is the cauſe, that the diuell findeth a gappe open amongſt vs, that ſo hee may vtterly make hauocke of vs. So much the more therefore doth it ſtande vs in hand to be watchful in this caſe, & to know that wee bee well fenced when God giueth vs men to guide vs in his feare. Contrariwiſe if he leaue vs deſtitute of ſuch: it is as if a man were without munition in a towne, wheras were no power nor meane of defence. Ye ſee then how it ſtandeth vs in hande to bethinke our ſelues, and to pray god that when it pleaſeth him to take away thoſe that haue taught vs faithfully, that then the doctrine which wee ſhall haue receiued by them, may not die anon after them, but liue ſtil & continue alwayes faſt ſetled in our hearts, and that it may haue full force and ſtrength, and we be fenced by it againſt al Satans temptations, neuer to turne away from it, but euermore to remember what we haue learned & always to ſet our minds vpon it, that it may ſerue vs for a ſhield to warde all Satans blowes withal, and that wee may be ſo armed with it from top to toe (as they ſay) that Gods worde may bee a ſworde to vs, our hope a helmet, & our faith a buckler, ſo as the diuel may not bee able to foile vs in any wiſe whatſoeuer: that when the meanes ſhalbe taken away wherwith Gods will was to haue vs edified, yet neuertheleſſe he may ſtil continue with vs, and we likewiſe keepe on our way to him. 1. Pet. 5. 8. Eph. 6. 11. 16

Nowe let vs kneele downe in the preſence of our good God with acknowledgemẽt of our ſins, praying him to make vs perceiue them better than wee haue done heretofore, ſo as we may learne to miſlike more and more of our ſelues for them: And that in acknowledging the great benefits which hee beſtoweth vpon vs, wee may call vpon him as our father, ſeeking nothing elſe but to giue our ſelues wholly vnto him, to be gouerned by his holy ſpirite as his teachable and meeke children: & ſeing that he doth vs this honor to take vs for his heritage, & to giue himſelfe to vs, that we may alſo remember, ſith he taketh delight in vs: to be vnto him ſuch a poſſeſſion, as may ſerue to his glorie, & that hee would neuer cut vs of although we wel deſerue it. That it may pleaſe him to grant this grace, not only to vs but alſo to al people and nations of the earth, &c.

On Wedneſday the xxix. of May. 1555.

23 24 Beware that ye &c.

25 When thou ſhalt haue begotten children, and childrens children, and ſhalt haue dwelt long in ỹ land: if then ye ſhal corrupt your ſelues, & make carued Images after the likeneſſe of any thing, and worke wickedneſſe in the ſight of the Lord thy God, to prouoke him to wrath:

26 I call heauen and earth to record againſt you this day, that out of al doubt ye ſhall ſoone periſh out of the land whither ye go ouer Iordan to poſſeſſe it: and yee ſhall not prolong your dayes therein, for ye ſhalbe vtterly deſtroyed.

WE haue ſeene heretofore the exhortation that Moſes made, to the intẽt that Gods ſeruice might not bee corrupted. Hee ſhewed that to worſhip GOD purely, there muſt no image at all be made, becauſe it is not in any wiſe agreeable to his nature: but men muſt worſhip him after another faſhion. His ſeruice (ſay I) is ſpiritual: and therefore wee muſt reſt wholly therevppon. For as ſoone as we ſwarue one way or other: it is but preſumption, which God condemneth. That is the thing which Moſes hath treated of hitherto. Now to confirme this doctrine the better: he ſetteth before the peoples eyes, the couenant that God had made with them: for when God manifeſteth himſelfe vnto vs, it is the principall meane whereby to hold vs in the pure religion. Naturally we be blind wretches, and therefore it is verie eaſie for Satan to beguile vs. And although there were none to deceiue vs: yet doth euery one of vs wander away in our owne conceites and imaginations. Therefore there is nothing in vs but darknes: and Gods maieſtie is ſo high and incomprehenſible a thing, as it is no maruell though we be at our wits end, before we can come nigh vnto it. Then if we were not duly taught, ne had a grounded doctrine to ſhew vs ỹ right path: what could we do but go aſtray? But now ſeing ỹ God hath ſhewed himſelf vnto vs, & that ſo familiarly as we may diſcern him from al the ydols that haue bin forged in ỹ worlde, & we are able to ſay ỹ it is he whom we ought to worſhip: there is no more excuſe for vs if we be caried to and fro. And our vnthankfulneſſe is the more ſhamefull, if wee ſhut our eyes againſt the doctrine of ſaluation, and turne our backs vpon God when he hath ſhewed himſelfe to our face, and vouchſafed to bee knowen of vs familiarlie. Now we ſee what Moſes ment. For his meaning is to set forth the greeuousnesse of the peoples sin, if it should so fall out that they shoulde turne away from the purenes which they had learned in the lawe. As if he should say, True it is that euen from the creation of the worlde most men haue not ceased to ouershoote themselues into a number of errors and follies: but that came to passe because they had not so special a teaching, as you haue, whereby they might haue had certeinetie of faith to rest themselues vpon. Therefore the wretched infidels went astray: but yet was not their sin so greeuous and outragious. For although they were vnexcusable: yet had they not any such teaching as you. But as for you, yee haue had Gods couenãt, wherby ye were brought into his house: hee hath shewed himselfe as a father towards you, & taught you as his childrẽ: this is that holy band wherby god hath tyed him selfe to you: now then if you should turne backe againe, and become like those wretched beastes which neuer knew nor tasted of gods truth, what a thing were it? Might you pretende them for a shrowding sheete and say, other men do so as wel as we? Yea, but yet had not those othermen such teaching as you haue had. Nowe therefore acknowledge the grace that God hath bestowed vppon you, in shouling you out from all nations of the earth, & in cõming so nigh vnto you. And in deed ỹ same is the very cause why ỹ when the heathen are condẽned in their superstitions: it is said on the contrarie part, that ỹ Lord dwelleth in Sion, & his maiesty is knowen there. After Abac. 2. 20. that manner doth the Prophet Abacucke speake in his second chapter: and it is a doctrine that is rife ynough euery where. As if it were saide, The world runnes at randon, and euery man forgeth and setteth vp some God priuately to himselfe: but as for the God which hath shewed himself to bee the true liuing God: his voyce soundeth in mount Sion where the temple was builded. Thẽ sith it is so: although the whole world bee caried away & go wandering in the darke: yet must not we be remoued, forasmuch as he hath set vp his seat among vs, and we know him by his voyce & by his word. And here we see why it is said in the Psal. 97. 1. 3 & 115. 3. 4. Psalmes where Gods kingdome is spoken of in such wise as it was to bee stablished in the person of our Lord Iesus Christ, as wel in the fourescore and sixteenth psalme as in other psalmes: The Lord reigneth, Let ỹ far countries reioyce therat, let all ydols be confounded, and let all that is set vp by men be throwen downe. For when wee haue the truth, which driueth away al darknes & ignorance, then haue we the verie meane to destroy al superstition. And to the same purpose also is there this like saying in Esay: when the Lord

Esa. 19. 1. reigneth, then shal al the ydols of Egypt fal. And why? For the wretched Infidels weene they doe well, and thinke they do God good seruice in following their fond superstitions. But when God is once set afore them: then his maiestie bereaueth them of all excuse, and he must needs as then be
Esa. 25. 9. magnified. And that is ỹ cause why it is said in another place, This is the Lord, this is the Lord. The prophet in the person of all the faithful, defieth the ydols with their abuses, because GOD should be knowen, accordingly as al things were accomplished at the comming of our Lord Iesus Christ. Now then the thing ỹ we haue to gather vpon this text, is that when we once knowe God by his word, wee must be so fully resolued and assured thereof, that although the whole wretched world run rouing after their owne abuses and superstitions, yet we must keepe on our way still: & that seing we haue a sure foundation which cannot be shaken, that is to wit gods infallible truth: wee must let those blinde wretches breake their necks, sith we cannot remedie it, and in ỹ meane while we must go forward still as the Lord commaundeth vs, seing he hath reached vs his hand to draw vs to him. And although this was spoken to the Iewes by Moses: yet it pertaineth eué now vnto vs. For wee see what fauor God hath shewed vs aboue others. All the worlde is full of error and diuelish imaginations, & wretched men are become brutish in their ignorance. But what? Neither hath the doctrine of life bene preached vnto them: neither haue they euer in good earnest vnderstood what God is. Indeede they can speake of him, but that is but at randon & without order. But wee haue the scripture declared vnto vs, and by that mean God communicateth himself to vs, and allureth vs so sweetly vnto him, as he could not doe any more for vs, except hee should take vs into his lap, and yet we see he applieth himselfe to our infirmitie, he chaweth our morsels to vs, he feedeth vs with pappe, & speaketh to vs like a nurse. Now when we see that our God manifesteth himselfe so familiarly vnto vs, there is no more excuse for vs, wee may no more mingle our selues in the order or rancke of vnbeleeuers. For our state is cleane contrarie. God is
Rom. 2. 12. hidden from them: and yet shall they not faile to perish in their ignorance as they be worthie. But as for vs, if we be so stubborne against God, that euen of a spitefull malice wee will not obey the things that he sheweth vs, but wil play the wilde beastes with him, so as hee cannot reclaime vs to himselfe: and that euen when we knowe him and do vnderstand that it is hee which ought to be honored, yet wee be so vnconstant and waueringstill, as to turne away after our owne dotages: shall we not bee doublie condemned? Shall not horrible vengeance hang ouer our heades? Then let vs beare in mind, that in asmuch as our Lorde hath made a couenant with vs, that is to say, hath called vs into his Church to be taught by his worde: that this is the onely meane, wherewith wee may bee armed and fortified against all superstitions. This is one point. And let vs also marke therewithall, that horrible condemnation hangeth ouer our heades, if we wander away, and hold not our selues to the simplicitie of Gods doctrine, but bee carried away hither and thither by our owne lusts. These are the two pointes which we haue to marke vpon this text. Wherefore let vs learne to make our profite and commoditie of the worde that is preached vnto vs for the same purpose. That is to wit, albeit that all bee full of corruption and errour, yet let not vs bee shaken downe, nor bee wauering as manie men are, to saye, yeamarie, but there is ſo much diſagreement [that I wote not what to doe]. Let vs not alleage

Eſa.25.9. this: but let vs ſay with the prophet Eſay, Behold, this is our God: behold, this is our God. And by that means let vs defie all that the diuell can ſet before vs to turne vs aſide. Yea let vs not make any reckoning at all of it. And why? Becauſe the light that God giueth vs, is ſtrong ynough to driue away all darkneſſe, and the truth is ſtrong ynough to beate backe all lies. Thus ſee yee I ſay what the power of faith ought to be: When wee haue well printed in rememberance the doctrine that is preached vnto vs, and yet notwithſtanding continue ſtill for all that in blindneſſe, and bee ſtill as reedes ſhaken with euerie winde: Let vs vnderſtande this that we knowe not God, nor yet euer vnderſtood of what great value his couenaunt towardes vs was, nor euer were knitte to him as we ſhoulde be: but that there was hypocriſie inſteede of that proteſtation that we made to followe his worde. But let vs marke herewithall, that our condemnation ſhalbe doubled, if wee runne aſtray after wee haue knowen the truth. For if Gods couenant cannot hold vs in obedience: muſt it not needs bee that wee bee as cloudes? And what an vnthankefulneſſe is that? Indeede many will ſay, I haue not beene ſufficiently confirmed, I vnderſtande it not: but thoſe are fonde ſhiftes. We neede but to open our eyes and our eares ſeing wee haue Gods worde preached, and our Lorde will certeinely make it of power and force, ſo as we ſhal haue ſufficient inſtruction by it, ſeeing he regardeth vs eſpecially, and therefore wee muſt needes be founde blameworthy if we ſwarue one way or other, after that God hath ſhewed vs his truth. And this much then concerning the couenant that Moſes ſpeaketh of here.

Howbeit, to ſet forth the heynouſnes of their crime the more, he addeth that hee taketh heauen and earth to witneſſe, that if the people turne away from the lawe, and inuent or ſet vp any newe Religion, they ſhall periſh out of hande, and not poſſeſſe the lande any long time, which ſhould be giuen vnto them. Now this ſerueth to waken ſuch as are puffed vp with vaine preſumption, vnder colour that God is gratious vnto them, and hath giuen them ſome priuiledge aboue others. And it is well worthie to be noted. For although we cannot exceede meaſure in truſting in God: yet doe wee ſee that a greate number doe falſely abuſe Gods name. If they bee once baptiſed and taken into the companie of the faithfull: it ſeemeth to them that God is greatly bounde vnto them. Whereas they ſhoulde conſider that they bee called of his free goodneſſe, and ought to giue ouer themſelues to walke in feare and wareneſſe: beholde, they be puffed vp with pride and vaine ouerweening, and beare themſelues in hande through fond hypocriſie, that they bee ſcaped out of Gods hande, and in the meane while they doe but dalie with him. Ye ſee then what the pride of men is, howe that when God ſheweth himſelfe bountifull towardes vs, and vttereth the great and infinite treaſures of his mercie: they thinke ſtill that hee is greatly beholden to them, and therevppon doe otterſhoote themſelues, and take leaue to doe amiſſe. According as wee ſee that the greateſt ſtrife which the Prophetes had againſt the Iewes, was for that they bragged of their hauing of Gods Temple, and of his ſacrifices, and of ſuch other thinges. Nowe according hereunto Moſes ſaith in this place, It is true ỳ ye doe now enter into poſſeſſion of the heritage which God promiſed to your fathers: it is true that therein you haue an excellent warrant of his preferring of you before al other nations: Surely it is a great and ineſtimable dignitie, that your God ſhould purchaſe you with his owne hande, and driue out the inhabiters of a countrie to ſet you in their place, yea and that when you bee in that lande, you ſhalbe ſure to be of his houſholde, and that he dwelleth among you, and that his ſo doing is to take you vp into his euerlaſting kingdome: Surely it is a ſingular benefite which your God hath vouchſafed vppon you: but yet for all that, deceiue not your ſelues to deſpiſe and reiect his worde, or to ſhrinke away from him, & to corrupt his ſeruice. For like as now he performeth the promiſe that he made to your fathers: ſo can he alſo driue you out againe, when he hath ſetled you there: and he can well ynough weede you againe out of his heritage, & ſo ſcatter you abrode that you ſhalbe diſperſed euery where. Now then, the more that your God doth preſently increaſe his goodnes towards you: the more diligẽt be you in ſeruing and louing of him, and hold your ſelues vnder his ſhadow, and beware that ye alter not any thing in the religion that hee hath ordeined for you. Marke that for one point.

Ierem.7.4.

And now furthermore, whereas Moſes calleth heauen and earth to witnes: it importeth yet a greater vehemencie. True it is, that ſome take this for Angels and men. But ỳ is not the meaning of Moſes, as we ſhal ſee by the like maner of ſpeach hereafter in the 32. Chapter, where he will ſay, Hearken O yee heauens what I ſay, and let the earth here the words of my mouth. And ſo ſaith the Prophet Eſay, Hearken ye heauens, and let the earth giue audience vnto mee, for the Lorde hath ſpoken. Beholde I haue nouriſhed children & brought them vp, and they haue deſpiſed me. When God calleth heauen and earth to witnes after that maner, it is to rebuke mens brutiſhnes ſo much the more. For we be created after Gods image, to haue reaſon & vnderſtanding: & where to ſhoulde wee applie ſuch giftes, but to knowe God and to giue our ſelues wholly vnto him? Shall men haue wit ynough to comprehend the whole order of nature, and ſhall they in ỳ meane ſeaſon deſpiſe the Lorde? It is all one as if a man ſhoulde thinke himſelfe well forwarde, when hee hath toyled in traueiling and running all day long: and hath wandered all the while without keeping any path. And is not the knowledge of our God the ſinall ende of all our perfection? Yes, and therefore when God intẽdeth to ſhew men that they bee more than blockiſh, and that they bee ſo marred as they bee not worthy to be taken any more for reaſonable creatures: then doth hee direct his ſpeech to heauen and earth.

As if hee ſhoulde ſay, I haue not nowe any more witnes in ỹ world: for I choſe theſe to be knowen of them: but herken you to me yee heauen and earth, hearken yee to me I ſay nowe yee that are vnreaſonable creatures: for I ſhal finde more reaſon in you, than in thoſe to whom I haue giuen witte and knowledge to diſcerne betweene good and euil, and to haue skil not only of this preſent life, but alſo of the immortalitie of heauen. So then, Moſes calleth heauen and earth to witnes here, to doe vs the better to vnderſtand, that if men flatter themſelues and play the brute beaſts when they haue offended God, and think by that meanes to go quitte: they beguile themſelues: for when men ſhall haue conſpired together in naughtines, and that euery man may ſay, I haue done as all others haue done: ſo as there remaineth no more but heauen and earth, although they haue no vnderſtanding in them, yet ſhall they be ſufficient witneſſes. Why ſo? For ſhall they not bee able ynough to bewray our naughtines without ſpeaking, ſeeing they were ordeined for our ſeruice? We haue ſeene alreadie what Moſes ſaide heretofore of the Sunne, Moone and Starres. What is the Sunne? A right noble creature. And yet notwithſtanding, what is he in effect, but our ſeruant? And the Moone that mounteth ſo high, is our handmaid, & God hath appointed al theſe things to our vſe & commoditie. Seeing then that theſe creatures being without vnderſtanding, doe knowe that the end whereto God hath applyed them, is to do vs ſeruice: what a dealing is it, ỹ when we ſhal haue inioyed ſo many benefites, as namely that we ſhal haue receiued the light of the Sunne and the Moone, that the earth ſhal haue fed vs with her owne bowels, and that we ſhall haue bin fraught full of a number of other good thinges: yet notwithſtanding we fal to defiling of the world with our filthineſſe and infection, ſo as Gods glorie is darkened by vs, and wee ouerthrowe his ſeruice, and ſet vp ydols againſt him to deface and diſcredite his maieſtie? Whither go we in ſo doing? Shall not the creatures aske vengeance againſt vs, when wee ſhall haue ſo abuſed them, and defiled and berayed thẽ with our filthines as much as we could? Yes: and ſo we ſee nowe what the meaning of Moſes was.

Nowe remaineth that we applie it further to our ſelues: And firſt and formoſt let vs marke well, that if wee haue beene receiued into the Church, and God for a time haue admitted vs to bee of his people and flocke, and haue beſtowed many benefites vppon vs, ſpecially if we haue had any excellencie or preheminence aboue others: we muſt not be proude of it. For if we abuſe Gods grace, hee can well ynough roote vs out: and if we follow not his calling, hee can as well cut vs off, as hee coulde adopt vs. And in good ſooth, if this befell to the Iewes which were the naturall branches (as Saint Paul termeth them) and which came out of this ſtocke of Abraham: if that holy and high exalted linage was neuertheleſſe ſo cut off vppon the ſudden, and diſinherited of the poſſeſſion that God had giuen them: what ſhall become of vs which are graffed in as it were againſt nature? For wee were wilde impes: wee came of the Gentiles, which were enemies to God, & ſeparated from his Church, & had not any acquaintance with him. Eph. 2. 12. Seeing then that our Lorde gathereth vs to him, not onely by Baptiſme but alſo by the holy ſupper, and wee haue his worde daily, wherein hee aſſureth vs that hee is our father, that he will bee the keeper of our ſoules, and that he will take vs for his people: let vs learne to looke diligently about vs, that we abuſe not ſo great a benefite. But if wee minde to inioy it for euer: let vs feare our God and walke in his obedience: and that (I tell you) is a thing which wee ought to beare in minde. For if wee thinke to holde God in our ſleeue, and imagine him to bee bounde vnto vs becauſe he hath once choſen vs: hee will eaſilie ſhewe vs that as hee came to vs, ſo will he goe againe from vs, if we will needs be ouerluſtie. Wil wee then haue our Lorde to continue our ſhepherd ſtill? Let vs be pliable to him, ſo as wee liue quietly vnder his ſubiection. To bee ſhort, let vs alwayes beare in minde the threat which our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt vttered: That is to wit, that the kingdom of God ſhalbe remooued far from vs, when wee cannot profite thereby, and that it ſhalbe taken away from vs, and giuen to a people that ſhall glorifie their God, when they haue bin taught by his word. Thus ye ſee what we haue to remember vpon this point. Matt. 21. 43.

Furthermore let vs marke well, that whereas it is ſaide here, that heauen and earth ſhall beare witneſſe againſt vs: it is to put vs to the greater ſhame, in that the Angels neede not to come downe from Paradiſe, nor the Prophets and Apoſtles to riſe from the deade, to giue euidence againſt vs before God: but only the liueles creatures are ſufficient witneſſe for God to vſe to condemne vs with all. It is true that GOD coulde bring other witneſſes alſo, as we ſee, that ſometimes hee calleth foorth the heathen and infidels to make vs the more aſhamed. For (as ſaieth the Prophet Ieremie) goe euerie where, and yet yee ſhall not ſee that the ydolaters bee ſo fickle, as thoſe that haue beene duely inſtructed in the pure worde of God. Looke me vppon the wretched infidels, which bee headſtrong in their follies. Although they haue no certaintie to leane vnto (as alſo they cannot indeede haue any) & (which more is) their minds be ſo intangled in their owne dotages as they cannot winde themſelues out: yet notwithſtanding, ſay what a man can, they ſticke ſtill to the things that they haue learned. And although they keepe one courſe ſtil: yet doe they nothing but goe aſtray, without keeping either right way or path: & yet notwithſtanding they be held ſtil to it wt this perſwaſion, ỹ they muſt not chaunge their God. But yet they neuer knew him for al that. And ſhal we thẽ be caried away at the firſt daſh, which know the liuing God and haue bene taught his truth, and haue had ſo good warrant therof, as it is not for vs to wauer any more? Shall we ſtart away after wee haue beene trained vp in the pure doctrine of the Goſpell? O what meaneth this? Looke mee vppon the Turkes, Paynims, Papiſtes, and Iewes. Notwithſtanding that al theſe Ieremi. 2. 11.

be bewitched at this day in their errours: yet shal they rise vp and bee found sufficient witnesses to make vs ashamed before God, and to disappoint vs of all startingholes. And why? For they go on still in their superstitions, whereas wee for our partes fall to reeling at euerie blast of winde, and the diuell plucketh vs out of the place wherein wee were planted. Thus ye see what we haue to remember vpon this place.

But aboue all thinges let vs marke, that in as much as God hath bestowed infinite benefites vpon vs, and displaied his liberalitie towardes vs after so many fashions: all that he shall haue bestowed vppon vs shall serue to our condemnation, if wee doe him not homage for the same. To bee short, both heauen and earth shall be armed against vs, and aske vengeaunce vppon vs. And how shall we bee able to finde any excuse, when our Lorde shall raise such a crie to confounde vs and put vs to shame? Therefore let vs nowe looke well to our selues, and let vs walke in the way that he hath shewed vs.

Now here is expresse mention made of Images and other likenesses: but vnder one kinde, Moses comprehendeth all. For it is a maner of speache rife ynough in the holy scripture, to marke out some one kinde of superstition, thereby to warne vs that wee must keepe our selues from all superstitions in generall. And Moses himself doeth cuer obserue the same maner of speaking, as wee Deut. 5. 18. shal see in the next Chapter, where he vseth to speake of the heinousest things, to the intent we shoulde the more abhorre them and mislike of them, to keepe our selues from them. And yet for all that the holy Ghost meant in this place by the mouth of Moses shortly to shew that whē God hath once made his couenant with vs, wee must hold vs in the simplicitie of his word, without mingling any superstition with it. Now that wee vnderstand the naturall sense of this text let vs looke that we make our commoditie thereof. For although we haue no images either carued or molten: although wee haue no puppets either ingrauen or painted: yet faile wee not to be idolaters, if we sticke not to our God to keepe his worde throughout. For the matter that the Couenant it self importeth is not that we should confesse in wordes, that the God which gaue his Lawe by Moses is alonely to bee worshipped: but that wee should vnderstand his will, after what manner he will bee serued, that wee should haue his promises printed in our heartes, that wee should knowe howe and by what meanes wee ought to worship him, and that we should keepe on our way to the inheritaunce whereunto hee calleth vs. That is the thing that Gods couenāt importeth. And without that, in what case were wee? If wee should say, verie well, there is but one God which hath created heauen and earth, he hath reuealed himselfe vnto vs, and he hath giuen vs his Lawe: and yet notwithstanding we knewe not his will, but euerie of vs shoulde behaue himselfe as he listed: to what purpose were this? It were better for vs neuer to haue knowen Gods word, than after the knowing of it to dispise it, and to take leaue to doe what wee list. Therefore let vs beare well in minde, that Moses meant here to shewe the people generally, that seeing they had bene taught in the trueth, it behoued them to keepe themselues from all errours and leasings. And this is that which I haue said alreadie, that Gods word ought to suffice to gard vs in such sort, as the diuell may not seduce vs, doe the worst he can. Nowe then will wee be exempted from the threate and condemnation that is contained here? Let vs giue ouer our selues wholly in all respectes to our God, let vs hearken to his worde, and let vs obey his voyce without any exception or gainesaying, so as his seruice remaine in such sort among vs, as hee hath commaunded by his word. But let vs compare the crime that Moses reproueth here, with other crimes that are lesse to bee excused. For although there was vnthankfulnesse and rebellion at ỹ time in all such as suffered themselues to be misled, after they had bene taught by Gods word: yet cōmitted they not so cursed sacriledge against God, as ỹ caitifs do in these dayes, which to the vttermost of their power do blot out al religion, and are so full of wickednesse, that they could finde in their hearts to confound heauen and earth togither, in working spite to the whole Maiestie of God. Take mee a man that hath bin taught in the Gospell, and afterwarde through lightnesse ouershooteth himselfe and turneth away from well dooing, howbeit with a minde to doe well againe: truely such as one is not to bee held guiltlesse, as I haue saide alreadie: but yet is he not worthie of so much blame, neither is his fault so heinous before GOD, as another that outrageth so farre as to scoffe and scorne at God and all his doctrine, and to play the mad bedlem, of purpose to thrust all Religion vnder foot, so as he could finde in his heart that men should liue like beastes: and for the bringing thereof to passe, speweth out blasphemies not onely against the maner of the superstitions in Poperie, but also euen against the word of God. For is not such a one farre more horrible, than the ignoraunt wretch that is still snarled in some imagination, and thinkes he serueth God, though the same be but vanitie, as I said afore? But nowe let vs looke to our owne time. God telleth the Iewes here, that he would not beare with them, if they happened to ouershoote themselues in any superstitions, but would bereaue them of the inheritance that he had promised them. Wee at this day haue a more excellent benefite than that people had, and therefore shall wee be the more to blame, if wee yeeld not homage to our God, which hath esteemed and honored vs so much, as to call vs into his Church. But nowe how doe most men behaue themselues, after they haue bene taught by the Gospell? In deede wee meddle not with the superstitions of Papistrie, wee passe not for shrifte, not for Masses, nor for such other like trashe: but what for that? Wee could finde in our hearts plainely and shortly to defie God, and that he shoulde haue no further audience among vs than we list our selues. After this maner doe a great sort deale euen to this day, who neuertheles will not deale openly, not to be of the common ſort of the faithfull, but as the pillars and vpholders of the Church. And yet haue they gone about to ſtoppe Gods mouth when any thing hath miſliked them, or fallen out otherwiſe than they woulde haue it. O this muſt bee taken away. And wy? Beholde, GOD not onely ſpeaketh here of the things that haue beene inuented by men: but alſo holdeth vs in awe, ſo as it is not lawfull for vs to incounter him. He paſſeth not for them. And againe, let vs ſee what their life is. We ſee that they mocke GOD to the ful, and that their deſire is to haue their owne ſwindge in all thinges. And yet notwithſtanding when the diuell raiſeth vp ſuch plagie folke to infect the whole flocke with their poiſon: wee ſee a great nomber, whoſe whole deſire is to mingle themſelues with them. For as ſoone as ſome leawd fellowe, or two or three maintainers of wickednesſe, (which ſhewe themſelues to bee readie to vpholde all diſorder and offences) doe but ſteppe vp: it is as good as the diſplaying of a banner, and by & by al vnthriftes runne after it. And would God that the experience of it were not ſo great as it is ſeene to bee. But what? When wee bee tolde of it, we muſt repent yea and we muſt mourne before God, praying him to keepe vs from ſuch deadly plagues as are ſeene intermingled among vs. And ſo let vs marke well howe it is ſaid here, that it can not bee that ſuch as doe ſo peruert themſelues, did euer know what Gods couenant is, or of how excellent value. For if his trueth ought ſo to reſtraine vs that we be not led away by any of the wyles and ſlightes of Satan: how were it poſſible that men ſhould ſo caſt themſelues into deſtruction, if they had knowen God in good earneſt, & bene ſtrengthened in his word? Although then that ſuch folke profeſſe the Goſpel, yea and haue taken ſome ſmack of it, as ſaieth the Apoſtle: yet may we perceiue that it neuer entered into their hearts in good earneſt. They be but hypocrites, which make countenance to ſerue GOD for a time, and afterward doe fleete away, as wee ſee theſe roiſters doe which band themſelues togither. As ſoone as they ſee any aide or ſupport to vphold their wickednesſe, they fall to practiſing and confederating, and they contriue all the drifts that they can poſſibly, to ouerthrow Gods Church. Therefore let vs vnderſtand, that although the Goſpell be preached among vs: yet are there many deafe folk which heare not what God ſaith to them: not that that ſhall ſeeme to leſſen their fault, for they ſhall not faile to be taken for guiltie as wel as others.

Deut. 31.

Now here a man might demaund a queſtion, wherfore Moſes ſaith that they ſhal not liue in ỹ land that is giuen them, but ſhall be ſhortly rooted out of it: for wee ſee that God is patient: and in deede it appeareth ſufficiently. And therfore it ſeemeth at the firſt ſight that the thing which Moſes ſaieth here, ſhoulde not come to paſſe. God ſpared his people a long time. Although they gaue themſelues to idolatrie and ſuperſtition: yet did God vſe long patience towards thē, inſomuch that the Prophets laboured to bring them backe againe whē they were reuolted. Although they were wilfull and hard hearted, yet did God aſſay to win them to him. Notwithſtanding all this, it is ſaid here that they ſhall ſoone be rooted out. Yea, but this ſoone or ſhortly muſt agree with that which is written in many other places: that is to wit, that although Gods wrath light ſuddainly vpon offenders, & ouerwhelme them as a ſtorme that commeth vnlooked for: yet doth he not faile to be patient, and to delay his vengance till mens wickednes bee growen ripe, yea and euen till it be ſtarke rotten. Therfore it is to be vnderſtoode that God puniſheth not offenders out of hand, for he ſaieth that he is ſlowe to wrath, and he muſt needs keepe his owne nature. Neuertheleſſe in vſing patience, and in bearing with them that haue doone amiſſe: he ouerthroweth them ſooner then they would. Ye ſee then that this ſoone, ſhortly, by and by, or out of hand, muſt be referred to mens careleſneſſe, who make their account that all ſhall go well with them, and beare themſelues in hande that they haue made a couenant with death (as ſaith the Prophet Eſay,) and they be as drunken folkes in that behalfe, ſo as if God winke at them for a time, they thinke they bee ſcaped from his hand. See how the hypocrites abuſe Gods goodneſſe, bearing themſelues in hand ỹ they ſhall neuer come to account for it. For this cauſe doth Moſes ſay here ſoone or ſhortly. Not ỹ God forgetteth his owne nature (as I ſaid,) or tarieth not a long time for the amendment of offenders: but that when all is done, his vengeaunce is alwaies in a readineſſe, & there needeth no more but to kindle it, and by and by without any further tariance, yea before one finger cā be ſtirred, there needeth no more but to ſhewe forth his wrath, and we ſhall bee euerie one of vs ouerwhelmed as it is ſaide in another ſong of Moſes, or in the XC. Pſalme. Sith it is ſo, let vs not thinke it ſtraūge that Moſes threateneth the people here, that they ſhall ſoone be rooted out.

Pſal. 90. 3.

And to the ſame purpoſe, (that is to ſay, for a further declaration thereof) ſeemeth this alſo which he addeth: namely, When ye ſhall haue begotten children, yea euen a two or three deſcentes: if ſuperſtition doe then raigne among you, thy God can roote thee out. Hereby Moſes ſheweth, that long poſſeſſion will ſtand vs in no ſtead. For though we beare our ſelues on hand, that it is betweene God and vs, as it is betweene man and man, yet it wil not preuaile. If a man haue bin a long time in authoritie & eſtimation, ſo as he be wel friended or of great kinred and aliance: he beares himſelfe on hand that hee ſhall neuer bee put from it. But we ſee how the world paſſeth away, and ſmall occaſions will ſerue to ouerthrow euen them that are mounted higheſt. And therefore the Prophetes vpbraide them with their pride, which glorie in their owne credit and authoritie, ſaying vnto them: ye beare your ſelues in hand that ye bee ſo faſt ſetled, as ye can neuer be ſhaken downe: and yet if God doe but blowe vppon you, by and by you bee gone in the turning of a hand. Now according hereunto it is ſaide here, that if we thinke to claime any title againſt God by preſcription (as they terme it,) that is to wit, bicause wee haue possessed his benefites a long time, imagining that we can neuer bee dissesed or dispossessed of them, but that they must continue still in the same state, not onely to vs, but also to our children, euen to the third & fourth generation: both they and wee shall for all that bee bereft of them, and God will withdrawe his hand which he had erst stretched out to doe vs good. So then let vs mark, that whensoeuer God shall haue bin patient towardes vs, it is not to be saide that he hath forgotten our transgressions: but his bearing with them, is for that it is not yet conuenient time to punish them. Therefore let vs not trust to that: but let vs alwayes beare in minde howe it is said here, that if wee serue not God, we shal soone be cut off. Although it please him to wink at things, and to tarie a time for vs: yet shall his wrath come suddeinly vppon vs, though it seeme not so to vs. And when we shall 1. Thes. 5. 3. say, all is whist and still, imagining our selues to be safe and sure: then must we be ouerwhelmed by his hand. Let vs consider this, that wee may walke warely and keepe good watch, and not tarie till the fire be kindled.

And for ỹ same cause is this saying set downe: Thy God is a consuming fire and a ielous God. When Moses speaketh after that maner, specially when he calleth him a ielous God: he sheweth that God cannot abide that men should mocke him and despise him, but that he will maintaine his owne honour, as good reason is that he should: and in so doing he sheweth vs how dreadfull his wrath is. Behold then, here are two points which we must mark for a conclusion. Not ỹ we can lay them forth at length as at this time: but that it shall suffice to haue some foretaste of them. Let vs marke then that the cause why God vttereth himself vntó vs, is ỹ hauing once knowē his goodnes, & that he hath chosen vs & called vs by his word: we should couet nothing but to be quietly gouerned by him, and acknowledge ỹ it is he to whom al honour & praise belongeth, & therevpon apply our whole indeuours to the glorifying of his holy name. That (say I) is the end why our Lord hath once called vs to his knowledge, and why he calleth vpon vs daily, and exhorteth vs still to come vnto him. But yet let vs consider therewithall, that if wee doe not serue and glorifie him as he deserueth, and as wee bee bounde: wee shall feele him a consuming fire: that is to say, wee shall feele that it is no dalying with such a Maister: not that this is saide to make Gods Maiestie terrible vnto vs, so as wee shoulde bee afrayde to come at him: but rather that wee shall not bee a whit dismaied, if we take him for our Father. But if wee will not behaue our selues as children towardes him, but continue vnamendable: he will lay away the person of a Father, and shewe himselfe to bee our iudge: and that, not such a iudge as needeth to make long inquirie, & to call the hangman to put his iudgementes in execution: but if he do but cast forth the fire of his spirit, or but his breath, by and by the fyre is kindled as sayeth the Prophet Esay, Esa. 5. 25. so as wee must needes bee consumed by it. So then, if wee will not haue the Maiestie of our God terrible vnto vs, but rather that wee may goe vnto him: let vs looke that wee glorifie him in all our life, and not giue him cause to kindle his wrath against vs, nor prouoke him vnto ie- Deut. 32. 21. louse. For then doeth he tell vs that he will pro- Rom. 10. 19. uoke vs to ielousie likewise, by casting vs frō him & by taking another people in our place. Wherfore let vs looke that wee persist in the vocation whereunto he hath called vs, and that wee kindle not his vengeance against vs. And seeing he hath once vttered his goodnesse and manifested himselfe vnto vs in our Lord Iesus Christ: let vs not doubt but that he on his side will continue to make vs feele the same still, if wee on our side continue in glorifying him.

Now let vs kneel down before ỹ maiestie of our good God with acknowledgement of our faults, praying him to make vs feele them better than we haue done, so as wee may bee sorie for them and depart from them by the power of his holy spirit. And so let vs all say, Almightie God heauenly father, &c.

On Munday the iij. of Iune. 1555.

The xxvj. Sermon which is the eight vpon the fourth Chapter.

27 And the Lorde God shall scatter you among the Heathen, and ye shall remaine fewe in nomber among the Nations whither the Lord will bring you.

28 And there ye shall serue gods which are the worke of mans hand, wood & stone, which neither see nor heare, eate nor smell.

29 And there thou shalt seeke the Lorde thy God, and thou shalt finde him if thou seeke him with all thy heart and with all thy soule.

30 And when thou art in tribulation and all these thinges are come vpon thee: in the end thou shalt returne vnto the Lord thy God and obey his voyce.

31 For the Lord thy God is a merciful God: he will not forsake thee, nor destroy thee, nor forget the Couenant of thy fathers which he sware to them,

WEe haue ſaide heretofore, that Gods vſing of the ſimilitude of fire, is not to diſmay vs in ſuch ſort as we ſhould not come vnto him: but contrariwiſe to make vs come to him with reuerence. For what ſhoulde it boote men to bee ſtriken in ſuch terrour, as ſhoulde make them ſhrinke away from GOD, and loth to haue any thing to do with him? Againe we know that our Ezec.18.23. Lorde hath not any other marke or intent, than to winne vs to him and to drawe vs to ſaluation. Nowe the onely meane thereof, is to goe right foorth vnto him, and to bee ioyned vnto him. Wherfore let vs beare well in minde this leſſon, that Gods intent is not to ſcare vs in ſuch wiſe, as we ſhould ſhun him: and that is the thing which we haue to gather at this time vpon that which is rehearſed here. For the threate that Moſes giueth here, is hard: but yet it ſerueth to bring the people backe to God. If thou diſobey the voyce of the Lord thy God (ſaieth he,) thou ſhalt bee ſcattered. Flatter not thy ſelfe w his chooſing of thee from among all other Nations to bee his inheritance, nor with his giuing of thee this lande in poſſeſſion: for he can well ynough bereaue thee of all theſe benefites. Yet notwithſtanding, hee addeth that if God ſee repentance in his people, after he hath chaſtiſed them: he will bring them againe & deale fauourably with them, ſo as they ſhall feele him to bee a merciſull God, and ſuch a one as powreth not out his rigor with extremitie vpon offenders, when he ſeeth that they bee not vtterly paſt amendment. What is to be done then? Firſt of all, when wee heare this ſentence which God gaue in olde time vppon his people: let vs learne to beware that wee abuſe not his goodneſſe. Let vs goe to him with all humilitie while he allureth vs by gentleneſſe, as the Apo- He.12.18.22. ſtle declareth in the Epiſtle to the Hebrewes. For there he ſaieth that wee bee not come to Mount Sinay where there was nothing but flaſhes of Lightening, and Thundercraks: and where the people were ſo amazed, as they looked for preſent death. What remaineth then? Behold (ſaith he,) God calleth vs by his Goſpell, to the intent wee ſhould bee fellowes with the Angels, & with the ſpirits of the faithful, and that we ſhould bee verie Citizens of his kingdome. Seeing it is ſo (ſaieth he:) let vs enter into the heauenly Ieruſalem, for our God is a conſuming fire. It ſhould ſeeme at the firſt ſight that there is ſome contrarietie in theſe two ſayings, That wee ſhould come boldly and after an aſſured maner to our God: and alſo that he ſhould bee a conſuming fire. But both theſe agree verie well togither. For firſt the Apoſtle ſheweth that wee ought not to be ſo afraide of the Maieſtie of our God, as that wee ſhould ſhunne him, but rather conſider that there is nothing in him but gentleneſſe. But yet therewithall wee muſt knowe alſo, that wee muſt worſhip him vnfainedly: or elſe wee muſt learne that he can well reuenge himſelfe of ſuch as ſhal haue abuſed his grace, and of ſuch as ſhall haue held ſcorne of it. Therefore let vs receiue Gods goodneſſe when it is offered vs, & that with ſuch reuerence and lowelineſſe, as wee prouoke him not to wrath againſt vs, ne make him to arme himſelfe as he doeth againſt the deſpiſers of his grace.

But nowe let vs come to that which Moſes ſaieth here. The Lord thy God (ſaieth he) will ſcatter thee among the Heathen, and there thou ſhalt bee fewe in nomber, and thou ſhalt ſerue ſtraunge Gods that are made with mans hand. Here Moſes ſetteth Gods curſes againſt all the benefites that he had promiſed to his people. It was a ſingular benefite that the people were gathered into one bodie, that they had a land alone by themſelues, that they were ſettled quietly there, and that euerie man had a houſe of his owne. But here he ſaieth that they ſhall be driuē out of it. The firſt threat then betokeneth that the people of the Iewes ſhall bee thruſt out of the land that God had giuen them. And let vs mark herewithall, that the bringing of the people into that lande, was not onely to the intent they ſhould liue at their eaſe and in reſt: but to the intent they ſhould alſo be ſanctified vnto God. The Land of Chanaan was as a mirror of the heauenly life, ſo that by dwelling there ỹ people were aſſured that they were the children of God: and therefore this threate that they ſhould be driuen out among the heathen Nations, was not to bee eſteemed lightly. Alſo it is ſaid that there ſhall bee a ſmall nomber left of them. But we knowe that among other things, God had promiſed Abraham to multiplie his ſeede as the Starres of the skie, and as the ſande Gen.15.5.& of the Sea. It is ſaid here that they ſhall be fewe 22.17. in nomber: yea, and wee ſee they had bin euen as Sodom and Gomorrhe, ſo as they had periſhed euerichone, if God had not vouchſafed to reſerue ſome little ſeede to himſelfe, as is ſaid in the Prophet Eſay. Laſtly it is ſaid that they ſhall Eſa.1.9. ſerue ſtraunge goddes which are made with mans hand. This is the grieuouſeſt puniſhment of all, that the Iewes which had Gods Lawe, ſhould neuertheleſſe bee ſubiect to ſuch tyrannie, as to bee faine to worſhip the idoles of the Heathen, ſo as they ſhould haue no Religion among them but ſuch as ſhould defile them, and that all their toyling of themſelues ſhould bee but to their greater condemnation. Thus wee ſee in effect what this text comprehendeth. Now remaineth that we apply it to our inſtruction.

Firſt therefore let vs learne to vſe well the benefites that God beſtoweth vpon vs, and to ſubmit our ſelues vnto him ſeeing he ſheweth himſelfe ſo friendly and louing towardes vs, aſſuring our ſelues that he can well take away the things that he hath giuen vs. Not that wee muſt bee afraide that God will not continue his goodneſſe ſtill towardes vs, yea and alſo increaſe it if we on our ſide walke aright, and continue in the poſſeſſion of ỹ things that he hath put into our hands: but that ſuch as deſpiſe God, ſhal feele that he is not bound to them, nor vnable to pluck ỹ things out of their fiſtes which he had giuen them. Let vs therefore poſſeſſe Gods benefits in feare and carefulneſſe. This is the thing in effect, which we haue to gather vppon the ſaid ſaying of Moſes. True it is, that wee haue not nowe adayes a land land of Chanaan, ſo as Gods Church ſhould be ſeparated into ſome one countrie, where it pleaſeth him to haue his name called vppon: but yet notwithſtanding if wee haue a place where wee may ſerue him vncorruptly, hee graunteth vs a ſpeciall grace, and wee ought to ſet great ſtore by it. And if wee know not that: we ſhall feele that Moſes hath not ſayd in vaine, that we ſhall become lyke other nations. How many nations ſee wee in theſe dayes, that inioye the lyke benefite as GOD hath beſtowed vppon vs? Nay contrariwiſe, they ỹ haue any taſt of the Goſpell, doe languiſhe among the enemies of the faith, and are there as ſheepe in the woolues mouth, wandering vp and down as in a wildernesſe, while in the meane time our God keepeth vs as in his flocke. Seeing then that wee haue ſuch an aduantage: is it not reaſon that wee ſhoulde ſtreyne our ſelues to ſerue God, and that wee ſhould liue peaſeably vnder his hand, ſeeing hee doth vs the honor to receiue vs, as in deede it is he that gouerneth vs, and the thing is as apparant as any thing may be? Now then if wee will needes bee ouerluſtie, the threate that was vttered in olde time againſt the Iewes will light vppon our heades. And as it is ſayde here that they ſhall bee fewe in number: ſo although GOD haue gathered a greate ſorte of vs together, hee can well enough diminiſhe our number, if wee misbehaue our ſelues: and in the end, ỹ thing that is moſt of all to bee feared will come vpon vs, that is to wit, ỹ we ſhall ſerue ſtraunge Gods. And in deede if we cannot finde in our heartes to beare Gods yoke, but are loth to be ſubiect vnto him: is it not reaſon that wee ſhould be vnder a cleane contrarie gouernment, that is to wit, that we ſhould be bereft of the true and pure religion, and be plunged in idolatrie?

Ezr.20.11,13 We heare what hee ſayth by his prophet Ezechiel. For hauing blamed ỹ Iewes for their vnthankfulneſſe, he addeth ỹ his deliuering of thẽ into ỹ handes of tyrants, is rightfull. I haue giuẽ them (ſayth he) a good & holy lawe, yea euen ẅ promis, ỹ if they walked in it, they ſhould finde lyfe and welfare therein: and I cannot tel what I might haue done more for them. What a thing is it, that God doth vs the honor to rule vs, and to take the paine to guide vs all our lyfe long? Againe, ſeeing he addeth a promiſe, that his teaching of vs is for our welfare: if we will not yeeld our ſelues teachable vnto him, but ſhake off his yoke lyke wood beaſtes: is it not reaſon that we ſhould be caſt into moſt vile ſlauerie, ſeeing we cãnot abide ſuch a maſter as our God, ſpecially ſith he deſireth not to rule vs otherwiſe than to our welfare? [yes, and therefore] the creatures, yea and euen the diuell himſelfe in the end muſt reigne ouer vs. For that is the thing which Ezechiel meaneth by the Tyrannie of Babylon.

For there (ſayth he) they ſhall haue lawes giuen thẽ for their own tooth, and ſuch lawes as they can finde in their heartes to keepe: but they ſhall not liue by them. When they haue toyled themſelues to the vttermoſt, and payde impoſtes and tributes to the infidels: yet ſhall they bee faine to ſerue their idols too, ſo as they ſhall defile and beray themſelues with all ſuperſtitions. And what ſhalbe their reward? Euerlaſting death. That is the payment of all ſuch as cannot finde in their heartes to ſerue God quietly, and to keepe his law and his word. But to the intent wee may not thinke that this ſerued but for that one time: Moſes ſheweth that the lyke ſhould befall to all ſuch as misbehaue themſelues and withdrawe themſelues from the Church. And this vengeance of God hath bin accompliſhed vppon the greater parte of the world, as we ſee already. For whence came the helliſh confuſion of poperie? Euen of gods iuſt puniſhment for the rebelliouſneſſe of the world, becauſe men were hardharted and would not ſtoope. For when God cauſed his Goſpel to be publiſhed: then was the trumpet ſounded, to the end that all men both great and ſmall ſhould haue bin brought vnto him. But we ſee what befel on mens behalf. They would in no wiſe ſtoop: they were very loth to doe that. And not that onely, but alſo ſome defied God openly when hee would haue brought them to his lure: and otherſom made countenãce of obediẽce through hipocriſie, but it laſted not: for they were vnconſtant and fled touch anon after. Therefore it behoued him to puniſhe ſuch ſpiteful wickednesſe, and ſo he did. Becauſe they would not obey the trueth, therefore did lying get the maiſterie of them. God gaue Satan the bridle, ſo as his errors wrought effectually, in beſotting ſuch as had wilfully ſhut their eyes, againſt the doctrine of ſaluation when it was offered them. 2.Theſ.2.11
Now then ſith we ſee that God offereth vs great good nowadayes in gathering vs into his flocke, and in giuing vs his worde whereby we haue life and ſaluation: let vs learne to inioy ſo greate a benefite. For God mocketh vs not when hee telleth vs that he is our father and Sauiour. Hee taketh not the thinges with the one hand which he gaue vs with the other. Onely let vs be contented to continue ſtill in the poſſeſſion of his grace.

But yet beſides this, let vs ſtand in feare of this horrible curſe of ſeruing ſtraunge Gods, and of being bereft of the pure religion, for refuſing to make our commoditie of the honor and priuiledge that God giueth vs in drawing vs to him, and in ſhewing vs that hee is willing to reigne among vs. And Moſes ſpeaketh here expreſly of the vanitie of idols, to the ende that the people may bee the better touched therewith. For the wretched Paynims in worſhipping a peece of woodde or ſtone, could not conceiue what an abhomination it is to worſhip a dead thing. But they that knew the liuing God, euen the GOD that giueth lyfe to all thinges, ought better to perceiue that it is againſt nature, yea and a deteſtable thing, to worſhip a puppet ſo, whether it were made of woodde, or caſt of mettall either golde or ſiluer. For they bee all of them corruptible creatures: and without GOD there is no lyfe, without his power there is no mouing.

So then Moſes hath ſet downe theſe circumſtances, to ỹ end that the people might knowe Act.17.28.

that they ſhoulde not be puniſhed lightly, but that in diſobeying God and in refuſing to keepe themſelues holy vnto him: they ſhoulde defile themſelues. And it is good reaſon that when God hath ſhed foorth his grace vppon vs, wee ſhould bee puniſhed the more grieuouſly, if wee cannot profite our ſelues by it. The more then ỹ euery of vs hath made proceedinges in Gods grace: the more earneſt let him be to loue him and ſerue him: vnleſſe we will haue him on the contrary part, to vſe the extreme rigor that is ſpoken of here.

Howbeit herewithall (as I haue touched already) Moſes ſheweth that God will not ſo puniſhe his people as to leaue them in deſpayre: but that hee intendeth a cleane contrary ende, that is to wit, to bring them to repentance. And ſurely this is a very notable place. For although God thunder againſt vs, ſo as to our ſeeming we may iudge by all lykelyhood, that he is minded to make cleane riddance of vs without any mercie: yet notwithſtanding hee ſeeketh our ſaluation by that meanes, and giueth vs alwayes ſpace of repentance: at leaſtwiſe ſo long as his word is preached vnto vs. For ſomtimes the gate is ſhut vp, and we muſt euer beare in minde how the prophet Eſay ſayth, Seeke the Lorde while hee may be found. And againe in another place correſpondent vnto this, he ſayth, I haue heard thee in conuenient time, I haue ſuccored thee in the day of ſaluation. Hereby it is ſhewed vs, that there is ſtill ſpace of repentaunce, and the gate is ſtill open for vs to come vnto God, ſo long as hee giueth vs his worde. But if wee paſſe not to enter while GOD giueth vs the meane: wee ſhall bee bereft of his worde, and then may wee well ſeeke after him, howbeit but as blinde folkes that grope in the darke: for the Lorde will haue ſhut vs out from him. But here Moſes teacheth, that although God ſeeme vnmeaſurably ſharpe in chaſtiſing his children: yet notwithſtanding he giueth them ſpace of repentance, and ceaſeth not to haue a care of their ſaluation. For hee ſayth, When thou art ſo ſcattered, if thou ſeeke thy God: thou ſhalt finde him: yea verily, if thou ſeeke him with all thy heart and with all thy ſoule. Now, that wee may the better vnderſtand the thinges that are conteyned here: let vs note firſt of all, that when men are once gone away vnto wickedneſſe, it is very hard to fetch them backe againe, vnleſſe they bee ſubdewed by maine force. And that ment Moſes to expreſſe in ſaying, Then ſhalt thou ſeeke the Lord thy God. When is this then? not when the people are ful fed, nor when they haue ſtore of al Gods benefites: for wee ſhall ſee in the ſong, how the people are lykened to ouerpampered horſes, which are kicking and wincing againſt their maſters, and will not ſuffer thẽſelues to be handled. Moſes then meaneth that the people ſhould be faine to bee reformed after a forcible manner: for (as I ſayd afore) that is our nature. If wee be once gone aſtray, GOD ſhall neuer get vs home againe, till hee haue throughly tamed vs. True it is that hee coulde goe another way to worke, and it is not for that he is vnable to reclayme vs by his holy ſpirite, if hee liſted: but hee intendeth to ſhewe vs what our lewdneſſe is, and that is the cauſe why he vſeth theſe inferiour meanes. This is the firſt poynt which we haue to marke vppon this place.

Eſa.49.8.

And hereunto aunſwereth that which is written in the ſecond of Oſee: for there our Lorde complayneth of the Iewes, ſaying that they bee lyke a harlot that hath forſaken her husband, and giuen ouer her ſelfe to all commers, bearing her ſelfe in hand that ſhe is beſt at eaſe when ſhe may receiue rewardes, and bee catching and ſnatching on all ſides: ſo that (to her ſeeming) if ſhee were an honeſt wife, ſhe ſhould bee faine to be contented with a little, whereas now being a ſtrumpet, ſhee eateth of the deyntieſt morſels, and hath ſtore of preſentes brought her. God therefore ſayth that the Iewes were in the ſame taking, when they were in loue with their idols, and in the meane time fathered all their good thinges vppon them. What ſhall I doe now, ſayth the Lorde? When yee ſay, it is our idols that giue vs meate and drinke: ye be vnthankefull vnto mee: for yee haue receiued all theſe thinges at my hand. Now therefore I muſt be faine to bereaue you of them. I will take away the bread and wine wherewith yee haue bin ſuſteined, and your wool and flaxe & all other thinges. I will bring you out (ſayth he) into the wilderneſſe, I will make you to pine away there, yee ſhall be lyke a wretched harlot, which after ſhe hath played the naughtipacke, and hath runne gadding here and there, and in the ende hath bin driuen to eate her owne dung and filth, is reiected of all men, and dyeth for hunger and thirſt, not hauing wherewith to couer her ſhame. Thus will I handle you (ſayth he:) and then ſhall yee finde that there is no thing better than to ſticke to me. Yee ſhal ſay, Alas where is my husband that dealt ſo gently with me? I muſt be faine to returne to him. By this ſimilitude the prophet doth vs to vnderſtand, ỹ when men giue themſelues to lewdnes, and doe not ſerue and honor GGD, after he hath giuen them his worde: they muſt bee reformed by force. And why? For as long as they liue at their eaſe, they forget themſelues, they flatter themſelues, they be proude, and thinke they may euen deſpiſe God. For when God pincheth vs not, nor maketh vs to feele his ſtrong hand: we take occaſion thereat to ſooth our ſelues in our vices, ſo that wee haue neede (as I ſaid afore) to be reformed by Gods ſtriking vppon vs with maine blowes. For if hee dally with vs, it will breede our deſtruction and decay. And ſurely there is not a notabler poynt than this: For wee thinke it ſtraunge, that God ſhould vſe ſo ſundry ſortes of rigor in this world: but in the meane while wee conſider not the hardneſſe of mens heartes. For although Gods curſes haue their full ſcope, ſo as we ſee warres on the one ſide and famine on the other, and euery man cryes out alas: yet notwithſtanding, who is hee that looketh to the hand that ſmiteth? Howe many returne to GOD for all that? doth it not rather ſeeme that ſinners haue

conſpired to reſiſt God ſtill? Nowe ſeeing it is ſo, let vs marke that Gods ſhewing of himſelfe ſo rigorous, is not without cauſe, and let vs impute it to our owne ſelues. Then if any of vs bee afflicted alone, or all of vs in common, ſo as we bee ſmitten with Gods ſcourges: let vs vnderſtande that wee haue neede of it, and that it ſerueth to ſtoppe our mouthes, that we grudge not againſt God, aſſuring our ſelues that his nipping of vs after that faſhion is not cauſeleſſe.

Beſides this, let vs alſo learne to comfort our ſelues ſith wee ſee the ende that God aymeth at. For like as hee ſheweth himſelfe rough and ſharpe: ſo will he alſo haue vs to taſt of his loue and care towardes vs: that is to wit, that foraſmuch as we haue forgotten him & turned our backes to him, & not ſought to him, but rather indeuored to flee from him: his intent is to drawe vs to him by that meanes, and to induce vs to ſeeke him againe. Ye ſee then that the true comfort of wretched ſinners when God ſcourgeth them, is to conſider thus with themſelues: yet GOD hath pitie vppon vs: in deede wee remembered not him: but yet for all that, hee hath not forgotten vs, and that doeth hee ſhewe by the effect. Neuertheleſſe, the cheefeſt [comfort] is in this that Moſes addeth, namely, that they ſhall finde God if they ſeeke him. For if wee goe to ſeeke God, being onely in diſtreſſe and trouble: can wee haue any courage to come vnto him? True it is that when the wretched vnbeleeuers are diſtreſſed, they toyle themſelues and doe all that they can to ſeeke God. We ſee that euen in the Popedome, when men are in ſorrowe and haue their ſinnes laide afore them, [their ſaying is,] goe to, let vs ſee if wee can pacifie God. But as for them, they haue no warrant that God will receiue them, neither truſt they to his free promiſes, neither pray they in the name of our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt. They can well ſpeake of repentaunce: but (to their owne ſeeming) God ſhould receiue them for their owne worthineſſe, and not otherwiſe. And ſo wee ſee they come thither as it were doubting: for it is certaine that ſuch repentance is ful of hipocriſie. For why? They be not ſure of Gods goodneſſe: nay they neuer wiſt what it ment. But as for vs, let vs put the thing in vre which is ſayd in the pſalme, Lord, thy mercy is euer ready in thee. Hereby it is ſhewed vs that we can neuer returne vnto God, to ſubmit our ſelues vnto him: vnleſſe wee taſte his mercie, that wee may truſt to it and reſt vppon it. That is the cauſe why I tolde you that wee muſt marke the text where Moſes ſayth, If thou ſeeke the Lorde thy God, thou ſhalt finde him. Will wee then be prouoked to repentance when we haue ſinned? Let vs hearken to the promiſes that GOD hath giuen vs. For there hee aſſureth vs that as ſoone as wee open our mouth to pray, he will ſtretch out his hand to ſuccour vs at our neede: yea and that he will preuent vs, ſo as wee neede not diſtruſt him that hee will not receiue vs to mercy, ſeeing we haue ſuch a warrant.

Pſal. 32. 5. & 50. 15. and 145. 19. Eſa. 65. 23.

Howbeit foraſmuch as men would alwayes pacify God with countenances and ceremonies: Moſes addeth purpoſely, that wee muſt ſeeke him with heart and with ſoule. I ſayd that men are euer deſirous to content God with trifling thinges: and wee ſee it too much. For when they ſpeake of repentance or penaunce in poperie: what meane they by that worde, but that men muſt vſe much liplabour, and make a ſorte of Apes toyes? But the heart muſt abide ſtil locked vp, and men muſt in no wiſe rid themſelues of their wicked affections, nor clenſe them away. They will alwayes keepe a backe ſhop behinde, and in the meane ſeaſon if they ſhewe ſome good outward ſigne, they thinke it is enough, and that God ought not to preſſe them any further. They be dubble hearted: and therfore they woulde haue God to receiue but the one halfe of that which he requireth: and the other halfe they woulde pay him as it were in way of raunſome. But as for vs, let vs on our ſide learne to vnderſtand, that to finde him, and to be receiued of him, wee muſt ſeeke him with al our heart, and with all our ſoule. Not that wee can come vnto him with ſuch perfection as were to bee wiſhed: but yet muſt we haue this ſoundneſſe with vs, that wee ſeeke no lurkingholes, but rather examine our ſinnes throughly, and when wee haue condemned them, ſeeke the remedie with ſighing and groning, that it may pleaſe our God to reclayme vs to him, ſo as wee condemning our owne ſinnes, may deſire nothing ſo much as to be reformed according to his righteouſneſſe. Thus yee ſee what it is to ſeeke God with all out heart and with all our ſoule. And when wee go ſo to worke, let vs not thinke that wee ſhall bee diſappointed of the promiſe which hee made to the fathers of olde time. And ſo yee ſee that the thing which we haue to marke vppon this place is that foraſmuch as wee come not to God of our owne good wil, we are faine to be driuen to it by force, and that is the cauſe of the afflictions that God ſendeth vs.

Furthermore we muſt alſo cõſider his fatherly goodnes in ſtriking vs: for he doth it to bring vs home againe to him by that meane. And how come we thither? It would behoue vs to be ſtripped ſtarke naked out of all ſelftruſt, and to be vterly caſt downe in our ſelues: but wee cannot away with ỹ, becauſe our nature drieth vs ỹ clean contrary way. But yet for al ỹ, we ſee we haue wherwith to cõfort vs in our afflictions, For our Lorde ſeeketh not our deſtruction, but bringeth vs home againe to himſelfe: and ỹ not doubtfully: but aſſuredly warranting vs that if wee come vnto him, it ſhall not be in vaine, neither ſhall we be diſappointed. Why? For if wee ſeeke him, wee ſhall finde him. But therewithall let vs looke well to it, that there be no feining nor dubbleneſſe in vs: for God cannot away with ſuch hipocriſie.

Ezech. 18. 23

And now it is immediatly ſayd, When theſe aduerſities are come vppon you, yee ſhall returne to your GOD and obey his voyce. And becauſe the Lorde is merciful, hee will not forget you nor caſte you out of his preſence, nor out of the couenaunt of

of your fathers. This ſerueth to expreſſe yet better the doctrine which I touched where Moſes ſaide, When theſe miſeries are come vpon you, then ſhall you ſeeke your God. For he ſheweth that men play the drunken folke ſo long as God dealeth gently with them: and that they cannot perceiue their ſinnes, except they be made to ſmart. When theſe miſeries haue caught hold of you, thē (ſaith he) &c. By the miſeries ỹ he ſpeaketh of, he meaneth the puniſhments wherewith he had threatened the people before. To be ſhort, God muſt be faine to ſhewe vs his wrath to our faces, and to make vs to feele it: or elſe we conceiue it not. And we ſee it is ſo. For when we be daily told of Gods wrath, we make but a ſport of it, it moues vs not a whit. And why? Becauſe wee be earthly and fleſhly, and therefore God is faine to make vs feele his wrath and vengeance according to our rudeneſſe. Yet notwithſtanding we bee ſtill nice and tender, inſomuch that if wee feele any thing amiſſe in our bodies, and that we haue not our owne deſires: we be by and by vexed & greeued, and by that meanes God amendeth vs. Not that we be humbled at ỹ firſt ſtripe: but we come to it by litle and litle and as it were by degrees, ſo as in the end God maketh his corrections auayable. And whereas I ſay that God bringeth vs home to him by the chaſtiſements that hee ſendeth vs: that is not generall to all men. Wee ſee that the vnbeleeuers become the frowarder, inſomuch that when God chaſtiſeth them for their ſinnes, they ſtorme againſt him, they gnaſh their teeth, and in the end they fall to deſpaire. But this ſaying concerneth thoſe that are rightly of Gods Church: thoſe when they bee chaſtiſed are willing to returne to God in their aduerſities. Thus ye ſee what Moſes meant to expreſſe in ſaying, Whē theſe miſeries ſhal haue caught hold of thee. As if he had ſaid, ſo long as your God ſuffreth you to liue in reſt, ſo long as hee ſetteth not your ſinnes before you, ſo long as he calleth you not to a reckoning: you thinke your ſelues out of daunger, and that no man can hurt you, and (which worſe is) your faults neuer come to your remembraunces. But if yee be once pinched with aduerſitie, then will yee cling to your God. Hereby wee be warned againe, to beare the corrections patiently which God ſendeth vs: for they doe vs good: whereas proſperitie blindeth vs and breedeth our deſtruction. True it is ỹ gods gentle handling of vs, ought not to cauſe vs to deſpiſe him nor to neglect him. Whē God ſheweth himſelfe louing towards vs, ſurely wee ought to be the more inclined thereby to loue him. But what? Our dragging cleane backward, bewrayeth that proſperitie is not good for vs. And therefore our Lorde muſt be faine to ſcourge vs. Wherefore let vs learne not to bee grieued out of meaſure when God beateth vs ſo with his roddes: but to beare his ſtripes meekely, foraſmuch as wee ſee that the ende thereof is to our welfare according as it is ſayd here, when thou art pinched with aduerſitie. Yea and if our Lord hauing ſmitten vs after one ſorte doe dubble his ſtripes: let vs not murmure againſt him as we be inclined to doe. For [ſometimes] they that haue bin patient in ſome one aduerſitie, fall to ſtorming and chafing againſt God whē it commeth to the ſecond or the third. But wee muſt not doe ſo. For on the contrarie part, wee ſee our Lorde withdraweth not his hand at the firſt as ſoone as he hath chaſtiſed vs once: and wee abide by it ſtill. In deede when wee feele any aduerſitie, we will ſet a good face vppon it at the firſt, and ſay, very well, ſeeing that God chaſtiſeth mee, I muſt returne vnto him. But let him turne his hād on the other ſide: and we fal to fretting and chafing by and by. Therefore we muſt be chaſtiſed throughly: that is to ſay, God muſt let vs alone in diſtreſſe, & aduerſitie muſt ſo ouermaiſter vs, as we may be throughly tamed, & it may ſo ſtick by our ribs, that when he ſhall haue withdrawen his hand, we may remember it al our lyfe after. Then let vs learne that wee muſt be patient in our aduerſities, not onely for a day or twayne, or for ſome affection: but ſo as we holde out quietly vnder the hand of our God, euen when he dubleth and increaſeth his ſtripes. That is the effect of the thing which we haue to marke.

Now when Moſes ſayth, The Lord thy God is mercifull, and therefore hee will not forſake thee nor caſt thee of: he bringeth back the people to the nature of God that they might hope to be receiued to mercie, if they repented them of their ſinnes. And it is another very notable poynt. In deede I haue touched it heretofore: neuertheleſſe, Moſes maketh a larger declaratiō thereof, and not without cauſe. For lyke as hee had earſt ſayde that GOD is a fire which conſumeth all thinges: ſo it behoued him to ſhewe on the contrarie part, that Gods nature is louing and gentle, and that he is ready to forgiue the faultes of ſuch as acknowledge them. And that alſo is the cauſe why God telleth vs ſo often of his mercie. But whatſoeuer bee ſayd to vs concerning his goodneſſe: yet can we not truſt in him as wee ought to doe. There is not any thing harder to vs than to aſſure our ſelues of the goodneſſe and fatherly loue of our God. It is a great thing, that whē God ſhal haue auowed a hundred thowſand times, ỹ he loueth vs & wil be fauorable to vs: yet we continue ſtill in a wauering, and ſtand diſputing vppon the matter, & feede our owne diſtruſtfulneſſe, as though we would needes diſable the record ỹ God giueth vs of his goodneſſe. Now then, it is not more than needeth, when Moſes telleth vs that God of his owne nature is pitifull. It is a propertie ỹ is euermore attributed vnto him, and that not onely in this text, but alſo in other places as we ſhal ſee hereafter: Deut. 5. 10. and the Scripture is full of the ſame doctrine. Pſa. 145. 8. 9. And why? Becauſe that elſe it were not poſſible to aſſure men, foraſmuch as they be ſo giuen to vnbeliefe, as they ſtill martyr themſelues, and are alwayes in perplexitie and vnquietneſſe, bearing themſelues in hand that God will neuer be at one w̄ them. True it is ỹ (as I haue ſayd already) we be but too hardy in doing euil: but whē we ſhould aſſure our ſelues ỹ God wil haue pittie vpon vs, & when we ſhould ſeeke him: then doth our vnbeliefe bewray it ſelfe. Not without cauſe therefore doth Moſes ſay here ỹ God is merciful, full, to the end that the people might conceiue Gods nature and take holde of it, which is altogether contrarie to their owne, as God himſelfe auoweth in other places. My thoughtes (ſayth hee by his prophet Eſay) are not lyke yours. Eſa.45.8. For if a man bee offended, although the wrong that is done him bee but ſmall: yet is there no meanes to pacify him, there will alwayes remain ſome roote of diſpleaſure in his heart. Now we imagine God to be lyke our ſelues, & we meaſure him by our owne yard. For this cauſe hee proteſteth thus: looke how farre heauen is from the earth, ſo farre are my thoughts from yours. Eſa.45.9. And therefore aſſure your ſelues I ſeeke nothing elſe but that all ſuch as haue offended mee ſhould be at one with me. Yea & although your miſdeedes be neuer ſo greuous & heinous: Yet ſo it is ỹ I am ready to forget them out of hand. So then let vs hearken to ỹ textes of holy ſcripture, where God telleth vs that he is ſlowe to wrath, patient, and ready to forgiue the faultes that are committed againſt him. Let vs beare this in minde, that it may bee as a foundation for vs to builde vpon, when the caſe concerneth the forſaking of our ſins, that we ſhould be ſorie for them, and obtain the mercie that God hath promiſed vs. Thus much concerning that poynt.

But it were not enough for vs to knowe Gods nature, except wee had his promiſe, and that hee ſhewed vs his will there. For the Papiſtes, the Turkes, and the Paynims alſo can well enough ſay (as they haue alwayes ſayde) that God is mercifull: but they cannot ſeeke it to taſte thereof. And the reaſon is, becauſe they doe not ſticke and leane to his promiſes. True it is that when they haue once imagined that God is mercifull, they enter into many queſtions. Yea but in deede (ſay they:) what wote I, whether this mercie ſerue for mee or no? And afterward they put Gods mercy into the ballance with their ſinnes, and ſtand as folke diſmaied at it. Then is there a certaine confuſed imagination of Gods mercy in all men: but yet can they not truſt to it, neither can they returne vnto God, with ful perſwaſion that hee will reach them his hand to ſuccor them. And why? for they haue not his promiſes. So much the more therefore doth it ſtand vs in hand, to marke well this text of Moſes when hee addeth: The Lorde thy God will not forget the couenant of thy fathers which hee ſware to them. And ſo beſides ỹ knowledge which wee haue that God is mercifull, and will receiue ſinners when they come vnto him: let vs marke well that it behoueth vs alſo to haue his promiſes to reſt vppon, ſo as our comming vnto him may bee becauſe hee calleth and allureth vs, becauſe hee hath ſhewed vs his will, becauſe wee neede not feare that wee ſhall looſe our labor. And why? for wee haue a warrant that GOD will heare vs. But Moſes ſayth expreſly here, the couenaunt of thy fathers which hee hath ſworne vnto. And why [hath hee ſworne vnto it?] Becauſe it is not enough for vs to knowe that God hath promiſed to receiue wretched ſinners & to pardon them: except wee knowe alſo that his promiſes are directed ſpecially vnto vs, and can apply them to our vſe.

True it is that his promiſes ſtand not vppon mens doings, neither is it in euery mans power to warrant himſelfe that God will ſhewe him fauour. For doe wee thinke him bound to vs? Vppon what aſſurance ſhall I conceiue in my head, that God wil accept me? That were a diuelliſhe preſumption. God then muſt be faine to preuent vs: hee muſt be faine to promiſe vs of his own free goodneſſe, ỹ although we be wretched & miſerable: yet neuertheleſſe he wil haue pitie vpon vs. So then, if we wil obteyne forgiueneſſe of our ſins: we muſt begin at gods promiſes.

But it is not for naught that Moſes ſayth, the couenaunt of thy fathers. That is to ſay, the couenaunt that was made with thy fathers, which is as their peculiar inheritaunce. Now then we ſee how Moſes's meaning is, that to come vnto God, wee muſt not onely conſider that hee hath promiſed to bee mercifull to ſinners: but alſo euery of vs muſt apply it peculiarly to himſelfe, ſo as he can ſay, in deede I am a wretched creature, I am plunged in curſedneſſe, there is nothing but deſpaire for mee. No verily, if thy God ſhould not ſhewe thee mercie. As how? It is to thee that hee ſpeaketh when hee ſayth, Come vnto mee all ye that are weary and ouerloden, and I will refreſhe you. Thou art of that number. Nowe then aſſure thy ſelfe that thy GOD giueth thee his promiſes, to the intent that thou reſting vppon them, mighteſt be ſure of his goodneſſe, that it cannot faile thee. Wherfore let vs not doubt but that the promiſes which God hath made to his Church are ours, & that euery of vs ought to apply them particularly to his owne vſe and benefite, ſo as when any man is in perplexitie, that he woteth not what to ſay, hee muſt alwayes come backe to this poynt, how now? hath not thy GOD promiſed that hee will pitie ſuch as call vpon him? Yes in deed: but I knowe not whether I be of that ſort or no. Why? haue I not bin baptized in the name of our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt? Haue I not his holy Supper as a ſecond pledge, whereby hee ſheweth mee that hee receiueth mee into the number of his children? Be thou out of doubte therefore ſeeing thou haſt ſo many records, that thy God will be fauorable to thee, and feare thou not but hee will ſhewe thee mercie. Thus yee ſee the cauſe why Moſes ſpeaketh here expreſly of the couenaunt of the fathers, as it was made with their father Abraham, and to all his ſeede after him: For otherwiſe it woulde not haue booted at all in the time of Moſes. But foraſmuch as GOD had ſayd, I will bee thy GOD to a thowſand generations: his ofſpring is comprehended in it after his deceaſe. And therefore the Iewes ought to haue aſſured thẽſelues by the vertue of the ſame couenaunt, that they ſhoulde bee receiued: ſo as if they repented thẽ of their ſinnes, they ſhoulde alwayes finde the mercie that they had neede of. Pſal.145.19 Gen.17.7.

And now let vs vnderſtand, that ſeeing God vouchſafed to extend his goodneſſe to the children of thoſe with whome he had made his couenaunt: and that although they were ſlidden backe and vtterly turned away from him, and had quite forsaken him, yet notwithstanding he ceased not to shew them mercie. Now seeing he speaketh nowadays vnto vs, and the voyce of our Lorde Iesus Christ soundeth lowde in calling vs, to reconcile vs to our God, and that the forgiuenesse of sinnes is preached vnto vs in his name, and tidings is brought vnto vs that God desireth to be friendes with vs, and that all warre should be layd aside betweene him and vs: let vs assure our selues I say, that it is not for vs to bee wilfull and stubborne, but that it behoueth vs to submit our selues to our God: and therewithall to assure our selues throughly, that this promise of his is not deceitefull. Why? for the couenant is ours, so as our God intendeth not that his promises shall vanish into the aire, but that they shall bee stedfast towards vs, so as euery of vs may fare the better by them. Thus much cõcerning this saying of the couenant of the fathers.

2. Cor. 5. 18. 19. 20. Eph. 2. 17.

But yet herewithall Moses faileth not to shew, that it was not men that did first make the couenant with God, but that God did preuent them: and that it is hee, that of his owne free goodnesse hath bound himselfe vnto them. And for that cause is it sayd that God sware to that couenant: and both of them are right necessarie. For as I haue told you, if wee take not Gods promises as peculiar to our selues, it is vnpossible for vs to be so grounded vppon them, as to call vppon him with a stedfast heart, but wee shal bee euer wauering. Therefore wee must be fully perswaded, that God maketh vs partakers of all the benefites that hee promised to our auncesters. And when wee be once at that poynt, we must also consider on the otherside, that it is not for vs to be on the forehand with God, neither doth our Lorde tarie till wee come to seeke him: but it is he ẏ hath preuented vs w̃ his mercie. To be short, it is he ẏ hath vouchsafed to take vs for his children: and although we were straungers vnto him, & had not in any wise deserued to haue any acquaintance with him: yet notwithstãding he hath vouchsafed of his owne accord to lincke himselfe with vs. It behoueth vs to thinke so. For if wee knowe not that Gods promises are of free gift: wee will fal to seeking of some deserte and worthinesse in our selues, and wee will say, that was the meane whereby to come vnto God: he bestowed such a benefite or gratious gift vppon vs, because wee deserued it: wee haue gotten such a thing by the meanes of our own vertues. Let vs beware of such fantasticall imaginations, and let vs not thinke to doe our selues any good ẏ way. So then let vs beare in mind, that wheras God hath declared his couenant vnto vs, & calleth it ours: yet notwithstãding he wil haue vs to know, ẏ his vouchsafing tovtter himself vnto vs, & to giue himselfe vnto vs, is of his owne accord without being bound thereto, insomuch that wee did rather deserue to be vtterly reiected at his hand. And Moses thinketh it not enough to say singly that God made the sayd couenant: but hee addeth also that hee sware it: and not without cause doth he set that further here. For as I haue declared already heretofore, when GOD speaketh, wee inquire whether the thing be so or no. Truely such manner of inquiring is very wicked. But what for that? Our vnbeliefe beareth such sway with vs, as we cannot simply trust vnto GOD. Therefore doth he supply our want, and sweareth to warrant his worde the better which hee hath giuen vs. If wee beleeue not a man vppon his bare worde, wee doe him wrong. And therefore are mortall men put to their othe, because they bee inclined ouermuch to vanitie. But when God sweareth at our request, what a thing is that? For seeing he is the vnchangeable truthe: why should not men trust him as soone as the worde is spoken with his mouth? But hereby we see how frowarde wee bee, and on the otherside we see also how God beareth with vs in humbling himself so farre as to sweare for our sakes, because hee seeth that wee would else be alwayes vnquiet, and that we shoulde still bee tempted to doubt. Therefore vouchsafeth hee to confirme vs by swearing, to the intent wee might bee the better assured of the hope of our saluation, and not doubt any more of his promises. Thus much concerning Gods swearing.

Now againe Moses sheweth after what maner men ought to seeke GOD: and hee sheweth it by deede. Hee had sayd afore that such as seeke God: with all their heart and with all their soule, shal find him. And now he sheweth by what meanes men shall yeelde good proofe thereof, that is to wit of their true and vnfeined repentance: that is to wit, by obeying the voyce of God. For men will make bragges enowe that they beare a good heart to Godward: and we see dayly this shamelesnesse, that such as haue not one veine that tendeth to Godward, cease not for all that to protest with full mouth, that they loue God, and they beare the worlde in hand that they bee wonderful zealous. But here Moses bringeth vs backe to the tryall. Wee must shewe whereby, (sayth hee,) so as it may appeare by our fruites that our sinnes mislyke vs in deede, and that we bee desirous in very deede to seeke God, to sticke vnto him. And howe may that bee done? Euen by obeying his voyce, according as wee knowe also that obedience is the thing which God preferreth before all other sacrifices. And that is a thing worthie to be wel marked. For Moses here setteth out two things: The one is, that when men bragge of their willingnesse to seeke God, if they shewe it not in good earnest by their whole lyfe, so as it may bee knowen by their fruites: a men may well tell them that they lye, and that they doe but mocke with GOD and the worlde when they say, wee bee sorie for our sinnes. That is the thing which wee haue to marke for one poynt. Therefore let vs try our repentance by the said rule. When we seeme to our selues to seeke God: let vs looke that it bee with liuely repentance, not in feete, hands, or eyes: but in ẏ reformation of all our affectiõs, so as they may be giuen ouer all wholy to follow God & his worde. If it be not so with vs: all ẏ euer we can say of repentance, is but mockery. Marke that for one poynt.

1. Sa. 15. 22. Psal. 50. 14.

The

The other is the obeying of Gods voyce. When as hee ſpeaketh of the obeying of Gods voyce: it is to exclude all the fond deuotions of mans owne inuenting. For when men intend to ſerue God well, how goe they to worke? Mee thinkes (ſay they) that ſuch a thing is good: and thereupon they ſet vp goodly gay ſeruices. Moſes therefore excludeth all theſe thinges, in ſaying that we muſt obey the voyce of our God. Wherfore let vs ſee that wee ſubmit our ſelues vnto him. Becauſe wee ſee the world is ſo greatly giuen to inuent fond deuotions: let vs for our part learne to know, that whatſoeuer is of mans deuiſing, is playne deceit, and euen the high way to leade vs to deſtruction: and that the onely way to pleaſe God and to make our lyfe allowable before him, is ſimply to obey his worde, & to ſubmit our ſelues to him, whē he prouoketh vs to repentance, aſſuring our ſelues that it is the very meanes alſo whereby we may obteyne ſaluation, though wee haue deſerued to periſhe a hundred thowſand times.

Now let vs kneele downe in the preſence of our good God with acknowledgement of our ſins, praying him to make vs feele them better than we haue done heretofore, yea euen in ſuch wiſe, as hauing condemned our ſelues for them, wee may not forbeare to reſt vppon his promiſes, and to reſorte vnto him, and to pray vnto him, that hee may haue pitie vppon vs, as hee that deſireth not the death of ſinners, but that they ſhould come home againe to him, for aſmuch as hee is ready to admit them to the ſaluation which hee hath promiſed to his children. Wherefore let vs repayre vnto him, euen in the name of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, and if wee conuert not at the very firſt as ſoone as hee chaſtiſeth vs, let vs pray him to make vs to proceede in true repentaunce from day to day, by forſaking the vice that is in vs, ſo as he may gouerne vs by his holy ſpirit, and the worlde may perceiue that Gods word hath ſuch authoritie ouer vs, as we deſire nothing but to faſhion our ſelues all wholly thereafter. That it may pleaſe him to grant this grace, not onelie to vs, but alſo to all people and nations of the earth, &c.

On Tewſday the iiii. of Iune. 1555.

The xxvii. Sermon, which is the ninth vpon the fourth Chapter.

32 For inquire thou nowe of the daies paſt, which haue beene before thee, ſince the day that God created man vpon the earth, and from the one end of heauen vnto the other, if euer there were done ſo great a thing as this, or if euer the like thing haue beene heard of.

33 Was there euer anie Nation that hath heard the voice of God ſpeaking out of the middes of fire, as thou haſt heard and yet continueſt aliue?

34 Or was there euer anie God, that aſſaied to goe and take him a people from the middes of another people, by temptations, ſignes, and wonders, by warres and ſtrong hand, by ſtretched out arme and great terribleneſſe, as the Lord your God hath done in Egypt before your eies?

35 He hath made thee to ſee them, to the intent thou ſhouldeſt knowe that the Lord is God, and that there is none other but onelie he.

ALthough that all the thinges that euer God did, ought to ſerue for our learning, & wee knowe not any thing but by auncient ſtories: yet the later that thinges were done, ſo much the better ought they to touch vs. And although wee ought to profit our ſelues by Gods workes when wee beholde them a farre of: yet ought they to moue vs much more, when they touch our ſelues and concerne our owne perſons. If a thing be tolde vs, which wee neuer ſawe: yet ought the ſtorie to ſerue to waken vs. But if wee bee able to beare witneſſe of it our ſelues, ſo as our eyes haue ſeene it, and wee haue not had it by other mens report, but euery of vs is able to auowe it by his owne experience: ought wee not to bee much better and muche more aſſuredly taught by it? In like caſe is it when any of vs ſhall haue ſeene or perceiued any worke of God: for he ought to be touched ſo much the more to the quick. In the ſelfeſame reſpect doth Moſes now ſpeake vnto the people, Looke about thee, inquire of the auncient tymes ſee whether thou canſt finde that euer there haue bin any ſuch wonders wrought ſince the creation of the world, as God hath done in thy ſight. Seeing it is ſo, thine vnthankfulneſſe ſhalbe the more vnexcuſable, if thou acknowledge not ſo great a benefite, by perſwading thy ſelfe fully, that there is none other God than the ſame that hath vttered himſelfe to thee, & hath giuen thee ſo euident and infallible tokens of his maieſtie. Therefore haue a regard to ſerue the God that hath purchaſed thee: for thou canſt not henceforth alledge any cauſe of ignorance. Now by the way we haue to marke, ỹ the intent of Moſes is, to put a difference here betweene ỹ God of Iſrael, & all those that were worshipped [for Gods] in the world: and not without cause. For when men haue forged any God to themselues, they may well toyle themselues to serue him, but it shall turne to their condemnation. Why so? Because they rob God of the honor that belongs to him, to giue it to a creature or rather to a shadowe. For if wee make idols, they bee not worthy to bee reckoned among Gods creatures. If wee imagine of God after our owne lyking: it is but vanitie and leasing. So then, when men worship the thing that they haue conceiued in their own 1.Cor.8,4. fãsie: they conuey the glory of ỹ liuing God, not only to creatures, but also to that which is nothing at all. Therefore it is very expedient for vs to knowe which is the true God, that wee may worship him. For euen at that time the world was peruerted, so as al men went wãdring in their owne superstitions. Although God manifested himselfe so many wayes: yet notwithstanding, lyke as the world was blinde and ceased not to intangle it selfe in all errors: so euery man forged idols to himselfe. True it is, that all men sayd, wee haue a religion, and our intent is to serue God: but yet for all that, there was no soundnesse, there was no vnder-

Gen.17.7. Exod.19,6. 1.Pet,2.9. standing among them. Behold, God gathered his people together, accordingly as he had chosẽ ỹ house of Abraham, and according to his saying ỹ the same should be to him a holy linage and dedicated to his seruice. Seeing then that the Iewes were not mingled with the other nations of the earth: they should haue considered that they ought not to haue had any fellowship with the vnbelieuers, so as their religion should haue beene intangled and doubtfull: but that being sanctifyed to the maker of heauen and earth, they should haue worshipped him purely, and submitted themselues vnder his obeysance. Now then wee haue here the counsell of Moses, or rather the counsel which ỹ holy Ghost intended to vtter in speaking here by his mouth. And (as I haue told you) that this doctrine is very profitable, so ought wee to be the more heedfull in marking it. For naturallie wee be inclined to goe astray. Insomuch that although wee had no occasions before our eies: yet would cuerie of vs deceiue and beguile himselfe. And againe, the diuell ceaseth not to offer vs many illusions, to dazle our wittes withall, and to make vs swarue from the right and pure religion. Seeing then that there is such vice in vs, and that wee bee hemmed in on all sides with so many daungers: let vs learn to make our profit by his doctrine.

True it is that the thing cannot bee sayd to vs nowadayes, which Moses telleth the people of Israel here: for Gods shewing of himselfe to vs, or his stretching out of his arme to deliuer vs, hath not bin of any late continuance of time, as was his speaking to that people from the middest of the fire: but yet neuertheless the same exhortation belongeth vnto vs also. And why? For Gods choosing of the people of Israell to himselfe, and his declaring of his wonderfull power for the recouerie of them, was not to the end that they shoulde knowe him and worship him as the true God, by the space of a hundred yeeres onely: but to the intent that the remembraunce of the same redemption shoulde continue to the worlds end. Then let vs marke well that Gods deliuering of the children of Abraham from the bondage of Egypt, was to the ende that wee also in these dayes shoulde take him for our true GOD which hath all power in his hand, which disposeth of his creatures, and which created the worlde and gouerneth it. Sith it is so, although our eyes haue not seene the miracles that are rehearsed here: yet ought wee to make our profite of them, and to bee edifyed by them, so as wee may bee sure that wee haue not an vncertaine GOD, nor a religion forged at aladuenture, or at the pleasure of men: but that it is the very true GOD, who hath giuen so good proofe of his power at once already, as wee haue no cause to doubt of him, or to think his maiestie darksome, or to stand skanning whether hee ought to haue superioritie and preheminence or no. For hee hath shewed that all the world is his, and that all that euer was worshipped at that time in the world, was but idols. Thus yee see how this text is to bee taken that wee may apply it to our owne profite. For it is not enough for vs to knowe what Moses ment in speaking to the people of Israell: but we must vnderstand lykewise, whereto the same doctrine serueth vs at this day, so as we may receiue instruction by it.

Now before wee passe any further, let vs marke the wordes that are set downe here. Inquire (sayth Moses) of the dayes of olde time, since God created man vppon the earth. Here hee sheweth vs that our negligence is partly the cause that wee knowe not God. True it is that wee cannot atteyne to his high maiestie by our owne wit: for our sight is too short. Nay (which more is) not onely Gods highnesse is incomprehensible to vs: but also when we think to come neere him, it ouerwhelmeth vs. We be blind wretches that haue nothing but darkenesse in vs: and God in respect of himselfe dwelleth in vnapprochable lyght. But yet for all that, if it bee well and throughly considered and looked to: it will appeare that men make none account of seeking 1.Tim,6.16
GOD, but forslowe it as a thing of no profite. So then let vs marke the exhortation that is made here, that at leastwise when God worketh, wee may apply all our wittes earnestly to consider it, and that if there be the lyke indeuour in vs as wee make reckoning of, wee may preferre that before all other thinges. For what a thing is it if wee knowe not him that made vs and fashioned vs, and by whose power we haue our being still? When wee shall haue raunged about heauen and earth, and yet know not God: must wee not needes bee wretched? Now then let vs learne to bee more diligent to know God and religion than wee haue bin. And this stretcheth very farre. For we see how we be sharpesighted and forecasting in worldely thinges, and we spare no paines in ỹ behalfe. If ỹ case cõcerne our own cõmoditie or profit: we neede no great calling on, for nature leadeth vs thereunto.

But

But when wee ſhould go to Godward, and ſeeke his will: then wee haue no leaſure, euerie of vs findeth an excuſe, wee bee letted about other things. And is not this a token of great naughtineſſe? So much the more therefore ought wee to come backe to that which is tolde vs here: namely that wee bee ſo farre of from being excuſed now adayes: that if wee bee negligent and ſeeke not after God, nor inquire how things goe, nor what God hath done, nor what he teacheth in his Church: wee ſhall bee condemned by this text. For it is ſaid, Inquire of the dayes of olde time, ſince God created the world. True it is that all can not bee ſo great Clerkes as to knowe all thinges that were requiſite: but yet ought wee not to ſleepe in that behalfe, as though the knowing of God were a thing of no value. Therefore let vs learne to place it in higheſt degree, ſo as all the reſt of our cares and buſineſſes may bee put vnder it as inferiour to it, as good reaſon woulde that they ſhould be. Now Moſes ſaieth expreſſely, ſince God created man vppon the earth, bicauſe that that people had bin taught concerning the creation of the world. But that was not knowen eueriwhere: inſomuch that when thoſe which tooke themſelues to bee verie wiſe, were demaunded how long it was ago ſince the worlde was created: ſome woulde make it ſix times as long ago, and otherſome thirtie times. Wherein it appeareth how God puniſhed their ſhamefull negligence. And whereof came it that mē knew not when the world was created: but that they were contented to ſhut their eyes, and to knowe nothing that had bene done? Wherefore ſeeing that men do wilfully ſhun inſtruction: it is good reaſon that God ſhould giue them ouer to ſuch beaſtlineſſe, as they ſhoulde not knowe from whence they came, nor what their original was, but bee vtterly dulled. And for the ſame cauſe Moſes ſpeaking to the people whom God had reſerued to himſelfe, did put them in remembraunce of the day wherein man was created vppon the earth.

Nowe he ſaieth, Inquire from the one end of heauen to the other, to wit if euer there were ſo great a thing, or if euer man heard of the like. After he hath ſpoken of the time, nowe he ſpeaketh of the places. As if he ſhould ſay, If folke will make good inquiſition, it is not ynough for them to knowe what thinges God hath ſhewed to themſelues: but it were meete for them to ſeeke about euery where, and to marke well what they finde, and to call to minde the things that haue bene done in farre Countries. Therefore conſider well (ſaieth he) what hath bin done from the one end of the heauen to the other. And this is it that I ſayde afore, namely that wee muſt profit our ſelues by all Gods workes, and although we behold them not with our eyes, yet if wee doe but heare of them, and tidings is brought vs of them from a farre, wee muſt honour God in them. In deede if wee bee witneſſes of them, they ought to touche vs ſo much the more. But yet howſoeuer the caſe ſtande, wee ought to doe our indeuour to knowe the things that haue bin done in ſtraunge Countries, according as is ſaid here. And when as Moſes ſaieth, ſo great a thing: thereby he ſheweth that the more that God manifeſteth his power: the more ought wee to be rauiſhed with wonderment. In deede there is no worke of God ſo ſmall, which ought not to moue vs to acknowledge ſome token of his Maieſtie therein. If wee doe but looke vpon a flie: ſurely wee haue there wherefore to magnifie God. If wee ſee but the ſlip of an herb, or any other thing bee it neuer ſo little: wee haue therein whereby wee ought to acknowledge the wonderfull workemanſhip of God. But if he doe moreouer worke much more euident myracles, ought not all our wittes to be much more occupied or ſpent about them? Whē God doeth after a ſort alter the order of nature, and worketh after a new and vnaccuſtomed maner: is it not all one as if he ſhould rebuke vs for our negligence and ſay vnto vs: Seeing you knewe mee not for God by the accuſtomed order of nature, at leaſtwiſe thinke vpon mee now when I goe to worke after another ſtraunge faſhion, and conſider ye whether I bee God or no. Thus ye ſee what Moſes meant by ſaying, There was neuer yet ſo great a thing, neither was there euer the like heard of. Let vs marke well therefore that to attaine to the right knowledge of God, when wee haue raunged vp and downe through the whole world, and ſpent all our wittes in looking vpon al things whether they be great or ſmall: if God giue vs any ſuch inclings of his Maieſtie as may mooue vs more than ordinarie, we muſt be wholly rauiſhed thereat, and yeeld him the honour that is due vnto him. And how that ought to be done, it ſhall be declared more plainely anon: for as nowe I doe but goe through the wordes of Moſes ſeuerally as they lie.

He ſaieth afterward, Was there euer any people that heard the voyce of their God ſpeaking out of the middes of fire, as thou haſt done, and yet continueſt aliue? Here among other things Moſes alledgeth ỹ God had ſpoken to his people out of the mids of fire. For it was a viſible ſigne of Gods Maieſtie, ſo as it was not for them to doubt any more whether he were ỹ liuing God, ſeeing they heard his voyce thundering from heauen, and therewithall ſawe a great thicke cloud and a flaming fire. Nowe ſeeing that this appeared to them: was it for them to inquire any more whether it were God or no? No verily: for the thing was moſt euident. And furthermore, here Moſes vpbraideth the people couertly with their leawdneſſe, if they continue ſlowe ſtill in doing homage to the liuing God, ſeeing that all the heathen were inclined yea and wilfully wedded to their ſuperſtitions, and yet knewe no cauſe why. For had the Heathen men bene asked by what warrant they worſhipped their idoles: they would haue anſwered, by reaſon of their myracles. Yea, but what maner of miracles were they? fantaſticall imaginations, diueliſh illuſions, and inchauntmentes. But beholde, Moſes ſpeaketh here of a thing that was knowen: the hearers of it were preſent to beare witneſſe of it. For he ſaieth, ye heard the voyce of your God from out of the middes of fire. Seeing that your GOD hath ſhewed himſelfe to you ſo familiarly: there remaines no excuſe for you, if you worſhip him not as your GOD. Either ye muſt forſake him through wilfull rebellion, or elſe ye muſt needes graunt that there is neither power, Maieſtie, nor glorie in the whole worlde, other than that which was ſhewed vnto you, when the lawe was giuen you.

But let vs marke by the way, that Moſes matcheth here the worde with the myracles. For the myracles had booted them nothing at all, if doctrine had not bene matched therewith, as hath beene touched heretofore. But yet is it good for vs to bee put in minde of it againe, and it is not for nought alſo that the holy Ghoſt repeateth it in this text: and wee ſhall ſee it mentioned yet againe hereafter. If the people of Iſrael had but onely had ſome viſions, to doe them to vnderſtand which was the liuing God that had brought them out of the lande of Egypt, and in the meane whyle had bene let alone in their ignoraunce, ſo as they had had no lawe, no rule, no promiſe of ſaluation, no inſtruction of Religion: all the reſt had beene to no purpoſe. It is true that they might haue liued, being once deliuered from bondage: but what had the end of it bene? They had become but a barbarous people, and they had corrupted themſelues with ſuperſtitions as the Gentiles did. But when as God, (after his declaring of himſelfe vnto them, and after his ſhewing of his Maieſtie vnto them as it were in a myrrour or rather a liuely picture) did alſo teache them and giue them a ſure Lawe: he ledde them into a Religion that was ſacred and holy. And ſo yee ſee that God gaue them ſuch an euidence as was fitte for their ſaluation.

Deut. 4. 36.

Now remaineth how Moſes addeth, That the people hauing heard Gods voyce, continued ſtill aliue. Whereby he doeth vs to vnderſtande: that it is a ſpeciall grace of God that wee bee not conſumed by his preſence and by his worde. It is ſaide that the mountaines melt at the ſight of him. And againe, that if he doe but caſt his eye vpon the whole earth, it quaketh. For Gods Maieſtie in it ſelfe is ſo terrible, as it were ynough to ſink the whole worlde. When he ſpeaketh, his voyce doeth not onely ſcare all creatures, but alſo vtterly diſmay them, yea and euen bring them to nothing. Therefore it is a great myracle, that mortall men being ſo frayle and brickle, and being no better than a ſhadowe: are inabled to heare Gods voyce, and yet are not conſumed thereby. So then, Moſes ſheweth here, ỳ God did not onely make the people of Iſrael to perceiue his Maieſtie & heauenly power: but alſo gaue thẽ a louing taſte of his grace and goodneſſe therewithal, to the intent they ſhould not be too much diſmaied at it, but rather haue their wits at libertie and well ſetled to acknowledge, Beholde, my God hath ſhewed himſelf to mee, & therefore it is good reaſon ỳ I ſhoulde ſerue him and ſubmit my ſelf wholly vnto him. Thus in effect wee ſee two things: wherof the one is that God ſhewed not himſelfe to his people without teaching thẽ by his word: & the other is, ỳ the ſame word was not only ſo warranted as they might know it to be the word of God, and ſubmit themſelues vnto it: but alſo was made ſweete & amiable ſo farre forth as was requiſite. The people could not but bee partly afraide (as I haue declared alreadie) when they perceiued the Maieſtie of God: but yet howſoeuer they fared, God did ſo moderate his rigour, as they perceiued him to be their father in that he ſhewed them ſuch reaſon.

Pſal. 68. 9. & 97. 4 5. and 114 7. Pſal. 5. 3.

Moſes addeth immediatly, Was there euer any God that tooke vppon him to bring a people from among other people, by temptations, ſignes, wonders, warres, and a ſtretched out arme, as thou knoweſt that thy God hath done in bringing thee out of Egypt? Here Moſes purpoſeth expreſſely to confirme the people in the Religion that had bin giuen them, to the intent they ſhoulde not yeeld themſelues to any of the great nomber of ſuperſtitions that raigned eueriwhere at the ſame time, as wee bee commonly wont to doe. Truely if a people haue auncient cuſtomes, they bee loth to forgo them. And why? Bicauſe pride maketh vs to like well of the thinges that growe in our owne gardine, (as they ſay:) and to our ſeeming, all that euer other men haue is nothing in compariſon of that [which is our owne.] But if God call vs to him, and teach vs faithfully what we haue to doe: we be ſo wildheaded as we cannot abide the things that are ſhewed vs. We fall to ſeeking of this & that: behold (ſay we,) in ſuch a Countrie there is ſuch a cuſtome & ſuch a faſhion: & why ſhould not wee haue the ſame as well as they? Alſo wee ſee howe the vnbeleeuers vpbraide Gods children that they will needes bee too wiſe, if they hold themſelues in awe vnder Gods word. What is it that the Papiſts do caſt vs in the teeth withall now adayes? Theſe are the men (ſay they) which take vpon them to renew the world, they will needes be ſingular by themſelues, as though they had nothing at all to doe with the reſt of mankinde. For this cauſe doeth Moſes ſay here, Paſſe not you for it though you ſee ſo manye Nations haue diuers faſhions, ſo as euery of thẽ hath a Religion contrarie to yours, and that you be alone by your ſelues. For why? Your God hath choſen you in ſuch ſort, as he hath ſhewed you that ye may bee bold to defie all other nations. For hath it euer come to paſſe, that any god hath taken vppon him to conuey a people from out of the mids of another people? Seeing then that you are ſo ſhooled out, haue yee not a ſure warrant that GOD will not haue you to mingle your ſelues with other Nations? Therefore if ye haue an eye to Gods bringing of you out of the lande of Egypt, ye ſhall alwaies bee put in minde, that the Religion which ye hold of him is good and holy, and ye may hold ſcorne of all other religions in the world. And moreouer, although other nations bee greater than you: yet may ye be bold to ſpit at their ſuperſtitions. For God hath ſufficiently ſhewed, that he hath not giuen you his Lawes and Ordinances in vaine. And why? For he hath brought you out by your ſelues: which neuer befell to any people of the world but you.

And to the end that theſe things ſhould bee the better eſteemed: Moſes ſheweth here, that the

the ſaid deliuerance had no common thing in it. For it was wrought (ſaieth he) by temptations, ſignes, wonders, warres, ſtrong hand, and ſtretched out arme. When as he ſaieth, by temptations: he meaneth that the proofes were ſo notable, as the matter ought to be out of all crie. Seeing then that God had giuen them ſo many tokens: was it not ynough to lay it wide open to them, that the idols of Egypt were nothing, and that Pharao with all his power was vnable to doe any thing againſt ỹ God of Abraham? True it is that the woordes Signes and wonders import the ſelfe ſame thing: but yet is it not without cauſe that Moſes vſeth ſuch diuerſitie of termes: And why ſo? For wee ſee howe lightly men ouerpaſſe Gods woorkes, and make verie ſlender reckening of them. Therefore was it requiſite that Moſes ſhoulde vſe ſuch termes and ſpeeche, to ſet the more eſtimation vppon the excellent greatneſſe of the thinges that God had done in Egypt. Beholde, (ſaieth he,) thy God hath giuen thee ſignes and wonders, he hath vſed his ſtrong hand & ſtretched out his arme, in deliuering thee from ſuch bondage: and therefore know thou thereby that he hath ſufficiently warranted his Lawe, and the rule whereby he will haue thee to liue, & whereunto he hath put thee in ſubiection.

Now he preſently addeth thereunto, That this was done before their eyes, ſo as they were certified ỹ GOD was their maker, and that he onely was the true GOD, and that there was none other God before him. Here againe Moſes intendeth to prooue the people the more vnthankefull, if they profited not themſelues by the things that they knewe by experience. Thine eyes (ſaieth he) are witneſſes of it. As if hee ſhoulde ſay, If God of his gratious goodneſſe did but ſend thee meſſengers to tell thee of ỹ things that he had done: yet oughteſt thou to receiue the thinges that were told thee. But now it is not any other bodie that maketh report of them vnto thee: but euen thy God himſelfe hath ſhewed them vnto thee, and therfore there is no further excuſe for thee, for it hath bin ſhewed euen to the ſight of thine eye: and what more? that the Lord is the true God, (ſaieth he) and that there is none other but onely he. Here wee haue the ſame thing to marke which hath bin touched alreadie: namely that Moſes ſpeaketh not ſimply of myracles or wonders, as it were to make a rehearſall of them: but alſo ſheweth the ende whereto they tend, which is ỹ God ſhould be magnified. And it is a verie profitable leſſon, [to vnderſtand] that when we haue ſuch thinges, wee muſt learne in any wiſe to glorifie our God by them. And had this point bene well obſerued, the wretched world had not bene turned aſide to ſo many ſuperſtitions as it hath bin, vnder colour of falſe myracles. Whereof commeth it that creatures are worſhipped in Poperie, but vnder the colour of falſe myracles? O (ſay they) ſuch a Saint hath done a myracle. And vnder ỹ colour Gods glory muſt be diminiſhed, inſomuch that looke how many myracles there are, ſo many ſtops are there to wholde the wretched world from comming vnto God, and they be euē fond gaſingſtocks alſo to make men ſtand poring vpon ỹ creatures. Therefore doth it ſtand vs on hād to mark the things ſo much the better, which are told vs here by Moſes: that is to wit ỹ by myracles God wil haue himſelf only to be knowē without matching of any companion wᵗ him. He will haue his glory to ſhine foorth in ſuch wiſe, as men ſhall ſtoope to him alone, and yeeld him all ỹ preheminence. To bee ſhort, (as Moſes ſaith here) he will haue men to know that there is none other but he, neither aboue nor beneath. According whereunto he forwarneth vs here to make any vndergods or meanegods, and doeth vs to vnderſtand that the ſoueraigne God will keepe his ſtate ſtill, ſo as he will not abyde that men ſhall in any wiſe abaſe it, nor diminiſh his Maieſtie, nor part his offices among his creatures, to allot any peece or portion of it, bee it neuer ſo ſmall, to one or other: No no, he will continue alone by himſelf. Thus ye ſee what we haue to marke in effect as concerning thoſe wordes of Moſes.

But nowe let vs come backe againe to make a ſhort concluſion of the chiefe matter which I haue touched: which is, that Gods declaring of his ſtrength and power in ſuch wiſe, was to the intent he might be diſcerned from all the idoles of the world, and that his people might be tyed to the religiō that he had deliuered thē. Neuertheleſſe it belongeth to vs alſo, and in verie deed it behoueth vs to apply it to our ſelues. And ſurely ſeeing that God hath authorized his lawe by ſo many myracles: let vs aſſure our ſelues ỹ he deliuered not a doctrine of two or three dais, but ſuch a one as ſhould continue for euer: in ſo much that the ratifying which he added vnto it, ought to haue full force euen among vs at this day. Is Gods Lawe abated, I meane as in reſpect of the ſubſtance? It is true that the Ceremonies are no more in vſe: they were all laide downe at the comming of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt. But as for the doctrine of the Lawe, which containeth the promiſes of ſaluatiō, the couenant wherby God hath choſen thoſe whō he will haue to be of his Church, ỹ records of ỹ forgiuenes of our ſinnes, and finally his will to ſhewe vs the true rule of good life: all this continueth ſtill, and ſhall continue to the worldes ende. Wherefore let vs marke well that all the myracles and wonders ỹ were wrought in deliuering the people of Iſrael out of Egypt, doe ſerue vs at this day for a confirmation to cauſe vs to receiue Gods Lawe with all reuerence, and to aſſure and warrant vs that it is not a doctrine of mans deuiſe, but of Gods owne thundering down from heauen. Let that ſerue for one point.

Eph. 2. 15. Col. 2. 14. He. 9. 10. 11 Mat. 5. 17. 18.

But yet notwithſtanding, wee haue a greater confirmation giuen vs in our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt. For God hath appeared more viſibly in him, than he did to the fathers in the time of the Lawe. Wee knowe that the whole fulneſſe of the Godhead dwelleth in Ieſus Chriſt, and that the ſame hath bene knowen wel ynough in him. Sith it is ſo then: we may better aſſure our ſelues now adayes, than the Iewes could in their time, that wee haue one God, of whome wee ought not to doubt, and that we haue ſuch a Religion as was not inuented by man, and that wee ought not to goe at all aduenture, but that wee haue a moſt ſure way to walke in. And here ye ſee whereof wee ought to glorie. For ſurely it is an ineſtimable benefite, that wee ſtand not in a mamering, to ſay, I would faine doe well but I wote not how: but are fully perſwaded that God alloweth our doings, and that wee haue to doe with the liuing God: and may take vppon vs to compare our ſelues with all the wretched idolaters and infidels throughout the whole world. True it is that the Papiſtes pretend to worſhip the ſame God that wee doe: but wee ſee how they ſwarue from Gods worde. And therefore it ſtandeth vs on hand to put the thing in vre which I haue ſpoken of heretofore: that is to wit, that it is not ynough for vs to conceiue ſome Maieſtie of God, but we muſt alſo learne which is he, to the intent wee wander not away in our owne imaginations. For that is the thing wherein we differ from the Papiſtes and the Iewes. The Iewes can ſay well ynough that they worſhip ỹ God of Abraham, and that they haue the lawe that was giuen by Moſes: but in the meane while they haue renounced Ieſus Chriſt who is the end of the law, and they haue the vaile that blindfolderh their eyes, & moreouer they haue ſo peruerted Gods ſeruice, that they be ſtraied quite and cleane frō the right way. Likewiſe the Papiſtes will ſay that they worſhip God, and him whom he hath ſent to be the Redeemer of the world: but yet for all that, men ſee how they haue tranſſigured God, and aboliſhed his ſeruice, & made a hotchpotch of all the ſuperſtitions of the Heathen, with the Religion that God ordained. To be ſhort, there is nothing but vncleannes among them in that behalfe. In reſpect whereof, ye ſee wee ought ſo much the more to acknowledge the infinite grace of our God towardes vs, in that he hath ſo ſhooled vs out frō among the vnbeleeuers. And wee muſt alſo marke the meane: which is, that wee haue not onely the myracles to proue that there is a God in heauen: but alſo that doctrine wherein God ſheweth himſelfe fully to vs, to the intent wee ſhould knowe him, and not haue our eyes bleared any more, nor runne rouing here and there: but follow the doctrine that our God hath giuen vs, and whereby it is his will to draw vs to him.

Rom. 10. 4. 2. Cor. 3. 15.

Thus yee ſee that the meane for vs to put this ſaying of Moſeſes in vre, is not to looke onely to the myracles that haue bene wrought for the ratifying of the Lawe: but to goe to the Goſpell, and there to perceiue that God hath ſhewed himſelfe to vs againe in farre greater perfection than he did to ỹ fathers of olde time. Beſides this, let vs beare in minde the warning that I ſpake of afore: namely that when we once knowe the myracles whereby God vouchſafed to confirme his Maieſtie: we muſt repaire to his worde, aſſuring our ſelues that that is the verie meane whereby God draweth vs to him. Therefore whenſoeuer we haue Gods word preached vnto vs, let vs vnderſtand that it is a confirmation to aſſure vs that he raigneth ouer vs. And therefore let vs take hecde that wee make our profit thereby, ſeeing he graunteth vs this grace and priuiledge, which (as we ſee) is not common to all men. And let vs pray him to ſeale the doctrine in our heartes by his holy ſpirit, which we heare with our fleſhie eares, that ſeeing he hath once called vs to the knowing of him, he will increaſe the ſame more and more, and ſo guide vs as we may rather looke vp to heauen than pore vpon the creatures and things that are mortall. Therefore let vs haue a conſtant and inuincible fayth in God which hath once manifeſted him ſelfe to vs, ſo as wee may defie Satan and all the abuſes and errours that haue bene brought in by men.

Ephe. 1. 3.

According to this holy doctrine wee will caſt our ſelues downe in the preſence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faults, praying him to make vs ſo to feele them, as it may bring vs to true repentance: and wee therewithall acknowledge the grace and benefites which he hath powred out vpon vs, ſo as we may know better to make our profit by them than we haue done, and not bee negligent in conſidering his workes, but diligent therein as becommeth vs: and moreouer ſo receiue the doctrine ỹ is dayly preached vnto vs, as wee may apply our eyes to the diſcerning of the things that are dayly ſhewed vs, and our good God make vs to finde his power and goodneſſe by experience, as he hath done to others in all ages, that we may bee the better confirmed in the loue and obedience which wee owe him, ſo as wee may neuer be turned from it whatſoeuer the Diuell practiſe to turne vs away from it. That it may pleaſe him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs but alſo to all people and nations of the earth, &c.

On Wedneſday the v. of Iune. 1555.

The xxviij. Sermon, which is the tenth vpon the fourth Chapter.

36 He made thee to heare his voice from heauen, to inſtruct thee withall: and on earth he ſhewed thee his great fire, & thou heardeſt his words out of the middeſt of the fire.

37 Becauſe he loued thy fathers and choſe their ſeede after them, hee made thee to come out of Egypt in his preſence, by his great power:

38 To driue out Nations before thee, greater and mightier than thou, to bring thee in, and to giue thee their lands to inherit, as is ſeene this day.

I Told you heretofore that if God had but only wrought myracles when he brought his people out of Egypt, it would haue beene to ſmall purpoſe: for they had had no inſtruction to leade them to right knowledge. But in aſmuch as his word was matched with them, now there wanted nothing at all. And that is the cauſe why Moſes exhorteth the people yet againe, to conſider howe it is long of none but themſelues that they know not God, yea euen to attaine to the heritage, not onely of the land of promiſe, but alſo of the kingdome of heauen. Furthermore he telleth them that Gods word had ſuch maieſtie, as the people had no cauſe to doubt but it was God that ſpake it. Aſſure thy ſelfe (ſaith he) that the voice which thou herdeſt was not a humain or earthly voice: but thy God ſpake as it were from heauen. It is true that the voyce ſounded from the middes of the fire that was ſeene vpon the mountaine: but here Moſes meaneth that the doctrine was not darke, foraſmuch as God gaue certaine ſignes of his maieſtie, to the ende that the peoples faith might bee aſſured throughly. And for the ſame cauſe doeth he vſe the worde inſtruction, which ſignifieth not onely to teach with words, but alſo to traine on with often chaſtiſement. As if he ſhould ſay, thy God in this caſe hath as it were helde thee in awe, ſo as it is not nowe lawfull for thee to deſpiſe his lawe as though it came from an vncertaine place. For why? It hath ſoueraine authoritie, thou canſt not but thereby perceiue that God hath declared himſelfe to thee, to the intét thou ſhouldeſt worſhip his maieſtie and do him homage. Now then we ſee that the effect of the thinges which Moſes declareth heere to the Iewes, is that God had giuen them viſible ſignes at hande, and as it were familiarly, to the ende that his worde ſhoulde haue due reuerence, and bee receiued obediently, and all things bee done to the inſtruction of the people. And although Moſes rehearſe but the things ỹ were done in mount Horeb, where the lawe was put forth: yet may we gather a general doctrine thereof. For wee ſee howe God ſtoopeth to our infirmitie. Becauſe we cannot mount ſo high as to come vnto him, he cõmeth down to our ſlender capacitie. Seing that he doeth ſo, ought not we to bẽ the more prouoked to ſubmitte our ſelues to him? and if wee doe it not, ſhall it not bee caſt in our teeth, that there was no lette in him that wee had not meanes and helpes to inſtruct vs with all? But what for that? In ſteede of comming to God, we haue turned our backe vppon him and rebelled againſt him. Wherfore let vs conſider after what manner God applieth himſelfe to our rudeneſſe, that wee may bee the more moued to reſort vnto him. And beſides that, let vs referre all thinges to the ſame ende that Moſes noteth heere: which is, ỹ foraſmuch as God is ſo gracious to vs as to ſhewe vs his truth: wee muſt imbrace it, aſſuring our ſelues that it groweth not in the worlde, but commeth from heauen. Therefore let the doctrine of ſaluation be receiued among vs with al obedience. For elſe it is to no purpoſe for vs to proteſt that we call vppon God and are willing to honor and ſerue him. For the prooſe that he requireth therof, is that we ſhould hearken quietly to his worde, and that our faith ſhould bee ſetled, ſo as wee reſemble not the vnbeleeuers, who are alwayes doubting: but ſtande vpon this ſure foundation, that it is God which ſpeaketh it, & therefore it is not lawful for vs to reply againſt it, but wee muſt ſubmit our ſelues wholly in all points to ỹ which he ſaith. Thus yee ſee what we haue remember vpon this place.

And herewithall let vs marke when this was treated of. For it is not without cauſe that Moſes ſpeaketh of this inſtruction. Why ſo? For if wee bee not ſubdewed, it is hard for vs to ſubmit our ſelues to God: nay rather we draw cleane backe from him. Therefore muſt our Lorde bee faine to correct this loftineſſe in vs: and when he ſeeth vs after that ſort, either rebellious, or ſtubborne, or that wee bee dull vppon the ſpurre: hee muſt vſe ſuch meanes as hee knoweth to bee fit to reclaime vs withall. Wee ſee howe Moſes ſaieth heere, that the wonders which were wrought at the publiſhing of the Lawe, ſerued as it were for a nurturing, to the intent that the people ſhoulde no more be ſo vnruly as they had beene before, but become more fitte to be taught. But this vice reigned not among the Iewes onely: it is to be found continually among al men. Therfore let vs learne to make our own profite of the thinges that our Lorde hath giuen vs for the authoriſing of his word, that we play not the wood beaſtes, but behaue our ſelues as meek ſheepe and lambes, to hearken to the voice of our ſhepherd. This is the thing in effect, which wee haue to gather vpon this place.

And now he ſaith, Becauſe God loued thy fathers, therefore hath he choſen their ſeedes after them: howbeit that he ſay, thy ſeede after him. Moſes chaungeth here the number, and not without cauſe: for after he had ſpoken of the fathers, hee returneth to one alone, that is to wit, to Abraham, becauſe it was he with whom God made the couenant. And againe it ſcrueth to magnifie the grace that is mentioned here, as ſhalbe declared anon more at large. The effect of ỹ thing ỹ Moſes intendeth to tell ỹ people, is that it is a great ſhame for thẽ and ỹ they be vnexcuſable, if they know not the goodnes of their God. And why? Becauſe God of his owne free mercy choſe thẽ, not for that they were better than other nations, (as ſhalbe ſhewed more at length hereafter) or for that there was more noblenes, worthines or vertue in them: but for that it pleaſed him to loue their fathers. Nowe we ſee that the meaning of Moſes was as if he ſhold haue ſaid thus: You haue heere an ineſtimable benefite aboue all people, namely that God vouchſafeth to reigne among you, that he hath ſanctified you to himſelfe, that you bee his Churche, that you bee his flocke, that you bee his children, and (as it is ſaide in another place,) that you be a kingly prieſthood. Aſſure your ſelues this is not giuen you for any deſert of yours, for haue you deſerued aught at Gods hand? Are ye better than al ỹ reſt of the world?

worlde? No: why then hath God giuen you ſuch priuiledge? Not for any thing that he hath foũd in you: but becauſe it pleaſed him of his owne good will. And whereof came that? Euen of his chooſing of your forefathers. You were choſen of him before you were borne. And what was the cauſe that he choſe your forefathers? Euen his owne loue, (ſaith he): that is to ſay, becauſe hee marked them of his owne free mercie, to ſhoule them out from the reſt of the world: yea euen at ſuch time as Abraham was barren, and alreadie ſtriken in yeeres, and as good as decayed and halfe deade, when as yet hee had no iſſue at all. And yet for all this, God choſe him, ſo as that poore old fellowe became the welſpring of your forefathers. Seeing then that God hath choſen you after ſuch a ſort, yee ſee there is none other cauſe of the comming of ſaluation vnto you, but onely his meere goodneſſe. Now therefore conſider how much you be bound to your God, and bee not vnthankfull to him, neither ſuffer ſuch a benefite to ſlip from you, ſo as yee ſhould be bereft thereof through your owne lewdnes and vnthankfulnes. This in effect is the doctrine that is contcined in this place.

Rom.4.19. Hebr.11.12.

Nowe, that we may fare the better by it, wee haue to marke firſt of all, that when God calleth vs to be of his Church, ſo as he maketh vs partakers of the Goſpell, and of the things depending vpon the ſame: it is not for ỹ we went to him aforehãd, but becauſe he hath choſé vs. The word Choſe is ſet down here to expreſſe the better that that thing came not of the people themſelues, but that God was the firſt beginner therof. That is one point which wee ought to marke wel. For it is not onely here that the holy Ghoſt ſpeaketh thereof: but all the whole ſcripture is full of that doctrine: namely, of telling vs that we muſt not ſeeke the cauſe of our ſaluation in our ſelues, as who ſhoulde ſay wee were better than other men. Wee ſee that God giueth not his graces indifferently to all men: but that to ſet the greater ſhewe vppon his goodneſſe, hee giueth that thing to one man which hee denieth to another. Wee ſee that moſt men are deſtitute of the Goſpell at this day: and we ſee that euen where it is preached, moſt folke are as good as blinde and deafe ſtill. Nowe when the Goſpell is preached in any place, it is a kinde of chooſing, and it is the verie ſame that Moſes ſpeakes of here. Seeing then that God cauſeth his worde to raine vppon vs, ſo as we haue our fill of it euerie day: and in the meane ſeaſon other much greater, richer, and nobler Cities want it and are deſtitute of it: let vs vnderſtande that this ſo great benefite commeth not of our owne ſeeking, neither haue we obtained it by our owne trauell or policie: but it is GOD that hath choſen vs to it of his owne mercie. Marke that for one point.

1.Cor.12.4.

Eph.2.8. Againe, whereas it pleaſeth him to giue vs faith, ſo as we taſt of his word, and are throughly fed with it, and it toucheth vs inwardly at the very heart: let vs vnderſtand that ỹ is a ſecond ſort of choſing which god maketh of vs. So then, let vs yelde him his deſerued praiſe, for in withholding it from him we bee traitors to him, and wee bereaue him of the thing that belongeth alonely vnto him: and in ſo doing wee ſet vp our ſelues as Idols in his ſteede. For a man cannot take a greater honour to himſelfe, than to beare himſelfe in hand that he is the author of his own ſaluation, and that it is he that preuenteth God. If wee imagin ſo, it is a defacing of Gods glorie. And therfore let vs beare this leſſõ well in mind.

Howbeit foraſmuch as men are malicious, & when they cannot aboliſh Gods praiſe altogether, they darken it as much as they can: Moſes excludeth here expreſly all worthineſſe of perſons, and all deſert of workes, in ſaying, it is the loue of God. For it is not ynough for vs to knowe that God hath choſen vs to himſelfe: but we muſt alſo know what it is that moued him thereto, and how he was induced thervnto. Did hee ſeeke the cauſe of it out of himſelfe? No: but his owne loue was the cauſe that he choſe vs. Nowe when the ſcripture ſpeaketh of Gods loue: it meaneth that free fauor which he beareth towards vs, ſo as he reſpecteth not our perſons nor ſeruices, nor aught elſe that wee can bring. Sith it is ſo, let vs conſider here Gods goodnes two wayes. For firſt of al when we haue his Goſpel preached among vs, and his Sacraments, whereby he gathereth vs as it were into his fold, and ſheweth himſelfe to be our ſhepherd: it is (ſay I) a chooſing of vs, for the which wee be greatly bounde vnto him: in ſo much that our maliciouſneſſe muſt needes be caſt in our teeth, and bee called to account to receiue horrible vẽgeance, if we make no reckening of ſo great a grace as he hath beſtowed vpon vs. Therefore let vs make much of the benefite that we inioy, that is to wit, of Gods gathering vs heere together in his name, to bee as his houſhold folke. Deut.4.10.

But there is yet a ſeconde chooſing: which is when euerie of vs perceiueth that God hath inlightened him by his holie ſpirit, and made vs to taſt his worde, ſo as wee ſticke to it by faith, and that hee hath graffed vs into the bodie of Ieſus Chriſt, to the ende we ſhoulde bee taken & held for members of him: which thing wee muſt vnderſtand commeth not of our ſelues, nor of our owne power: but of Gods will, which vouchſafed to marke vs out. And why? Let vs not make long circuits to finde ſome reaſon in our ſelues: but let vs holde vs contented with the free loue of our God, for hee is not bounde to any man. Hee might deſtroye all mankinde by his iuſtice: but yet for all that, he hath pitie vpon vs. And whereas he pitieth not all alike, but letteth whom hee liſt alone: therein he intendeth to giue the greater ſhewe of his goodneſſe (as I haue ſaid alredy) to the ende that wee ſhoulde compare our ſelues with others and ſay, Wherfore am I one of gods elect? wherefore hath God choſen mee to himſelfe? I ſhoulde haue beene as other men are, if God had not reached me his hand. And what moued him to do it? His owne meere goodneſſe. This compariſon then muſt induce vs to glorifie our God, when we ſee that he hath ſtretched out his mighty arme ouer vs. And ſo we ſee, that that doctrine was not vttered onely for the inſtruc-

on of the people of old time: but that the ſame is common to vs alſo at this day.

Remember (ſaith Moſes) that thy God hath choſen thee. And why? Becauſe hee loued thy fathers. And the ſame alſo is the cauſe why that in that high and excellent redemption which was made by our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt, the ſcripture ſendeth vs to the loue of God: for that is the onely welſpring. God ſo loued the worlde that hee ſpared not his onely ſonne. What is the cauſe then that Ieſus Chriſt is come to bee our Sauiour? What is the cauſe that the ſaluation which he purchaſed for vs, is preached nowadayes vnto vs? What is the verie cauſe that faith is giuen vs, and that God inlighteneth vs by his holy ſpirit? We muſt alwayes reſort to this grounde, that it is becauſe God loued vs. It is true that Saint Iohn ſaith generally, that hee loued the worlde. And why? For Ieſus Chriſt offereth himſelfe generally to all men without exception to be their redeemer. It is ſaide afterwarde in the couenant, that God loued the world when he ſent his only ſonne: but he loued vs, vs (I ſay) which haue beene taught by his Goſpel, becauſe he gathereth vs to him. And the faithful that are inlightened by the holy Ghoſt, haue yet a thirde vſe of Gods loue, in that he reueileth himſelf more familiarly to thē, and ſealeth vp his fatherly adoption by his holy ſpirit, and ingraueth it in their hearts. Now then let vs in al caſes learn to know this loue of God, & when we be once come to it, let vs goe no further. Thus we ſee three degrees of the loue that god hath ſhewed vs in our Lord Ieſus Chriſt. The firſt is in reſpect of the redemption that was purchaſed in the perſon of him that gaue himſelfe to death for vs, and became accurſed to reconcile vs to God his father. That is the firſt degree of loue, which extendeth to al men, inaſmuch as Ieſus Chriſt reacheth out his armes to call and allure all men both great and ſmall, and to win them to him. But there is a ſpeciall loue for thoſe to whom the goſpel is preached: which is, ỹ God teſtifieth vnto them that he wil make them partakers of ỹ benefite that was purchaſed for them by the death and paſſion of his ſonne. And foraſmuch as we be of that number, therefore are we dubble bound alreadie to our God: here are two bonds which hold vs as it were ſtrait tyed vnto him. Now let vs come to the third bonde, which dependeth vpon the thirde loue that God ſheweth vs: which is, that he not only cauſeth the goſpel to be preached vnto vs, but alſo maketh vs to feel the power therof, ſo as we know him to be our father & ſauiour, not douting but that our ſins are forgiuen vs for our Lord Ieſus Chriſtes ſake, who bringeth vs the gift of the holy Ghoſt, to reforme vs after his owne image. When as God doth ſo imprint in our harts the doctrine that is preached vnto vs by the mouthes of men: let vs vnderſtand that he ſheweth vs a third loue. True it is, that to ſpeake properly, God hath not diuers affections: wee muſt not imagine ſo: but I handle theſe matters according to our capacitie, and wee muſt conſider of Gods loue according to our flenderneſſe, becauſe wee cannot attaine to his high maieſtie as is ſaid afore, and therfore euen he himſelfe alſo vttereth himſelfe to vs according to our abilitie. And ſo wee ſee now that Gods loue is vttered and ſhewed vnto vs euidently three wayes in our Lorde Ieſus Chriſte: the cheefe whereof are when wee haue the goſpell preached, and that faith is added vnto it therewithall.

And as I ſaide, when wee once haue this free loue of God, we muſt goe no further. For we ſee what hath happened to all ſuch as haue not held themſelues in ſuch ſoberneſſe. And ſurely when men are inquiſitiue why God loueth ſome more than otherſome: it proceedeth of a certain pride and ſpyte, in that they cannot abide that the whole praiſe of their ſaluation ſhould reſt in god alone. Men ſeeke alwayes to challenge ſomwhat to themſelues. And therefore when it is tolde them that God calleth thoſe whom he hath choſen, and that he chooſeth whom he liſteth of his owne free goodnes: they will needs fall to ſcanning, how ſo? Why doeth God prefer one before another? When they debate after that maner, it is not a ſimple inquiſitiuenes, but a pride as I ſaid, becauſe they would faine be eſteemed and finde ſomewhat in themſelues wherewith to deface Gods meere mercie: And therfore it is good iuſtice that Satan ſhoulde afterwarde bleare their eyes, & ſet many fancies before them. And that is the verie cauſe that maketh them to goe alwayes ſeeking, that God choſeth thoſe whom he foreſawe to be ſuch as would become worthie of his grace. Againe, ſuch as dare not alledge altogether their owne deſeruings, doe ſay that they attaine to faith becauſe God foreſawe that they would be faithfull, and therefore reſerued them to himſelfe. So then, by that meanes faith ſhoulde proceede of mens workes. But ſuch men doe in deede ſhewe that they be as it were blockiſh, when they make ſuch concluſions: and yet notwithſtanding, a great part of the worlde ſtandeth vpon that point, and is ſtill blinded therewith. But as for vs let vs learne that whenſoeuer Gods loue is ſet afore vs we muſt wholly hold vs to it and reſt vpon it, ſo as it muſt ſuffice vs that God is righteous, and yet notwithſtanding not bounde to any perſon, but at his free libertie to chooſe whom he liſteth, becauſe hee receiueth them to mercie. For it is to the ſame purpoſe that he ſaith to Moſes, as S. Paul alledgeth, I will haue mercie on whom I will haue mercy, and I will haue pitie on whom I haue pitie. As if hee ſhould ſay, let not men fall to controlling of me in this caſe, nor bee ſo malapert as to aske why I ſhewe not mercie to all men: or why all are not delt with alike, or why I chooſe one and leaue another. Let them not diſpute ſo with mee: for I haue power to vſe my free goodneſſe where I liſt, and they muſt ſtoope to me: And whoſoeuer dareth repyne at it, ſhall finally be confounded in his owne pride. Therefore to bee ſhort, let vs learne to glorifie our God. After what manner? Euen for his chooſing of vs. As for the caſtawayes, it is certaine that they will doe nothing but grinde their teeth, to blaſpheme GOD, and wee ſee it to bee ſo. But whereunto doeth Moſes bring vs backe? He ſaith not ỹ they which are choſen ſhall glorifie God for any thing that they haue of their owne. Howe is it then that God wilbe glorified at our hands? Euen in this, that we beholding the benefites which hee hath beſtowed vppon vs, ſhoulde not exalt our ſelues aboue others, thinking our ſelues to be better or more noble and excellent than our neighbors: but acknowledge that hee doeth all thoſe thinges of his owne free goodneſſe. This is the doctrine which wee haue to gather vppon this text.

And it is ſaid here that God choſe Abrahams ſeede after him, becauſe of the loue that had gone long time before. And this ſerueth for a larger proofe of the thing that I haue touched: accordingly to Saint Rom.9.11.12 Paules ſaying, that if God ſhewe mercie to men before they be borne, & before they haue done either good or euill: it is an excluding of all deſerts. And that is well worth the marking. For God hauing choſen to himſelfe the ſeede of Abraham becauſe of the adoption that had beene made: hath yet a narrower choyce, as hath bene declared alreadie. For Eſaw was of Abrahams linage as well as Iacob: and ſo was Iſmael as well as Iſaac: and yet yee ſee that both of them were cut off from Gods couenant, and his adoption abideth in the houſe of the others. What is the cauſe thereof? Gods choice, which I termed a teſtimonie of a more ſtrait and deare loue, which is the firſt, and which alſo I placed in the redemption made by Ieſus Chriſt: and I placed the preaching of the Goſpel in the ſeconde degree, and faith in the third degree. But foraſmuch as here is no ſpeaking but of the couenant Gen.17.1. that God made with Abraham: it is a generall couenant that extendeth to all his linage. Therfore all they that came of Abrahams ſeede are comprehended vnder that couenant which god had made. God in reſpect of himſelfe, knew who belonged to his election: but yet for al that, anon after, hee ſhooled out thoſe whom he thought good, and took whom he liſted to be of his houſhold. Foraſmuch then as wee ſee it is ſo: Let vs beare in minde that God continueth his mercie to a thouſande generations, as hee himſelfe Deut.5.10. ſaith. And yet notwithſtanding let vs aſſure our ſelues that in ſo doing his minde altereth not. When he ſetteth vp his Church in any place, he doeth it not vppon ſome ſudden braide, but becauſe he loued our fathers. Likewiſe nowadayes when we haue the Goſpel preached and the Sacraments miniſtred: whence ſhoulde we thinke that that commeth? Firſt we muſt vnderſtande, that the goſpel was preached through the whole world, and that our forefathers were gathered into Gods flock, to be made partakers of the ſaluation that was brought by Ieſus Chriſt. Neuertheleſſe by reaſon of their vnthankfulneſſe and wicked dealing, the diuell got the vpper hande of the worlde, ſo as there inſued horrible darkeneſſe and all thinges were put out of order. But nowe God hath as it were raiſed vp his worde againe: and what hath moued him to it? Euen the performance of his promiſe. For when hee had once extended his couenant through the whole worlde: it was his will to renew it againe, becauſe of the promiſe that hee had made afore. And if it be demaunded wherefore God woulde haue his Goſpel preached after that ſort: it was for that it pleaſed him to come neere to ſuch as liued at that time, becauſe he had choſen them before they were borne. Againe we muſt vnder- 1.Cor.10.11 Gal.4.4. ſtande that the accompliſhing of the fulneſſe of time wherof the ſcripture ſpeaketh, is not grounded vppon men, but vppon the good pleaſure of Eph.1.10. God. We muſt come to this point, that God had ordeined the preaching of his Goſpel in his own euerlaſting purpoſe: and that our atteining to the poſſeſſion of ſo great a benefite at this day by the vertue of that vnchangeable ordinãce, is becauſe he hadcalled our fathers before we were borne, & that when they had made themſelues vnworthie of the kingdome of heauen, and baniſhed themſelues from it as much as in them lay: yet notwithſtanding God vouchſafed to cal vs againe, and all through his owne free goodneſſe. Thus yee ſee what wee haue to marke where it is ſaide, that God choſe the ſeede of Abraham after him.

And by the way let vs call to minde the thing that I haue touched alreadie, that is to wit, that Abraham was alone as the Prophet Eſaie vp- Eſa.51.2 braideth the Iewes. The trueth is that he exhorteth them to be of good cheere, though they be ſcattered abrode and caſt downe. Haue an eye (ſaith he) to the quarrie whence ye were taken, and vnto your originall. What was it? was it a great and infinite people? No: It was a ſillie olde man al alone without child or iſſue. Behold, your mother Sara was barren all the time of her life, and her age was a further let that ſhe might not conceiue: and yet hath God taken ye out of that quarrie, that is to ſay, of one man alone. Why then ſhould yee bee afraide though yee were vtterly conſumed? But yet for all this, hee vpbraideth them with their vnthankfulneſſe, becauſe they truſted ſtill in their owne greatneſſe, and if there were any likelihood at all, by and by it puffed them vp. And therefore let vs learne by this text, firſt that Gods chooſing of our forefathers was not for any worthineſſe or nobilitie in them ſelues: but becauſe he had pitie on them, which pitying importeth that they were in wretched caſe, and had beene vtterly forlorne, if God had not gathered them into the hope which they coulde neuer haue conceiued of themſelues. Marke that for one point.

And ſecondly if wee ſee Gods Church ſcattered, ſo as wee be fewe in number, and it ſeemeth that there is no certaintie nor aſſurance for vs, but all is like to goe to hauock in ẏ turning of a hande: Let it not diſmay vs. And why ſo? For God hauing once choſen Abraham did alſo multiplie his ſeede, notwithſtanding that hee was a man ſtricken in yeares, drooping, and childleſſe. So likewiſe nowe, although there be but a handfull of vs, and we be deſpiſed and without power or ſtrength to maintaine our ſelues: yet can God increaſe vs, and hauing increaſed vs he can preſerue vs. Wherefore let vs learne to looke wholly to his goodnes, when the ſtate of the Church lieth in hazarde, and let vs not be out of heart but although that to the worldwarde wee ſee it caſt downe, and ſo dimmiſhed as it ſeemeth as good as nothing at all: yet let vs not ceaſe to be of good courage ſtill, and to waite till God performe that which he hath done in all ages. For the manner of ſetting vp of the Church in good ſtate againe, and of the preſeruing thereof, muſt be wonderfull to the ſight of men.

Now after that Moſes hath ſpoken ſo, he addeth, Thy God choſe thee, euen of purpoſe to bring thee out of the land of Egypt, before his face. He ſheweth that the deliuerance of the people out of the lande of Egypt, proceeded of the ſaid election, and conſequently of Gods free loue. And it is a point which wee ought to marke well. For it behoueth vs to be led from one thing to another. As for example, when God doeth vs any good, we doe indeede perceiue his goodneſſe: but wee muſt mount yet higher. Wherefore hath GOD prouided ſo for vs? not for any worthines or deſert of ours: but becauſe he had choſen vs. And when or wherefore choſe hee vs? Wee muſt not range any further, but holde our ſelues to this grounde of Moſeſes. But in any wiſe let vs marke whereof hee ſpeaketh, that wee may the better make our profite thereby. Thy God deliuered thee out of the lande of Egypt, becauſe he had choſen thee before, yea euen before thou wart borne. In ſo ſaying hee ſheweth, that although this redemption was (to ſee to) but a deliuerance of the bodie: yet was it a figure of ỹ ſaluation that God had promiſed afore in the perſon of the Redeemer: and although the deliuerie of the people of Iſrael out of the lande of Egypt, was but as a temporall redemption: yet doth Moſes ſay that it depended vpon Gods freebeſtowed adoption. Seeing it is ſo in that caſe: what is to bee thought nowe, when wee bee to be brought out of the gulfes of hell to bee conueyed into heauen? (For by nature wee bee curſed, and plunged in the gulfes of hell:) are wee able to get thence? Doeth it not belong onely vnto God to deliuer vs thence? And if it were meete that God ſhould chooſe the people of Iſrael to deliuer them from the tyrannie of Pharao: let vs conclude, that by a more ſtrong reaſon it was meete that when he ſhoulde deliuer vs from the bondage of the diuell and from the bottomles pittes of hell: hee ſhoulde declare this vnto vs: that he had choſen and adopted vs. Wherfore let vs not onely take holde of the death and paſſion which our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt ſuffered for vs, and of his ſauing of vs by his grace: but alſo let vs come to the meane degree, namely that the cauſe why wee bee made partakers of the ſaluation that Ieſus Chriſt hath brought vs, is for that GOD hath adopted vs. And when did hee that? After hee had founde ſome vertue or ſome good forwardneſſe in vs? no: but before wee were borne, and before wee had done either good or badde, yea euen at ſuch time as wee were alreadie vowed and giuen vp to endeleſſe deſtruction. This is it which we haue to note in the firſt place.

Eph. 2. 3 6.

Rom. 9. 11. Eph. 2. 5.

Neuertheleſſe it is not for nought that Moſes ſaieth alſo, that God brought out the people before his face: as if hee ſhoulde ſay, hee was their guide. For had GOD reached out his hande to his people but for once, and thencefoorth haue let them alone: to what purpoſe had that beene? It is not ynough for a mother to helpe vp her young childe when hee is falne downe: for hee may fall a hundred thouſande times, and in the ende breake his necke: but ſhee muſt holde him vp ſtill. Euen ſo our Lorde declareth that it was not ynough for him to haue ſhewed himſelfe to bee a deliuerer of his people for a day or two: but hee helde on ſtill, and conueyed them before his face, as a man that hath his eye continually vppon his childe. To bee ſhort, hee ſheweth heere that his goodneſſe abode with the people euen to the ende, ſo as hee helde on in helping and ſuccoring them, and maintened them throughout. And why? for elſe his bringing of them out of the lande of Egypt had beene in vaine.

And afterwarde hee addeth, To deſtroy people mightier and ſtronger than they, that their lande might bee giuen them to inherite. Hee ſheweth that God ceaſed not to goe through with his fauour towardes the Iewes, till hee had performed the promiſe that hee made to their fathers: that is to wit, of putting them in poſſeſſion of the lande of Chanaan as hee had promiſed. But (as I haue ſaide alreadie) wee muſt compare our ſelues with the ſtate of that people. And therefore let vs learne, that God not onely draweth vs out of the gulfe of hell, and out of the curſedneſſe wherein wee were borne, and which would holde vs alwayes locked vnder his wrath: but alſo holdeth on and continueth his goodnes towards vs, ſo as hee will not miſſe but haue his eye ſtill vpon vs, to watch ouer vs vnto the end. And if our Lorde had not ſuch a care to defende vs: in what taking were wee? Should not the diuell ſnatch vs vp euerie minute of an houre? We ſee he trotteth vp and downe ſeeking euer to deuour, and hee hath meanes to doe it. And could we ſcape his pawes if we were not defẽded from thẽ by ỹ goodnes of our God? So then let vs vnderſtande, that God doth not onely beginne our ſaluation, and then let vs alone to ſhift for our ſelues: but that he goeth through with vs as long as we haue nede, and performeth the thing that he hath begunne. Thus doth he keepe vs alwayes in his ſight: that is to ſay, hee neuer forgetteth vs, but conſidereth our neceſſities, to prouide for them and to remedie them in due ſeaſon. Now if God haue his eyes ſo open to thinke vppon vs, that hee may ſuccour vs at our neede: Let vs on our ſide alſo walke as before his face. And let vs marke that wee cannot hide our ſelues from him: and therefore ſeeing he yeeldeth vs ſuch fauour and honour as to haue a care of vs: it is good reaſon that all our life ſhould bee anſwerable thereunto. And ſo, Gods goodneſſe ought ſo little to make vs negligent, that it ſhoulde rather ſpurre vs forward to repaire to him with an earneſter minde. In deede a man ſhall ſee ſome dogges and ſwine that will defame this doctrine of Election. When it is tolde them that God knoweth which are his, and that he wil neuer ſuffer them to periſh: very wel (ſay they), then wil I ceaſe to doe well: and ſo they mocke at God and his doctrine, ſhewing indeede that they neuer wiſt what the worde Election or Choyce meaneth.

Phil.3.12. But as for vs, wee muſt take aſſurance by Gods grace, to liue warely and circumſpectly: and good reaſon haue we to humble our ſelues; conſidering that we were damned and forlorne, and our God hath deliuered vs, and moreouer ſhewed himſelfe ſo bountifull towardes vs as to make

Eph.2.5. Col.2.13. 14.15. Phil.2.13. vs heires of his kingdome, euen vs that were the bondſlaues of Satan. And on the otherſide it ſtandeth vs on hande to walke in feare, ſeeing wee can do nothing at all of our ſelues, further-forth than Gods grace vttereth it ſelfe in vs. Againe it behooueth vs to pray vnto him, foraſmuch as if he ſhoulde let vs alone from the one ende to the other, wheras we be now aduaunced vp aloft, we ſhoulde tumble into the pitte euerie minute of an houre. Therefore wee haue cauſe heere to call vpon our God, and to reſort vnder his protection. Furthermore ſeing it is ſaid that

Deut.11.21. Ier.16.17. hee guideth vs and keepeth watch for our welfare: it becommeth vs to bee the more wakened to walk as in his preſence, knowing that he marketh, not onely all our doings, but alſo our affections and thoughts.

Act.1.24. Beſides this, ſeeing that Moſes knitteth here the deliuerance of the Iſraelits out of Egypt, with their poſſeſſing of the lande of Chanaan: Let vs marke well that God will haue all his benefits linked together which he beſtoweth vpon vs, vntil we be brought to the full perfection of our ſaluation. For it is not to be thought that God letteth vs alone when he hath once called vs vnto himſelfe, ſo as we ſhoulde be in daunger of being left vp to the ſpoyle: but contrariwiſe let vs mark, that he will go through with the thing that he hath begunne, as S. Paul declareth in the firſt to the Philippians, where

Phil.1.5.6. hee ſaieth ỹ this his calling of vs, importeth a warrantiſe that wee ſhall neuer bee left deſtitute of his defence, vntill hee haue brought vs to euerlaſting ſaluation. Thus yee ſee that the thing which we haue to beare in mind, is that as God is the beginner of our ſaluation, ſo is he the finiſher thereof alſo.

And as touching Moſeſes interlacing of Gods deſtroying and driuing out of people that were ſtronger and mightier than they: it is true that God vſed an extraordinarie manner of dealing, in his rooting out of the Chananites and ſuch other like as dwelt in the countrie which the Iewes poſſeſſed: but yet haue wee cauſe to thinke vpon the like at this day. For whither is it that wee ought to goe? whither doth our Lorde call vs? To the heauenly life frō whence euen the verie Angels are falne. For wee know that the diuels, which as nowe are not onely baniſhed from the glorie of the heauenly kingdome, but alſo appointed to horrible damnation, were ſometime as the children of God, and helde the roome whereinto our Lorde calleth vs at this day. And nowe, are wee worthyer than the Angels which fell in that ſort from aboue? Moreouer, if wee come but to men: were not the Iewes a holy lynage? Sprang they not of the roote of Abraham? Yes: and what are we on our ſide? did the kingdome of heauen belong to vs? No: no more than to the wilde Canniballes. But yet thoſe natural children and as it were lawful heires by ỹ adoption of their fathers, are caſt off and baniſhed from the ſaluation wherevnto God calleth vs at this time. They be driuen out, and we ſucceede as it were in an emptie place. Haue not wee cauſe then to magnifie the grace that God ſheweth vs in theſe dayes? Doeth it not appeare that this text ſerueth not onely for the Iewes, but alſo ought rather to be applyed to our vſe at this day? Then let vs vnderſtande, that ſeeing God hath choſen vs to himſelfe, wee ought in any wiſe to be wholy his, & to continue ſetled in the poſſeſſion of his grace, howbeit not by walking in ſtatelines & preſumptiō, ſo as we ſhould be proud of it: but by acknowledging with all lowlineſſe, that wee hang wholly vppon the free goodneſſe of our GOD. And let vs not ceaſe to aſſure our ſelues that he will go through with the thing that hee hath begunne in vs, at leaſtwiſe if wee abide vnder the guiding of his hand, to ſuffer our ſelues to be ruled by him.

Rom.11.18. 17. Eph.2.12.

Nowe let vs kneele downe in the preſence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to rid vs of them by forgiuing them for our Lord Ieſus Chriſtes ſake: and therewithall to worke in ſuch ſort as wee may daily labour to renounce all our wicked luſtes, and whatſoeuer elſe hindreth vs to ſerue him, and altogether to rule our ſelues according to his commaundements. And ſo let vs all ſay, Almightie God heauenly father, &c.

The xxix. Sermon which is the eleuenth vpon the fourth Chapter.

39 Vnderſtand therefore this day, and lay it vp in thyne heart, that the Lord is God in heauen aboue, and vppon the earth beneath, and there is none other but hee.

40 And keepe his ordinances and commaundementes which I command thee this day, that it may goe well with thee and with thy children after thee, and that thou maieſt prolong thy dayes in the lande which the Lord thy God giueth thee for euer.

41 Then Moſes ſeuered three Cities beyond Iordan towards the ſunriſing,

42 That the manſlaier might flee thither, that had ſlaine his neighbour vnwillinglie, and not hated him before: who by fleeing to one of thoſe Cities, ſhould bee in ſafetie.

43 Namelie, Bozor in the wilderneſſe in the plaine countrie, among the Rubenites: and Ramoth in Galaad among the Gaddites: and Golam in Baſan among the Manaſſites.

IT was ſhewed yeſterday, that wee muſt aſſure our ſelues that God will continue his goodneſſe towardes vs, and that when hee hath once begunne, wee muſt not doubt but hee will ſhewe himſelfe a Sauiour vnto the ende. When wee haue founde him ſuch a one, wee muſt walke on in the ſaide truſt, that we may call vppon him all our life long: for elſe wee ſhoulde bee ſaued but for a day, and that were all one as if God had neuer ſhewed himſelfe to vs at all. Therefore our hope muſt extende to the time comming, and when God hath ridde vs from Satans tyrannie wherein wee were to make vs inioy his heritage, we muſt holde on ſtill as Moſes ſaith here. True it is that God hath not brought vs out of Egypt, but hee hath deliuered vs from the bondage of the diuell and of death. And therefore let vs truſt that he will leade vs to the place that he hath promiſed vs, that is to wit, to the immortall life. But in the meane while we muſt conſider to what ende he calleth vs, and to what end he beſtoweth ſo manie giftes vppon vs: namely to the ende that we ſhould ſerue him all our life long. And that is the thing which Moſes addeth as nowe, and which was touched alſo as yeſterday: namely that our truſting in God muſt not make vs ydle and ſlothfull, but rather the more inflame vs to loue and feare him.

Hebr. 9. 14.

Lu. 1. 74. 75. Eph. 1. 4.

Therefore he ſaith here, vnderſtande thou this day, and thinke well vpon it in thine heart, and beare it in remembrance, that there is none other God but the euerlaſting, neither aboue nor beneath. The cheefe intent of Moſes is to ſhewe, that Gods reaching of vs his hand vnto vs, it not to the ende that we ſhoulde haue no care to honour him: but rather that we ſhould bend our ſelues wholly therunto, and that wee perceyuing howe hee hath honored vs ſo highly as to chooſe vs for his people, ſhould ſhewe in verie deed by our ſeruing of him as our God, that his ſo doing is not in vaine. That is ỹ meaning of Moſes. But yet therewithall he doeth vs to vnderſtande, that we ſhall neuer be able to yeelde God his due honour, vntill we knowe him. For if we imagine newe Gods of our owne heade, we diſguiſe the liuing God, and bereaue him of his chiefe honour. I ſay hee is diſguiſed, when we attribute that thing to the creatures, which is peculiar to him alone, and it is al one as if we did make ydols, though we confeſſe it not with our mouthes, as a great number do deale, which cã proteſt welynough that their intent is to haue no moe but the onely God, and yet notwithſtanding faile not to robbe him of the thinges that are peculiar to his maieſtie, dealing them to the creatures at their owne pleaſure, as though it were ſome bootie. When GOD is ſo ſpoyled, it is all one as if men ſhoulde ſet vp ydoles in deſpyte of him. And ſo yee ſee wherefore Moſes ſaieth, Nowe vnderſtande that the Lorde is God both aboue and beneath, and that there is none other. Heere is the foundation where vppon wee muſt grounde Gods ſeruice: namely to knowe that hee cannot abide any companion, but that wee muſte diſcerne him from all mens deuices and imaginations, to ſaye, This is the GOD that hath reueiled himſelfe vnto vs. And Moſes exhorteth the people to thinke vppon it that they might beare it in minde. For if wee haue not that care with vs, we ſhall wonder to ſee howe ſoone ſome wicked fancie will take place in our heade. If ſuch as knowe the trueth doe not ſticke to it, and walke warely and carefully, they ſhall ſoone let themſelues runne at rouers. And why? For naturally wee bee inclyned to leaſings, and thereto wee bee ſo wauering as is pittie to ſee. Therefore it is not ynough for vs to haue knowen the true liuing God for a time: but wee muſt dayly thinke vppon the thing that is tolde vs, and wee muſt continually renewe the rememberance of it. For otherwiſe wee ſhall bee at our wittes ende to ſee what ſuperſtition will ſteppe in our way. Then let vs marke well, that it is a continuall exerciſe for vs all our life long, to knowe which is our true GOD that hath manifeſted himſelfe vnto vs.

Pſal. 116. 11. & Rom. 3. 4.

And nowe that Moſes hath ſpoken ſo of knowledge: hee ſheweth that our confeſſing with our mouth and our feeling alſo with our heart that there is but onely one GOD is nothing woorth: vnleſſe wee ſhewe by our deedes that wee take him for our father, our maſter, and him, to whome wee belong. And for the ſame cauſe hee ſaieth that he hath giuen vs his lawes, commaundementes, and ſtatutes. So then, wee ſee that the knowing of God is not a deade and vneffectuall thing: but that it ought to preuaile with vs, ſo as wee may ſhewe that wee haue beene ſchooled by Gods worde, by keeping his lawes and commaundementes. The ende therefore whereunto God hath choſen vs of his owne free goodneſſe, and the ende whereunto hee mainteyneth vs, and continueth his grace towards vs is this: that we ſhoulde glorifie him not onely with our mouthes, but alſo with our whole life. But heere is yet one worde more to be noted: which is, that Moſes addeth, that he ſetteth before Gods people, his laws & commandements: wherin he bereueth them of al excuſe of ignorance. As if he ſhould ſay, ye cannot alledge ỹ yee know not how to ſerue God: for I do ſhew you his will, and therfore ſtriue not againſt him. So then after as our Lord granteth vs the grace to be taught purely by his word, let vs mark that we be the more bound vnto him, and the leſſe to bee excuſed, ſo as it is not for vs to vſe any ſhifting. For wherof is it long that we yeeld him not his due praiſe, and that wee liue not as we ought to do, ſeing he teacheth vs what to do, and ſheweth how we ought to liue? Wherfore let vs labor to make the doctrine powerfull which is dayly preached vnto vs, aſſuring our ſelues that the preaching thereof is to the end that God ſhould be the better honored among vs. This is the effect of that which is ſet downe here.

Now it is ſet down conſequently, that before they paſſed Iordan, Moſes did ſeuer out three Cities in the land that had ben conquered from the Amorrhits, (as we haue ſeene heretofore) & from their neighbours, as the land of Baſan: and thoſe three Cities, were appointed for ſuch to flie vnto as had ſlaine any bodie through vnaduiſednes. This Law is declared more fully in other places: and thence muſt wee fetch the expoſition of this preſent text. God had ſaid and ordeyned, that if a man bearing no hatred to another man, did ſlea him vnaduiſedly, that is to ſay by chaunce medly (as they term it) without preteníed purpoſe: hee ſhoulde not be puniſhed. For why? the manſlaughters that are puniſhable muſt either be wilful, or elſe proceed of reuenge, or of ſpyte, or of lying in wait which is worſt, & greateſt fault of al. But if a man ſeing no bodie did ſhoot an arrow & hit a man, & the man dyed: this manſlaughter was not puniſhable as a felonie. Neuertheleſſe God woulde not haue it ſimplie pardoned: and that was for two cauſes. The one was to the ende that men ſhoulde in any wiſe miſlike of any murder and the ſhedding of mans bloude: and the other was, that the kinſfolke of the partie that was ſlaine ſhoulde not be prouoked to reuenge: And therefore God had ordeyned that hee which had giuen the ſtroke ſhoulde get himſelfe out of the way, and keepe himſelfe as a priſoner till the death of the high Prieſt: And then had hee as it were a Iubilee, ſo that when there was once a newe high Prieſt, then the partie that had ſo fled to the place appointed, whether it were at the ende of tenne, twentie, or thirtie yeeres, might returne to his owne houſe if he liſted: but vntil that time, it behoued him to be as a baniſhed man. That is the thing which is ſpoken of here as nowe. Moſes rehearſeth not the Law as it was giuen of God & as it is ſet down in the booke of numbers: but yet in reporting the ſtorie, therewithall hee giueth an incling of the foreſaide lawe and ordinance as we haue ſaide. Nowe for the better vnderſtanding hereof, we muſt firſt marke the thing that I touched afore: that is to wit, that God abhorreth murther, inſomuch that although he puniſh not vnaduiſed manſlaughters rigorouſly: yet he chaſtiſeth them: wherby hee ſheweth that he miſlyketh of bludſhed. This is a thing well worthy to bee noted. For firſt wee ſee thereby, how greatly God loueth vs: & he ſheweth the cauſe thereof in the ninth of Geneſis, to be for that we be created after his image. Hee ſaieth that the ſleaing of a man is the doing of wrong to himſelfe. Yee ſee then that God beareth vs ſuch loue, that he taketh himſelfe to bee wounded and miſuſed in our perſons, becauſe he hath made vs after his owne image. And that ought to bee a warrant of his great goodnes and louing kindneſſe towards vs, to make vs to truſt wholy vnto him & to honor him. And ſo ye ſee whereat we ought to beginne, when it is tolde vs that God hateth murther and cannot abide it: and therefore that when a man hath ſlaine his neighbour wilfully, that is to ſay, either through malice, or in quareling, or for reuenge, or by laying waite for him: hee is ſo deteſted of God that he is not worthy to liue in the worlde. And in good ſooth wee ſee the ſame by another Lawe, where god curſeth whole countries for ſuffering of murders. For it is ſaide there, that if a deade bodie bee founde, ſearch muſt bee made with all diligence, to finde out the murtherer. Why ſo? To the intent (ſaieth hee) that the lande bee not defiled therewith. Wee ſee hereby that if Magiſtrates and Iudges ſhut their eyes and make no reckoning to puniſh a murder: it is as a cõmon defiling, which prouoketh Gods vengeance vpon the whole land. And therefore it ſtandeth them on hande to conſider that God ſetteth great ſtore by mens liues. Againe if the dooer of the wicked deede bee not founde: let the Iudges (ſaieth hee) make ſolemne proteſtation, in this wiſe: We haue inquired diligently whence this murther ſhoulde proceede, but wee cannot finde the dooer thereof, and therefore are wee cleare and guiltleſſe of it before God. And moreouer Gods will was that they ſhoulde offer ſacrifice for the ſame. Nowe then wee ſee howe lothſome wilfull murthers are before GOD. I call them all wilfull murthers which are committed through trecherie or in rage, or howſoeuer elſe it bee where there was any enmitie or variance afore. Yea & although it be lawfull for men to kill their enemies in the warres that are good and holie: yet doeth the Scripture vſe a manner of ſpeech to ſhewe vs that GOD hath alwayes miſliked of murthering. For there it is ſaide of a valiaunt man, howbeit without blaming of him, that hee defiled his handes. Is it ſo? Nay rather it is worthie of praiſe that a ſtoute fellowe being inured to the warres, ſhoulde goe through with his duetie. For if hee offer no man any wrong, but behaue himſelfe valiantly when hee commeth to the incounter, doeth that deſerue blame? No: but as I ſaide afore, Gods meaning is to ſhewe vs, that wee ought to tender our neighbours liues in ſuch ſort, as not to wiſhe their death, nor to further the ſame, vnleſſe wee intende to violate his image. That is the thing in effect, which is heere ſet out vnto vs. Nowe then if God doe ſo abhorre the manſlaughters that are committed when men aſſaile vs, ſo as we ſeeme to haue iuſt cauſe to defend our ſelues: I pray you what is to be ſaid to it whē men fall to quareling with their neighbours, & will needes ſhed bloud of ſet purpoſe? What meaneth this? Suppoſe we ỹ Gods curſe is not doubled vpõ the lande, land, when ſuch crimes are borne withall and maintained? It is ſaid that if a murther bee let paſſe, and the doer of it ſcapes vnknowen, Gods wrath is thereby prouoked: and if the murtherer be knowen, then is it a more heynous crime to let him ſcape vnpuniſhed. But if a theefe lye in waite for a mã that miſtruſteth no ſuch thing, and ſetteth vppon him: is it not a plaine ſpiting of God, if that bee ſuffered? And if it be not any one man that is aſſaulted, but there are ſuch ouer luſtie mates as will ſay, let vs kill and ſlea, & when they haue their ſwordes out, they care not againſt how many they drawe, but make a common hauocke, and ſuch ſlaughter as all is on a gore bloud: are not the folkes that ſtirre vp ſuch broyles, worſe than the theeues and robbers in the woods? Men wil at leaſtwiſe miſtruſt theeues in a foreſt: but [who woulde thinke] that where there ſhould be ciuill order, where Lawes [ought to] raigne, where there is a ſeate of Iuſtice: there men would fill all things with bloud, and violate ſo many images of God as come in their way, & that the ſame ſhould be ſuffered? I pray you is it not a bewraying that wee bee loth that GOD ſhoulde raigne among vs, or haue vs vnder his protection? Yes. Therefore let vs marke well what is ſaid here concerning wilfull murthers, how there is no pardon for them, but God will haue them rooted out of the worlde and executed by Iuſtice, which haue violated his image. And why? To the intent wee ſhoulde alwayes beare in minde the thing that I ſpake of before, that is to wit, how greatly he loueth vs, and that foraſmuch as he hath adopted vs to be his children, he will haue a continuall care of vs, and keepe vs as charely as the Apple of his eye, as Zach. 2. 8. he ſpeaketh by his Prophet Zacharie. Now if it bee ſo that wee deſire God (as the holy Ghoſt teacheth vs) to keepe vs as the Apple of his eye, that is to ſay, as the tendereſt and delicateſt part of him: I pray you ought not we to gather therby, that ſeeing he loueth vs, he will haue vs alſo to loue one another, yea euen with more than brotherly loue? Yes: and therefore let vs learne to abſtaine from all wrong and outrage. Moreouer whenſoeuer any murther is committed, or whenſoeuer any folke are ſo wicked and cruel as to goe about to ſhed mans bloud: let vs make account of them, not onely as enemies to men, but alſo as deadly enemies to God, for as much as he ſheweth himſelfe to bee their aduerſarie, and telleth vs that he taketh it as an aſſaulting of him in his owne perſon, and in his owne Maieſtie. That is the thing which wee haue to marke.

1. Iohn 3. 15 euer hateth his neighbor in his hart, is a murtherer before God. True it is ỹ wee muſt in any wiſe keepe our handes cleane from all iniurie and outrage: but yet muſt our heart alſo be pure and cleane before God. If it bee not ſo: we ſhall bee blamed, not for drawing of our ſwordes, but for deſiring to ouerthrowe our neighbour, and for labouring, ſo much as was in vs, to bring it to paſſe by ouerthwart meanes. Albeit that men can not blame vs, yet doeth God condemne vs for murtherers, yea though our hatred were ſo ſecret as wee neuer made countenance of it. For whereas S. Iohn ſaieth, he that hateth his brother in his heart: it is al one as if he ſaide, although the hatred appeare not, nor men can beare witneſſe of it: yet are wee faultie, if our heart be infected with any rancour, or enmitie. Sith it is ſo, let vs beare well in minde, that our Lordes intent is to perſwade vs to brotherly loue among our ſelues, and to agree togither, indeuouring to helpe one another. For all mankinde is knit togither as it were into one bodie. And therfore let vs learn to abhorre all murther, as well which is committed againſt other folkes, as which is meant againſt our ſelues. Howbeit let vs learne to hate (that is to ſay to condemne) cõtinually all murder, without ſaying little or much in excuſe of it: in ſo much that although wee were guiltie of it, yet wee ſhould iudge againſt our ſelues if wee would iudge rightly. Will wee then condemne murther in another man? Let vs condemne hatred in our ſelues, by abſtaining from all malice and reuengement, that our heartes may be rid of it. If we deale with ſuch vprightneſſe, then wil God dwell with vs and make vs to proſper.

But yet for al this, it is ſaide that the manſlaughters which are not committed through malice, nor in rage, nor by quarelling, ſhall bee pardoned: and not without cauſe. For as I tolde you, the crimes that are puniſhable, muſt bee committed with a will and intent. Then if one ſhoote, and meaning to leuell at his marke doe hit a man by the way, he is not puniſhable: for euen the Lawes of man haue ordained ſo, and there is an example of it ſet downe in another place of this booke, where it is ſaid that if a man Deut. 19. 5. bee cropping of a tree, and his Ax fall downe vpon one that is vnder the tree, he ſhall not bee guiltie of the falling of his Ax vppon the head of him whom he perceiued not. And why? For it was God that did it (ſaieth the text,) whereas we ſay it was by chaunce or fortune: Bicauſe wee cannot conceiue that things happen otherwiſe than by chaunce. Ye ſee here howe it is ſaide to bee Gods doing: that is to ſay, it was the will of God who gouerneth all things by his ſecret prouidence, that ſuch a one ſhould bee taken out of the worlde. Yet notwithſtanding, he that gaue the ſtripe vnawares, ought not to be puniſhed as if he had killed one in anger and in a fray. Thus wee ſee heere what manſlaughters are pardonable.

Howbeit, there are two thinges to bee noted therewithall: the one is, that inquiſition muſt be made of it: and the other is, that although ſuch a one bee not to bee taken as a felon, yet doeth God ſeparate him from other men, & will haue him to bee as a priſoner for a time, to the intent he ſhould be an example to others to ſhun murder the more, ſeeing that ỹ manſlaughter which was cõmitted vnwillingly is puniſhed after that faſhion. As touching inquiſition and making of ſearch, it is a notable point. For we ſee how men are abuſed with the thinges that are done in fauour of offenders: in ſo much that if any thing be alledged that may moue to pitie, and a countenance bee set vppon the matter that the offender is verie sorie: men must shut their eyes at him, and say, alas, what should a man do? And this is done dayly, and woulde God that examples therof were not so common. Iustice is commonly abused: in so much that if there bee any cause or reason to be shewed that some mã may happen not to bee so faultie as he is accused to be: the same shall bee wrested to another mans defence, which is not worthy to haue any fauour at all. And why is that? For want of examination. And by that meane wicked men are styll maintained. For were there diligent examination made, and things sifted to the bottome: men might soone discerne betweene them that are faultie, and them that are faultlesse. But what? men are contented to shutte their eyes, and although they cannot but see, yet will they make countenance as though they knewe it not. And so are the wicked discharged. The matters lye open to the worlde, they may bee pointed out with ones finger, the euidence is too too apparant: and yet nothing can bee knowen. And why? Bicause men list not. O ye purblinde folkes which bleare your eyes in such sort, yee shall be driuen in the ende, to knowe what place yee hold, & that he which ordeined you to be iudges, seeth for you, yea and that he seeth clearely, and writeth ỹ things in his Registers which you forget and wilfully ouerslip, and he will put you in rememberaunce of them to your cost. For when so heynous offences are committed, our Lorde will not haue them let slip vnder colour of simplicitie or pretence of ignorance: but he wil haue them sifted out, and information giuen of them, & the truth tried by all meanes possible, so as mẽ may not say, where are we nowe? What is to bee done? And when it commeth to iudgement, he wil haue ỹ matter laid forth & handled plainely, so as the truth of it may be knowen: and after al this diligence vsed, he will haue sentence giuen according to ỹ which is knowen. That is the first point: namely that wee suffer not faultes and crimes to slip for want of due inquisition and examination how the case standeth.

There is a second point which I haue touched alreadie: and that is, ỹ God would there should bee some correction for such as commit manslaughter vnawares. And thereby he sheweth (as I said afore) that he loueth mankinde dearely: in so much that if wee offend that way, although it be not of malice, but by chaunce (as they say,) & in such wise as the lawe which he hath ordained, meaneth, & although we ment not so to do: yet neuertheless we must feele by experience & see with our eyes, howe deare mans life is vnto him. This is another thing which wee haue to marke vpon this place.

And herewithall let vs marke also, ỹ God intended to preuent ỹ daungers, (as we haue said) ỹ the kinsfolk might not be prouoked: for we bee too much subiect to our passions, & therefore he purposed to cut of occasions & obiectes as they terme them. In deede it is a wicked imperfectiõ in me, & it is a vice worthie to bee condemned, when I hate one ỹ hath slaine my brother or my neighbour vnwillingly, or when I beare him any grudge. And why? For the poore mã is not blame worthy, bicause God acquitteth him, & there is no fault in him. And yet for all that, I can not finde in my heart to looke vppon him: but if he come towards, my heart riseth against him, & I am mooued at him. Therefore am I to blame. Neuertheless GOD seeing our frailtie, hath vouchsafed to beare with vs in ỹ behalfe, & hath not left vs without a remedie for it. Now wee are warned thereby, to eschew the occasions of al euill to the vttermost of our power: & if God on his part haue vouchsafed to deliuer vs from such temptations, do not they ouerthrow themselues wilfully, which thrust thẽselues into them? Sure this lesson is verie profitable, & extendeth verie farre. For we see how a great nõber sticke not to fling out at randõ & to offẽd God. And wherby? Through rashnes. To their owne seeming they be able to resist whatsoeuer cõmeth in their way: & thereupon they step forth boldly and without discretion, & they maruaile greatly ỹ God shold disappoint their ouerlustinesse, so as they neede not any thing else to make them to stumble, yea and to tumble into some grosse fault. Seeing then that we be ouer hardy in hazarding our selues against a nomber of temptations: let vs learne ỹ God by giuing vs such a lawe, doth warne vs generally to walke in feare. It is true ỹ if God eall mee to any thing, all the daungers in the worlde must not hold me back nor stoppe me. For why? God calleth mee, and he will shield mee. But if I of mine owne fooliſh rashnesse will needes aduenture vppon a thing that God commaundeth mee not: if it fall out to my harme, what is the cause thereof but the ouerweening & presumptuousnes wherewith I was puffed vp? For I considered not mine owne frailtie, that I should haue humbled my selfe before God to haue walked in his feare. Then let vs marke well, that wee must not cast our selues ouer boldly in daunger, and promise our selues this and that as we see a nomber doe, which say, as for mee, I can well serue God: Although other men misbehaue themselues, yet may I liue vertuously euen among the wicked. It is true: but art thou sure ỹ thou doest it? No: but this lustie gallant that speaketh thus stoutly, intermingleth himselfe with the wicked and with their abhominations. If he heare Gods name blasphemed and outrageously misused a hundred thousand times, he winketh at it and vaileth his bonnet: if he see any looseneſse and vnhoneſt prankes hee intermedleth himselfe with them: and if he happen not to giue his full consent to them, yet he withstandeth them not. Thus ye see how that vnder the colour of hardinesse mẽ cast themselues into daungers which they ought to shunne, considering that God warneth them of them after that sort.

And herewithal Moses here setteth down the inquisition that was to bee made, that is to say, Whether there were any hatred at that present time or before. Wherein he sheweth, ỹ it is not ynough to heare a mans confession, and his protestation ỹ he did it not vpon any malice, wee must not stay there.

there. For if the offenders may bee beleeued: there shall neuer be anie hanged, they will well ynough cleare themselues, and it is a common rule among them: but the iudge must be of wisedom to bowlt out things, & to seeke out the truth some where else than at the mouth of the offender. True it is that the confession of offenders ought to be take, but if a mā should tarie til they vtter things of their owne accord, & condemne themselues: it were too great a mockerie. Therfore they must be straitened and constrained to say the truth, and triall must bee made by other meanes, that men may be assured and vtterly out of doubt of it. And euen verie nature it selfe sheweth it vs, though there were no lawe written by Moses. Thus ye see what we haue to remember vpon this place.

Whereas it is said that inquisition must bee made [whether there were any malice borne] to day or yesterday or of any time afore: it is a manner of speache that is rife in the Hebrew tongue, whereby is meant whether any hatred or rancour were perceiued to haue bin betwixt them at any time before. And why? For it is to bee presumed ỹ where there is any hatred, the partie goeth to worke w malice. And contrariwise, if it bee found: ỹ there was no quarell, no ill will, no hatred, no rancour: can it bee saide that the manslaughter was committed of malice and set purpose? No. And hereby we be put in minde, that the life and conuersation of a man ought to direct and leade vs to the finding out of the matter. True it is that we ought alwais to iudge of matters without respect of persons, and we must euer haue an eye to the deede & to the desert of the case as they terme it: but that is for the time comming. I meane not that diffinitiue sentence shoulde bee giuen according to that which hath bene knowen by a man aforetimes: but howe shoulde men deale to come to the trueth of things done? Let them consider what manner a one the man hath bin. I see that one is a despiser of GOD, I see a lewde vnthrifte that hath neither faith nor honestie in him, I see a drunkarde that is full of furie and passeth no more to murder a man than to cutte the throate of a Capon or a Henne: I see this: also I see he is a quareller, and is euer working of some mischiefe or other, yea I see and can point one with my finger that seeketh to bring all goodnesse to decay and to put al things out of order: I see al this: now I pray you is not this a good inducement to leade mee to the trueth of the matter, by comparing the faulte that hee shall haue committed, with his former life? As for example, a man is founde at some murder, or apprehended for some other misdeede that he is charged with: and bicause there is not sufficient witnesse, he will denie that hee knowes any thing of it: notwithstanding, by the markes that God sheweth mee of him, I see his whole lyfe is as an euidence against him. If I were to take information of the whole matter, and had a dooſen witnesses that coulde say vnto mee, this is the murtherer: I coulde not more clearly perceiue the murther, than by beholding that the partie is a rank naughtipacke, a despiser of God, such a one as hath neither faith nor honestie, a cutthrote and robber, of a spitefull stomacke, and ful of poison, so as he is vtterly out of all square. I pray you is it meete I should be blinded still when I see such prooses? Now then let vs marke well, that whereas Moses speakes here of the time past: it is to shew vs that God wil helpe vs to the knowledge of matters and of the truth of them, so wee on our side shut not the gate, nor quenche not the light when it is offered vs. Loe what wee haue to beare in minde.

And on the other part let vs marke also, that if wee haue knowen a man to be of a good conscience, and seene none other signes in him but of the feare of GOD, of honestie, and of vpright dealing: wee must not lightly take vpon vs to charge him with any cryme. For to what purpose shoulde it serue such as haue lyued as becommeth them, to haue giuen good example all their lyfe long: if euerie ill report shoulde bee admitted against them at the first dashe, so as they should be condemned without further inquirie? So then let vs marke, that God meant here to restraine vs from iudging vnaduisedly, and from thinking amisse on such as haue liued aright.

Nowe for the sume and conclusion of all, here is the promise that Moses maketh: that is to wit, That the people shall prosper in the lande that is giuen them to inherite, and that God will blesse them for euer, and them also that come of their children. And this doctrine is verie ryse: namely that if wee serue GOD he will blesse vs, as though our seruice were recompensed. But yet wee must not imagine hereupon as the Papistes doe, that wee deserue any thing at all at Gods hand, & that he yeeldeth vs like for like, as though he were boũd thereunto or as though there were some hire or wages due to vs: we must not enter into such dotages: but we must cõsider ỹ the cause why God promiseth reward to such as serue him, is to harten thẽ by doing thẽ to vnderstand ỹ it is not lost labor to serue God. By ỹ means then God intendeth to incourage vs to serue him and to do wel: and not to make vs proude or to put vs in beliefe that wee deserue aught. Then let vs marke, that wheras God promiseth vs reward: it is for that hee had earst giuen vs the grace to serue him. Whereof commeth it that wee liue as becommeth vs? Commeth it of our owne freewill? Commeth it of our owne selfmooving? No: but of Gods gouerning of vs by his holy spirit. Now then, although it were a recompence: yet ought not the same to bee attributed vnto vs: but rather to ỹ grace that God hath put into vs, which grace he crowneth. 1. Cor. 15. 10

But there is yet one point more: which is, that although God blesse vs and make vs to prosper: yet haue not wee serued him as we ought to do, for all that: but he should alwayes rather finde somewhat wherefore to punish vs, if he listed to vse rigour towardes vs. Therefore let vs not thinke that euer we haue so discharged our duetie, as that God should in any thing be bound towards vs. But forasmuch as he beareth with vs, and imputeth not our sinnes and offences to vs, but winketh at them & taketh all in good worth as at his childrens handes: therefore doeth he vouchsafe to reward our workes. And so wee see that all such as attribute any deserte to themselues, are surely besotted with fond selfweening, & must be fain to mislike of themselues, & not to make any account of their owne wretchednesse. And soothly if we wist what our workes are, wee should alwayes haue cause to sigh, and to craue pardon at Gods hand: and that will make our workes to be accepted at his hand, notwithstanding they bee vnperfect. And why? Bicause he beareth with vs as with his children. And so he yeeldeth vs, not that which he oweth vs, nor that which we haue deserued: but that which it pleaseth him to giue vs of his meere liberalitie. Neuertheless he giueth such recompence to our workes, to the intent wee should be the willinger to serue him, and vnderstand that our seruing of him shall not bee in vaine: but that we must imploy our selues for him as for our maister and prince, and giue our selues wholly to his seruice, though it bee not with such perfection as were requisite.

Nowe let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good GOD with acknowledgement of our faults, praying him to make vs feele them more and more, that being humbled we may bee drawen to true repentance, and therewithall knowe to what ende wee are chosen to bee his people, namely to the ende wee should worship him as our King and obey his lawes, not onely in outward deedes, but also with true and heartie affection: and liue in such wise vnder him, as we may moreouer bee linked to our neighbours with brotherly loue, and by that meanes bee assured more and more that his adopting of vs to bee his children is not in vaine. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs but also to all people and nations of the earth, &c.

On Fryday the vij. of Iune. 1555.

The xxx. Sermon, which is the twelfth vpon the fourth Chapter, and the first vpon the fifth Chapter.

44 This is the Lawe which Moses did set before the children of Israel.

45 These are the Couenants, Ordinances, and Lawes, which Moses shewed to the children of Israel, after they were come out of Egypt,

46 Beyond Iordan in the valley against Bethphogor, in the Lande of Sehon King of the Amorrhytes which dwelt in Hesebon, whom Moses and the children of Israel smote, after they were come out of Egypt,

47 And possessed his land, and the land of Og King of Basan, two kings of the Amorrhytes which were beyond Iordan towards the Sunrising:

48 From Aroer which is vpon the banke of the riuer Arnon, vnto the Hill of Sehon, which is Hermon:

The fifth Chapter.

AND Moses called all Israel and said vnto them. Heare O Israel the ordinances and Lawes which I set before you this day, that ye may learne them and keepe them in deede.

2 The Lord our God made a couenant with vs in Horeb.

3 The Lorde our God made not this couenant with our fathers, but with vs which are all here aliue at this day.

FOr as much as it is hard to keep men in subiection to GOD: therfore after hee had chosen him a people, he vouchsafed to rule thē, not for once and awaye, but euen so long time till they ought to haue bin well inured to his yoke. And after the same maner doeth he deale dayly with his Church. One worde ought to bee ynough to make vs vnderstand the trueth of our God. But forasmuch as wee beleeue not so speedily as were requisite: & when wee haue begunne, wee start away againe: and finally forget the things that he had taught vs: therefore he thinketh it not ynough to haue told vs once what is needefull for our saluation, but he doeth also put vs oft in minde of it, & printeth it in our heartes as much as is possible. That is the cause why Moses rehearseth in this text, ỹ he not onely deliuered them ỹ law in Horeb, but alſo taught it them new againe, after he had gone about with them a fortie yeres or faſt vpon it, yea and ceaſed not of al that time to ſet the things continually before them which GOD had earſt commaunded him to vtter vnto them, as hath bin touched already heretofore. But the diligence of Moſes is not ſuperfluous in that hee ſayth, that being come to the ſide of Iordan, and hauing vanquiſhed Sehon king of the Amorrhites, and Og the king of Baſan his neighbour, hee did ſtil put the people in minde of Gods lawes and ordinances, that they might ſtand to them and put them in vre, and that if they had not had ſufficient teaching already, they might at leaſtwiſe euen then know Gods trueth and ſticke to it. That is the matter which moſes meant by this text. And here he ſetteth downe expreſly: the Lawes, Couenants, Statutes, and ordinances, to expreſſe the better (as I haue tolde you heretofore) that God taught not his people by halues, ne gaue them a doctrine that was darke, ſhort, or vnperfect: but ſuch a lawe as comprehended al that was for their benefite & welfare, ſo as if they ſticked thereunto, they ſhould not neede to ſeeke any further, for they ſhould haue wherewith to direct themſelues in all poyntes and all reſpectes. Yea verily, for the lawe is a full doctrine accordingly alſo as the worde hath his originall thereof. Againe there are Couenantes: which is as much to ſay, as ỹ God couenanteth and indenteth with men, ſo as he neither forgetteth nor leaueth any thing out, that may make for the maintenance of the couenant betwixt him and vs, in that it hath pleaſed him to adopte vs for his children and Church, to take vs to himſelfe. Whatſoeuer concerneth the ſpirituall aliance betweene him and vs, is comprehended vnder the worde Couenant, becauſe they be articles. For when men intende to couenant, they ſet downe articles as well on ỹ one ſide as on the other. We ſee then how God proteſteth here, that the Lawe hath enough to teach men withall, ſo they hold themſelues to it. Afterwarde followe Statutes and ordinances. It is a wonder to ſee how painefull GOD is in teaching of vs, and how hee telleth vs that he hath not omitted any thing: and yet for all that, our wittes are ſo fugitiue, that wee ſtill couet ſome better thing than wee finde in Gods word. This diueliſh curioſitie hath reigned at all times in the worlde. And we ſee that euen at this day, do what wee can, this curſed deſire cannot be ouermaſtered, but that men will ſtill needes be wiſer than God would haue them to be. And why? For when his worde is preached vnto vs, there is no cauſe for vs to finde fault that hee hath not ſhewed vs all that is for our behoofe. Yet notwithſtanding, wee be tickliſh ſtill, and woulde faine haue this and that, beſides that which God hath ſhewed vs. Seeing then that ſuch faultineſſe bewrayeth it ſelfe in vs: it ſtandeth vs ſo much the more on hand to remember the counſel that is giuen vs here: that is wit, that if wee will ſuffer God to bee our maiſter, wee ſhall finde all perfection of wiſedome in his ſchoole. For his lawe is of ſufficient abilitie to make vs wiſe.

And againe, (as I haue ſayd heretofore) it conteineth all the poyntes that ſerue to vnite vs vnto our GOD: wherein conſiſteth our whole happineſſe and glorie. Moreouer it ſheweth vs the rule of well doing, ſo as we need not to ſeeke any where elſe what GOD alloweth, for wee haue there his ſtatutes and ordinances. Then may wee well knowe and aſſure our ſelues that our lyfe ſhall pleaſe GOD, when wee paſſe not the boundes that hee hath ſet vs. But if wee adde any thing at al to it, let vs not thinke that GOD alloweth that as righteouſneſſe or as a good thing: for hee forgate not any thing that was neceſſarie or behoofefull. And theſe two poyntes are well worthie to be noted. For they ſerue to make vs to ſet the more ſtore by the doctrine that is dayly ſet foorth to vs in the name of GOD. Sith wee ſee it is the perfect wiſedome, ought wee not to apply all our wittes to it, and to holde vs to it? Sith wee ſee that GOD foreſloweth not, but continueth to teach vs dayly: ought not wee alſo on our ſide to bee attentiue and diligent to profite vnder him? And though wee bee not ſo well giuen to it at the firſt as were meete wee ſhoulde: ought wee not to inforce our ſelues all our lyfe long to know Gods will ſtill more and more, till wee bee quite rid of all ignoraunce, which ſhall bee when wee be taken out of this world, and not before? Surely that which Moſes did, ought to ſerue vs for a rule and example at this day. For hee did it not at aladuenture. And beſides that, GOD ordayned him to bee as a lookingglaſſe to all prophetes, and to all ſuch as haue charge to teache in Gods Church. Let vs vnderſtand therefore that GOD will not haue vs to learne his trueth in one day, as though one leſſon were enough for vs: but hee will haue the thinges often rehearſed to vs which wee haue heard, that they may tary with vs and bee ſo rooted in our heartes, as wee may no more alledge in excuſe of our ſelues, O I haue not yet bin wel inſtructed. God then on his part is alwayes ready, ſo as wee cannot erre except we doe it wittingly, willingly, and wilfully as it were.

1. Cor. 1. 9. 10. 13.

But here is expreſſe mention made of: the Temple of Pheor, to ſhewe that although the people had an eyſore there to turne them away to ſuperſtition: yet had they a remedie for it alſo, inaſmuch as GOD called earneſtly vppon thē by his worde, that they ſhoulde not meddle with the idolatries of the heathen. In deede it was a hard chaſtiſement for them, to bee driuen to haue the temple of an idoll continually in their ſight. It was as if God meaning to haue ſpyted them, ſhoulde haue ſayd, I haue called you to poſſeſſe a lande that is alotted to my ſeruice, where yee ſhoulde haue ſeene nothing ỹ ſhould haue offēded you: for my Sanctuarie ſhould haue bin ſet vp among you, I ſhould haue bin worſhiped purely, according to my law, ỹ land ſhould not haue bin defiled with old ſuperſtitiōs, al ſuch things ſhould haue bin wiped our, ſo as ye ſhould haue heard nothing ſownde in your eares but my prayers. But now ye bee here in a corner of a countrie, where ye beholde the temple of an idoll, and where ſhameful abhominations are committed. Therefore it is as a vengeance which yee be faine to ſuffer for your ſinnes, becauſe yee be not worthie to enter into the land that I promiſed you. Thus yee ſee how it was Gods will to chaſtiſe his people, whē hee did let them dwell by the temple of Pheor. Lykewiſe if wee in theſe dayes bee mingled with idolaters, ſo as wee bee faine to looke vpon the filthineſſe which they commit, and vppon their peruerting of all religion: let vs vnderſtand that by that meanes God puniſheth vs, or at leaſtwiſe humbleth vs becauſe of our ſinnes. And wee ought to bee ſory, not onely for the offences that are committed by the vnbeleeuers, but alſo becauſe wee may well perceiue that wee be not worthie to ſee the whole worlde reformed, ſo as there might bee one accorde and conſent of harmonie in religion, and GOD bee purely worſhipped euery where: I ſay wee bee not worthie to ſee it. Nowe then if ſuperſtitions bee neere vs, and wee bee driuen to beholde the markes of them, or to heare any peece of them: Let vs impute it to our owne ſinnes.

But yet howſoeuer the worlde went, GOD failed not to giue the people of Iſrael a good remedie. For when the lawe was taught them ſo by Moſes: it was as if GOD had ſeparated thoſe that were his, from the blinde wretches that went aſtray in their ſuperſtitions. And hereupon wee haue to note, that although the whole worlde bee peruerted, and great confuſion is to bee ſeene, and all is full of error and corruption: yet notwithſtanding we muſt take Gods worde for our guide, and that muſt ſtrengthen vs to defy all ſuperſtitions and idolatries. And if wee bee ſo full of vanitie, as to fleete too and fro after that God hath giuen vs his worde: there will bee no excuſe for vs. For as I haue ſayd afore, Gods declaring of his will vnto vs, ought to bee a ſufficient bridle for vs. Though all the worlde went the contrary way, and one ſorte followed their owne fancies, and another ſorte had ſome lykelyhood of religion: yet ought none of theſe thinges to wey with vs, when wee haue once heard the voyce of our GOD, and thereby gotten knowledge of his will. And therefore let vs learne to make this certeine and infallible doctrine auaileable, that it may drawe vs from all wicked opinions, from all errors, and from the thinges which the diuell hath forged and men inuented in the worlde. Thus ye ſee what wee haue to remember, when Moſes maketh mention here of Pheors temple.

Now herewithall hee addeth alſo, that this [was done] after their ouercomming of the two kinges, Og king of Baſan, and Sehon king of the Amorrhites or of Heſebon. And this circumſtance ſerued to blame the people, if they yelded not themſelues obedient vnto God. Wee knowe that the more fauor GOD ſheweth vs, the more ought wee to bee prouoked to loue and feare him. God hath ſhewed himſelfe beneficiall to vs: nowe ought not the ſame to drawe vs the more vnto him? Yes. For if wee bynde a mortall man vnto vs by our wel doing: he ſhall bee taken and deemed vnthankefull, if hee acknowledge not the good that wee haue done him: and howe much leſſe are we to be excuſed, if we doe not ſo to the liuing God? Then let vs beare in minde that Moſes maketh expreſſe mention here, of the two kinges that had bin ouercome: to the intent that the people ſhoulde haue conſidered thus with themſelues. Goe to, we haue had here two excellent victories. Heretofore when wee woulde haue attempted it againſt the forbidding of our GOD: wee were ſtoutely beaten back, there was no ſtrength nor courage in vs, our enemies came lyke Waſpes or Hornets to ſting out our eyes, according to the ſimilitude which hath bin ſet downe heeretofore. But now are two ſtrong and mightie kinges ouercome, without any coſt of ours: So as GOD hath giuen them into our handes. Who was the cauſe of theſe two victories? was it not God, who directed and ruled all? Seeing then that he hath pitied vs, and begonne to performe the promiſe which he made to our fathers, and giuen vs ſo good a hanſell of it already: ought wee not to indeuer to giue our ſelues in ſuch wiſe vnto him, as wee may be wholy at his commaundement? Should wee not put our ſelues into his hand, which hee hath ſhewed to be ſo mightie for the loue of vs? Behold (ſay I) how Moſes meant the thinges that he rehearſeth concerning the diſcomfiture of Sehon and Og: namely to blame the people for their vnthankefulneſſe, if they yelded not thēſelues quietly to ẏ ſeruice of their God, which had bound thē ſo greatly vnto him.

But now muſt we alſo apply this doctrine to our vſe. Whenſoeuer wee perceiue any ſloth, or coldnes, or rebelliouſneſſe in our ſelues, ſo as our fleſhe falleth to ſtriuing, and wee labor not to Godward with ſo chearefull minde and luſtie courage as were expedient: wee muſt enter into account of the benefites that we haue receiued at his hand, [and thinke thus with our ſelues:] wretched creature how happeneth it that thou art ſo loth to ſticke to thy GOD, ſeeing hee hath ſhewed thee his will? conſider what thou haſt of him, bethinke thee of the benefits which hee hath beſtowed vppon thee vnto this houre. Let euery man examine himſelfe how much hee is bounde vnto GOD, that wee may bee the more inflamed to ſerue him. And let vs vnderſtand, not onely generally that hee hath created vs: but alſo that beſides his redeeming of vs by the bloud of our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt, as hee redeemed the Iſraelites out of Egypt: and beſides his drawing of vs vnto him by his grace: wee haue alſo had the doctrine of the Goſpell, which was all one as to take vs vnder his protection, and hee ſheweth it vs dayly by effect. How many helpes and ſuccours haue wee had in our infirmities? Shoulde not Satan haue ouercome vs a thowſand times, if our God had not reached out his hand to reſcue vs? Surely we ſhould be vtterly ouerthrowen. Yea we ſhould not only be borne downe ẇ temptations, but we ſhould alſo be vtterly ouerwhelmed, if we were not for ſuch reſcue as I ſpeake of. Seeing then that our Lord ceaſeth not to confirme

Nowe proceeding herewith, Moſes addeth ỹ he ſpake thus to ỹ people of Iſrael, ſaying: Hearke̅ to the Lawe which the Lord hath cauſed to be ſet before ye, that ye may learne it & keepe it. Here again Moſes rehearſeth ỹ preface which wee haue ſeene heretofore: ỹ is to wit, ỹ Gods law was not giue̅, only to ỹ end ỹ men ſhould heare it & know what it is: but to ỹ end we ſhoulde be reformed, & that God might haue proofe of the ſubiection ỹ we yeld vnto him. To be ſhort, we ſee that Gods doctrine conſiſteth in practiſe, & that we muſt ſhew by our deedes that we haue not bin taught it in vaine. Here Moſes ſaith firſt of all, Heare the Lawe which I ſet foorth to you in your eares to learne it. As if he ſhould ſay, Gods meaning is not that the doctrine which is preached vnto vs in his name & by his cõmiſſion, ſhould fall to the grounde: but ỹ wee ſhould receiue it diligẽtly, & ſet our whole mindes vppon it. For what is the cauſe why we profite ſo ſlenderly in Gods worde, but for ỹ wee buſie our ſelues to much about wordly matters? If we come to a Sermon, or if wee reade the holy Scripture, it is but as it were for faſhions ſake, we indeuour not to doe as wee ought to do, ỹ we might obſerue the things ỹ are told vs. Wherefore let vs ſee that we become diligent ſchollers, while God is ſo gratious to vs as to teach vs by his word. And for the ſame cauſe doth Moſes ſay that hee ſetteth it forth in their eares. In deed this manner of ſpeech were harſh in our tongue: neuertheleſſe it importeth, that God ſpeaketh not to vs in a darke or ſtrange language: but that he vttereth himſelfe familiarly, ſo farre forth as is requiſite. Seeingthen ỹ God commeth down to vs, to the end we might haue his wil familiarly vttered vnto vs: what excuſe will there be for vs, if his word be loſt; or if it ſlippe away, or if we take not hold of it to fare the better by it? True it is ỹ foraſmuch as we be groſſe and ignorant, we ſhall euer finde much darkeneſſe in Gods word, ſo as it ſhalbe to high & profound for vs: but who is to blame for it? Let vs marke then ỹ al ſuch as complayne ỹ Gods word is an vnknowen ſpeach vnto thẽ: are here rebuked of lying: & they do god wrong in ſlandering him, foraſmuch as they deny and deſpiſe ỹ grace which Moſes proteſteth to haue bin offered to ỹ Iſraelites in the ſetting foorth of the lawe. For he ſaith ỹ at ỹ time God ſpake to the peoples eares by the mouth of him. Sith it is ſo: the doctrine ought to haue bin familiar enough to them. And much leſſe cauſe haue we nowadayes to alledge this ſhift, that wee vnderſtand not the thinges ỹ are contained in the holy ſcripture. For God ſpeaketh merily enough and familiarly enough vnto vs. It is long of none but our ſelues ỹ we haue not our eares bored to heare him. And ſo let vs marke well, that there remaineth nothing for vs to doe, but to be attẽtiue that we may profite by the doctrine.

But yet herewithall we muſt reſorte to that which I haue touched afore namely that it muſt be kept and throughly followed. for if we doe no more but onely lyke well of Gods worde, & yelde recorde vnto it that it is good, true, and holy: God ſhall be greately beholden to vs for it. What is to be done then? Behold, God will try whether he be our maiſter or no. For the thing whereby to rule our lyfe, is not onely to inquire what he ſayth vnto vs: but alſo to giue ouer our owne deſires and affections, and to deſire nothing elſe but to pleaſe him, and to bee gouerned by him and by his righteouſneſſe. When wee be at that poynt, then is it a good proofe that God hath ſuch authoritie ouer vs as hee deſerueth. But vntill wee bee come to that poynt, we ſhall neuer knowe what it is to haue profited in the doctrine. Therefore let this worde Doe or Performe runne alwayes in their minds which heare the worde of God. How now, let them ſay? Beholde God hath graunted vs the grace to be taught. And to what ende? not to the ende wee ſhould but only hearken to it to ſay, yeamary, ỹ is well ſayd, this is good: but to the end that our whole lyfe ſhould bee reformed, and that foraſmuch as it is a good and ſure rule, wee ſhoulde no more goe aſtray as wee haue done, and as the ignorant wretches do, which are wandered out of the right way, and haue not the teaching that wee haue, whome the doctrine ought ſo to mortify, as God may reigne ouer vs, and wee be ſubiect vnto him. Thus yee ſee in effect what Moſes meant by proteſting to the people in this preface, that his ſetting foorth of the Lawe vnto thẽ, was not to the intent they ſhould but only heare it and haue their eares beaten with it: but to the intent they ſhould alſo imbrace it and keepe it.

Rom. 7. 12, 14.

And for confirmation hereof hee alledgeth, that God made his couenant with the people in Mõt Horeb, the better to bring them to feare, and to obey him for euer. For if GOD ſhould but onely exact his dew of vs: yet were wee ſufficiently bound to cleaue to him, and to ſtick to his commaundements. But nowe ſeeing it hath pleaſed him of his infinite goodneſſe, to come as it were to a common treatie, and to binde himſelfe interchaungeably vnto vs, whereas there is no cauſe why hee ſhoulde bee bounde: ſo as hee couenanteth to be our father and Sauiour, and to receiue vs into his flocke, to be his inheritance, that wee may liue vnder his protection, and hee ſetteth the euerlaſting lyfe before vs: Seeing hee doth all theſe thinges for vs, ought not our heartes to yeeld, though they were of ſtone? Seeing that the creatures doe ſee that the liuing God abaceth himſelf ſo farre, as to vouchſafe to enter into treatie with thẽ, as if he ſhould ſay, Go to, let vs ſee at what poynt wee bee: in deede there is an infinite diſtance betwixt you and mee, I might commaunde you what I thinke good without hauing any further to do with you, neither are you worthie to come ny me, or to haue any acquaintãce w̃ him ỹ can cõmaund you what he liſteth, without making any other proteſtation than only this, This will I haue ye do, this is my minde: & yet for all ỹ I forbeare mine own right, I offer my ſelf to you to be your leader & ſauiour, I am willing to gouern you, & you ſhalbe as my lytle houſholde, I wil be your king if

if you will bee contented with my worde: and beſides this, thinke not that my making of my couenant with your fathers, was of purpoſe to gayne any thing at your handes: for I haue no neede nor want of any thing, and if I had, what could yee doe for mee? but I ſeeke your welfare and your ſaluation: and therefore I am here ready to enter into couenaunt w̃ you, and to binde my ſelfe to you for mine owne part: Seing that the liuing God ſtoopeth ſo lowe, I pray you muſt wee not needes bee too too vnthankefull, if wee yeeld not to humble our ſelues vnder him, and forbeare all pride and ſtatelyneſſe? So then, it is not without cauſe that Moſes ſpeaketh here, of the couenant that God made with his people, to the ende that his goodneſſe and grace might bee chiefly knowen. And if this tooke place in the time of the Lawe, there is much greater reaſon that it ſhould take place at this day. For our Lordes couenanting was not onely with ỹ Iewes, nor for that one time onely: but when hee ſent his onely ſonne, then did hee ſhewe himſelfe much more fully to bee our father and Sauiour than hee had done afore, and hee did it after as ſweete and friendly a manner as could be, ſo as it is all one as if hee had euen opened his bowels vnto vs. Seeing then that God hath giuen vs his owne heart in the perſon of our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt, and we heare how Chriſt proteſteth that Iohn 15.15. hee will not hencefoorth call vs his ſeruauntes but his friendes, becauſe hee hath imparted himſelfe vnto vs ſo familiarly: I pray you muſt not the diuell needes haue bewitched vs, if wee bee not moued to yeelde our ſelues wholy vnto him, and to forſake our ſelues and all our owne affections? Therefore whē wee feele any naughtineſſe in vs that keepeth vs backe from ſeruing God, if wee finde any ſlothfulneſſe in vs, if wee bee fallen too faſt a ſleepe in this worlde: then to waken vs vp, and to cauſe vs to magnify God, let vs call to minde the couenant which our Lord hath made with vs.

Now hereupon Moſes addeth, It was not with your fathers that God made the couenant, but with vs, euen with vs that are all alme at this day. This ſentence may haue a dubble vnderſtanding. For it may be taken as though Moſes made a compariſon, to ſhewe the better that the people which liued at that time, might haue bin the more inflamed to ſerue God, becauſe they had receiued more grace than their fathers. And for the ſame purpoſe alſo doth hee ſay in Exo-
Exod. 6.3. dus, I haue not impaired this name of mine to your fathers. God ſpeaking there to Moſes, telleth him that hee had not manifeſted himſelfe ſo playnely to be God, vnto Abraham, Iſaak, and Iacob, as hee did commaund to be done by Moſes. Hereby hee meaneth that the people ought to be ỹ more attentiue as now, becauſe God reueiled himſelfe to them after an vnaccuſtomed manner. And ſo the meaning of this text might bee that God made not the lyke couenant with our fathers. True it is that God ſpake to his ſeruantes Abraham, Iſaak, and Iacob, and inſtructed them ſufficiently. And it is ſayd expreſ-
Ge. 18.17.19 ly in the eighteenth of Geneſis, Shall I hide from my ſeruaunt Abraham, what I intend to doe vppon Sodom and Gomor? No: for I know hee will teach his houſholde my decrees, ordinances, iudgementes, and lawes. Yee ſee here that Abraham did ſufficiently inſtruct his houſholde and that not after a ſlender faſhion, but in Gods iudgementes, ſtatutes, and ordinances, ſo as it muſt needes bee ſayd that hee had Gods lawe well printed in his heart. But yet for all that, it was a benefit not to be held skorne of, when God ſent his Lawe to the people in two tables, and vouchſafed that there ſhoulde bee wherewith to inſtruct them continually, and alſo that the ſame thinges ſhoulde bee recorded for vs lykewiſe. The thing therefore which wee may gather vppon this text is this proteſtation which Moſes maketh to the people, as if hee ſhould ſay: my friendes, conſider the benefit which God beſtoweth vpon you this day, which (verily) hee beſtowed not vppon our fathers. For hee gaue not them the lawe in writing as he hath done to vs, neither vttered he thinges vnto thē by percelmeale. True it is that he taught them ſufficiently and as much as was requiſite for their ſaluation: but behold, wee all this day are come a ſtep higher than they were: and therfore ought wee to come the neerer vnto him, ſeeing that hee is ſo come downe vnto vs. That is Moſeſes meaning if we take the text after the foreſayd maner.

Lykewiſe might a man ſay to vs at this day, that God hath not delt with our fathers as hee hath dealt with vs. And ſo meant our Lord Ieſus Chriſt when hee ſayd to his diſciples, many Matt. 13.17. kings & prophets haue deſired to ſee the things Luke. 10.24. that you ſee, and to heare the thinges that are preached vnto you, and yet haue not had their wiſhe. Seeing then that God of his infinite mercie hath vouchſafed to preferre vs before the Patriarkes and prophets: according alſo as it is ſayd, that the Prophets ſerued more for our 1. Pet. 1.12. times, than for their owne: thereby wee ought to learne to reſort vnto him, & to giue our ſelues wholy to his doctrine.

Howbeit if all thinges bee well conſidered: although the matter before rehearſed be very profitable, and that the ſame exhortation be oftentimes made in the holy ſcripture: yet if all the woordes be well weyed, Moſes meant that God made not his couenant with thoſe that had heard the Lawe at the firſt giuing of it foorth, ỹ is to ſay, not only with them: but alſo with thoſe that outliued them, and ſucceeded in their place after their deceaſe. So to bee ſhorte, Moſes intended to ſhewe here, that the Lawe was not mortall, to continue onely during the liues of ſuch as had the firſt hearing of it: but that it was a doctrine which ſhoulde continue in force and authoritie for euer. The Lorde our God (ſaith hee) made not his couenant with our fathers: that is to ſay, hee meant not that onely our fathers ſhould bee his people, and ſo to binde himſelfe in ſuch ſort vnto them, ỹ his law ſhould ſerue but for a fortie or fiftie yeres: but he hath made his couenant lykewiſe with vs, and with thoſe that were yet vnborne when the lawe was giuen giuen foorth. Although then that yee were not at mount Horeb, ne ſawe the fire vppon the hill: yet notwithſtanding aſſure your ſelues that your God did adopt you at the ſame time vnto himſelfe, and compriſed you lykewiſe in the couenant that hee made. Therefore it behooueth you to keepe his lawe, becauſe it was ſet forth to laſt for euer, and to continue from age to age, and to be preached vnto the worldes end. That is the true and proper meaning of Moſes. And hereof wee may gather a good leſſon: which is, that although we were not at the firſt ſetting abroad of the Goſpell, nor ſawe the thinges that are reported to vs of the lawe: yet muſt not Gods word forgoe his authoritie with vs. And why? True it is that Gods rayſing vp of Moſes was a ſpeciall prerogatiue to the people that liued in that time: but yet muſt not the authoritie of the Lawe bee impeached for all that: for it conteineth Gods trueth, which indureth for euer, and is not variable nor tranſitorie after the maner of men. It is ſayde that men are lyke a flower or as the graſſe ỹ withereth and dryeth away out of hand: but Gods trueth endureth for euer. And this trueth which is vnchangable and vnuariable, is conteined in the Lawe. True it is that the Lawe as concerning the ceremonies is quite aboliſhed: but as concerning the ſubſtance of it, & the doctrine ỹ is cõteined in it, it keepeth his force for euer and neuer decayeth. Nowe let vs marke that although wee were not in the time of Moſes, yet is it not for vs to deſpiſe the the thinges that are reported to haue bin done [at that time,] or which are contayned in the lawe. And why? For hee ſpake them to vs. Hee ſpake not onely to the multitude that was aſſembled at mount Horeb: but alſo generally to the whole worlde. Now if this bee verifyed of the lawe: much more reaſon is it that it ſhould bee ſo of the Goſpell. For as I ſayd, the lawe, as concerning the ſhadowes and figures, is gone to decay: but in the Goſpel there is no ſuch lyke thing. For here our Lord maketh his newe and euerlaſting couenant: it is a couenant that indureth from age to age [without ceaſing.] What is to be done then, when the Goſpel is preached? Wee muſt aſſure our ſelues that the ſonne of GOD is come into the worlde: not onely to teache thoſe with whome hee was conuerſant when he was a mortal man: but alſo to purchaſe them vnto God his father, and to call the world to ſaluation, by giuing his Apoſtles commiſſion to ſound foorth their voyces through the whole worlde, that euen thoſe might bee made partakers of his doctrine which neuer heard them: which doctrine wee alſo muſt receiue ſtill at this day, as if Ieſus Chriſt himſelfe were ſtil among vs, or as if the Apoſtles ſpake to vs with their owne mouthes. That (ſay I) is the thing which wee haue to remember vppon this place. And therefore let vs not make any alteratiõ in Gods Church, or attempt to innouate any thing in his worde, foraſmuch as we knowe that hee will haue it to holde on continually in one equall courſe and trayne. For ſeeing hee hath giuen vs his Goſpel, and ſtabliſhed a certaine gouernment in the time of the Apoſtles and in the primatiue Church: it behoueth vs to come to the ſame, and to ſtay there. If wee doe otherwiſe: it is all one as if wee would make Gods worde mortall and corruptible as wee our ſelues are. Wherefore let vs learne, that although the worlde bee variable, ſo as there bee turnes and returnes euery day, and there is not any of vs all which hath not a number of opinions running in his head: yet muſt wee not looke to haue the libertie to doe now one thing and now another. Why ſo? For God hath not made his couenant with our fathers, but with vs that are aliue this day. Then let vs vnderſtand that as long as wee bee in this world, God gouerneth vs here and ſheweth vs the way, to the end wee ſhould not bee as wandering Pilgrims roming vp and downe, to gad after our owne luſtes: but bee guided as it were by his hand. To be ſhort, whereas Moſes ſayth here, vs that are all aliue this day: it ſerueth to ſhewe that men muſt not of all their lyfe long inuent any newe lawe, nor haue one to day and another to morrowe. For why? Our lyfe dependeth vpon Gods Lawe, and that ought to content vs: therefore let vs but onely profite in that, and haue an eye to the thinges that tend thereunto.

Furthermore, no doubt but that Moſes vpbraideth the people here with their vnthãkefulneſſe, if they ſhould not dedicate their liues to the ſeruice of GOD. As if hee ſhould ſay, By what meanes liue wee? Is it not becauſe our Lorde hath placed vs in this world? Againe, ſeeing that the lyfe which wee haue commeth of him, ought wee not to beſtowe it in his ſeruice? Ought it not to bee wholy conſecrated vnto his wil? Thus then ye ſee how Moſes tanteth al ſuch as runne aſtray and follow not Gods worde. But yet herewithall wee muſt beare in minde the thing which I haue touched afore: that is to wit, that wee haue not a doctrine of two or three dayes continuance: but that wee muſt bee confirmed in it as long as wee liue. When wee haue once receiued the thinges that are conteined in ỹ holy ſcripture: we muſt indeuer to profite in them: and to goe forewarde ſtill in ſuch wiſe, as wee may ſtill growe in them vntill God take vs out of the world: aſſuring our ſelues that he wil keep couenant with vs, ſo as he for his part wil not bee vnfaithfull nor vnconſtant, but ſtedfaſt in his purpoſe. Seeing that hee is ſo: let vs bee the lyke, and ſo long as wee liue, let vs haue none other reſpect but to ſticke to him, euen in ſuch wiſe as hee ſheweth vs by his word. For wee muſt not goe about to knit and linke our ſelues to our GOD by our owne fancies: but looke as hee commeth to vs, ſo muſt wee goe to him, and when wee bee there, wee muſt beware that wee keepe vs there. Thus ye ſee what wee haue to gather vppon this text, that wee may bee the better diſpoſed to receiue the inſtruction that ſhall bee giuen vs hereafter, concerning Gods Lawe and commaundementes.

Nowe let vs kneele downe in the preſence of our good GOD with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to make vs feele them better than we haue done, ſo as our whole ſeeking may bee to ſubmit our ſelues vnto him, and hee may vouchſafe to reach vs his hand, not ſuffering vs to bee any more giuen to our owne fancies and affections, but that wee may magnify his goodneſſe which he vſeth towardes vs, and fare the better by it by yeelding him the obedience that hee deſerueth: ſpecially becauſe hee hath vouchſafed to bring vs his lawe and declare it to vs, and hath not onely ſhewed vs the way how to liue well, but alſo vouchſafed to adopt vs to bee his children, and too ſhewe himſelfe to bee our father and Sauiour for our Lorde Ieſus Chriſtes ſake. On Wednesday the xij. of Iune. 1555.

The xxxj. Sermon, which is the ſecond vpon the fifth Chapter.

4 The Lord God talked with you face to face vpon the mountaine, out of the middes of the fire.

5 The ſame time I ſtoode betweene the Lord and you, to ſhewe you the word of the Lord. For yee were afraid at the preſence of the fire, and went not vp into the mount: And hee ſaid,

6 I am the Lord thy God which brought thee out of the Land of Egypt, from the houſe of bondage.

7 Thou ſhalt haue none other Gods in my ſight.

WE haue ſeene heretofore howe Moſes tooke great payne to make the people perceiue the maieſtie that is in Gods word, that they might receiue it with all reuerẽce. For although men proteſt enough that they be willing to ſerue God: (for euen nature driueth them thereunto:) yet can they not ſubmit themſelues to his word, notwithſtanding that that is the true proofe whereby to knowe whether wee bee ſubiect to GOD or no. But therein appeareth the rebelliouſneſſe of the worlde. For albeit that they graunt that Gods word is to bee receiued without gaineſaying: yet ſhall yee skarſly finde one among a hundred, that humbleth himſelfe in good earneſt, to yeelde it the authoritie which it ought to haue. And why is that? Becauſe wee conceiue not the maieſtie of GOD which is vttered there.

Yee ſee then that it is not for naught that Moſes hath tolde vs ſo often heretofore, that Gods worde ought to beare ſuch a maieſtie towardes vs, as all creatures ought to quake at it. And now againe hee addeth another confirmation of the ſame matter, ſaying, that God talked with the people face to face in the mount, out of the middeſt of the fire. As if hee ſhoulde ſay, yee haue now no cauſe at all to doubt, whether the doctrine that I deliuer vnto you bee of God or of men. For it is warranted enough and more than enough: God hath declared himſelfe to you by viſible and apparant ſignes, ſo as yee cannot but knowe that it is hee which ſpake to you. Now wee ſee Moſeſes meaning.

But before wee goe any further, here a queſtion might be put, how it may bee ſayd that God ſpake face to face, ſeeing that men cannot comprehend his infinite glorie: and with what eye can wee beholde Gods ſubſtance? Wee be ſo weakefighted, that if God ſhould caſt but one little beame of his brightneſſe vppon vs, by and by wee ſhould bee altogether daſeled and confounded. Agayne, wee knowe how it is ſayde that wee cannot beholde God face to face, vntill wee bee renewed, which ſhall not bee till the laſt day. For as now (ſayth Saint Paule) wee ſee but as in a glaſſe, and in parte, and darkly. 1 Cor. 13. 12.

Moreouer hee ſayth in another place, that as now the Goſpell repreſenteth Gods maieſtie in ſuch wiſe vnto vs, as wee may ſee him there: but the lawe was darke, and there hung a veile before it, which hindered the fathers frõ knowing God in ſuch ſorte and ſo familiarly as wee doe nowadayes. But all this agreeth very wel. For if the Lawe bee compared with the Goſpel: it is certeine that the thing ſhall bee founde to bee true, which Saint Paul ſpeaketh heere. For God declared not himſelfe ſo familiarly at that time, as hee doth to vs by meanes of our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt, who is his liuely image. Therefore at this day the greate treaſures of Gods wiſedome are layde foorth, ſo as GOD calleth vs to the kingdome of heauen, and ſheweth that hee taketh vs for his children and heires: it was not ſo in the time of the Lawe. Againe, although wee haue ſo great & familiar knowledge nowadayes: yet doth ẏ thing ſtand alwayes true which I ſayd: ẏ is to wit, ẏ we ſee but in part. And why ſo? 2 Cor. 3. 15. 18. Coloſ. 1. 15. Heb. 1. 2. 3. Col. 2. 3. Eph. 1. 5. 14. 1. Theſſ. 5. 23.

why ſo? For wee be not yet made partakers of Gods glory, and therefore wee cannot come neere him, but hee muſt be faine to reueile himſelfe to vs according to our rudeneſſe and infirmitie. And albeit that God haue appeared to men euen from the beginning of the worlde: yet hath hee not ſhewed himſelfe as hee is in deede, but according as men might be able to abide it. Therefore wee muſt alwayes come to this poynt, that God neither was knowen of the fathers, nor appeareth to vs at this day in his ſubſtance: but applyeth himſelfe to vs, inſomuch as hee is faine to ſtoope to make vs perceiue his preſence according to our abilitie.

Neuertheleſſe it is not for naught that Moſes ſayth here, that God ſpake face to face. For hee meaneth that the people had not ſome glimering or geſſe onely, ſo as they might doubt or onely conceiue ſome opinion of him, but that they had an infallible warrant, ſo as they might conclude thus: here is our GOD, who hath ſo communicated himſelfe vnto vs, as our faith ought not to be any more vncertaine, neither ought the doctrine that is ſet foorth to vs in his name, to be any more debated in way of diſputation, As whether it bee meete to bee receiued or no. And why? For God hath giuen vs a ſure marke, which cannot deceiue vs, nor leaue vs in doubt that it proceeded not from him. Thus wee ſee nowe the meaning of Moſes.

Hereupon wee haue a good leſſon to gather: which is, that if GOD vtter not himſelfe in ſuch ſtately maner as our lyking could afoorde: wee muſt aſſure our ſelues that his ſo dooing is for our profite and welfare. For if wee conſider our owne infirmitie, it will pull downe our ouerluſtineſſe whereto our nature prouoketh vs continually. For wee woulde bee inquiring of Gods ſecretes without ende or meaſure. And why? Becauſe wee feele not our own vnabilitie. Wherefore let vs magnify the goodneſſe of our GOD for that it pleaſeth him to haue regard of vs and of our rudeneſſe, and to hide his glory from vs leaſt wee ſhoulde be ouerwhelmed by it. For as I ſayd afore, wee coulde not abide it, being ſo fraile as wee bee. And herewithall let vs vnderſtande, that there is no excuſe for vs, if wee yeelde not GOD his due honor when hee ſhall haue giuen vs any euident token of his preſence.

Therefore let vs not looke that God ſhould come to vs in his ineſtimable glorie, that the heauens ſhould cleaue a ſunder, and that all the Angels of paradiſe ſhould appeare to vs: But when our Lord ſheweth vs that it is hee that ſpeaketh, let that ſuffiſe vs, and let vs humble our ſelues out of hand. For if wee will needes bee ſlothfull in that caſe: it ſhall bee caſt in our teeth that wee turned our backs vpon him when hee ſhewed vs his face. In deede it is ſayd vnto vs in another place, that men cannot beholde Gods face without periſhing. Inſomuch that although hee ſhewed himſelfe in ſuch wiſe to Moſes as is ſpoken of in Numery, ſo that he was familiar with him as with his friend: yet is it ſayd that hee ſawe no more of him but onely his backe partes. But that is to ſhewe vs alwayes that wee muſt not preſume to preace vnto GOD, ſo long as wee beare this fleſhe about vs: we muſt not think to attain ſo high. For if the very Angels of heauen vnder the ſhape of Seraphins, doe hide themſelues when GOD ſheweth himſelfe: what ſhall wee doe, which doe but creepe heere on earth? But howſoeuer the caſe ſtand, yet will God condemne vs for our vnthankefulneſſe, if we haue no liſt to behold his face, and that the tokens of his preſence which hee ſheweth vs doe not ſuffiſe vs. Aboue all thinges let vs beare this in minde, namely that the caſe concerneth our ſubmitting of our ſelues as well to the lawe as to the Goſpell. For it is there chiefly that God will be knowen of men to the ende they ſhould worſhip him, ſimply receiuing whatſoeuer commeth out of his mouth. Whereunto then ſhall wee apply his ſaying of Moſes? To this ende verily that whenſoeuer the ſcripture is ſet afore vs, ſo as it is either preched or expounded vnto vs, or wee our ſelues reade it: this preface muſt ſerue to humble vs, that we may exalt God with all reuerence, and not aduenture to reply againſt his worde, but tremble at it, as is ſayde in the prophet Eſay. For all that euer is conteined in the holy ſcripture, is ſo throughly warranted vnto vs, as it may well be ſayd that GOD hath talked with men, yea and euen ſhewed himſelfe to them after a viſible manner.

Eſa. 66. 2. 5.

Nowe hereunto Moſes addeth, that he himſelfe had bin as a mediator betweene God and men, becauſe the people were afraide and durſt not goe vp into the mountaine. Whereby Moſes doth vs to wit, that the deliuering foorth of the lawe by a mortall man, ought not to diminiſhe the authoritie thereof. And why? Becauſe the infirmitie of the people required it: that was their fault. And it is a text well worthie to bee marked. For wee doe alwayes ſeeke ſtartingholes, that wee might deſpiſe Gods worde. In deede wee will not pretend it openly: but yet are all of vs ſo lewdely diſpoſed, that wee thinke our ſelues well at eaſe if wee can finde any color to ſay, Tuſh I knowe not whether this bee Gods word or no, I cannot tell whether it ſpeake to me or no, I wote not what condition is annexed to it. Thus wee ſee how the worlde ſtriueth continually to exempt themſelues from the obedience of Gods worde: and it is a very common excuſe to ſay, yea, it is true that GOD ought to be obeyed, but yet for all that, they that preach are but men lyke our ſelues: and muſt their doctrine bee hearkened to, as though they were men that came from heauen? Many men beare themſelues in hand that this ſhoulde goe for payment, notwithſtanding that they be rebels againſt GOD, or rather that they paſſe not at all to ſubmitte themſelues to him and to his worde.

But wee haue an aunſwere heere, wherewith to cut off the occaſion of all this: which is, that whereas GOD ſendeth his worde by the hand of men, hee doeth it in reſpect of mens default and infirmitie. Neuertheleſſe hee ceaſeth not to giue vs ſome marke of his glory, whereby his word is ſufficiently knowen to be heauenly: inſomuch that if the matter bee duely ſcanned, it appeareth that God hath warranted it throughly. So then, it is not onely for the auncient fathers, that Moſes ſpake: but this warning is directed to vs alſo: that is to wit, that although men bee appointed as meſſengers to preach Gods worde to vs, yet ought not that to diminiſhe the maieſtie thereof any whit at all. And in deede wee doe miſconſider our owne frailetie, when wee deſire that God ſhoulde worke miracles dayly: nay verily wee cannot tell what is meete for vs. For as touching miracles, there haue bin enowe wrought already for the warranting of the trueth as well of the Lawe as of the Goſpel, that wee might bee fully certifyed of them. Yet notwithſtanding it is expedient for vs at this day, that God ſhoulde ſendvs men like our ſelues, with commiſſion from him to teach vs in his name and in his ſtead, as one that allureth vs to him with all gentleneſſe and courteſie. Thinke we that wee were able to abide his preſence, if hee ſhoulde come to vs in ſuch ſort as hee is in deede? Alas no: there were no ſhift for vs but wee ſhould bee all conſumed. If God ſhould ſpeake in his ſtrength: wee knowe how it is ſayd that it would make the very rockes and mountaines to melt: and could we that are as feeble as any thing may bee, bee able to outſtand ſuch force; that it ſhould not thunder downe vpon vs and deſtroy vs? Therefore let vs marke well that when God ordeined that his word ſhould bee preached vnto vs, and that we ſhould haue it in writing, therein he applyed himſelfe to our weakeneſſe, dealing with vs as if himſelf were a mortal man, to the intent we ſhould not be afraide to come vnto him, but be drawen to him with all gentleneſſe. Againe, how highly doth hee honor vs, in that it pleaſeth him to chooſe men of no reputation among vs, to repreſent his perſon and to ſpeake to vs in his name? For what could hee giue more to the Angels of heauen? Coulde hee giue them a more honorable charge or office? Seeing then that hee vouchſafeth to ſet men in ſo noble and excellent a roome, as to beare abroad his word: thererein hee ſheweth how great his goodneſſe is towardes vs, namely that it is more than fatherly.

Pſal.97.5. Eſa.64.1.3. Mich.1.4.

And on the otherſide, hee tryeth our humilitie. For if hee thundered from heauen, if he appeared viſibly vnto vs, if the Angels came downe vnto vs: it were no maruell though men beleeued his worde. But when both great and ſmall imbrace the order that hee hath ſet in his Church, that is to wit, when they obey his worde that is preached vnto them: that is a good tryall of our faith. Neuertheleſſe, let vs ſtill come backe to this, that God hath ſhewed himſelfe ſufficiently to men, ſo as wee haue no cauſe to doubt of his worde, or to ſtande ſcanning from whence it came. For wee bee ſure enough of his will, if wee bee not wilfull in refuſing the ſignes that hee hath giuen vs. Thus yee ſee what wee haue to gather vppon this ſentence of Moſes, where hee ſaith that the people durſt not goe vp into the mount, by reaſon of the feare which they had conceiued. And although wee in theſe dayes woulde not refuſe that God ſhould ſpeake vnto vs: yet if all thinges bee wel conſidered, it would not bee for our profite. And therfore let vs vnderſtand, that Gods vſing of mens ſeruice in that wiſe, ought not to diminiſhe the certeintie of our faith.

It is ſayd conſequently, that God taught the people, ſaying: I am the Euerlaſting, thy GOD which brought thee out of the lande of Egypt. Thou ſhalt not haue any other God in my ſight. Here to keep the people of Iſrael in awe, GOD telleth them that the knowledge which they haue of him, ought to keepe them aloofe from all ſuperſtitions. For it was not to bee marueiled at, that the heathenfolke had idols, and went wandering after their owne errors and fancies. Wee muſt vnderſtand that it is mans propertie of himſelfe, to doe ſo. It is pitie to ſee howe much wee be inclined to vanitie. We neede not to goe to ſchoole to learne to bee deceiued: for euery of vs is clearke greate enough in that caſe. To bee ſhorte, wee goe alwayes forewarde to euill, yea euen vnder colour of good: inſomuch that in ſtead of ſeruing GOD, there is nothing in vs but corruption and idolatrie. Therefore the Heathen had their diuerſities of ſuperſtitions: for euery man might forge what hee would of his own braine,) and in the meane while the liuing GOD was let alone of all men. And why? For hee was not ſo gratious to the whole worlde, as to ſhewe himſelfe to all men. And ſo, men became brutiſhe, but that was for want of teaching. Neuertheleſſe, that excuſed them not: for they bee ſtill guiltie before GOD. Moreouer, the fountaine from whence idolatrie ſpringes, is the vnthankefulneſſe and lewdeneſſe of men in that they forſooke the liuing GOD of their owne accord.

And when the worlde was once growen out of kinde (as I haue ſayd afore,) the wretched Paynims ran aſtray lyke blinde folkes: for they had no light to ſhew them the way of ſaluation. Now here GOD chargeth the people of Iſrael with rebellion, if they helde not themſelues to the lawe that hee gaue them. And why? For I am the Euerlaſting, thy God. When as he ſayth, I am the Euerlaſting: it is an excluding of al the Gods that haue bin inuented by men. As if hee ſhould ſay, there is but onely one Godhead, and that is in mee. Therefore it is to bee concluded, that ſuch as knowe mee and yet doe turne away to idols, cannot excuſe themſelues, but ỹ they haue wilfully forſaken ỹ liuing God.

And whereas hee addeth that hee is the God of that people: it is to ſhewe that hee had declared himſelfe ſufficiently. As if hee ſhould ſay, I haue ſhouled you out from all other men: You ſee how all other men goe wandering aſtray, and that is for want of guiding and direction. But I haue choſen you for my people, and giuen my ſelfe vnto you.

Seeing then that I am your GOD: holde your ſelues henceforth to mee, or elſe ye ſhalbe

leſſe excuſable than the Heathen. Your puniſhment muſt needes be dubble, yea and a hundred fold grieuouſer than theirs, bicauſe ye ſhall haue falſified your faith which ye haue plighted vnto me, and broken the Couenant that I haue made with you.

He alledgeth yet furthermore the fauour that he had ſhewed to the people, ſaying That he had brought them out of Egypt, from the houſe of bondage. Whereby he meaneth that he hath bounde the people in ſuch wiſe vnto him, as they can not ſtart away, but they muſt deſerue to bee ſtill puniſhed. For inaſmuch as they ſhall haue forgotten their deliueraunce: their vnthankefulneſſe ſhall bee dubble. Seeing they had bene redeemed by the hand of God: it behoued them to giue ouer themſelues wholly to the ſeruice of him that was their Redeemer. And he termeth Egypt the houſe of bondage purpoſely, to make the people conſider throughly in what plight they had beene there. For we ſee that they which ſighed and cried out when they were oppreſſed with ſuch violence and tyrannie as wee reade of in Exodus: deſired to returne thither againe as ſoone as God had deliuered them. And whereof came that, but that they remembred not their oppreſſion any more, and the diuel ſtopped their eyes, that Gods grace might not bee eſteemed among them as it deſerued? That is the cauſe why Moſes termeth Egypt the houſe of bondage. In the end the commaundement is added, that the people ſhould not haue any other gods before his face, whom they ought to account for their God.

Exod. 2. 23. & 14. 12. & 17. 3. Num. 14. 3, 4

Now let vs apply all this doctrine to our own vſe. Firſt of all whereas he ſaieth, I am the Euerlaſting: let vs learne to weigh this ſaying in ſuch ſort, that ſeeing Gods Maieſtie is appeared vnto vs, wee imagine not any other Godhead. For God cannot abide any companion. If the Sunne doe darken the light of all the Starres: is it not reaſon that when God ſheweth himſelfe, al men ſhould worſhip him, and that all the glorie that was before ſhould be then as it were vtterly defaced? Yes: and therefore is it ſaid by the Prophetes, that when the Lord raigneth, there ſhall bee none other light but his: inſomuch that euen the Sunne ſhall be dimmed, and the Moone bee turned into darkneſſe. This ſerueth to ſhew vs, that if wee mingle any of the fanſies of our owne heads with God: it is a diminiſhing of the right that belongeth vnto him. For he can not away with any companion. Therefore this word Euerlaſting muſt driue all fantaſticalneſſe from vs, that wee take not leaue to imagine one thing or other. Let vs be contented to haue the onely one God, & let him ſuffice vs. And for the ſame cauſe alſo is it ſaid, that when our Lord Ieſus ſetteth vp his ſeate in the world, then ſhall the idols of Egypt fall downe. Now this text belongeth to vs. For like as Moſes ſaide to the people of olde time, The euerlaſting hath appeared vnto you, and therefore you muſt driue away all idols frō among you: ſo now, ſeeing that God hath declared himſelfe vnto vs in the perſon of his onely ſonne, it is meete that all idolles ſhould downe. Wee knowe that the Countrie of Egypt was full fraught with them aboue all the reſt of ỹ world. Now then whereas we were plundged in lyes & darkneſſe before, & had an infinite number of idols: all thoſe thinges muſt melt & vaniſh away, when as God telleth vs that hee is the Euerlaſting. And whereas moreouer he termeth himſelfe our God: it is to acquaint vs with him, that wee may knowe his Maieſtie after a louing faſhion. For if God ſhould ſpeake but onely of his euerlaſtingnes and of his being: we ſhould for ỹ moſt part be vtterly abaſhed. True it is, ỹ this were ſufficient to condemne all our dotages: But yet for all that, ſo it falleth out, that wee can not be properly inſtructed thereby to our owne vſe and profite. Therefore when God hath once ſhewed vs that he onely is to be worſhipped and honoured: then muſt he alſo come to vs after a gentle and familiar maner, that wee may feele him to bee our father and maiſter, and knowe that his will is to make a couenaunt with vs, to the intent that wee ſhould ſticke to him. This is the thing that is meant by the title that is attributed to him in this text, as if he ſhoulde ſay, I come not onely as the euerlaſting to make thee afraide: but therewithall I am alſo thy God, I haue choſen thee to my ſelfe, I intend to haue thee for mine heritage. Now then wee ſee howe GOD authorizeth his Lawe, to the intent wee ſhould receiue it with all reuerence and loweline ſſe: and yet therewithal vouchſafeth to make it amiable, to the end wee ſhould taſte of it, and take pleaſure to ſubmit our ſelues to it, and ſuffer our ſelues to bee ruled by the doctrine therein contained. And ſo to bee ſhort all excuſe is bereft vs, if wee honour not our God nowe adayes by renouncing all ſuperſtitions, and all thinges that are contrarie to his ſeruice. Why ſo? Bicauſe the titles which he attributeth here to him ſelfe to holde vs in awe, ought to drawe vs vnto him. When as he ſpeaketh of his ſoueraintie ouer vs, and ſaieth he is our God: that ought to make vs to taſte of his fatherly goodneſſe. And both of them are contained here. Wee ſee then that there remaineth no more to doe, but to hearken to the thinges that are tolde vs in Gods Lawe, and to hold our ſelues ſimply to the ſame. And that is ỹ cauſe why he vpbrayded the people of Iſrael, that they neither loued him nor feared him. If I bee thy God and maiſter, where is thy feare? And if I bee thy father, where is thy loue, ſaieth hee by his Prophet Malachie? No doubt but the Prophet hath an eye to the thing that Moſes toucheth briefely here. For when God nameth himſelfe the euerlaſting: it is to the end we ſhould yeeld him the reuerence that is due to him. And whereas he nameth himſelfe the God of that people: it is to the end to winne them by friendlineſſe, and to ſhewe them that ſeeing he had choſen them, it was good reaſon that they ſhould put themſelues wholly into his handes. Nowe if it were ſo vnder the lawe: it agreeth much more to vs nowe adayes. For although God haue vouchſafed to bee as it were abaſed in the perſon of his onely ſonne: yet notwithſtanding he continued ſtill in his glorie, and it was no abatement of the highneſſe whereof mention is made here. The abasing of our Lord Iesus Christ, was an infallible euidence of the mercie of our God: but yet howsoeuer it were, it ought not to make vs to despise him. For it was Gods wil to draw vs to his infinite glory by that means, to the intent ỹ we shold worship him seeing he came down after ỹ fashion vnto vs. Iustly then may he vpbraid vs now adayes, that we be vtterly vnexcusable, if we doe not both feare him and loue him. For he sheweth himself to be both our God and our maister. Where then is our feare, if we make none account of his commandements, but bee so hard hearted at his threatnings, as to set light by them, and to goe on stil in euill deedes, & to make but a mocke of it though he shew himselfe to be our iudge and call vs to a reckening? Where is the reuerence that we owe to our God? For if it were a mortall creature, we would stand in more awe of him than we do of the liuing God, who hath all superioritie ouer vs. Againe, it is not ynough for vs to feare God after a slauish maner, as by constraint: but our feare must bee matched with loue. And for the same cause he nameth himselfe our father. Yea and wee haue to note, that in shewing himselfe to bee the GOD of Israel, vnder that saying he meant to bee our Sauiour also. Thou art our GOD (sayeth the Prophet Abacuck) and wee can not perish. Nowe then, let vs beare these titles well in minde, for they belong to vs, that is to say, they ought to serue for our instruction at this day, when the Maiestie of God is appeared in our Lord Iesus Christ.

And herewithall wee must also note what he addeth concerning the fauour that he shewed to his people. I haue brought thee (saieth he) out of the land of Egypt. Of a trueth God meant hereby to bind the people of Israel to him most specially aboue al other natiõs. And that is the cause why hee maketh expresse mention of their deliuerance. Neuertheless, when God speaketh, wee must bethinke vs of all the benefites whereby he hath bound vs to himselfe, which are infinite & inestimable. But yet must we taste of them after our abilitie, and apply all our vnderstanding to them, and forasmuch as wee see that wee come short, wee must straine our selues the more, to know at leastwise so much by them, as may teach vs to feare and loue our God. Doeth God then speake? We must first consider, that it is he which hath created and fashioned vs: and therefore wee bee his. Loe here a benefite that is singular ynough alreadie. Were there no more but his setting of vs in this worlde and his maintaining of vs here: could wee recompence it as wee bee bound to do, though euery of vs imployed himselfe to serue him to the vttermost of our power? No: But yet further when we behold ỹ recordes of his loue which he giueth vs both aboue and beneath, as that he hath made the world for our sakes, that he hath ordained and appointed all things to our vse, that he hath printed his image in vs to the intent wee should be immortall: and that he hath prepared a better inheritance for vs than this transitorie life: when we see al these things, must it not needes be that wee bee worse than blockish, if we be not rauished with earnest affection to worship our God, and to vowe and dedicate our selues wholly to him? Yes: but besides this, wee must bethinke vs of all the good turnes which God hath done vs, as well in general as in particular: and then must we confesse with Dauid, Lord, when I thinke vpon thy benefites, behold, my wit is plundged as it were into a bottomlesse pit: yea they be moe in nomber thã the haires of my head, as it is said in the fortith Psalme. Againe, when wee haue acknowledged how much we be beholden to our God generally: let vs also consider the benefites that euerie of vs haue receiued at Gods hand particularly. And whereas it was saide to the people of Israel in olde time, I brought thee out of the land of Egypt: let vs consider whence our Lorde deliuered vs, when he vouchsafed to admit vs into his household and Church. For we be Adams childrẽ, by nature cursed, heires of death, altogither sinnefull, and consequently must needes be lothsome to our God. Let men like of themselues and glorie of themselues as much as they list: yet not withstanding this is their pedegree, this is al their nobilitie, namely ỹ they bee Satans bondslaues, that they haue a sinke of sinne and corruption in them, and that they haue nothing but Gods wrath and curse hanging ouer their heads: and to bee short, that being banished from the kingdome of heauen, they be deliuered vp to all mischiefe and woe. But our Lord hath deliuered vs from these things by the hand of his sonne, he hath not sent vs a Moses as he did to the people of olde time: nay he hath not spared his onely sonne, but hath deliuered him to death for vs. Seeing then that we be raisomed with so deare and inestimable a price, as is the holy bloud of the sonne of God: ought wee not to giue our selues wholly vnto him? Furthermore if Egypt were termed a house of bondage: I praye you what is it when ỹ diuell holdeth vs in his bondes and vnder his tyrannie, so as we haue no meanes to scape death, but are shut out from all hope of saluation, and God is vtterly against vs? Seeing wee bee deliuered from all these things, is it not a much more excellent deliuerance, than that which Moses here speaketh of? Yes: and therefore whereas it was saide to the people of olde time, thy GOD hath brought thee out of the lande of Egypt: nowe it is sayde that we be not our owne, as saieth Saint Paul in the fourteenth to the Romanes, and also in the seuenth of the first Epistle to the Corinthians. Wee bee not our owne: the faithfull must not take leaue to doe what they list, nor to liue euerie man after his owne liking. And why? Bicause our Lorde Iesus Christ dyed, and is risen againe to raigne both ouer quicke and dead. Then is it good reason that Iesus Christ shoulde bee Lord of life and death, seeing he spared not himselfe when our redemption & saluation were to be wrought.

ſhould bee of his flocke. True it is that hee is the Lambe without ſpot which wypeth awaye the ſinnes of the world, and that he hath offered himſelfe vp to reconcile men vnto God. But yet for all that, wee ſee a great nomber of people that are let alone, againſt whome the gate is ſhut, and GOD doeth not graunt them the grace to bee inlightened by faith as wee bee. And therefore let vs marke well that ſeeing the Goſpell is preached vnto vs, and wee haue there a warrant that the ſonne of God will make the redemption auailable in vs which he hath once wrought, and cauſe vs to inioye the benefite thereof: wee muſt learne that our thankeleſneſſe will bee the ſhamefuller, if wee doe not our indeuour to giue our ſelues to our God, who hath bounde vs to himſelfe after that ſorte. If the vnbeleeuers play the looſe Coltes, and ouerſhoote themſelues in their ſuperſtitions, and in wantonneſſe of life: well, it is bicauſe they haue no bridle, he hath not reyned them backe as he doeth his houſholde folke. Wee ſee the horrible confuſion that is in Poperie: but yet there is not any doctrine to plucke men backe to God: nay rather, that doctrine which is there, doeth drawe them quite and cleane from him. And we ſee that the diuell hath gotté ſuch footing there, that all is full of trumperie and illuſions, and the liuing God is quite forſaken. And ſo ye ſee that there is a horrible confuſion. But as for our part, ſeeing that God draweth vs to himſelfe, is it not a ſtraiter bond to make vs to linke in throughly with him, and to holde our ſelues vnder obedience of the doctrine that is ſet foorth to vs in his name? Yes: and therefore let vs learne to ſticke ſo to our God as wee may renounce all that euer wee can imagine of our owne head: and let vs conſider that it is not for vs to ſwarue one way or other any more, or to be toſſed too and fro in any wiſe, aſſuring our ſelues that there is but onely one God, who will poſſeſſe vs, yea and poſſeſſe vs in ſuch wiſe, as his honour bee not taken from him and beſtowed vppon creatures, and that he watcheth ouer vs to the end wee ſhould knowe that it is onely he on whom wee ought to call, and to whoſe graee we ought to repaire for ſuccour. And finally foraſmuch as it is his will to haue and accept vs to bee of his houſhold: let vs walke as in his preſence and in his ſight, and that in ſuch wiſe as wee worſhippe him as our onely God, not onely with Ceremonies and outward proteſtation, but alſo in our hearts, as they that knowe that his ſeruice is ſpirituall, and to be ſhort, let him poſſeſſe both our bodies and our ſoules, that he may bee throughly glorified in all reſpectes.

Now let vs kneele downe in the preſence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to make vs feele them better, that it may leade vs to true repentance to be mortified more and more, ſo as our wicked luſtes may be cut off, and we bee wholy giuen to feare and honour him: & that foraſmuch as wee can not ſerue him throughly as he deſerueth, ſo long as we be hild downe vnder the infirmities of our fleſh: it may pleaſe him to vphold vs, vntill hee haue clothed vs with his own righteouſnes. And ſo let vs all ſay, Almighty God, &c.

On Munday the xvij. of Iune. 1555.

The xxxij. Sermon, which is the third vpon the fifth Chapter.

8 Thou ſhalt not make thee any grauen image nor the likeneſſe of anye thing that is in heauen aboue, or in the earth beneath, or in the waters vnder the earth,

9 Thou ſhalt not bow downe to them nor worſhip them. For I am the Lord thy God, a ielous God, viſiting the ſinnes of the fathers vppon the children, euen vpon the third and fourth generation of them that hate mee:

10 And ſhewing mercie in a thouſand generations, to them that loue mee and keepe my commaundementes.

FOraſmuch as men are ſo inclined to corrupt Gods ſeruice with wicked ſuperſtitions: God is faine to threaten them, that they may bee helde vnder as it were by force, or els their fondneſſe would carie them away to ſurmiſe of God, contrarie to that which may beſeeme his Maieſtie. And this is a verie notable point, as I haue touched heretofore. For in as much as the people of Iſrael knew the liuing God: it may ſeeme to bee as it were needeleſſe to forbid them to make any image. Howbeit by reaſon of our curſed inclination, it was behoofefull that this forbidding ſhould bee added as ſtraite as wee ſee it here. And it is well for vs that it is ſo. For this ſinne is rooted as it were in our verie bones: in ſo much that if God tolde vs not that he cannot away with idolatrie, and that he wounded vs not with that threate: there is none of vs all which would not forge infinite idols to himselfe, and by that meanes the honour of ỹ liuing God should be conuicied ouer vnto our own imaginations. Wherefore let vs marke well, that here wee bee conuinced to haue a froward and cursed nature which draweth alwaies to superstition, and that it is requisite for vs to bee restrained after a violent maner. For of our owne will wee can neuer serue GOD so purely, as to imagine nothing of him but as may beseeme him. And herewithall wee see also whereunto our good intentes serue vs. For if there bee any thing wherein men may excuse themselues, by imagining that they doe well: it is in forging of idols. For to what end do they make them, but to serue GOD, that they may bee stirred vp to the greater deuotion, and be the surer that God will graunt their requests? Therefore by this meanes men might shroude themselues vnder colour of good intent. But we see on the contrarie part, that God abhorreth it: wee see howe he vttereth the grieuous sentence of condemnation, against all such as proceede to behaue themselues so after their owne imagination. They may well ynough say, (and so it is in deede) that their meaning is to serue God. But what for that? He accepteth no such seruice, but rather curseth it and vtterly misliketh it, & that iustly. For (as I haue shewed afore) it is a disguising of his Maiestie, to make any visible image vnto him. Therefore this text teacheth vs to forbeare to doe the thinges that seeme good to our selues, and specially that when Gods seruice commeth in question, we must not attempt any thing vpon our owne head, but in all simplicitie followe that which he ordaineth by his woord, wout putting any thing at all therto. For looke how soone wee swarue neuer so little from that: alledge wee what wee can, and set wee neuer so good countenance vpon our case: God will not faile to punish vs. For this threatening of his is not in vaine where he saieth, That he is a ielous & angrie God, which visiteth the wickednesse of the fathers vpon the Children.

Ye see then how there are two pointes for vs to remember in this text. The one is, that forasmuch as we be naturally too much giuen to idolatrie, wee must alwayes set this threate of God before our eyes, that wee take not vppon vs to mingle any thing with his word, or to deuise any worshipping of images, but serue God purely according to his owne nature, and not after our owne fansie. Let that serue for one point. The other is, that we must consider, that we must not pretend our owne good intentes, to iustifie the things that we our selues haue inuẽted: but contrariwise beare in minde, that the chiefe seruice which God requireth, is obedience.

1.Sa.15.22. Eccle.4.17.

But now let vs come to the wordes that are set downe here. First God saieth, I am thine euerlasting God, yea euen the strong or rather mightie God. Here againe he setteth himselfe against idols. For wee haue seene heretofore, that to correct superstition, he did set himselfe forth in his Maiestie. And surely Gods manifesting of himselfe, is to bereaue men of all excuse. So long as we knowe not the true Religion, no nor can discerne which is the true God: it is no maruaile though our wits runne at rouers, and we gad vp and downe without any certaine stay, so as we be euer straying. But contrariwise, when God hath once shewed himself vnto vs, & giuẽ vs knoledge of his trueth: it is good reason that all our owne dotages should sinke, and that wee should sticke to the thing that wee knowe. For this cause God repeateth the matter, how he had declared himselfe to the people of Israel, and chosen them to himselfe of purpose to gouerne them, euen by his Lawe which is nowe published. And he termeth himselfe expressely a ielous or angrie God: for the Hebrew word that is placed here, betokeneth both twaine. And although he call himselfe God here: yet the word that he vseth commeth of strength. Now then whereas he termeth himselfe ielous: no doubt but his meaning is, that he cannot abide the violating of his honour, or that men should rob him of that which is his owne, to giue it vnto creatures: he is not so patient as to suffer such treacherie. And therefore although Gods honour be not so greatly regarded of vs as it deserueth: this argueth not ỹ he neglecteth it: for in the ende wee shall finde that he hath not forgotten himselfe; but that he will maintaine his glory, accordingly also as he declareth thorough out the whole holy scripture.

Num.14.28 Leuit.10.3.

Truely, if we had but one drop of good reason, we would be ielous ouer the honour of our God, so as wee should neede no incouragement thereto, but rather should indeuour to performe this saying of the Psalme, that the zeale of him should euen consume vs, and we should be so set on fire within, that whensoeuer we sawe his Maiestie dishonored or lightly esteemed, we should feele as it were a burning fire within vs. But what? We be nice in maintaining our own honor but in the meane while wee suffer Gods honour to be trodẽ vnder foote, and to be scoffed at, and to be made sport of, or rather to be rent in peeces, when the world giueth it selfe to idolatrie. Howbeit, for as much as we doe not our duetie: our Lorde hauing cast vs in the teeth with our lewdnesse and vnthankfulnesse, must be faine to shewe vs, that although we haue bin lasie & negligent, yet will not he faile to haue such a zeale as is requisite for the maintenance of his honour, so as he will be reuenged of men for defacing of it after that maner.

And to the end we should know that God being ielous of his honour, is also well able to punish idolaters: he vseth that name of his which betokeneth strength or mightinesse, as I haue declared alreadie. And it behoueth vs to ioyne those two wordes togither. For Moses meaneth the same thing that is better expressed in the Prophet Nahum where he saieth, The Lord is a ielous God, a God of vengeance, a God that punisheth such as haue offended him, a God that watcheth ouer his enemies, a God that wil come with whirlewind and tempest. The Prophet vseth this manner of speache, that God is ielous, that is to say that he forgetteth not himselfe, ne shutteth his eyes when men despise him, but marketh euerie whit of it, and inregistreth it before fore him, and they muſt come to account for it. And hauing ſpoken of the ſaide diſpoſition, that is to ſaye, that God will maintaine his honour: hee ſheweth immediatly that hee hath wherewith to doe it, and that hee is armed with power to puniſh his foes, ſo as they cannot ſcape his hande. That is the cauſe why hee ſpeaketh of whirlwind and tempeſt: that is the cauſe why he ſpeaketh of vengeance: inſomuch that if God ſeeme to diſſemble thinges for a time, yet hee hath an eye to his enemies, and will in conuenient ſeaſon make them to feele with whome they had to doe, and that they prouoked the liuing God. Nowe wee ſee what Moſes meant here: that is to wit, that God ſetteth great ſtore by his own honour: and ỳ although we beare our ſelues in hande that wee ſhall ſcape vnpuniſhed when wee haue violated his ſeruice, or by any meanes corrupted it: yet notwithſtanding hee will ſhewe that hee hath not forgotten himſelfe, and that he will maintaine himſelfe. Marke that for one point.

Beſides this, hee is alſo mightie to put the ſame ielouſie in execution. He is not like mortall men, which are angrie and colerike when diſhonor, diſhoneſtie, or wrong is offered them, but yet are not able to doe as they woulde. God is no ſuch a one: for hee is armed with power to confounde all his enemies. In deede wee
Deu. 32. 39. muſt not imagine any humaine affections in
4. God, that hee ſhoulde bee moued as wee ſee that men bee. There is no wrathfulneſſe in God. But foraſmuch as wee cannot conceiue him as hee is: hee is faine to apply himſelfe to our rudeneſſe. Therefore whenſoeuer the ſcripture ſpeaketh of anger, of wrath, or of indignation: it is not for that God is inclynable, or for that hee reſembleth vs, or for that hee is moued thereto: [no,] hee ſtandeth alwayes at one ſtay, and there is not ſo much as any little
Iam. 1. 17. ouerſhadowing in him, as ſaith S. Iames, who vſeth the ſame ſimilitude to ſhewe that there canbee no chaunge in his beeing. Howbeit foraſmuch as wee conceiue not Gods iudgementes and threatenings, but by the termes of yre, anger, wrath, and indignation: therefore doth the holy ſcripture ſpeake ſo of him. Wherefore let vs marke firſt of all, howe GOD hath Hebr. 10. 31. ſhewed vs in this text, that it is a dreadfull thing to fall into his handes. And ſpecially that if wee corrupt the pureneſſe of his ſeruice with our wicked inuentions, and will needes attempt whatſoeuer our owne braine deuyſeth: we ſhall feele with whom we haue to doe, and that he is too great a Lorde for vs to dally with after that faſhion.

Moreouer God thinketh it not ynough to threaten the parties themſelues that turne away from this Lawe through their idolatrouſneſſe: hee thinkes it not ynough to tell them that hee will puniſh the perſons themſelues: but hee extendeth his vengeance euen to their iſſue alſo. I am (ſaieth hee) a iealous God which viſiteth the ſinnes of the fathers vppon the children, vnto the third and fourth generation. It ſhoulde ſeeme at the firſt bluſh to bee vnſeemely for Gods Iuſtice, that hee ſhoulde puniſh the children for the offeces of their fathers and mothers. And beſides that it is vtterly againſt naturall reaſon: wee ſee Ezech. 18. 19 what is ſaide of it in the propheſie of Ezechiel: namely that the partie which ſinneth ſhall beare his owne burthen: ſo as the ſonne ſhall no more beare the ſinne of his father, than the father ſhall beare the ſinne of his ſonne. This text then may ſeeme ſomewhat rough and ſharpe, yea and to deface the vprightneſſe and equitie that is in God: for ſinne craueth his wages, that is to ſay the death of him that committeth it. Why then ſhoulde hee dye which is guiltleſſe? Againe, although this reaſon Ezech. 18. 2. were not ſo euident: yet doeth the holy ſcripture auowe, that God telleth vs hee will not puniſh the guiltleſſe children for the ſinnes of their parentes. Yea and hee rebuketh the Iewes for this blaſphemie which ranne in their mouthes, whereof they had made a common prouerb: Our fathers haue eaten ſowre grapes, and our teeth are ſet on edge with it: Gods handling of vs thus rigorouſly is not for any fault of our owne committing, for wee haue liued as wee ought to do: but he ouer reacheth vs with the ſinnes of our fathers. After that manner did the Iewes grudge againſt GOD. But hee ſweareth that ſuch blaſphemie ſhall take place no more.

Nowe if all bee well conſidered, there is no contrarietie at all. For in the ſaide texte of Ezechiels, GOD meant nothing elſe but that thoſe whome hee puniſhed coulde not alledge innocencie, nor ſaye hee did them wrong in vſing rigour againſt them, but that euerie one of them ſhoulde finde themſelues guiltie, ſo as hee himſelfe ſhoulde bee iuſtified, and they well perceiue that hee went not beyonde meaſure and reaſon. And this is verie certeine. For although GOD puniſhe the children for their fathers ſakes: yet ceaſeth hee not to bee righteous in ſuch chaſtiſementes. For if the children bee well examined, they ſhall finde themſelues guiltie on their owne behalfe: yea (ſay I), euen though they were but newely borne, and had neuer done any open fault that were knowen to the worlde. For what manner of ofspring are wee? What bring wee with vs by nature but vtter naughtineſſe? Yee ſee then that euen infantes are ſinners aforehande: they bee condemned before GOD being yet in their mothers wombes. The euill is not yet perceiued: but yet for all that their nature is ſinfull and frowarde, they haue a ſecret Rom. 5. 14. ſeede within them, and they bee alreadie in condemnation, becauſe of the originall ſinne that is come from Adam vpon all mankinde.

Nowe ſeeing that the little babes are not Eph. 2. 3. exempted from the wrath and curſe of GOD, in ſo much that if hee puniſhe them it is not without cauſe, neither can men ſaye but that hee proceedeth alwayes vprightlye as a good Iudge: much leſſe canne they that are men men growen auowe themſelues to be innocent, but they ſhall much rather bee founde guiltie. And ſo as concerning Ezechiels purpoſe, it is an euident matter that God puniſheth not the guiltleſſe children for their fathers ſakes: for there is fault to bee founde euen in them alſo.

Furthermore where as hee ſaieth that hee puniſheth the ſinnes of the fathers vppon the children: let vs marke howe that is done, and then will this doubt be yet better diſcuſſed. Firſt of all wee knowe that God is not any thing indetted vnto vs, and that if hee doe vs any good, it is of his owne free goodneſſe, and not for that hee is bounde vnto vs. Nowe if he liſt to vſe rigour towardes vs, hee may leaue vs all in condemnation as thoſe that are there alreadie. Let God but onely withholde his mercie, and ſhewe himſelfe as a iudge to the whole worlde, and what will become of it? Wee bee all forlorne, there is no remedie for vs, both great and ſmal, fathers and children, I ſay all of vs without exception are damned euerychone, if God drawe vs not out of the curſed caſe wherein wee be, yea and that hee do it not of his owne freebeſtowed goodneſſe, without being bound thervnto. Now then ſeeing that God might deſtroy vs and caſt vs all away: is he to be blamed, is there any fault to bee founde with him, if it pleaſe him to vſe his goodneſſe and mercie towardes ſome, and to call them to him, and to deliuer them out of the bottomleſſe pitte wherein they bee? No. For our eye muſt not bee ſpitefull becauſe hee hath pittie vppon his creatures. And although hee vſe not like courteſie towards all men: yet doth it become vs to keepe our mouthes ſhutte: yea and ſometimes againe wee ought to open them wide to confeſſe that all his doings are in vprightneſſe and equitie, though they ſurmount our capacitie. For wee cannot alwayes perceiue why God diſpoſeth ſo of men: but our pratling muſt bee put downe, and wee muſt learne to reuerence God in his iudgementes when they bee too high and too ſecret for vs to attaine to. How ſoeuer the caſe ſtand, let this ſtand for a generall rule, that God might let vs alone in the deſtruction wherein we bee if he thought good, and that by that meanes all the worlde might periſh: but foraſmuch as it pleaſeth him to ſhewe himſelfe pitifull and gentle, not towardes all, but towardes one part of them, therefore putteth he a difference betweene the one and the other. And there vppon hee leaueth whom he liſteth in their owne curſednes wherein they were borne.

Nowe if it bee demaunded why GOD vſeth mercie after that manner towardes the one ſorte and rigour towardes the other: truely the firſt cauſe thereof is vnknowen to vs, and wee ought not to bee inquiſitiue of it. And why? for it becommeth our wittes to bee locked vp and impriſoned in that behalfe, and wee ought to confeſſe that God hath free power to chooſe whom hee liſteth and to caſt away the reſt. But howſoeuer the caſe ſtande, hee maketh this promiſe to the faithfull, that hee will haue mercie vppon their children: and that as hee hath begunne his mercie vppon the parentes themſelues, ſo hee will holde out with it continually vnto a thouſande generations. We ſee nowe that there is ſome cauſe why God hath pitie vppon the one ſort rather than vppon the other. Againe on the contrarie part, he threateneth the vnbeleeuers that he will curſe them, not onely in themſelues, but alſo in their raſe, and in thoſe that ſhall ſpring of them.

But nowe let vs come to the mercie that God graunteth, and to the puniſhment that hee extendeth. His bleſſing of the faithfull folkes children, is not in riches, in health, and in all other ſuch thinges, or in making them to proſper to the worlde warde: Thoſe are not the greateſt bleſſings which God graunteth: that is not the ende which hee beginneth at: but rather the mercie that hee ſheweth them, is that hee gouerneth them by his holy ſpirite, that hee giueth them the badge of his adopted children, and that he correcteth them and purgeth them from their ſinnes, to faſhion them againe after his owne image. Yee ſee then that the mercie which God extendeth towardes the children of the faithfull, is that hee ſuffereth them not to abide in their owne corruption and naughtineſſe, but reformeth and ruleth them by his holy ſpirite. This done, hee proceedeth yet further, and maketh them to proſper, euen in this worlde, vntill the full meaſure of his mercie bee heaped vppon them, that is to wit, till he haue taken them vp into his heauenly kingdome, and there giuen them euerlaſting life.

On the contrarie parte, whereas hee puniſheth the ſinnes of the fathers vppon the children: it is as much to ſay, as hee letteth their ofspring alone in the ſame plyght that they bee in. There is a wicked man, there is a deſpyſer of GOD, there is an hypocrite, there is an vnbeleeuer: well may hee haue children, but God careth not for them (as yee woulde ſaye) and taketh them as ſtraungers: and foraſmuch as hee acknowledgeth them not to bee of the number of his, hee vouchſafeth not to ſhewe himſelfe fatherlike towardes them, but letteth them runne at rouers, ſo as Sathan muſt needes poſſeſſe them. And when they bee ſo deſtitute of Gods ſpirite, what can betide them but vtter miſchiefe, ſo as they muſt prouoke him to wrath more and more? Nowe then doeth our Lorde puniſhe them without cauſe? Can they ſay that they be guiltleſſe? No: for there is fault ynough in them beforehande. Wee ſee then much better, that the thing which God hath ſpoken by Ezechiel is true: that is to wit, that the partie which hath ſinned ſhall receiue his owne hyre as hee deſerueth: and that the guiltleſſe ſhall not bee puniſhed for the guiltie and for the offenders ſake. Neuertheleſſe wee ſee alſo, that his ſaying that hee will puniſh the ſinne of the fathers vppon their children, is not without cauſe. For why? It is in him to withholde his grace from the children of the wicked and faithleſſe, or of the deſpiſers of his worde, worde, or of hypocrites that abuſe his name: God is at free libertie to withdrawe his ſpirite from all the whole race of them. And when their children are ſo alienated from God: what haue they, but the corruption of Adam? There

Rom. 8. 7. is nothing in them but ſinne and corruption, and therefore they muſt needes be enemies vnto God. Yee ſee then how he puniſheth them iuſtly, and that they cannot ſhift themſelues from his hande, to ſay that hee doeth them wrong, or that he is cruell to them. All mouthes muſt bee ſtopped in that behalfe. True it is that the rebellious ſorte will neuer bee contented: for wee ſee howe there are ſome, which aduance themſelues againſt God with ſuch boldneſſe, as all modeſt and ſober folke may bee aſhamed of them. But let vs ſuffer thoſe dogges to bark their fill, and let vs in the meane while glorifie our God with all lowlineſſe, acknowledging neuer-
Exod. 33. 19 theleſſe that hee hath authoritie and good right to bee gracious and fauourable to whome hee liſteth. By reaſon whereof wee muſt conclude, that if God withholde his ſpirite from the linage of the wicked, hee cannot bee blamed of crueltie for it: for yee ſee they bee puniſhable when they bee ſo forſaken of him, and are not gouerned by his holy ſpirit. Wherefore let vs marke well, that this ſaying impugneth not the ſaying of Ezechiell.

But let vs come backe againe to the intent of Moſes. It is not to bee doubted but hee ment to imprint a greater feare of God in vs, than if he had ſaid but ſingly, God will puniſh you when yee ſhall haue corrupted his ſeruice, by chaunging any thing in Religion: and thinke not to ſcape his vengeance, if yee deuiſe any ſhape of him: for hee cannot abide to haue his honour defaced after that faſhion. Had Moſes ſpoken after that manner, men are ſo ſtubborne and hardharted, ỹ they woulde not haue beene ſufficiently touched with feare. But heere hee proceedeth further. God (ſaieth hee) will not onely puniſh you in your owne perſons, but alſo extende his vengeance to your iſſue, and not onely to your children, but alſo to the vttermoſt of your ofspring, ſo as you ſhal alwayes feele his wrath as a burning fire, and the markes of your wickedneſſe ſhal appeare ſtil after your deceaſe. God will put you to open ſhame: ſo as yee ſhall needes bee a gazi ngſtocke. Although ye be rotten in the earth: yet ſhall Gods vengeance purſue you in ſuch ſort, as your ſinnes ſhalbe remẽbered from age to age, and the world ſhall know that yee haue beene diſobedient, vnto him that had beſtowed ſo many benefites vppon you, as yee ought at leaſtwiſe to haue beene as ſheepe of his flocke, to bee ruled by him according to his worde.

Nowe therefore let vs learne to bee no more ſo drowſie when God wakeneth vs after that faſhion. Surely if hee gaue vs but ſome incling of his diſpleaſure by ſome worde or outward ſigne: it ought to touch vs with feare and terrour. But wee bee dull vppon the ſpurre: and therefore ſeeing G O D telleth vs, that beſides his puniſhing of vs in our ſelues, hee will continue his vengeance ſtill vppon all our linage, and that thoſe which are begottẽ of vs muſt be condemned after our death: his ſpeaking after that maner ought at leaſtwiſe to make vs more ware, to liue in awe of him and to call our ſelues home to him, leaſt we ſhould prouoke his wrath, ſeeing it is ſo terrible. Thus yee ſee howe we may profite our ſelues by this text.

Nowe he ſaieth, of them that hate him. By this terme hee meaneth all ſuch as breake his Lawe. If it bee demaunded whether all ſuch as ſwarue from their obedience to God warde doe therefore hate him: this text ſheweth that they do ſo. [Howbeit] not to their owne ſeeming, but yet in verie deede. And in this caſe we muſt not reſt vppon our owne iudgement: for onely God is competent iudge to determine of that matter. And foraſmuch as men when they giue themſelues to naughtineſſe, will not ſay, no nor think in their hearts ỹ they hate God in doing amiſſe: it is requiſite that that fault ſhoulde bee diſcouered. True it is that the hypocrites will indeede pretende, that the loue of God cauſeth them to ſhew ſome good countenance, and in verie deed they may well haue ſome ſeede of it: howbeit, that is but a baſtardly and ſinful ſeede, inſomuch that this hatred of God appeareth not in the hypocrites, no nor euen in thoſe that leade a diſordered and looſe life: but yet is it in them though wee perceiue it not. For like as malefactors coulde finde in their heartes, that there were no iudge nor order nor gouernement in the worlde: ſo all ſuch as acknowledge not themſelues ſubiect to God (at leaſtwiſe willingly) are contemptuous againſt him, and coulde bee contented to haue him plucked out of heauen. This is apparant ynough in ſuch as are vtterly giuen to wilfulneſſe. When men haue once let themſelues looſe to all wickedneſſe: they can no more away with any correction, and thervpon they become ſo much the leſſe teachable. If a man threaten them, they gnaſh their teeth at him, they ſtorme at him, and they become as good as madde againſt God. Nowe then, this hatred of God is apparant ynough in ſuch as haue taken laweleſſe leaue to doe euill, and are caryed away with their owne leawdneſſe, and as it were ſaped in their ſinnes. Againe, it is true that this appeareth not in ſuch as haue yet any feare of God in them, & feele ſome remorſe when a man ſpeakes to them of God and of his iuſtice: but yet is there ſome hate of God in them. Indeede they thinke it not: but God ſeeth much more clearely than wee, and whereas we perceiue not things, he noteth them. Wee muſt alwayes remember how
1. Ioh. 3. 20. ſaint Iohn ſaieth, that God is greater than our conſciences, that is to ſay, that if our conſciences beare recorde of our offences, God will not ſleepe in the meane while. And ſo let vs briefely beare in minde, that all ſuch as ſubmit not themſelues obediently vnto God, ne humble themſelues vnder his maieſtie to ſerue him and to honour him: do euerie one of them hate him, although they ſhewe it not at the firſt by their deedes, nor can bee deemed of the worlde ſo to doe. And for the ſame cauſe doeth God begin

He ſaieth that hee will ſhewe mercie in a thouſand deſcentes to ſuch as loue him. And why? For it is vnpoſſible that wee ſhoulde bee deſirous to honour God and to bee obedient vnto him, vnleſſe wee haue felt the loue that is ſpoken of heere. And this may ſerue vs for a good leſſon: according as we ſhall ſee hereafter, howe Moſes intending to giue vs a briefe ſumme of the Lawe, ſaith: What doeth the Lorde thy God require of thee O Iſrael, but that thou ſhouldeſt loue him with all thy hart, & that thou ſhouldeſt sticke vnto him? Deut.10.12. Neuer (ſay I) doe we knowe what it is to keepe Gods Law, and to behaue our ſelues thereafter, vnleſſe wee beginne at the ſaide loue. And why? For God requireth willing ſeruice. Hee will not haue vs to ſerue him, onely vpon a ſlauiſh feare: 2.Cor.9.7. but hee will haue vs to goe to it with a free and cherefull courage, that wee may euen take Rom.8.15. pleaſure in honouring him: and that cannot be done without we loue him. Wherefore let vs marke, that the beginning and as it were the welſpring, foundation, and roote of obedience, is the ſaide loue of God, ſo as wee be not forced to come vnto him, but haue a ſingular pleaſure in doing it, aſſuring our ſelues that our true bleſſednesse is to deſire to bee gouerned altogether according to his will, and to frame our ſelues wholly therevnto.

Moreouer let vs marke alſo, that this loue cannot be in vs, vntil we haue taſted of the goodneſſe of our God. For ſo long as wee imagine God to be againſt vs, wee muſt needes ſhunne him. Will wee then loue him? will wee frame our ſelues to the obeying of him, to take all our delight in ſeruing of him? Wee muſt firſt knowe that hee is our father and ſauiour, and that hee ſeeketh nothing but to bee fauourable vnto vs. When we haue ſo taſted his loue towards vs: thē Ioh.14.15. ſhal wee bee prouoked to loue him as our father. Inſomuch that if that loue be in vs, no doubt but we will obey him, and his lawe ſhall reigne in our mindes, in our affections, and in all our members. For what is the cauſe why we be ſo diſobedient vnto God, but for that wee hate him, as I ſaide afore? So on the contrarie part the loue of God will drawe vs to ſerue him, and to ſubmit our ſelues to his righteouſneſſe, ſo as men ſhall ſee a certaine conformitie and agreeableneſſe betwixt Gods lawe and all our deſires and affections. But yet for the better vnderſtanding hereof, let vs conſider what God is: For hee will not be knowen according to our nature. And when we heare him ſpoken of, it is not ynough for vs to giue him the title of God: but he will be knowen as hee is in deede: that is to wit, to bee righteous and good, as the perfection and fountaine of all wiſedome, of all power, of all right, and of all equitie. Nowe then let vs conceiue God as he is: that is to wit, with his iuſtice, righteouſneſſe and equitie: and then ſhall wee not deſire any thing elſe than to faſhion our ſelues like to him. Contrariwiſe if we loue naughtineſſe and be wrapped in it, we muſt needes hate God. For why? Heere is no talke of a naked being: wee muſt not imagine God to bee as an ydoll: wee muſt conceiue him with his righteouſneſſe and equitie. Therefore when wee hate the thinges that are in God, that is to ſay his iuſtice and righteouſneſſe: wee muſt needes hate his owne ſelfe: for hee cannot forſake himſelfe, hee cannot diſguiſe himſelfe, hee cannot tranſforme himſelfe after our faſhion: hee continueth euermore like himſelfe. So then, (as I ſaide afore) all ſuch as loue God, neede not bee afraide that they ſhall not obey his Lawe and keepe his commaundementes: for they bee thinges vnited and vnſeparable. That is the thing whiche wee haue to marke vppon this place. 2.Tim.2.13.

And heereby wee bee warned to ſhunne all ſtubborneneſſe and all offending, more than we haue done: for it is no ſmall matter for vs to bee declared to bee Gods enemies, and as makers of warre againſt him. And yet the caſe ſtandeth ſo, as we cannot aduance our ſelues aboue him, nor turne away from him, nor ſhake off his yoke: but wee be conuicted to haue beene his enemies, and to haue made open warre againſt him. And is not that a curſed thing? So then let vs learne to abhorre our owne ſinnes and vices, becauſe they attaint vs as traitors to God, and hee muſt needes ſhewe himſelfe to bee our aduerſarie partie. Alſo herewithall we be warned to reſort vnto God with a pure and right meaning minde. For it is not ynough for vs to haue with helde our feete, hands and eyes from euill doing: but the heart muſt goe before, and wee muſt ſerue God with a true affection: and this affection muſt not bee inforced, but it muſt proceede of verie loue to Godwarde. Therefore if wee minde to keepe the Lawe well: wee muſt firſt knowe that God is a good and kindehearted father towardes vs, to the ende we may be fully perſwaded of his loue towardes vs. And therewithall let it neuer ſinke in our heartes to dally in proteſting that wee loue God, except the ſame may appeare by our whole life. For when as Moſes ſpeaketh heere of the louing of GOD: hee addeth, That thoſe which loue him doe alſo keepe his commaundementes. Therefore our life muſt bee anſwerable in that behalfe, and bee as a certificate whether we loue him or hate him.

Furthermore it is not without cauſe that God comparing here his wrath and vengeance with his mercie, ſaieth that hee will puniſh thoſe that hate him, euen in three or foure deſcentes: and ſhewe mercie in a thouſande deſcentes to them that loue him. For thereby hee ſheweth the thing which is yet better expreſſed in other ſentences of the ſcripture: which is, that hee is ſlowe to wrath and forwarde to mercie, and therewithall long ſuffering, ſo that where as his anger laſteth but a verie ſhort time, his mercie is euerlaſting all the life long. Yee ſee then that the verie nature of God is ſuch, as hee ſeeketh nothing but to drawe men to him by all manner of gentleneſſe, and to vſe his goodneſſe towardes them. When hee puniſheth them, it is (as yee woulde ſay) againſt his nature. Not that it is not meete for Pſal.103.8, 9.17.

God

God to punish as well as to shewe mercie: but his meaning is to shewe vs that his goodnesse is farre the greater: and to be short, that he is not rigorous, but that his onely desire is to vtter his good will to vs, if wee woulde suffer him: for in very deede hee woulde faine bee knowen to bee good and pitifull, and it is the thing wherein his glorie doeth chiefly shine foorth. Therefore let vs marke well how it is not for nought that Moses hath assigned heere a thousande generations to Gods mercie: and restrained his wrath and vengeance to a three or foure generations. As if hee shoulde saye: It is true that our Lorde will not suffer superstition vnpunished. When yee shall haue corrupted his seruice and defaced his honour by gadding after your owne dotages, yee shall feele the punishment thereof, yea and euen your children after you must bee faine to feele it to: insomuch that when the fire of his wrath is once kindled vppon you, it shall not bee quenched againe so soone as yee weene for: but yet for all that hee will not faile to bee pitifull still, and his mercie shall alwayes bee greater than his wrath. And in deede, like as by the threate which wee haue hearde, GOD intended to holde the worlde in the true religion, to the ende they shoulde not make ydols and puppets to themselues: so was it his will also, that the promise which is conteined heere shoulde allure vs to him, if wee beare him the loue and reuerence which wee ought to doe: and hee had leuer to winne vs by his goodnesse, than to restraine vs by his threatnings. And therefore hee saith, My children, looke not that I shoulde punish you. Truely if yee prouoke mee, I will not suffer my selfe to bee so mocked at your hands: but yet for all that, when I haue told you of my displeasure, I had much leuer to traine you and to winne you to me by mercie. Therefore I tell you that if you abide pure and sounde in my obedience: I also will continue in doing good vnto you euen vnto a thousande generations, so as your children after you shall find me the same still. Thus yee see what we haue to remember vppon that sentence.

Moreouer for a conclusion, it is not for nought that God vseth the terme Mercie, notwithstanding that it bee as a reward for the seruice that is done vnto him. Hee might well haue saide, I will consider the seruice of such as shall haue honoured and serued mee: and when men shall haue loued mee by keeping my commaundementes, I will shewe them that they haue not lost their labour in taking paines to honour me. God might haue spoken so: but hee saieth, I will shewe mercie. And howe may that bee? Doeth it not seeme that if we serue God, hee oweth vs recompence? No: but hee sheweth that his doing of good to such as honour him and followe his commaundements, is not of bounde duetie nor for any desert of theirs: for euen in so doing hee vseth mercie still. And the terme Mercie serueth to beate down all pride of men, so as they may not boast of their owne workes, as though they were worthy of recompence: but rather consider that thereby God ment to declare, that when we serue him the best that we can, we haue still neede to be borne withall at his hande, and to haue our faultes and infirmities forgiuen vs. Thus are there two thinges for vs to marke in this place. The one is that although wee serue God neuer so purely, yet his recompensing of vs is not vppon any duetie that hee oweth vnto vs. For indeede whence commeth our seruing of him, but of his meere grace? And what can hee then owe vnto vs? Nay, there is yet a further matter: namely that we should all of vs be found faultie in his sight, if he listed to examine vs rigorously. So then, whereas God recompenseth vs for our seruing of him: hee doeth it for his owne meere goodnesse, and therfore not of any bounde duetie: but (which more is) hee is faine to pardon our sinnes and to beare with vs, yea euen in the good that wee doe. Wherefore let vs consider that God sheweth himselfe so gratious and freehearted towards vs, that where as hee might make vs to feele his rigour, hee is contented to make vs taste of his mercie by bearing with vs in our infirmities. For let vs not think but that without his mercie we were al vndone: and that althoughwe stroue neuer so much to obey him, yet wee shoulde be found faultie, if he vsed not ỹ foresaid gracious goodnes wherof he speaketh. So then, that is the thing wherevnto we must flee for refuge, if we intend to be sure of our saluation. 1. Cor. 15. 10. Rom. 3. 4.

Nowe let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our sinnes, praying him to make vs feele them better than wee haue done, that it may leade vs to true repentance, so as beingtaught to feare him, wee may stande in such awe, that as soone as he threateneth vs with his wrath, wee may conceiue the power that is in him, to the ende that being humbled in our selues, wee may haue recourse to his fatherly goodnesse, not doubting but that when hee hath once begunne to shewe himselfe a father and Sauiour towards vs, he will continue so stil yea euen after our decease, so that wee shrinke not from him through our owne naughtinesse and disobedience. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs, but also to all people and nations of the earth, &c.

11 Thou shalt not take the name of the Lorde thy God in vaine: for the Lorde will not holde him guiltleſſe which taketh his name in vaine.

IF we were well aduiſed, we needed not to bee taught to yeelde reuerence to our God: for nature ought to leade vs thereto. To what ende are we created in this worlde? To what ende liue we here, but to honour him to whom wee be beholden for al good things, and to giue our ſelues to the glorifying of his maieſtie? That then is the end and whole ſumme of our life. But in the meane ſeaſon, in ſteede of honouring our God, and of applying our ſelues that way: we ſeeme to haue conſpyred the cleane contrarie. For ſome of vs woulde haue all remembrance of God buried: ſome deſpiſe him and mocke him: and otherſome blaſpheme him with open mouth: ſo as we ſhewe ſufficiently, that wee knowe not to what end we liue or ſhould liue. Now foraſmuch as there is this vice in vs: God intending to redreſſe the ſame, telleth vs that we ought at leaſtwiſe to refraine from abuſing his holy name: for that is as an vnhallowing thereof. And therefore hath hee forbidden men to take his name in vaine. By theſe wordes he meaneth, that wee muſt conſider well which is the right and lawfull vſe of his name. Of a trueth wee be not worthie to take Gods name in our mouth after any manner at all, for wee muſt remember what the Prophet Eſay ſaide in his ſixt Chapter: Lorde (quoth he) Eſa. 6.5. I haue vncleane lippes, and dwell among a people that is altogether defiled. Seeing then that we haue nothing but infection and filthineſſe in vs: it is certain that we may not take Gods name [in our mouth,] at leaſtwiſe if it were not that God of his goodnes were willing that we ſhould vſe his name, ſo it bee to glorifie him withall. Therefore let vs marke well, that when as it is ſaide that we ſhall not take the name of God in vaine: our Lord rebuketh vs for our vnthankfulneſſe, if we haue not the skill to vſe his name as he hath giuen vs leaue, by following the rule that is ſet downe in his worde: for that is the lawful meane whereby wee may rightly vſe the name of God.

Neuertheleſſe to the end that this may be yet plainlyer vnderſtoode: wee muſt marke, that vnder one particular, God meant to ſhewe vs here what a maieſtie is in his name, to the intent we ſhoulde not ſpeake of it, but with all reuerence and honour. Therefore he taketh one particular kinde, to wit, of an othe, ſpecially when occaſion ſerueth to ſweare: and vſeth it for all prophaning of God his name whatſoeuer. We ſee howe our Lorde loueth vs, ſeeing he lendeth vs his name whereby to communicate with our neighbours, ſo as if there happen any doubt or variance among vs, it may bee diſpatched by that meane: that is to wit, if we be not beleeued, and a matter hang in doubt, the name of GOD may come in as an vmper, to diſpatch all controuerſie, ſo as the matter may bee certaine and ſure by ſuch confirmation. Is it not an ineſtimable goodneſſe, that our God humbleth himſelfe in ſuch ſort, as to giue vs leaue to vſe his name? Yes. And why? for it is certaine that Gods maieſtie is ſo precious, as it ought not to bee abaſed ſo lowe: but yet he vouchſafeth to apply himſelfe vnto vs, and therefore ſo much the greater is the vilanie, if wee vnhallowe Gods name in our othes. And that is done, not onely by forſwearing our ſelues: but alſo by taking Gods name at aduenture, without regarding to ſpeake with good diſcretion, or whether the thing that wee haue in hande, is worthie to bee ſo confirmed or no. Therefore when men goe to it ſo at aladuenture, Gods name is as it were vnhallowed. It is true that GOD taketh it as a kinde of his ſeruice, when men ſweare by his name: not that hee is beholden to vs for it, but cleane contrariwiſe. For as I haue touched alredie, we muſt in this caſe conſider howe GOD beareth with vs, in that he giueth vs leaue to vſe his name. But yet doe wee by our ſwearing acknowledge that God hath all ſuperioritie ouer vs. The inferiour ſweareth by his ſuperior, ſaith the Apoſtle to the Hebrewes. And ſurely if wee Hebr. 6. 16. wiſt to what ende an othe ſerueth, it cannot agree but onely to the maieſtie of GOD. For our meaning is to warrant ſuch thinges as are ſecret and haue no proofe among men. But that cannot bee done by any creature: God muſt bee faine to ſhewe himſelfe in that behalfe, as hee that ſercheth mens hearts to the verie bottome. Ier. 17. 10. And againe it is not for nought that he chalengeth to himſelfe the title of trueth. Wee ſee then that in ſwearing, wee do homage vnto God by proteſting him to bee our iudge, and the only partie to whome wee haue recourſe in all doubtfull and ſecret caſes, becauſe it is his office to bring them to light, and againe hee will maintaine the trueth, ſith the ſame belongeth to his honour. That is the cauſe why God taketh it to bee a kinde of ſeruing of him, when Ier. 5. 3. men doe ſweare by his name, howe be it ſo as the othes bee not needeleſſe. And hereby wee ſee that the fault of ſuch as forſweare them ſelues, or as ſweare raſhly, is ſo much the greeuouſer: for it is as a violating of Gods ſeruice, and as an aboliſhing of it, as much as in vs lyeth.

2. Chron. 6. 30. Pſal. 11. 6. 2. Cor. 4. 5.

As touching them that commit periurie: they bee not onely guiltie of taking Gods name in vain, and of abuſing the ſame falſly: but alſo they bee traitors and wicked caitifes. Can wee deuiſe to doe a greater outrage to our GOD, than to aboliſh or deface his trueth? No: for there is nothing more peculiar vnto him. And therefore it is all one as if wee woulde plucke him out of his ſeate, yea and vtterly bereaue him of all diuine honour and glorie: whiche thing is done when men turne his trueth into a lye. Therefore whoſoeuer forſweareth himſelfe, that is to ſaye, whoſoeuer taketh Gods name with an euill conſcience, whether it bee to colour lies, or to beguile, or to diſguiſe matters: ſurely hee blaſphemeth in ſo doing. And I ſay expreſly, if wee goe about to diſguiſe matters. Why ſo? For many doe diſpence with with themſelues, vnder colour that they cannot be conuicted of periurie before men. And why is that? Becauſe they turne the cat in the pan, and ſet ſuch a face vppon their matters, as it may ſeeme that they forſware not themſelues at all. But God liketh not any ſuch ſuttleties. Wherefore let vs not imagine that wee ſhalbee quitte and ſcape ſcotfree before him, when wee ſhall haue vſed ſuch fetches and ſtartingholes. Thus wee ſee in effect, that all ſuch as take Gods name otherwiſe than ſoundly and ſimply, doe commit blaſphemie. Let that ſerue for one point.

Nowe as for them that ſweare to no purpoſe and vnaduiſedly: they ſhewe well ynough that they make none account of God, and that they doe but dally with him. In deede they proteſt the contrarie: they can welynough ſay that their intent is nothing ſo: but that is but hypocriſie: for the deede it ſelfe ſheweth ſufficiently that they beare no reuerence vnto GOD. If wee haue a mortall man in eſtimation, wee will not take his name in vaine, wee woulde not that men ſhoulde make a babling of it, or intermeddle it with ſcornefull and ſcoffing words. Nay we woulde take that in reproch. And would wee haue more priuiledge than the liuing God? We bee wretched carions and dung: and yet would wee be had in honour and eſtimation, and that our God ſhoulde be our vnderling? We ſee then that there are verie fewe of good religion nowadayes in the world. Although a great number pretende to bee Chriſtians: yet they neuer wiſt what it is to worſhippe God, or to doe him homage, or to yeelde him the ſeruice that belongs vnto him. For howe doeth Gods name trotte about? Men cannot bargaine for a quart [of wine,] but ſome othe muſt bee rapt out with it. If Gods honour were eſteemed among vs: ſurely we would abſtaine from ſuch needleſſe othes: nay rather wee woulde abhorre them. And yet nowadayes men make but a ſport of them, and if a man bee rebuked for his ſwearing, hee thinkes he hath great wrong done him. If there bee any talke that is not for a mans profite, he will be wearie of it and grieued at it, yea and finde fault with it: but if any of vs bee ſo zealous to Godward, as to be grieued at the abaſing of his name: by and by a quarell is picked to him, they deſpite him, and gnaſh their teeth at him. But ſeeing that the worlde taketh ſo faſt holde of the deſpiſing of GOD, and is ſo hardened in it: it is a ſigne that there is no more knowledge of his maieſtie.

Againe although men take ſo lawleſſe leaue vnder coulour that it is an ordinarie matter, and haue made cuſtome a Lawe: yet will God ſhew in the end, that hee maketh more account of his name than men haue done, and that if we make hauocke of it, wee ſhall paye deerely for it, and wee ſhall bee driuen in the ende, to knowe that wee haue defiled the lande where wee dweſt, and wee muſt bee called to a reckening for al the benefits that we receiued there, and which GOD beſtowed vppon vs with his hande, becauſe wee acknowledged not the author of them, to yeelde him his due honour for them. Yee ſee then that the firſt thing which we haue to marke in this text, is that God beareth with vs and vſeth ſuch gentleneſſe towards vs, as hee is well contented that wee ſhall vſe his name in all lawfull caſes: by the which grant of his wee may well perceiue, that hee is more than fatherly towardes vs. Neuertheleſſe hee warneth vs therewithall, to bee more ware in abſtayning from all wicked othes. For as for periurie, (as I ſaid afore) it is an offering of too outragious and curſed vilanie vnto him, becauſe his trueth is turned into lying, and wee bee falſe-dealers to the vttermoſt of our power. And ſo ye ſee that that is a paſſing deadly crime.

But it is not ynough for vs to refraine from periurie: it behoooueth vs alſo to looke that our othes be ſober, and that Gods name be not toſſed among vs like a tennisball: but that neceſſitie may excuſe vs in our vſing thereof. And foraſmuch as by our ſwearing we giue to vnderſtande that GOD hath all ſuperioritie ouer vs: therein we ſee that the othes which are made by creatures are wicked and proceede of ſuperſtition. As for example, whereas in the Popedome men ſweare by S. Antonie or by S. Iohn: it is all one as if they made ydols of them. And why ſo? For we muſt always bethinke vs of this ſaying of the Apoſtle which I alledged afore, namely that by our ſwearing by the name of God, wee auow him to bee our ſuperiour, yea and our ſoueraine Lord. And that is the cauſe alſo why God ſweareth to confirme vs in his promiſes, or rather to waken vs when he ſeeth vs wilfull and hardened in our ſinnes, ſo as we be not afraid of his iuſtice. He ſweareth: and by whom? Euen by himſelfe. He reſerueth that honor to himſelfe, as ſhall bee declared more at large in the 6. Chapter of this booke. And therefore they that ſweare by creatures are ydolaters. By reaſon whereof, in ſpeaking of ſuperſtitions, the othe is ſet downe as a record to proue that men are turned away from the purenes of the Law. The ſhepherds (ſaith Ieremie) which haue the charge of leading Gods people, muſt teach them to ſweare by the name of God: that is to ſay, to lay away all other othes, and to intermingle no creatures in that behalfe. Deut. 6. 13. Soph. 1. 5. 6. Ier. 12. 16.

Furthermore whereas the name of GOD is mentioned: let vs marke that it is not the onely ſpeaking of that word, that is forbidden vs: but that we muſt haue a regarde to the ſubſtance of it, as I haue ſaid alreadie. God is not a ſophiſter to vſe trifling ſuttleties towards vs: but hee hath an eye to the deede it ſelfe. There are that will not ſweare expreſly by the name of GOD: but yet they ceaſe not to bee faultie and offenders. For wee muſt refer our ſelues to that which our Lord Ieſus Chriſt ſpeaketh in the fift of ſaint Mathew. When yee ſweare by heauen (ſaith he) is it not the ſeate of the liuing God? If yee ſweare by his temple: is it not the place where his maieſtie reſteth? Then if wee thinke wee ſhall not bee condemned, ſo wee expreſſe not the name of God: it is a fondneſſe. Let vs not beguile our ſelues therewithal: for it is too childiſh an excuſe. For why? Doeth not the heauen beare a repreſentation of Gods Maieſtie? Mat. 5. 34. 35.

Yee ſee then that his glorie is thereby diminiſhed. As much is to be ſaide of the earth. For it is his footeſtoole, as Ieſus Chriſt auoucheth in the forealleadged text. Wherefore let vs learne in fewe wordes, that we muſt yeelde ſuch reuerence to the name of God, as to put away all othes from among vs, ſauing ſo farre forth as neceſſitie requireth, and as God giueth vs leaue to borrowe his name. And moreouer, let vs alwayes followe this, to keepe this ſimplicitie in our talke, to ſay it is ſo: aſſuring our ſelues that whatſoeuer is more, is euil and condemned by the lawe, that is to wit, if wee take the name of God in vaine. And indeede there is a dubble miſchiefe to bee ſeene in all needleſſe othes, and wherein Gods name is not honoured as it ought to bee. For when men let them flie ſo at all aduenture: it is a token that they paſſe not what they ſaye. Againe, whereof commeth it, but onely of this, that folke are ſo full of lying and deceit, as no man can beleeue that which is ſaide to him, when one ſpeakes to another? Needes muſt there bee greate frowardneſſe and naughtineſſe among them. Whereas God hath giuen vs a tongue, it is partly to the intent wee ſhoulde common one with another thereby: for it is as yee woulde ſaye the meſſenger of the hearte, ſo as thereby wee expreſſe the thinges that we haue conceiued in our minde. Wee ſee then that needeleſſe othes ſpring of the vntruſtineſſe of men. And there needes no inquiſition or long trial of the matter: for euerie man hath his owne witneſſe in that behalfe. Howe ſo euer the caſe ſtande let vs learne to vſe ſuch modeſtie in this reſpect, as God commaundeth that we ſweare not without cauſe nor vnrequired.

Howbeit to make this matter the eaſier to bee vnderſtoode, many do beare themſelues in hand that when they ſweare by their faith, it is not materiall. Indeede the moſt part of them ſweare by nothing at all: for they haue no more faith thā dogges: they haue neither conſcience nor Religion. But yet ſhall not the name of Faith faile therefore to be eſteemed afore God: for hee ſetteth much ſtore by it, and counteth it as a holy thing, which cannot nor ought not to bee ſo vnhallowed, except we will needs make our ſelues guiltie, and runne in daunger of the threat that is vttered here, as we ſee. Now then let vs mark wel that it is not ynough for vs to haue forborne to ſweare expreſſly By God: but alſo that if a man ſweare by his faith, or vſe any confirmation wherein there is any marke of Gods maieſtie: his name is vnhallowed in ſo doing. And what ſhall then become of ſuch as not onelye vſe falſe othes to countenaunce their matters withall, and ſweare at all aduenture and as it were in ſcorne and mockerie: but doe alſo ſpite God with horrible blaſphemies, ſo as they ſpare neither fleſhe, bloude, nor death nor anye thing elſe? Are ſuch men to bee helde as onely guiltie of ſimple abuſing of Gods name? No: but as guiltie of the heynouſeſt vilanie that can bee doone. Beholde our Lorde Ieſus Chriſte the Lorde of glorie, abaſed himſelfe for a time, as ſaieth S. Paul. Now if there were no more but this, that he being the fountain of life, became a mortall man, and that he hauing dominion ouer the Angels of heauen, tooke vppon him the ſhape of a ſeruant, yea euen to ſhed his bloud for our redemption, and in the end to ſuffer the curſe that was due vnto vs: were it conuenient that notwithſtanding all this, he ſhould nowadayes in recompence thereof bee torne in peeces, by the ſtinking mouthes of ſuch as name themſelues Chriſtians? For when they ſweare by his bloud, by his death, by his woundes and by whatſoeuer elſe: is it not a crucifying of Gods ſonne againe as much as in them lyeth, and as a rending of him in peeces? And are not ſuch folk worthie to bee cut off from Gods Church, yea and euen from the worlde, and to bee no more nombered in the aray of creatures? Should our Lord Ieſus haue ſuch reward at our handes, for his abacing and humbling of himſelfe after that manner? God in vpbrayding his people ſaieth thus: My people, what haue I doone to thee? I haue brought thee out of Egypt, I haue ledde thee through the wilderneſſe, I haue brought thee vp with all gentleneſſe and louingkindneſſe, I haue planted thee as it were in mine owne inheritance, to the intent thou ſhouldeſt haue beene a vine that ſhould haue brought me forth good fruite, and I haue tilled thee and manured thee: and muſt thou nowe bee bitter to me, and bring foorth ſower fruite to choke mee withall? The ſame belongeth to vs at this day. For when the ſonne of God, who is ordeined to bee iudge of the worlde, ſhall come at the laſt day: hee may well ſay to vs: howe nowe ſyrs? Ye haue borne my name, yee haue beene baptiſed in rememberance and recorde that I was your redeemer, I haue drawen yee out of the dungeons where into yee were plunged, I deliuered you from endeleſſe death by ſuffering moſte cruell death my ſelfe, and for the ſame cauſe I became man, and ſubmitted my ſelfe euen to the curſe of GOD my father, that you might be bleſſed by my grace and by my meane: and beholde, the rewarde that you haue yeelded mee for all this, is that yee haue (after a ſorte) torne mee in peeces and made a ieſtingſtocke of mee, and the death that I ſuffered for you hath beene made a mockerie among you, the bloode whiche is the waſhing and cleanſing of your ſoules hath beene as good as trampled vnder your feete, and to bee ſhort, you haue taken occaſion to banne and blaſpheme mee, as though I had beene ſome wretched and curſed creature. When the ſoueraine Iudge ſhall charge vs with theſe thinges, I praye you will it not bee as thundering vppon vs, to ding vs downe to the bottome of hell? Yes: and yet are there verie fewe that thinke vpon it. For if needeles othes were as greatly abhorred nowadayes among men as they ought to be: they woulde not by & by after take ſuch leaue and boldneſſe as they doe to fleſh themſelues in periurie and forſwearing.

As touching blaſphemie, doth not ỹ world ſee what what commeth of it? And yet woulde wee bee ielous of our owne honeſtie and reputation, when in the meane ſeaſon Gods name is troden vnder foote among vs. If a man haue ſpoken amiſſe of ones father, hee coulde finde in his heart to make a quarrell of it, and eyther to ſew him at the Lawe, or elſe much rather to bee reuenged of him with his owne handes, and men beare themſelues in hande that they may with honeſtie maintayne the quarrells of their parentes. Beholde, our ſoueraigne Father is iniured after the ſame manner, euen the ſame father who not without cauſe is named the Lorde of glorie, before whoſe ſonne all knees ought to bow, as Saint Paule reporteth to the Philippians, euen hee ſhall bee ſo mocked as a man coulde doe no worſe to him, except he ſhoulde ſpitte in his face: and yet notwithſtanding euen they that name themſelues Chriſtians, and which pretend in deede to ſeeke his honour, ſhall bee the greateſt and horribleſt blaſphemers of him. But yet for all that, as I ſaid afore, our Lorde will not ceaſe to maintayne his owne honour, (as hee himſelfe auoweth.) When hee ſeeth men ſo heathenish as to deface his Maieſtie after that faſhion, to the vttermoſt of their power: He maketh a ſolemne othe that he will bee reuenged of it. As truely as I liue (ſayeth the Lorde) I will not giue myne honour to another. And like as hee will not haue his honour conueyed ouer vnto idols: ſo is it certaine that the ſame ſaying hath a further reache, that is to wit, that if men doe falſely abuſe his holy name, they ſhall feele in what eſtimation hee had it. And therefore let vs not looke till this bee accompliſhed vppon our ſelues: but let vs learne to yeelde reuerence to our GOD, and to him that hath all ſoueraigne Maieſtie, that is to wit, to our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt: and let vs learne therewithall, to ſweare in ſuch wiſe, as it may alwayes bee a warrant vnto vs, that it is he to whom wee belong, and that hee is our Father, our Maker, and our Iudge. Thus yee ſee what wee haue in effect to gather vppon this text.

Eſa.42.8. & 48.11.

But withall there is a threatening added: whereby wee ſee mens dulneſſe, and howe Satan hath as yee woulde ſay bewitched them, ſo as they conceyue not Gods wrath, when it is ſet afore them. I will not holde him giltleſſe that taketh my name in vaine. Loe it is GOD that ſpeaketh. I pray you ought not the haire of them to ſtande vp ſtiffe vppon their heades, which ſweare ſo vilanouſly as I haue mentioned afore? If a man ſweare by his faith vnaduiſedly: beholde, God armeth himſelfe and ſayeth: no ſir, ſeeing thou haſt not honoured mee, thou muſt yeelde an account of ſuch treacherie. God can not away with a ſimple lye: and if periurie be added thereto, it is yet worſe. If a third fall to blaſpheming, it is the vttermoſt poynt of all leudneſſe, and as bad as an open defying of GOD, as though we woulde runne vpon him and wounde him. Now if in this caſe a man thinke not vppon the puniſhment that is prepared for all ſuch as doe ſo falſely miſuſe the name of GOD: or haue diſhonoured it, may it not bee ſaid that he is beaſtly drunken, and as it were out of his wittes, and that Satan hath made him ſtarke blinde? Alas yes: and yet neuertheleſſe, it is as common a thing as may bee. If a maiſter ſhoulde ſaye in his houſe, I will bee obeyed in all things: but yet there is one thing aboue all the reſt which I am deſirous to haue done, and I can not abide that any man ſhall tranſgreſſe it, but that hee ſhall by and by bee thruſt out of the doores, and bee puniſhed for it as he deſerueth: If a Maiſter haue a thing in ſuch eſtimation, although his men be not ſo circumſpect in all the reſt, yet will they ſtand in ſome feare of this.

Nowe then, beholde, God curſeth all ſuch as ſhall haue tranſgreſſed his Lawe in any point. Curſed bee he that honoureth not his Father and mother: Curſed bee he that ſtealeth: Curſed bee he that committeth adulterie: Curſed bee he that perfourmeth not all things contained in the Lawe. And here ſpecially, there is a threate vppon all ſuch as ſhal haue abuſed Gods name. Hereby he ſheweth vs that although he will haue vs to keepe his Lawe in all pointes, and to direct our liues thereby: yet notwithſtanding he reſerueth ſtill this point to himſelfe, and will haue his name to bee priuiledged. Nowe if this threatening ſlippe away for all that, ſo as it ſinketh not in our mindes, nor reſtraineth vs at all from preſuming to dally ſo with God and his Maieſtie: muſt it not needes bee ſaid (as I haue touched alreadie) that the diuell hath carryed vs away, and that wee bee bereft of all witte and reaſon? Yes: but if this threate doe not waken vs nowe: wee muſt finde in the ende that Gods publiſhing of it was no falſe alarum. And therefore let vs learne to bee touched to the quicke, ſith wee ſee that our Lorde ſetteth himſelfe ſo expreſſely againſt vs, and ſheweth himſelfe to bee an aduerſarie to all ſuch as abuſe his name. For what coſt is it to vs to abſtaine, as well from all falſe othes, as from all vnaduiſed othes, and ſpecially from all blaſphemies? The greateſt excuſe that they haue which would leſſen their fault, is that they cannot refraine bicauſe they bee inured to it by cuſtome. Yea, but if euerye man woulde ſet before his eyes that God is his Iudge: ſurely he might ſoon forget his ſwearing: and when the name of GOD were to bee vſed, men would not doe it but with great ſingleneſſe of heart. In ſo much that if men went to lawe, they ſhoulde haue as it were Gods Maieſtie preſent there, ſo as hee myght bee behelde ſitting there as Iudge when he were called to witneſſe, and men ſhoulde not vſe his name but in ſuch wiſe, as Saint Paul ſpeakes of, where he ſaieth that wee muſt not take Gods name but in all holineſſe.

This therefore might well be done. But what? Our tongue runnes ryot euen ſo farre as to the foreſaid deſpiſing of Gods name: ſo that crie what men can, yea and (as yee would ſay) beate they it into vs with beetles: (for the things that the holy Scripture telleth vs concerning the abuſe of Gods name, are like mightie blowes with a beetle wherewith GOD ſtriketh vppon vs:)

and yet for all that, wee continue ſtill the ſame wee were afore, and Gods name hath neyther honour nor Maieſtie more than it had before. Yet notwithſtanding, all ſuch as haue any vnderſtanding and feeling of Gods name, ought to thinke well vppon that which is ſaide here. And moreouer (as I haue declared alreadie) when wee bee once warned of that which wee haue ſeene heretofore, that is to wit, that hee which ſpeaketh is the Euerlaſting, and our Creator and Redeemer, which hath ſhewed himſelfe more than a Father and Sauiour towardes vs: if this bee well printed in our minde, ſurely all othes wil eaſily be forgotten. But if we keepe on our way ſtil: the ſaying of the Prophet Zacharie ſhall be fulfilled vpon vs: which is, they ſhal ſee him whom they haue perced, that is to ſay, whō they haue wounded. For although men flatter one another, and make but a laughing at their othes, and imagine that their ſwearing ſhall eaſily bee forgiuen them: yet is God wounded by it, and hee wil ſhewe in the end, that it is not for men to ruſh againſt him after that faſhion.

Zach. 12, 10.

Herewithall wee haue to marke, that vnder one kinde, GOD meant to ſhewe what reuerence wee ought to yeelde in effect to his name. In deede he ſpeaketh here expreſſely of Othes: but yet this doctrine ought to bee ſtretched further: namely that when wee thinke of God, or heare any ſpeaking of him, it muſt be done with all reuerence, ſo as wee may bee wakened vp, not onely to honour and praiſe him aboue all, but alſo to conſider, that euen the Angels doe tremble at the ſight of his ineſtimable glorie, and therefore that we which are wretched creatures and as tranſitorie as maye bee, ought at leaſtwiſe to doe homage to the ſoueraigne Maieſtie of our GOD, whenſoeuer hee is ſpoken of. That is a principall point which we ought to marke well in this text.

Iob. 41, 16.

Truely this doctrine is eaſie ynough of it ſelf: but it is darke to vs, bicauſe it is ſo ill put in practiſe. What a ſort of vaine thoughtes come in our heades when wee thinke vppon GOD? In deede our nature is inclyned therunto, as of folk that are fraughted with all vntrueth, ſo as there is nothing but darkeneſſe in vs. But yet for all that, if a man feede his owne humour with lewd and wicked imaginations conceiued againſt the honour of GOD: he ſheweth ſufficiently that he hath conſpired and confederate himſelfe with the diuell. Neuerthelater howe many are there that bethinke themſelues, when any leawd fanſie commeth in their minde, or which labour to ſuppreſſe and beate downe the thinges by force, which their owne conſcience telleth them to be wicked and againſt the glorie of GOD? Nay, they rather take pleaſure in them, and welter in them. Nowe when mens ſpirite, that is to ſay, their vnderſtanding is ſo defyled, the reſidue is eaſily corrupted. And for proofe thereof: howe doe men moſt commonly ſpeake of God? What manner of talke haue they of him? It ſhoulde ſeeme that their whole ſeeking is to bee corrupted: there needeth but a little leauen to ſowre the whole lumpe of Dowe, as ſayeth Saint Paule treating of this naughtie talke which marreth and infecteth vs with wicked vices. But the worſt is when men ſpeake of GOD in way of mockage. For what a thing is it that he ſhoulde bee ſcoffed at, and that he ſhoulde bee ſcorned in woordes, not onely vayne and fond, but alſo ſhameſull and horrible? Is it not a wilfull violating of his Maieſtie? And yet men doe ſo, yea euen ouer commonly, in ſo much as yee ſhall hardly haue long talke in any companie, but ſomewhat ſhall be intermingled that may ſound to the contempt of GOD. And doe wee not ſhewe thereby, that wee neuer wiſt what it is to worſhippe GOD? Wee can well ynough ſay dayly, Hallowed bee thy name: and yet we doe the cleane contrarie. Needeth there any other ſentence of condemnation againſt vs than that? When wee come here to Church, wee proteſt with our mouthes that wee deſire that Gods name ſhoulde bee maintayned in due honour: wee ſay as much at the table: and likewiſe doeth euerie man both at his riſing and at his going to bedde, (I meane ſuch as are not vtterly brutiſh: for there are which wote not what praying to God meaneth.) But as for thoſe which haue yet ſo much honeſtie as to pray vnto God, they will well ynough ſay with their mouth, hallowed be thy name: but it is no ſooner from their tongues end, but by and by a falſe othe is in their mouth, and they make Gods name to runne too and fro. And what elſe is ſuch falſhood, than a violating of Gods Maieſtie, and as a ſtriking of him with a Dagger, or as a ſpitting in the face of him? Therefore as I haue tolde you alreadie, there needs none other Iudge to condemne vs for our fooliſh othes, than the proteſtation that wee our ſelues make when we deſire GOD to maintaine the holineſſe of his name, and yet in the meane whyle indeuour to deface it as much as wee can.

1. Cor. 5. 6.

But nowe remayneth that we ſpeake of God in al reuerence, ſpecially when his workes come in talke. As howe? In ſpeaking of the weather, bee it faire or bee it rainie, they bee markes of his Maieſtie. If he ſende vs ſadde weather, hee ſheweth himſelfe a Iudge to make vs perceiue his diſpleaſure, to the intent to make vs enter into the examination of our ſinnes, that wee myght bee ſorie for them and bee ledde to amendment. But in ſtead of humbling our ſelues before GOD, and of being ſorie that wee haue offended: wee become wayward as wee ſee men commonly bee, who fall to repyning, and ſaye, muſt this weather laſt euer? and ſo wee flee not to our GOD, ne aske him forgiueneſſe of our ſinnes. And after the ſame maner deale wee in all other thinges: for I alledge but onely one example, to ſhewe that when wee ſpeake of Gods workes, wee muſt eyther perceiue him to bee a Father by his goodneſſe, or feele him to bee a Iudge by his rigour. Therefore whenſoeuer God doeth any thing that miſliketh vs, and is contrarie to our deſire and wiſhing: let vs vnderſtand that hee chaſtiſeth and tameth vs, to the ende wee ſhould enter into the examination of our ſinnes to condemne them and to bee ſorie for

for them. If we glorifie not God in that behalfe, wee vnhallowe his holy name. Againe on the contrarie part, when God draweth vs to him by gentleneſſe as a louing and pitifull father: it is to the intent wee ſhould bee brought vnto him, and honour him the more. And if our vnthankfulneſſe bee to bee condemned for not honouring of him at the firſt worde that he ſpeaketh to vs: howe ſhall wee doe when all things vpbraide vs, ſo as God hauing layd hold on vs on all ſides, can by no meanes win vs to him, whereby hee ſheweth that wee bee vtter deſpiſers of his Maieſtie, and that wee haue trampled his woorkes vnder our feete, or ouerturned them with our ſnoutes like ſwine? I pray you ſhall it not redoũd to our dreadfull condemnation, if this may bee laid to our charge?

Nowe although God haue ſet his marke vppon all his workes, ſo as wee ought to know him both in fayre weather and in fowle, in heate and in colde, and (to bee ſhort,) in all the order of nature: yet hath he ſet his marke chiefely vppon his woord. Of a trueth it is an vnexcuſable crime, when wee acknowledge him not in the good thinges that he hath made and done for vs. Wee holde our life of him: it is in him that Act.17.28. wee liue, as ſpeaketh Saint Paul. If all theſe benefites make vs not to bee mindefull of God: it is too vnmeaſurable a churliſhneſſe alreadie: but yet (as I ſaide afore) it hath bene his will that his marke ſhoulde bee printed aboue all thinges in his woord. Let vs looke vppon Heauen and earth, and wee ſhall ſee GOD eueriwhere. For Rom.1.20. what elſe is the worlde than (as ſayeth S. Paul) a liuely image wherein God ſetteth foorth himſelfe? Although he bee vnuiſible in his owne being: yet doeth he ſhewe himſelfe there, to the intent that wee ſhould worſhip him. But come wee once to the holy Scripture: there is an i-
2.Cor.3.18. mage wherein God ſheweth himſelf much more familiarly vnto vs, than he doeth either in the skies or in the earth. Neither Sun nor Moone, (though they giue light to the worlde,) doe ſo ſet foorth the Maieſtie of God, as the Lawe, the Prophetes and the Goſpell doe. And yet for all that, after what manner doe men ſpeake of them? Howe boldly doe they deale with them? I pray you doe not men take leaue nowe adayes to ſpeake of Gods name after their owne fanſie? And when they fall to reaſoning vppon the holy Scripture among Cuppes, in Tauernes and at Tables, doeth their talke tend to the humbling of themſelues, that they may all knowe their owne rudeneſſe and infirmitie, and aske of God the gift of his holy ſpirit, to the end that we may handle his myſteries as becommeth vs? No: but thoſe diſputations are made as it were in way of mockerie, and thereby it appeareth well, yea much more than were requiſite, that there are verie fewe true Chriſtians nowe adayes in the worlde. It is apparant that ſome dally with the holy ſcripture, and wreſt it to prouerbs of laughter, making it a matter to ſport and play withal, as though it were but as a noſe of waxe for euery man to faſhion and vnfaſhion at his owne pleaſure. Otherſome holde fond diſcourſes on it, demaunding, why is this, and why is that? And againe, when wee come to Gods high myſteries: if any thing miſlike vs, wee would haue it euerie whit wyped out. And that is all one as if wee would pull God out of heauen.

Nowe then let vs learne that God commendeth the honour and authoritie of his word vntõ vs aboue all thinges: as if he ſhould tell vs that looke whatſoeuer is contained in the holy ſcripture, wee muſt receiue it with all lowelineſſe, and yeelde our ſelues plyable to that which is contained therein. Yea and although the ſame bee contrarie to our vnderſtanding, and wee coulde finde in our heartes that God had ſpoken after our maner: yet let vs doe him the honour to impriſon all our owne wittes, and to ſay: Lord, wee be thy ſcholers, and therefore we receiue quietly whatſoeuer thou haſt vouchſafed to teach vs, aſſuring our ſelues that the ſame is for our benefite and welfare. Therefore whatſoeuer is contained in the holy Scripture, let it bee receiued reuerently without exception. And when Gods holy myſteries come in queſtion: let vs not iudge of them according to our owne vnderſtanding: but if it happen that any thing ſeeme not good and conuenient vnto vs, let vs bridle our ſelues, and let God haue his full ſcope, ſo as his woord may haue all the libertie that may be. Alſo therwithall, when wee reade the holy Scriptures or come to a Sermon, let vs alwayes beare in minde to thinke thus with our ſelues: behold, our God ſheweth himſelfe here, and he is ſet down as our iudge: and therefore it is not for vs to kicke and ſpurne againſt him, as wee ſee a great ſorte doe when they come to Sermons. But what? They haue conceiued rancour in their heart againſt God and his word, and therefore they can reape nothing by it but vtter naughtineſſe: in ſo much that they gather venim more and more, to belk out their blaſphemies at tables when mẽ ſpeake not to their liking. And is that (thinke you) a good honouring of Gods name? Now therefore, whether it be that wee reade the holy Scripture, or that it be treated of in Sermons: let vs learne to haue Gods name alwayes in ſuch reuerence, as to quake at it when we heare it ſpoken of, ſpecially whẽ his word is preached, as is ſaid by the Prophet Eſay. For ſo ſhall wee ſhewe, not onely Eſa.66.2.5.
in wordes but alſo in deede, that wee be true beleeuers: and God alſo wil auowe vs for his people, and in the end gather vs into the heritage of the kingdome of heauen.

Now let vs kneele downe in the preſence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him, not to impute thoſe vnto vs which we haue committed heretofore: but that it may pleaſe him ſo to reforme vs to himſelfe, as our whole ſeeking may bee to honour him, and to giue our ſelues to his ſeruice, ỹ he may dwell among vs, and our Lorde Ieſus raigne ouer vs, both by his holy ſpirit and by his woord. And ſo let vs all ſay, Almighty God heauenly father, &c.

On Thurſday the xx. of Iune. 1555.

The xxxiiij. Sermon, which is the fifth vpon the fifth Chapter.

12 Keepe the day of reſt, to hallowe it as the Lord thy God hath commaunded thee.

13 Sixe dayes ſhalt thou labour, and doe all thy buſineſſes:

14 But the ſeuenth day is the reſt of the Lorde thy God. Thou ſhalt not doe any worke therein.

AFter that he had ſpoken of the pure worſhipping and ſeruing of GOD, to the glorifying of his name, without taking of it either in othes or in other thinges, otherwiſe than in way of honour, nowe mention is made of Gods ſeruice accordingly as he hath required it in his lawe, and of the order which he hath ſet downe for the faithfull to exerciſe themſelues in. As for example, the [Sabaoth or] day of reſt was a figure, partly to ſhewe that men could not ſerue God duetifully, but by mortifying all that euer is of our owne nature, and by dedicating themſelues therewithall in ſuch ſort vnto him, as they may bee as it were quite ſeparated from the world. Secondly the day of reſt was a Ceremonie to bring the people togither, that they might heare the Lawe, and call vppon the name of GOD, and offer the ſacrifices, and all other thinges that concerne the ſpirituall gouernment. Thus then wee ſee nowe after what ſorte the Sabaoth day was ſpoken of: but yet would it not be well vnderſtoode without diſtinction, and without laying forth of the ſaid two partes by peece meale. Therefore we haue to note, that the Sabaoth or day of reſt, was a ſhadow vnder the Law till the comming of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, to doe mē to vnderſtand that God requireth that they ſhould vtterly ceaſſe from their owne workes: and that is it which I meant in one word, when I ſaid ỹ we muſt mortifie all that euer is of our own nature, if wee will conforme our ſelues to our God. And that it is ſo, Saint Paule declareth: and beſides that, wee haue recordes ynow thereof in the newe Teſtament. But it ſhall ſuffice to haue alledged that which is moſt apparant, namely to the Coloſſians, where it is ſaide that wee haue the ſubſtance and the body of the thinges that were vnder the Lawe, wee haue it (ſayeth he) in Ieſus Chriſt. And therefore it was requiſite for the fathers of old time to bee trained in this hope, as well by the day of reſt, as by ſome other Ceremonies. But nowe that the thing it ſelfe is giuen vnto vs, wee muſt no more ſtay vppon the ſhadowes. In deede the lawe is not ſo aboliſhed, but that we ought to holde ſtill the ſubſtance and trueth of it: but yet is the ſhadowe of it done away by the comming of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt. If it bee demaunded how the fathers of olde time knewe that: Moſes hath giuen vs vnderſtanding thereof, as is ſhewed ſufficiently in the Booke of Exodus, For God hauing ſet foorth his Lawe in the twentieth of Exodus, which hee vttered vnto Moſes, telleth him to what ende it tended, ſaying that he had ordeyned the Sabaoth daye, to bee as a warrant of the ſanctifying of the people of Iſrael vnto him. It is (ſayeth he) a badge of my holyneſſe which I haue ordayned among you. Now when as the ſcripture ſpeaketh to vs of being made holy vnto GOD: it is to ſeparate vs from all thinges that are contrarie to his ſeruice. But where is ſuch pureneſſe to bee founde? Wee bee in the worlde, and wee knowe that in the worlde there is nothing but vtter frowardneſſe and naughtineſſe as ſayeth Saint Iohn in his Canonicall Epiſtle. But men neede not to goe out of themſelues to haue battell againſt God and his righteouſneſſe: for all our ſenſes and all our affections (ſayeth Saint Paule in the eyght to the Romanes) are enemies vnto God. When men giue heede to their owne thoughts, deſires, likings, and luſtes: they make open warre againſt God: Wee knowe howe it is tolde vs in the ſixth of Geneſis, that all that euer man can imagine is alwayes euill, and that all that euer man deuiſeth in himſelfe and hath of his owne ſtore, is vtterly vntowarde and corrupt afore God. So then, wee ſee well that wee cannot bee ſanctifyed to our God, that is to ſay, wee cannot ſerue him vndefyledly, except wee bee ſeparated from the defylings that are contrarie to him, and that the thinges which are of our owne nature bee aboliſhed. Nowe it was requiſite that all theſe thinges ſhould bee figured to the auncient fathers, becauſe Ieſus Chriſt was not yet fully reuealed vnto them. But wee in theſe dayes haue the full accompliſhment and performance of all thinges in Ieſus Chriſt. And for proofe thereof, Saint Paule ſaieth that the olde man is crucified with him. Whereas Saint Paul ſpeakes after that ſort of the olde man, he meaneth the things that we haue from Adam, all which muſt be rypened and done away. Not as touching the ſubſtance of our bodie or of our ſoule, but as touching ỹ naughtines that is in vs. The blindnes that maketh vs to go aſtray, and the wicked luſtes & likings which are vtterly diſobedient to Gods righteouſneſſe, muſt be beaten downe, becauſe they be drawen frō Adam. And how is that done? Not by our owne power or policie: but by our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt: who by dying for vs, to wipe away our ſinnes ỹ they might no more bee imputed imputed vnto vs, hath also purchased vs this prerogatiue, ỹ by ỹ power of his holy spirit we be able to forsake the world & our selues, so as our fleshly affectiõs shall not ouermaister vs. And although we be ful of disobedience: yet shall Gods spirit ouerrule vs, to hold them downe & to keep thẽ in awe. And therefore it is sayd ỹ wee be risen Col.2.12. againe with him, as S. Paul declareth lykewise in ỹ forealledged text to ỹ Colossians. But this was not yet manifested vnder ỹ Law. Therfore it was requisit ỹ the fathers which liued at ỹ time, shold haue some help, such as ỹ sacrifices were, to feed thẽ in the hope of the death of our Lorde Iesus Christ, so as they might know ỹ their sinnes were cleansed away by ỹ bloud of ỹ mediator. Likewise they had ỹ Saboth day as a warrãt of the grace ỹ was purchased vs to mortify our thoughtes & af-

Gal.2.19,20 fections, that God might liue in vs by ỹ power of his holy spirit.

Now we haue som entrance to cõceiue ỹ which was touched briefely before: ỹ is to wit, ỹ the Saboth day was as a figure, to represẽt ỹ thing ỹ was fulfilled in deede at ỹ comming of our Lorde Iesus Christ. And therefore let vs marke wel, ỹ the Saboth day extẽded to ỹ whole seruice of God, to shewe that men could not honor him purely, but by renouncing thẽselues, & by being separated from the defilemẽts of ỹ world & of their owne flesh. And for the same cause were the Iewes re-
Eze.20.21. & 22.8.& 31.38. buked lykewise by the prophet Ezechiel for not keeping the Saboth day. And it is tolde them in such wise as if they had broken the whole lawe generally. And not without cause: for he ỹ despiseth the Saboth day, hath (as much as in him lyeth) thrust the whole seruice of God vnder foot. And if the day of rest be not kept: all the residewe is nothing woorth, according to this saying of ỹ Esa.58.13. Prophet Esay, ỹ men must bereaue themselues of their owne vertues, and be contented to forgoe them: or else it is not the Lordes Saboth, neither doth he lyke or alowe of it. Hereby we see ỹ it is to no purpose to obserue the ceremonie alone. For had the Iewes kept the ceremonie neuer so straitly in assembling together on the Saboth day, without stirring one finger in their housholde businesse, & yet in the meane while nourish their own wicked affectiõs, & afterward put them in effect: it had bin but a mocking of God, by abusing of his name, and by defacing and falsifying the whole order that he had ordeined accordingly also as he vpbraideth them. But the chiefe thing was to haue an eye to the true meaning of the figure: that is to wit, to the spirituall seruing of God. And yet therewithal it behooued the Iewes to keepe the ceremonie also that was commaunded them. For God did so bridle them, as he vouchsafed not to let them haue the substance of things [alone by it selfe,] but he would that they should also haue the shadowes of them therewithall, vntil the com-
Col.2.20. ming of our Lord Iesus Christ.

And hereby wee see the thing that S. Paul speaketh: namely that as now we be no more tyed to the old bondage of keping the Saboth day. For we must doe so much honor to Iesus Christ, as to holde our selues contented with that which hee hath brought vs in his owne person, without the hauing of the outward thinges any more ỹ were vnder the law. Now we see how this obseruation concerneth vs at this day. As touching the ceremonie it selfe, it is past as I sayde, and therefore wee must come to the substance: which is, ỹ to serue God wel, wee must learne to forbeare al our own wils, & all our own thoughts & affections. And why? Because ỹ when wee will needes be wise in our owne conceites to imagine this or ỹ to serue God withal, we marre al. Therfore our own wisedom must be layd down, & we must heare God speake, without following our own wil or fancie. Thus the first entrãce to keep the Saboth day as we ought to doe, is, not to beleeue the thing ỹ seemeth good to our selues: for wee must rest. And how must we rest? Wee must stand at a stay, so as our thoughtes runne not rouing abroade, to inuent one thing or other. We must (say I) continue quietly at one stay in the Rom.8.7. obedience of our God. And when wee be tempted by our owne lustes, we must consider that all our lewde and disobedient affections, are enemies to God euerichone of them. Therefore we must rest stil in that behalfe, and referre our selues vnto God, that he onely may worke in vs, and guide and gouerne vs by his holy spirit.

Hereby we see God ouerslipped not any thing, when hee ordeined the Saboth day. And sith it hath so large a scope: what want wee more to teach vs a perfect doctrine of holynesse, when we haue the thinges which the holy Ghost hath set before vs? The matter is that we shoulde liue holily in the obedience of our God. And how is that to be done? Euen by receiuing his single worde, and by fashioning our selues according to his righteousnesse. Now forasmuch as the thinges which we haue of our owne nature, are cõtrarie thereunto: we must begin at this end of Matt.6.24. renoũcing our selues. That being done, we haue Luk.9.23. all that is requisite to the seruing of God. But ỹ is very hard to be done. And therefore when we heare ỹ God commandeth vs to keepe the Saboth day, let vs looke that we marke, and consider that it wil not be done with playing, but ỹ we must inforce our selues: & we shall haue profited greatly all our lyfe, if we keepe it well, that is to wit by renouncing whatsoeuer wee haue of our owne, and by dedicating our selues wholy vnto our God. And we ought to bee the more inflamed to the spirituall keeping of the Saboth of the Lord, seing we be set free frõ the flauish subiection of the law, and God hath graunted greater priuiledge to vs, than he did to the fathers of olde time: insomuch that hee is contented with our mortifying of the old man, to be renewed again by the power of his holy spirit, & we be no more boũd to the ceremonie that was kept so straitly vnder the law. Seing ỹ God handleth vs so louingly: it bindeth vs the more to haue an eye to the principal, ỹ we may obserue it duely. Yea & we must not alledge ỹ the ancient fathers had ỹ ceremonie to quickẽ thẽ vp, which serued thẽ as a spurre: for inasmuch as our Lord Iesus Christ is come, we haue much more than the outwarde and visible signe. And forasmuch as al the things

Col 2.17. that were vnder the lawe. Thus ye ſee how the thing that is ordeined here concerning the Saboth day, is nowe fulfilled, at leaſtwiſe as in reſpect of the truth of the figure, which the fathers had but in ſhadowe. And in very deede looke what was commaunded concerning the day of reſt, muſt needes belong to vs as well as to thē. For let vs take Gods lawe in it ſelfe, and we ſhall haue an euerlaſting rule of righteouſneſſe. And it is certeine that vnder the tenne commaundementes, God intended to giue a rule that ſhould indure for euer. Therefore let vs not thinke that Pſal. 19.8.9.10. Matt. 5.18. the thinges which Moſes ſpeaketh of the Saboth day, are needeleſſe for vs: not for that the figure remaineth ſtill in force, but becauſe we haue the trueth thereof. And for the ſame cauſe the Apoſtle in the fourth to the Hebrewes, applyeth the
Heb. 4.3.10. thinges that were ſpoken of the Saboth day, to the inſtruction of the Chriſtians and of the new Church. For hee ſheweth vs that we muſt faſhion our ſelues lyke to our GOD, and that this is our full felicitie and perfection, becauſe the whole ſouereigne welfare of man conſiſteth in being created after the image of God. What is to be done now, ſeeing that the ſaid image is defaced by ſin, but that it may bee repaired againe? Ye ſee then that the way for vs to atteine to perfection, is to faſhion our ſelues lyke to our God and to yeelde to his will, and to inquire of his workes: that wee may doe the lyke. Wherefore let vs vnderſtand that to ſerue God well, we at this day be commaunded to ſtreine our ſelues to the vttermoſt of our power, to ſubdew our owne thoughtes, affections and deſires, that God may reigne in vs and rule vs by his holy ſpirit. And therefore it is in vaine for all hipocrites to gloſe, & to ſet a faire countenance vpon their doinges. For ſo lōg as wicked couetouſneſſe lyeth lurking in their heartes: ſo long as they bee ful of enuie, rancor, ambition, cruelitie, or guile: it is certeine that they do nothing elſe but breake the Saboth day. And therefore we may conclude that they ouerthrow the whole ſeruice of God, according to that which I alledged afore out of Ezechiel.
Ier. 17.24. As much is ſayd thereof in Ieremy. And in deed that is ỹ cauſe why the ceremonie was ſo ſtraitly looked to vnder ỹ lawe. Thinke we that God did euer take pleaſure in mens idleneſſe? no ſurely. But he puniſhed the partie as ſore ỹ wrought vppon the Saboth day, as him that had murdered a man. And why ſo? It ſeemeth to be a cruelties, that a man ſhould bee put to death for cleauing of a litle wood vppon ỹ Saboth day, as if he
Num. 15.32.35. had cōmitted a murther. But yet doth God condemne him to death ỹ cleaued wood vpon ỹ Saboth day. And why? Becauſe ỹ vnder that figure was cōprehended ỹ whole ſeruice of God. And
Ier. 17.21.22.28. for ỹ ſame cauſe is it ſayd in Ieremie, ỹ they bare burthens, and went to cart vpon the Saboth day. And why? It ſhould ſeeme that God ſtādeth too much vpon a trifling and childiſh matter: but he had an eye to the thing that was betokened by the Saboth day: and when that was ſo deſpiſed by the Iewes, it was a trayterouſneſſe, whereby they ſhewed that they made no reckoning of the lawe at all. So then, to come againe to our ſelues, ſeeing that wee haue not this figure ſo ſtraitly nowadayes, but God hath giuen vs a greater libertie, which was purchaſed for vs by Col. 2.14. the death and paſſion of our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt: let vs learne to giue our ſelues earneſtly vnto him, and to vnderſtand (as I ſayd afore) that we may all trauel in all the reſidewe, and yet it ſhalbe to no purpoſe vnleſſe our affections be brideled, ſo as wee ſtriue to renounce all our owne thoughtes and deſires, in ſuch ſort as God may haue the whole gouerning of vs, and we proteſt that we deſire nothing elſe than to reſt in him. And for the ſame cauſe alſo doth God ſet foorth himſelfe to vs for an example. For hee thinkes it not enough to commaund men to reſt: but alſo ſheweth th em the way. For after he had created Gen. 2.2. the worlde and all that is therein, hee himſelfe reſted. Not that he was weary or had any neede of reſt: but to allure vs to behold his workes, that we might reſt in them, and therewithall faſhion our ſelues lyke vnto him. Wil we then keepe the ſpiritual reſt? lyke as it is ſaid that God reſted frō his workes: ſo muſt we reſt alſo, ceaſing to doe what ſeemeth good to our ſelues, and whatſoeuer our owne nature coueteth. If this example of God prouoke vs not: wee ſhewe well thereby that we neither ſeeke nor in any wiſe couet our owne welfare, but that we will needes continew wilfully in our wretched and curſed ſtate. The ſouereigne welfare of men (as I ſayd afore) is to ſticke vnto God & to be knit vnto him. Beholde, our Lord calleth vs to him, & telleth vs that wee can haue no true holyneſſe nor vnion with him, but by reſting from our owne workes. Now if we be ſo vnruly, that we will alwayes be occupying of our armes & legges, & be ſtill doing what wee thinke good: ſurely it is as a breaking of ỹ band that is betweene God and vs, & a ſeparating and eſtranging of our ſelues from him as much as in vs lyeth. And doth it not appeare thereby, ỹ we ſeeke to be left vp as a pray to Satan, to be caryed & haryed away by him, for want of being any more vnder the protection of our God? Yes: but what for that? There are very fewe ỹ thinke of ỹ. The world ſees what libertie al men take to thē-ſelues. If one come & tel a man that he muſt not walke after his owne fancie. Tuſh (ſaith hee) I knowe how to behaue my ſelfe. But a man could not deuiſe to ſpite God more manifeſtly, than by ſuch rebelliouſneſſe. It is all one as if we woulde needes ſhewe that wee will not ỹ he ſhould haue any ſuperioritie ouer vs. In deede men will not be acknowē ỹ it is ſo: but yet it is ſo in very deede. For (as I haue ſayd already) it is no ſeruing of God, vnleſſe we begin at the abſteyning frō our owne thoughtes & affections. Therefore when men will needes be ſelfwiſe & truſt to their owne wit, ſo as they take leaue to doe what they liſt, & to follow their own affections & fancies, & labor not to repreſſe thē, but are offended whē others goe about to reclaime them: it is a ſigne ỹ they neuer wiſt what it is to ſerue God, nor ỹ it is the chiefeſt poynt of the lawe. And therefore let vs marke wel, ỹ whereas God alledgeth his owne example: it is to allure vs gently to ỹ keeping of ỹ ſpiritual Saboth or reſt, ỹ we might thinke our ſelues vnhappy to be ſeparated frō him, as I touched afore. And behold, ỹ band of this cōiunctiō is ỹ we withdraw not our ſelues from his religion & trueth, but ſuffer our ſelues to be ruled by him.

But now it may be demaunded, why ỹ Iewes were commaunded to reſt but onely the ſeuenth day: for our renouncing of our owne thoughtes & affectiōs, muſt not be for one day in a weeke: but we muſt continue in ỹ minde al ỹ time of our lyfe. To be ſhort, the reſt ỹ God cōmandeth vs is euerlaſting, and not by pangs or fittes as they ſay. And why then choſe he but one day of the week? It was to ſhew vs, that when we haue done what we can to renounce our wicked luſtes, our falſe pretences, and whatſoeuer elſe is of our own nature: yet ſhall we neuer be able to atteine fully thereunto, till we be quite & cleane bereft of our fleſhe. True it is ỹ faithful ought to keepe a continual Sabboth all their life long, by forbearing their own wils and workes, & by indeuoring to giue themſelues ouer vnto God ẇ all humilitie & ſubmiſſion, ſo as they may obey him quietly: I ſay we muſt doe ſo, or elſe al ỹ ſeruice ỹ we be deſirous to doe vnto God, ſhall be but a feining, & he wil diſalowe it & reiect it. Neuertheleſſe we cannot ſo diſcharge our ſelues in renoūcing our affections, but ỹ there will alwayes be ſomewhat worthie of blame in vs. S. Paul doth in deed glory ỹ the world was crucified vnto him, & he vnto ỹ world: but yet for al ỹ, he ceaſeth not to ſay, ỹ his fleſhe fighteth againſt his ſpirit, ſo as there is neuer any agreemēt betwixt thē. Yea and hee confeſſeth in ỹ ſeuenth to ỹ Romans, that he felt ſuch ſtriſe cōtinually in himſelfe, as he did not ỹ good ỹ he would haue done, ỹ is to ſay, he performed it not ẇ ſo earneſt affection, nor was ſo fully determined to walke according to ỹ will of God, but ỹ he had alwayes ſome lets to hinder him, ſo as to his own ſeming, in ſted of running ſtrongly, he did but go limpingly. Sith it is ſo: let vs marke ỹ Gods ordeining of ỹ ſeuēth day to reſt in, was not ẇout cauſe: for thereby he doth vs to vnderſtand, ỹ we cannot atteyne to ỹ perfect holineſſe which he requireth at our hands, neither in one day, nor in one moneth. Why ſo? Becauſe ỹ when we haue fought neuer ſo luſtily againſt the affectiōs of our fleſh, & againſt our wicked thoughts: there will alwayes remaine ſome dregges ſtil, till we be fully vnited to our God, & that he haue taken vs vp into his heauenly kingome. Vntill ỹ time, we ſhall alwayes haue ſome temptations, trouble, & vnquietneſſe in vs, ſo as wee ſhall well perceiue (I meane ſuch of vs as indeuer to ſerue God) that we be ſtil ſubiect to many tēptations, & to the feeling of a number of ſtinges whereby we be prouoked to this or that. And are not all thoſe thinges as many hinderances to holde vs backe frō the ſpiritual reſt? If a man reſted himſelfe in God as he ſhould doe: he ſhould not conceiue any thing at all in his minde, that might turne him aſide from the right way. He ſhoulde not haue any wicked luſtes or lykinges. All ſuch thinges ſhoulde bee farre from him. Now then when as we conceiue a number of lewde imaginations: then doth Satan ſtep in to aſſaile vs, & to vexe vs ẇ vnquietneſſe. And when our minde is once inclined to doe euill: there are a number of thinges in vs, ỹ tickle vs & ſet vs ſtill forward. And although we hate ỹ euil, yet ſo it is, ỹ by ſuch tēptations we are prouoked to goe through with it. And thereby it appeareth ỹ it is not an eaſie matter to winde our ſelues frō our wicked luſtes, & to bring to paſſe ỹ they may no more reigne in vs. So then let vs go forward with this indeuer of keeping Gods ſpiritual Saboth, for we ſhal neuer atteine fully to it, vntill ỹ end of our lyfe.

But hereby we be put in minde of two things. The one is to miſlyke of our ſelues, & to mourne continually, & to conſider that although to our owne ſeeming we haue takē neuer ſo great pain to obey our GOD: yet notwithſtanding we be but yet on our way ſtil, and we come far ſhort of fulfilling the thinges that are required and commaunded in the lawe. Thus haue wee a cauſe to humble our ſelues, becauſe God ſhal always find enough and too much to condemne in vs as cōcerning our ſeruing of him, and alſo becauſe that the ſpirituall reſt is not yet ſuch as he hath commaunded, nothing neere. And lyke as wee haue occaſion to humble our ſelues & to be ſorie with true repentance: ſo ought we on the other ſide to be ỹ more moued & quickened vp to goe forward, ſith we ſee our owne wants as thus: True it is that God hath giuen me the grace to bee deſirous to ſerue him: but how doe I behaue my ſelf therin? alas I am yet far off frō doing it. Sith we ſee it is ſo: what ſhould we do but inforce our ſelues? Therfore ẇ our abhorring of ỹ euil which is in vs, let vs alſo be the more earneſt to profit ſtil in this reſt, & to go forward in it, & let euery of vs dayly call himſelfe to account. Ye ſee then that God hauing giuen vs occaſiō to humble our ſelues all the time of our life, ſheweth vs that we muſt be earneſt in correcting our vices, & in mortifying our fleſh dayly more & more, & conſider ỹ it is not enough for vs to haue our olde man crucifyed in part, vnleſſe we be alſo quite buried ẇ Ieſus Chriſt, as ſaith S. Paul in ỹ ſeuenth to the Romans before alledged. Thus much cōcerning ỹ ſeuēth day, wherof mētiō is made in this place.

Gal 6.14. & 5.17.

Rom.7.4.

Now muſt we cōme to the ſecond point: which is, ỹ (as I haue ſayd already) ỹ Saboth day was a policy or order whereby to exerciſe the faithfull in the ſeruice of God. For that day was ordeined for men to aſſemble in, to heare the doctrine of the lawe preached, to communicate together ẇ ſacrifices, and to call vpon the name of God. As touching theſe poyntes, it belongeth as well to vs as to the people of olde time. For albeit ỹ the figure be ceaſed, (I meane the ſame that S. Paul ſpeaketh of in the epiſtle to the Coloſſians:) yet notwithſtanding, ſo much as cōcerneth the order, continueth ſtill and hath his vſe. And to what end ſerueth this order? To aſſemble our ſelues in the name of God. True it is that this ought to be done cōtinually: howbeit for our infirmities ſake, or rather by reaſon of our ſlothfulneſſe, it is requiſite that ſome one day ſhould be choſen out. If we were as erneſt in ſeruing of God as we ought to bee: wee ſhould not appoynte

one day in a weeke, onely but euery man ought to meete both morning and euening without lawe written, to bee edifyed more and more by Gods worde. And truely this exercise is more than needefull for vs, considering that wee bee so inclined to euill, as there needeth not any thing to thrust vs out of the way: and therefore it were expedient for vs to come together dayly in the name of God. But what? We see that men wil scarse meete vpon the Lord his day, and that moste of them must bee held to it as it were by force. Considering then that there is such infirmitie in vs: let vs vnderstand that this order was not made al onely for the Iewes, that they might haue some day wherin to come together: but also for vs, so as it belongeth to vs as well as to thē.

But yet herewithall we haue to marke, that this is not all: for it were a very slender order to haue a rest of our handes and feete, and to go no further than so. What then? we must apply this rest to a higher purpose: we must refraine from our owne businesse which might hinder vs from the minding of Gods workes: and wee must call vpon his name and exercise our selues in his worde. If wee spende the Lordes day in making good cheere, and in playing and gaming: is that a good honoring of God? Nay, is it not a mockerie, yea and a very vnhalowing of his name? Yes. But when the Shopwindowes are shut in on the Lords day, and men trauel not as they do on other dayes: it is to the ende wee shoulde haue the more leasure and libertie, to intend to the thinges that God commaundeth: that is to wit, to be taught by his worde, to meete together to make confession of our faith, to call vppon his name, & to exercise our selues in ỹ vse of his Sacramentes. That is the purpose whereunto this order ought to serue vs. But now let vs see if those which name themselues Christians, discharge themselues as they ought to do. Behold, a great number thinke to haue ỹ Lordes day most free to followe their owne busines, & reserue that day for the same purpose, as though there were none other day for them to appoynt vppon of all the weeke long. And though the bell tole to bring them to the sermon, yet it seemeth vnto them, that they haue nothing else to doe, but to thinke vpon their busines, and to cast vp their accounts concerning this and that matter. Othersome fall to gluttonie, and shut vp thēselues in their houses, becaus they dare not shewe a manifest contempt in the open streetes: but yet the Lord his day is to them but as a couert to shrinke aside in from the Church of God. And hereby it appeareth what affection we haue towardes all Christianitie, & towardes ỹ seruing of God, seeing we make that thing an occasion of withdrawing our selues further of from God, which is giuen vs for a helpe to bring vs neerer vnto him. And againe, be we once gone astray: it serueth to pul vs quite and cleane away. And is not ỹ a diueliish spite of men? yet notwithstanding it is so cōmon a thing, as is pitie to see: and would God that examples were more rare and further of to be found. But ỹ worlde sees how all thinges are vnhallowed, insomuch that most folke haue no regard at al of ỹ vsing of that day, which was ordayned to withdrawe vs from all earthly cares and affaires, that wee might giue our selues wholy vnto God.

Furthermore wee must vnderstand, that the Lord his day was not appoynted al onely to the hearing of Sermons: but to the ende wee should apply the rest of the time to ỹ praysing of God. Yea verily. For although he feede vs euery day: yet doe wee not minde his gratious benefites sufficiently to magnify them. In deede it were a poore thing if wee minded not Gods benefites but vpon the Lordes day: But becausе we be occupied too much about our owne affaires on the other dayes, therefore wee bee not so much giuen to serue God in them, as vppon the day which is assigned wholy therunto. The Lord his day then must serue vs for a tower to mount vp into, to vewe Gods workes a farre of, as a time wherein we haue nothing to let vs or to keepe vs occupied, but that we may imploy all our wits to consider the benefites and gratious gifts that he hath bestowed vppon vs. And if wee can put this thing wel in vre (that is to say, if we can consider Gods workes), vpon the Lordes day, surely we shall be the more giuen vnto it all the reste of the weeke after, and the minding thereof wil as it were fashion and polish vs aforehand, so as our musing vppon his workes long afore to the intent wee may knowe how to fare the better by them, wil leade vs to yeeld thanks vnto our God vppon the munday and all the weeke after. But if the Lordes day be spent not onely in games & pastimes full of vanitie, but also in thinges quite contrarie to God, so as men thinke they haue not kept holy the Lorde his day, except God be offended diuers wayes: if the holy order which God ordeyned to bring vs to him, be broken after that fashion: is it any woonder though men play the beastes all the weeke after? What is to be done then? Let vs assure our selues that it is not enough for vs to goe to some Sermon vppon the Lordes day, to receiue some good instruction & to cal vpon the name of God: but we must also digest the same thinges, and bende all our wittes to consider the gratious thinges that God hath done for vs: and by that meanes wee must frame our selues to the thinges that may leade vs to our God, without further trauel on ỹ Munday or of all the weeke after. And to the intent we may not doe aught else than record ỹ thinges by good leasure, which we had learned afore: let our mindes be discharged of all things that may hinder vs, or plucke vs backe from the considering of Gods workes. Thus ye see what the order is which we must keepe at this day. It is not to keepe the ceremonie so straite as it was vnder the bondage of ỹ lawe: for we haue not the figure or shadowe any more. But it serueth to cal vs together, that we may be inured according to our infirmitie, to apply our selues the better to ỹ seruing of God, and to dedicate that day wholy vnto him, so as we may bee vtterly withdrawen from the worlde, and the same may stand vs in stead all the rest of the weeke, as I sayd afore.

Yea and wee haue to marke also, that it is not enough for vs to thinke vpon God and his works

vppon the Lordes day euery man alone by himselfe: but that wee must meete together vppon some day certeine to make open confession of our faith. In deede this ought to be done euery day as I haue sayd afore. But yet in respect of mens rawnesse, and by reason of their slothfulnesse: it is necessarie to haue one speciall day dedicated wholy thereunto. It is true that we bee not bound to the seuenth day: neither doe wee (in deede) keepe the same day that was appointed to the Iewes: for that was the Saterday. But to the intent to shewe the libertie of Christians, the day was chaunged because Iesus Christ in his resurrection did set vs free from the bondage of the law, & cancelled the obligation thereof. That was the cause why the day was shifted. But yet must wee obserue the same order of hauing some day in the weeke, be it one or be it two, for that is left to the free choyce of Christians. Neuertheless, if a people assemble to haue the Sacramentes ministred, and to make common prayer vnto GOD, and to shewe one agreement and vnion of faith: it is conuenient to haue some one day certeine for that purpose. Then is it not enough for euery man to withdrawe himselfe into his owne house, whether it bee to reade the holy scripture or to pray vnto GOD: but it is meete that wee shoulde come into the companie of the faithfull, and there shewe the agreement which wee haue with all the whole body of the Church, by keeping this order which our Lord hath so commanded. But what? There a man may see too apparant vnhallowing of Gods seruice. For (as I haue touched afore) are there not a great sorte which could well finde in their heartes to shewe that they doe but mocke God, and that they would faine be exempted from the common lawe? It is true that they wil come to a sermon a fiue or sixe times a yeere. And what to doe there? Forsooth euen to mocke at God & at all his doctrine. In deede they be very swine, which come to defile Gods temple, and are worthier to be in stables than there, and they were better to keepe themselues at home in their stinking cabans. To bee short, it were better that such rascals and filthie vilaines were quite cut off from the Church of God, than that they should come and intermingle themselues after that sort in companie with the faithfull. But yet how many times come they thither? The bel may ring wel enough: for looke where a man left them, there shall he finde thē. So then we ought to bee the more diligent and careful, in quickening vp our selues to make such confession of our faith, as God may be honored with one common consent among vs. And besides that, all superstitions must bee banished. For we se how it is an opinion in poperie, that God is serued with idlenesse. It is not after that sorte that we must keepe holy the Saboth day. But to the intent it may bee applyed to the right and lawfull vse, we must consider (as I sayd afore) how our Lord requireth to haue this day bestowed in nothing else, but in hearing of his worde, in making common prayer, in making confession of our faith, and in hauing the vse of the Sacramentes. Those are the thinges that wee bee called to. Howbeit, we see how al things haue bin corrupted & confounded in the popedome. For lyke as they haue alotted dayes to honoring of their hee Saints and shee Saints, and set vp images of thē: so haue they surmised that they were to be worshipped with idlenesse. But seeing that the world is so giuen to corruption: it standeth vs so much the more in hand to marke well this discourse concerning the Saboth day, as it is set downe here by Moses. And let vs consider to what ende our Lorde commaunded the people of olde time, to haue one day in the weeke to rest in: to the intent that wee knowing how the same is abolished by the comming of our Lorde Iesus Christ, may take our selues to the spiritual rest, that is to say, dedicate out selues wholy vnto God, forsaking all our owne reason and affections. Againe let vs reteine still the outward order, so farre as is meete for vs, that is to wit, of forbearing our owne affaires and worldly businesses, that we may intend wholy to the minding of Gods workes, and occupy our selues in the consideration of the good thinges that hee hath done for vs. And aboue all thinges let vs stre ine our selues to acknowledge the grace that hee offereth vs dayly in his Gospel that we may be strengthened in it still more and more. And when wee haue bestowed the Lord his day in praysing and magnifying Gods name, and in minding his workes: let vs shewe all the weeke after, that wee haue profited in the same.

Col. 2. 11. 12 14.

Now let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good GOD with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to make vs feele them better than we haue done. And forasmuch as wee can by no meanes serue him, vntill the frowardnesse that is in vs be done away, and inasmuch as he hath tolde vs that wee shall not cease to fight against his righteousnesse, so long as wee giue heade to our owne lusts and imaginations: it may please our good God to graunt vs such grace by the power of his holy spirit, as wee may be fully fashioned lyke vnto him that dyed and rose again for vs to mortify vs and to quicken vs. So then let vs beare the marke of our Lorde Iesus Christ euen in renouncing our selues, and let vs so submit vs to his will, as our whole seeking may bee to be fashioned lyke to his righteousnesse, that his lawe may bee fulfilled in vs euen as it is spirituall, and wee be changed from flesh to spirit, to liue vnder his obeisance. And because there is alwayes so much in vs to be mislyked: it may please the same good GOD to beare with our infirmities, vntill his rest be fully brought to passe in vs, and that he haue taken vs vp into his heauenly kingdome. That it may please him to graunt this grace not onely, &c.

On Friday the xxj. of Iune. 1555.

13 Six dayes ſhalt thou labour &c.
14 Thou ſhalt not doe anie worke therein, thy ſelfe, thy Sonne, thy daughter, thy manſeruaunt, thy womanſeruaunt, thyne Ox, thyne Aſſe, and thy cattle, and thy Straunger which is within thy gates, that thy manſeruaunt and thy womanſeruaunt may haue reſt as well as thy ſelfe.
15 Remember that thou waſt a ſeruaunt in the land of Egypt, and that the Lorde thy God brought thee thence with ſtrong hande and arme ſtretched out. And therefore the Lord thy God hath commaunded thee to keepe holie the Saboth day.

I Declared yeſterday how and why the commaundement of keeping the Saboth day was giuen to the Iewes. I told you briefly how it was a figure of the ſpirituall reſt which the faithfull ought to obſerue, to Col.2,14.17.20. ſerue God in. Howbeit our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt hath brought vs the performance thereof, ſo as wee muſt no more ſtay vppon the ſhadowe of Rom.6.6. the Lawe, but content our ſelues with the crucifying of our olde man by the power of ỹ death and paſſion of our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt, that wee may bee renued to ſerue our GOD throughly. But yet in the mean while we haue need of ſome policie and order among vs. Therefore it is expedient that there bee a day of reſt for vs to meete together, that we be confirmed in the doctrine of God, and profite daily therein, that is to ſay, all the time of our life, and alſo bee occupied in calling vppon his name, and in making confeſſion of our faith: and that therewithall the reſidewe of the day be ſpent in conſidering the benefits that wee receiue from time to time at Gods hand, that he may be the better glorifyed for them.

And now we haue to marke what is ſayd in Moſeſes text. Six dayes ſhalt thou labor, ſayth the Lorde. This muſt not be taken as though God commaunded vs to labor. It is true that we bee borne thereto, and wee knowe that God intendeth not that wee ſhould be idle, while we liue in this world: for hee hath giuen men handes and feete and cunning and wit. Yea and euen
Gen.2,15. before there was any ſin, it is ſayd that Adam was put into the garden to dreſſe it. But the labor that men take now, is a chaſtiſement for ſin. For it is ſayd vnto them, Thou ſhalt eate thy bread in the ſweate of thy browes: that is a curſe which is layd vppon all mankinde. For wee be not worthie to inioy the ſtate that was giuen to our firſt father, which was to liue in pleaſure without much troubling of himſelfe. Notwithſtanding, euen before ſin came into the world, and before we were condemned of God to this paynful and conſtreyned labor, it behoued men to occupy themſelues in ſome exerciſe. And why? For it is againſt our nature to be as vnprofitable blockes of wood. So then it is very certeine that we muſt apply the whole time of our lyfe to ſome labor. Neuertheleſſe here is no preciſe commaundement giuen of laboring ſix dayes. For in very deede there were other ſolemnities beſides the Saboth day, vnder the Lawe: There were other feaſtes which might fall in the middeſt of the weeke. But for as much as the number of them was ſmall, (for they were but fower dayes in the yeere:) here is no mention made of them: hee ſpeaketh but only of the Saboth day. And whereas it is ſayd, thou ſhalt labor ſixe dayes: our Lord ſheweth vs that wee haue no cauſe to grudge of the giuing and beſtowing of one day vppon him, ſeeing he leaueth vs ſixe for one. As if he ſhould ſay, is it a great matter to you that I ſhould choſe out one day to be reſerued wholy to my ſeruice, ſo as ye ſhall doe nothing therein but reade and exerciſe your ſelues in my lawe, or heare the doctrine that ſhalbe preached vnto you, and come to the temple to be there confirmed by the ſacrifices that ſhall be offered, and to call vppon my name, and to proteſt that you bee of the felowſhip of my people? Shold this grieue you ſeing you haue ſixe dayes free and whole to doe your buſineſſe and affaires in? Seing then that I deale ſo courteouſly with you: as to require but one day of ſeuen: is it not too great an vnthankefulneſſe, if yee complayne of that time as though it were misbeſtowed, as who ſhoulde ſay yee were ſo churliſh and nigardly, as to grudge mee the ſeuenth part of your time? I giue you your whole life: ỹ ſunne neuer ſhineth vpō you, but you ought to conſider my goodneſſe, & that I am a freehearted father towardes you. For I make Psal.104.22 my sunne to shine, to giue you light to goe by, 23. that euery of you might doe his businesse. And why then should not I haue one day of seuen, wherein euery man shall surcease from his owne businesse, so as ye shall not be intangled in any worldly care, but that ye may haue leasure to thinke vppon me? We see then that this saying of laboring sixe dayes, is not set downe as a cō-maundement, but rather as a graunt that God maketh euen in way of vpbraiding men with their vnthankefulnesse, if they doe not obserue the Saboth day and keepe it holy as is spoken of it here.

But hereof we may gather a good and profitable lesson: which is that when we be slow to obey God, we must cōsider his benefits. For what should more sharpen our desire to followe Gods commaundementes, than to consider that hee dealeth not roughly with vs, ne ouerpresseth vs not? behold God coulde reine vs with a streite bit if it pleased him: he could driue vs to so hard thinges as there should be no meanes to get out of them: but hee hath a consideration to guide vs as a father doth his children. Seing then y he doth so beare with vs: ought wee not to be the more prouoked to doe as he appointeth vs? yes.
So then, as oft as Gods commaundements are hard vnto vs, or at leastwise seeme to bee so: let vs assure our selues that hee doth not presse vs so much as hee could, nothing neere. For if God listed to vse his right with extremitie: we should be tormented out of all measure. Therefore let vs vnderstand that he beareth with vs, and that hee vseth more than fatherly goodnesse in that behalfe. It is true that the lawe of GOD is Ro.7.14.15 vnpossible vnto vs, insomuch that wee bee not onely vnable to obserue it throughout: but also if a man would of his owne naturall power discharge himselfe to Godward, he could not stirre one finger, nor haue one good thought, to know which way to begin. And so farre off are wee from being able to obey GOD, and to execute the thinges that are conteined in his lawe: that Rom.8.7. all our thoughtes and affections are enmities against God. If men could through their owne power performe the Lawe: it should bee sayd to them, Labor thou. But contrariwise it is sayd, Rest yee, to the end that God may worke. The lawe then may well be vnpossible as in respect of vs, but yet is it possible for GOD to printe it in our heartes, and to gouerne vs by his holy spirit, yea euen in such wise as it shall bee a sweete and light yoke vnto vs, and there shall bee no hardnesse in it that may weary vs. Therfore when men haue looked well about them:
they shall finde that God beareth with them, as a father that pitieth his children. And therefore let vs learne to bee thankfull, and to be the more forewarde to serue our God, seeing hee commaundeth vs no such thinges as ought to seeme ouer bitter or paynefull to vs, but hath a regarde of our abilitie.

Thus yee see what wee haue to marke vpon
this text, where our Lord sheweth that he lea-ueth men their commoditie. True it is (as was touched yesterday) that wee ought to bee so spirituall, as to assemble euery day to call vpō the name of God, and that we ought to mount vp to the heauenly lyfe, leauing all our worldly businesses. But what? God seeth that wee be compassed about with our flesh, that we creep vppon the earth, and that our infirmities cary vs away in such sorte, as we cannot leade the life of Angels. God therefore beholding such raw-nes & weakenes in vs, and rewing our vnabilitie to discharge our selues fully of our dutie: releāseth vs, and vttereth not his vttermost rigor, but sayth hee is contented if wee alowe him one day: or rather if that day serue vs for all the rest of the weeke, God is contented with it. And why? For (as I sayd) hee goeth not to extremitie: because hee knoweth that wee bee too feeble. Seeing then that hee beareth so with vs, and leaueth our commodities to vs: we be so much the more lewde, vnhoneſt and vnexcusable, if wee bee not inflamed to giue our selues ouer vnto him.

Now it is sayd therewithall, that neither man-seruant, nor woman-seruant, nor Ox, nor Asse, nor any other Cattell must labour on the Saboth day, no nor a-ny straunger within thy gates. As concerning cattel, it might bee thought straunge that God shoulde comprehende them vnder the keeping of the Saboth or day of rest, seeing it is a high and heauenly mysterie, as was declared yesterday. Doeth such geere belōg to Oxen and Asses? GOD sayth, I haue giuen you the Saboth day, Exod.31.13. to bee as a signe that I make you holy, and that 17. I am your GOD which reigneth among you. Eze.20.12. This is not common to all mortall men. For God graunteth not such grace and priuiledge to the paynims and infidels, as to make them holy: Hee speaketh but onely to the people whome hee adopted and chose to bee his heritage. But nowe seeing that the Saboth day is a signe of Gods separating of his faithfull Church from all the rest of the worlde: wherefore is it extended vnto Oxen and Asses? Let vs marke that it is not done for the brute beastes sakes: but to the intent that men shoulde haue a monu-ment before their eyes, to bee the more touched therewith. This Sacrament then concer-neth not the beastes, which haue no vnderstan-ding nor reason: but it concerneth men, who ought to make their profit of it. Wee see that the Sacrifices were made of the brute beastes: wee see there was greate preparation in that be-halfe: there were vessels of gold and siluer & such other lyke thinges: and whereas all these things were hallowed, is it meant that God did put his spirit into the corruptible mettals, and into the other thinges that haue no feeling? No: but all this is referred to the men, for whose vse and commoditie they are made. God doth not onely serue his owne turne with them in this Gen.1.28. present and brittle lyfe: but also giue them to vs Psal.8.7. as tokens of his fauour, to bee as meanes and helpes to drawe vs vp to heauen. Now then, whereas God would haue the Oxen and Asses to rest the seuenth day: it is not meant there-by that hee maketh them partakers of the spi-

rituall reſt that wee ſpake of before: but it was done to ỹ end that ỹ Iewes beholding their Stables and ſtalles ſhut vp, ſhoulde conſider thus with themſelues: Lo: God ſetteth vs downe this ſigne and viſible Sacrament before our eyes, and extendeth it euen to the bruite beaſtes: and that is to the end that wee on our part ſhoulde be held the better to his ſeruice, and conſider that it were a breaking of the whole lawe, if wee ſhould not thinke vpon the thing that is chiefeſt in all our whole lyfe: namely if wee ſhoulde not learne to forſake our ſelues, and no more followe our owne lykings, reaſon, and wiſedome, but ſuffer our God to rule vs, and become as dead creatures, that hee may liue in vs, and not followe our own ſwindge any more, which is vtterly corrupted. After this maner ſhould the Iewes haue looked vpon the viſible ſigne that extended euen to the beaſtes, to the end it might haue reſtreined them ſo much the more, and they by that meane haue bin put in minde to haue kept the Saboth day with all reuerence.

Gal. 2, 20.

Alſo wee ſee how God at all times handleth men according to their hardneſſe, and how he hath prouided conuenient remedies for them, becauſe they bee not ouerhaſtie to come vnto him, vntill they bee drawen thither after that faſhion. And this ſerueth not onely for the Iewes, but alſo for vs. Then let vs conſider the goodneſſe of our God, ſith wee ſee hee is not vnmindefull of vs, nor ouerſlippeth any thing at all that may remedy our vices. And therewithall let vs alſo conſider the vntowardneſſe that is in our ſelues, to the ende that wee flatter not our ſelues ne giue head to our affections, ſeeing it is ſo that wee haue neede to bee conſtreined, and that God ſhould giue vs ſtrokes with the ſpurre, as it were to reſtie horſes. Seeing then that God quickeneth vs vp after that faſhion, let vs aſſure our ſelues hee doth it not cauſeleſſe, but becauſe wee be froward and ſtubborne. And therfore let vs miſlike of all our affections, and learne to impriſon our ſelues, ſo as nothing may withhold vs from following the trace that God commandeth vs. And although our nature ſtriue againſt it, yet let vs ſo bridle the ſame, as wee may goe through without ceaſing, euen til wee be fully obedient to our God.

Thus ye ſee what we haue to remember vpon this place, beſides that which ſhall be ſpoken anon concerning menſeruaunts and womenſeruaunts, wherby God putteth the Iewes in mind, that they had bin ſeruantes in the land of Egipt, and therefore that they ought to deale gently with ſuch as were vnder their power. Thy manſeruants (ſayth hee) and thy womanſeruants ſhall reſt themſelues, And why? for thou thy ſelfe haſt bin in bondage. [The time hath bin that] thou wouldeſt faine haue had ſome reſt and refreſhing giuen thee. Therefore now thou muſt vſe the lyke gentleneſſe towards ſuch as are vnder thy hand. Heere it ſhoulde ſeeme that God ordeined not the Saboth day for a ſpirituall order onely, as is ſayd afore: but alſo for charities ſake. For hee ſayth, if thou thy ſelfe weare in bondage, wouldeſt thou not that other men ſhould giue thee ſome releaſe? couldeſt thou finde in thy heart to be alwayes toyling? No ſurely. Therefore muſt thou alſo beare with others. Now this is not done for the ſeruice of God, but rather for common charities ſake which ought to be betweene neighbor and neighbor, how farre ſoeuer they bee vnderlings to vs in degree. Howbeit inaſmuch as this commaundement is contayned in the firſt table of the Lawe: ſurely the thing that is touched here, is but an acceſſorie, I ſay the firſt table. For not without cauſe hath God deuided his lawe in ſuch ſorte, as that he wrote it in two ſtones. Coulde he not haue written it all in one ſtone if hee had liſted? Yes. Why then was it made in two partes? It was not without cauſe. For there are two principall poyntes in Gods Lawe. The one concerneth our duetie towards him, & the other concerneth our duetie towardes our neighbours in being conuerſant with them. For the end whereunto our whole life ought to bee referred, is firſt of all, that vppon knowledge that wee haue a God to whome wee belong, wee ſhould walke in his obedience, and that foraſmuch as wee holde our lyfe of him, wee ſhould doe him homage for it: and that foraſmuch as he hath created vs to a better hope, and adopted vs for his children, wee ſhould glorifie him for ſuch goodneſſe: and that foraſmuch as hee hath redeemed vs with the bloud of his ſonne, wee ſhould bee wholy his, indeuoring to withdrawe our ſelues from the defilementes of this world, ỹ we may be true ſacrifices vnto him, calling vpon him alone, fleeing to him alone for ſuccor, & yelding him thanks for all his benefits. Ye ſee then ỹ the firſt poynt of our life, is the honour that we ought to yeeld to our God.

Another poynt is this: that foraſmuch as it is his will to trye our obedientneſſe by liuing vprightly among men: none of vs muſt bee giuen to his owne peculiar profit, but euery of vs muſt indeuour to ſerue other, and mainteine mutuall honeſtie among our ſelues, ſo as wee not onely abſteine from deceite, violence, and crueltie: but alſo leade a ſober and modeſt life, without looſeneſſe, lewdeneſſe, or beaſtlyneſſe. That is the ſecond poynt of our lyfe.

Now ſith it is ſo that the commandement of the Saboth day is conteined in the firſt table: it followeth that it belongeth to the ſpirituall ſeruice of God, and that it concerneth not the charitie which ought to bee betwixt neighbor and neighbor. And why then is it treated of in that place? It is all one as if out Lord ſhould ſay, This Saboth day ſhall ſerue you for an ouerplus, that your manſeruantes and womenſeruauntes may haue ſome eaſe as well as your ſelues. Not that that was the drift of Gods purpoſe: his chiefe intent was not ỹ there ſhould be a day in ỹ week wherein mẽ ſhould ceaſe frõ labor, ỹ they might take breath & not be continually ouerhaled, ſo as they ſhoulde be tyred: ỹ was not the cauſe which moued God to appoint the Saboth day: But his ordeining of it was to do ỹ faithfull to vnderſtand ỹ they ought to liue after ſuch a holy maner, as to reſt from all their owne luſtes and deſires, that God might worke wholy in them.

Alſo

Alſo here is a verie excellent benefite, as men terme it. Behold(ſaieth our Lord) in as much as ye haue this warrant among you, that I do ſanctifie you: ſee that you alſo indeuour to giue your ſelues vnto mee. For loe, this thing ſhal doe you ſeruice, and it is to your profite: that is to wit, your houſholde ſhall not bee alwaies ouerhaled: for your menſeruants and your womenſeruantes and your cattell muſt haue ſome reſt. Therefore ye ſhall haue this as an ouerplus. Nowe wee ſee why here is expreſſe mention made, ỹ the Iewes had bin bondſeruantes in Egypt, and therefore ỹ they ought to haue regard of ſuch as were held as priſoners vnder their hand. For whereas Moſes ſpeaketh of menſeruants & womenſeruants: he meaneth not ỹ maner of ſeruice that is common among vs nowe adayes: for in thoſe dayes ſeruantes were ſlaues, and they were held downe like Oxen & Aſſes: they were handled ſo roughly and vnkindly, as was pitie to ſee. God therfore telleth ỹ Iewiſh people, ỹ in keeping the Saboth day, they ſhould euen benefite & proſper their owne houſhold. So little cauſe haue you (ſaieth he) to repine at the time that I haue reſerued to my ſelfe, in taking one of ſeuen: ỹ if ye were not ouercruell and tyrannous to ſuch as are at your deuotion, [ye would ſee that] the ſame day is to your benefite. If ye had no further regard than ro ciuill order, that is to wit that in that day your ſeruauntes ſhall haue ſome refreſhing: it ought to perſwade you thereunto. But ye muſt vnderſtand that I haue not ordained it alonly for your houſholdes ſake: but to the intent ye ſhould bethinke ye of the thing ỹ I haue told you: namely that in as much as ye be ſholed out from the Infidels, you muſt be to mee a kingly prieſthood, ſo as you muſt ſeeke nothing but to ſerue me in all ſoundneſſe and pureneſſe of conſcience. Haue yee once that regard, ye ſhall perceiue that the ſame day will yeelde ye moreouer ſome earthly commoditie, but yet is not that the thing which you muſt ſeeke thereby. To bee ſhort, our Lorde ſheweth vs here ỹ ſame thing which is auowed by Ieſus Chriſt: which is, that if wee ſeeke the kingdome of heauen, all other thinges ſhall bee caſt vppon vs. For we beare our ſelues on hand, that if we ſeeke the heauenly life, we ſhall ſtarue for hunger, & it wil be a meane to turne vs out of all our cõmodities. To be ſhort, the deuil comes, & alwaies temptes vs to miſlike of Gods ſeruice, vnder this pretence & guile, that if wee giue our ſelues to the ſeruing of God, wee muſt ſtarue for hunger, ſo as we ſhall bee in rufull caſe, & all the world will forſake vs. But ſurely we cannot ſerue God, vnleſſe we be bereft of our own affections, & ſhake off the worldly cares that preſſe vs too ſore. Neuertheleſſe wee muſt repoſe our ſelues vppon the bleſſing that is promiſed vs: which is, that if we ſeeke the kingdome of God, we ſhalbe bleſſed euen in theſe tranſitorie things, ſo as our Lord will pitie vs. & giue vs all thinges which he knoweth to be requiſite for this preſent life: only let vs but waite vppon him for the things which we cãot attaine to by our own power & policie. That is ỹ thing which is ſhewed vs in this place.

Now this ſaying ought to ſerue vs continually for a ſpurre, to make vs goe foreward with the things that God commandeth vs. For the chiefe thing that ſtaieth vs from ruling and directing our life in the obedience of God, is that being too much wedded to our ſelues, we thinke ỹ this thing or that thing will be more for our profite, and whatſoeuer come of it, we will needs lay for our own commoditie, & for the things that pertaine to the world. Wee ſee here ỹ men cannot finde in their heartes to follow God: but rather ſhrink away frõ him & drawe cleane backe from his law, bicauſe ỹ to their ſeeming, if they ſhould ſerue God they ſhould neuer thriue. But that is ſuch a ſhamefull thankleſneſſe, as inhaunceth their rebelliouſnes a hundredfold more. What is to be done then? Let vs marke well ỹ we can neuer ſerue God w̃ a free & cheerful heart, except we be fully reſolued ỹ he wil prouide for vs al our life long, & not forget vs as is ſaid in the perſon of Ioſua. For in the Epiſtle to the Hebrewes, the Apoſtle applieth this doctrine to all the faithful, euen of purpoſe to withdraw them frõ ouergreat carefulnes: he ſaieth, Thy God will not forſake thee, neither will he forget thee. Now if we could once be throughly perſwaded that God watcheth ouer vs, and that he will prouide for al our neceſſities: it is certaine that we ſhould not bee ſo ouerplunged in our earthly affections, wee ſhould not bee turned away frõ the ſeruing of him, neither ſhold we be letted to minde the ſpirituall life: but wee ſhould paſſe through the world & vſe the creatures as though wee vſed them not, bicauſe wee would conſider that wee had yet further to goe. Thus ye ſee the effect that we haue to gather of this leſſon, is that where our Lorde ſheweth vs ỹ his commanding of the Saboth day to bee kept, hath a ſpirituall meaning: yet notwithſtanding men ſhal not faile to finde the ſame profitable to them, and that God will bleſſe them for it, if they looke rightforth to him, and be not too eagre in ſeeking their earthly commodities.

Ioſua 1. 5. 6. He. 4. 8. 11.

And by the way wee bee warned, that if any haue authoritie ouer others, they muſt not deſpiſe their neighbors though they be their inferiours. And this reacheth very farre. For wee muſt not interprete it onely of menſeruants and womenſeruants: but alſo of the poore, of ſuch as are not of authoritie or eſtimation, of all vnderlings & ſubiects, & of all ſuch as (to our ſeeming) are not worthy to be compared or matched with vs in reſpect of the worlde. For wee ſee what the pride of men is. Although there be no cauſe why we ſhould aduaunce our ſelues: yet doth euerie of vs couet ſome preheminence. Now then, if we be ſo high minded, that euerie of vs could finde in his heart to ouerpeere his neighbour, yea euẽ though there be no reaſon why: what will we do if we be aduanced in deede? Looke vpon ſuch as ſit in ſeat of Iuſtice: they beare thẽſelues in hand ỹ the whole world (as ye wold ſay) was made for none but thẽ, except God bridle thẽ by his holy ſpirit, & ſhewe them ỹ they ought to walke in all maner of mildnes, & not oppreſſe thoſe that are vnder their charge, but rather behaue thẽſelues as fathers, & account of their ſubiects as of their children, yea & that bicauſe God honoreth thẽ, therefore they ought to liue in the greater humilitie. As for thoſe that preache Gods worde, and haue ẏ charge to direct others: if they think they ought to bee exempted from the common ſort, & deſpiſe other men: woe worth them. For it were better for them to breake their neckes in going vp into the Pulpit, than not to ſtraine thẽſelues to be the firſt ẏ ſhould leade a godly conuerſation, & liue quietly with their neighbors, & ſhew thẽſelues to be ſheepe of the flocke of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt. But yet for all this, it is true ẏ rich men may well be ſerued by the poore. If a man haue menſeruantes & womenſeruantes for wages, he will not ſet his ſeruant aboue himſelfe at the table, neither will he lay him in his owne bed: but yet, (notwithſtanding all ſuperioritie,) Gen.9.6. we muſt come to this point, ẏ we be knit togither as one fleſh, & that all of vs are created after the image of God. If we conſidered that as many as come of Adams race are our owne fleſh & bone: ought it not to moue vs vnto kindnes, though we were as wild beaſtes one to another? When the Eſa.58.7. Prophet Eſay ment to reproue men for their vnnaturalneſſe: he ſaid, thou ſhalt not deſpiſe thine owne fleſh. There ought I to behold my ſelf as in a lookingglaſſe: namely in as many men & women as are in the world. Marke ẏ for one point.

But there is yet more: namely that the image of God is printed in all men. Therefore whenſoeuer I goe about to oppreſſe any man, I not only deſpiſe mine owne fleſh, but alſo hurte Gods image as much as in mee lyeth. So then let vs mark well, that by this text, God meant to ſhewe to all ſuch as are in authoritie & eſtimation, and to all ſuch as are richer than others, & to all ſuch as are in any degree of honour: that they ought not to abuſe thoſe ẏ are vnder their hand, nor to vex or tormēt thē out of meaſure, but euermore to beare in minde how wee bee all deſcended of Adams race, & are all of one kinde, yea & that al of vs haue Gods image printed in vs. That is the thing which we haue to note, ſpecially now that our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt is come downe to vs, and
Phil.2.7. hath abaſed himſelfe to condemne all pride, and to ſhew that there is none other meane to ſerue
1.Cor.12.13 God than ẅ lowelines, & moreouer hath made Ga.3.27.28 vs all members of his body, as well ſeruants [& vnderlings) as maiſters & ſuperiors, ſo as there is no diſtinction in ẏ behalf. When we come to our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, and haue an eye to him: wee muſt follow him. And ſeeing that all of vs both great and ſmall are members of his bodie, and hee is our head: it is good reaſon that euerie of vs ſhould faſhion himſelfe like to his neighbors. And beſides that, ſeeing that God hath ſhewed himſelfe a father more familiarly to vs, than he did to them that liued vnder the Lawe: let the ſame moue vs to maintaine brotherly loue among vs. Thus ye ſee further what we had to remember vpon this place.

Howbeit there is yet one poynt more, concerning Gods ordaining of this monument to put the Iewes in remembraunce, That they had bene as wretched bondſlaues in the land of Egypt: And wee knowe that they were naughtily and cruelly handled there. Now foraſmuch as they would faine haue bin borne withall in ẏ caſe, and God hearkened to them whẽ they ſighed and groned: Exod.2.23.
therefore doeth he tell thẽ, that they alſo ought to doe the like to others. And this containeth a good leſſon: which is, ẏ if wee conſider our ſelues, we may continually be induced to diſcharge our dueties. On the contrarie part, if we be cruell towards our neighbors: it is bicauſe wee bee (as ye would ſay) beſotted in our own eaſe, & think not vpon our wretchednes & miſerie. He ẏ hath ſuffered hunger and thirſt, bicauſe he hath longed to bee ſuccoured at his neede, will thinke thus with himſelfe when he ſees a poore man: Go to, I my ſelfe haue bene in the like neceſſitie, and I would haue bin glad to haue bin ſuccored, & mee thought that other men ought to haue had pitie vpon me to releeue me. Now (ſay I) if a man bethinke him of ſuch things when he beholdeth a poore man in neede: will it not make his heart to relent? Yes verily: but what for that? When we be at our eaſe, we thinke no more vpon our humane wretchednes: but rather we imagin ẏ we be exempted, and ẏ we be no more of the cõmon ſort. And that cauſeth vs to forget our ſelues, ſo as we haue nõ more compaſſion of our neighbours, nor of any thing ẏ they indure. Therefore haue we ſo much the more neede to mark this matter: namely, ẏ bicauſe our Lord ſeeth vs blinded with ſelfloue, ſo as it is ynough for vs to welter in pleaſure, & wee neuer thinke vpon ſuch as are in diſtreſſe & neceſſitie: therfore he ſheweth vs [our ſtate, ſaying:] who be you? Were ye neuer in any aduerſitie? Yea & though ye happen to ouerſhoot your ſelues towards them: doe ye not bethinke your ſelues againe [and ſay,] Lo, theſe are creatures ſhaped after the image of God, & if we miſuſe thẽ, God will haue no pitie vpon vs? And ſo let vs practiſe this doctrine all our life lõg. Therfore whenſoeuer wee ſee any folke pinched with aduerſitie, let vs call our ſelues to remembrance in this wiſe: Haue not I bin in neede as well as they? And if I were in like taking againe, would I not be glad to bee ſuccoured? Seeing it is ſo: why ſhoulde wee exempt our ſelues from ſuch condition? We ought at leaſtwiſe to do to other folkes, as we our ſelues would be done vnto. Nature teacheth vs that, and wee neede not goe to ſchole to learne it. Then needeth there not any other euidence to condemne vs, thã our Lordes teaching of vs aforehand by experience. If wee haue that: ſurely we ſhalbe touched with kindnes & compaſſion to ſuccour ſuch as haue neede and want, and we ſhalbe moued ẅ pitie towards them that are in durance, ſo that if wee haue the meane and power to releeue them, euerie of vs will ſtraine himſelfe to doe it. That is the thing which wee haue to marke in this place, where it is ſaid, Thou wart a ſtraunger in the land of Egypt, & therefore thou muſt now haue a care to releeue them that are vnder thy hand: for at that time when thou thy ſelf waſt a ſeruant, thou wouldeſt faine haue bin borne withall.

But let vs come nowe to ſuch as were not of the Iewiſh nation, but onely traffickers among them. God will haue them alſo to keepe the Saboth day, & yet were they not ſanctified of God, neither neither could this signe belong to thē, as I haue said already. It seemeth then ỳ God vnhalloweth the Sacrament, when he maketh it so common to the Infidels, & to such as were not circumcised to beare the mark of the couenant, & to such as had not the law & the promises. But we haue to marke, that Gods speaking of straūgers in this place, is as hauing alwayes an eye to the people whom he had chosen and adopted. For we know ỳ if things should bee permitted which are contrarie to Gods seruice: although it might bee sayde that they bee no people of our bodie: wee might bee induced to followe them by their euill example. If strangers had bin suffered to trauell among the Iewes: what would haue come of it?

The Iewes would haue dealt with thē, & so haue defiled themselues, and there would haue bin no difference at that time. For when occasions offer themselues, wee bee easily intised to euill. And although there be no great occasion: yet is our nature so much inclined to euill, that wee be allured to it by and by. And what will become of vs then, when all shall bee out of order? So then the libertie that had bin giuen to straungers to labour & trauell among the people of Israel [on the Sabaoth day,] would haue led them to corruption. Euery man would haue dispenced with himselfe, and taken leaue to breake the Sa-both day and not to keepe it. Therefore to cut off such occasion of euill, and to haue that day obserued with the greater reuerēce: like as Gods will was that the cattell should rest, so ordayned he the like also for straungers. And nowe must this serue for vs too. For it sheweth vs that vices may not bee suffered among people that make profession of Christianitie, so as they should goe vnpunished, no not euen in such as are but tra-uellers or soiourners. As howe? Whereas blasphemie is condemned among vs, if a man heare one blaspheme in passing by, so as he scorneth God, and yet suffereth it and winketh at it: is not his bearing with such blaspheme, so as it hath full scope vnrepressed, as good as a defiling to make al other things stinke? Yes: and yet is it to bee seene. Surely so farre of is it that blaspheme is punished as it deserueth, among such as are not of our religion: that euen in those which are mingled with vs and professe Christianitie as we doe, men doe as it were harden themselues: and that is to our greater shame. But yet for all that, if any man, bee he Papist or bee he of any other sect, (as nowe adayes the worlde is fraught full of despisers of God:) I say if any man bee suffered to rayle against the doctrine of the Gos-pell, and to blaspheme Gods name: corruption will insue of it, so as it shall not bee easie to redresse it. If Whooremaisters and Ruffians may bee suffered to bring in their lewde trickes, and to sowe more wickednesse among vs than wee had afore: If wanton persons & vnthriftes may bee suffered to come and play their lewde prankes here: must it not needes bee that wee shall play the vnthrifts with them, & bee vtterly corrupted? Yes: and therefore let vs marke well, that our Lord intendeth to keepe his people occupied in all cleannesse, so as the professors of Christianitie shall not onely abstaine from euill themselues, but also not suffer any, so farre as in them lyeth. For wee must vnderstande that the earth is as it were vnhallowed, when Gods seruice is defyled, and his holye name dishonoured. The lande wherein hee will haue vs to dwel, is as it were defyled and accursed, or at leastwise it is not long of vs if it bee not so. But if GOD haue giuen his children prerogatiue, so as they bee able to ridde idolatrie out of the Countrie where they dwell: surely if they doe it not, they prouoke Gods wrath and venge-aunce against themselues. Nowe then if wee shoulde graunt the abhominations of the Pope-dome, to bee mingled here with the pure seruice of GOD, so as the wilful Papistes that list to liue here, shoulde haue Masse graunted them by priuiledge, and they shoulde bee suffered to haue some corner to worke their idolatrie and superstition in: it were a drawing of Gods wrath vppon vs, and a kindling of the fyre of his vengeaunce against vs. And why? Bicause that in as much as God hath put the sworde of Iustice into the hand of such as haue the rule of things in this life, and giuen them power to driue away idolatrie and all infections of Papistrie: surely if they maintayne them, it is as if they draue away GOD, that he: shoulde no more dwell among them nor raigne ouer them. So then let vs mark well, that it is not without cause that our Lord woulde that the straungers which dwelt among his people, (notwithstanding that they were of another faith and Religion,) should bee compelled to keepe the seuenth daye. Not for their owne sakes nor for their owne instruction, (for they were not capable therof:) but to the ende there shoulde bee no stumblingblocke to disorder his people, or to deface his seruice, but that the land which he had giuen to his ser-uaunt Abraham to inherit, might bee wholly dedicated vnto him.

And hereby we bee warned, not onely to sanctifie our selues by Gods worde: but also not to suffer anye occasion of offence or disorder to bee committed among vs, but to see that all such things be cleane rid away. Moreouer seeing our Lorde will haue vs to be so zealous in the maintenance of his seruice, as to constraine euen thē that professe not thēselues to be of his Church, to yeeld and frame themselues vnto vs as long as they be in our companie: I pray you how shall wee excuse our selues, if wee on our side bee not wholly giuen vnto him, nor set foorth our selues as mirrours to drawe wretched vnbeleeuers vnto vs, and to winne them to our GOD? For if wee rebuke them when they doe amisse, & in the meane while they perceiue the like or greater faultes in vs: shall they not haue occasion to laugh all our sayinges to scorne? Nowe then seeing it was forbidden to suffer straungers to doe thinges contrarie to Gods seruice: let vs assure our selues that wee be dubble commanded to walke warely and in such humilitie & sobernesse, as straungers may see by experience, ỳ our desiring that God should be honoured, is in good earnest & without counterfetting, & that wee cannot abide that any man ſhould woorke reproche to his Maieſtie and glorie. That is the thing which we haue to marke vppon this place, if wee minde to obſerue the thing nowe adayes which was commaunded the Iewes, accordingly alſo as it belongeth to vs in trueth and ſubſtance. For like as our Lord in olde time deliuered that people out of Egypt: ſo hath he nowe deliuered vs from the gulfe of hell, and rid vs frō

Col.1.13. Heb.2.14. euerlaſting death, and from the bottomleſſe pit of hell wherein wee were plundged, of purpoſe to take vs vp into his heauenly kingdome, purchaſed for vs by the bloud of his deare beloued ſonne our Lord Ieſus Chriſt.

Nowe let vs kneele down in ỹ preſence of our good God, with acknowledgment of our ſinnes, praying him to make vs feele them better than wee haue done, to the ende that wee indeuouring to reſourme our ſelues more and more according to his righteouſneſſe, may fight dayly againſt the luſtes of our fleſh, and ſhunne al that is againſt the pure ſeruice of our God, holding out in the ſame incounter till he haue fully ridde vs of it, and faſhioned vs againe after his owne image, according whereunto we were created at the firſt. That it may pleaſe him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs but alſo to all people and nations of the earth, &c.

On Wedneſday the xxvj. of Iune. 1555.

The xxxvj. Sermon, which is the ſeuenth vpon the fifth Chapter.

16 Honor thy father and thy mother, as the Lord thy God hath commaunded thee, that thy dayes may be prolonged, and that it may goe well with thee in the land which the Lord thy God giueth thee.

NOwe wee bee come to the ſecond table of the Lawe, where GOD ſheweth vs howe wee ought to liue one with another. For as hath bene touched heretofore, there are two principall thinges in our life: firſt that wee ſerue God purely, and afterward that wee liue honeſtly and vprightly with other men, yeelding euerie man his due. Nowe like as the honour of God excelleth all thinges that concerne man: ſo was it meete that the rule thereof ſhould bee ſet downe in firſt and chiefe place, that wee might honour him as wee ought to doe: which thing is diſpatched in the firſt table. Here therefore GOD beginneth to tell vs howe to direct Pſal.16. Deut.30.19 20. our life, if wee intend to ſerue him as in reſpect of men. Alſo I haue ſhewed you that God requireth not any honour at our handes for that he hath neede of it or is euer the better for it: but hee doeth it for our benefite and welfare. Nowe then his intent is to trie our obedience, and the loue that wee beare him, by commaunding vs to behaue our ſelues vprightly and honeſtly towardes our neighbours, and to liue together in ſuch fellowſhip and concord, as none of vs bee giuen to himſelfe, but all of vs communicate togither, and euerie man ſtraine and imploye himſelfe to doe good, according to ſuch power and abilitie as they haue. That (ſay I) is the proofe to knowe if wee worſhippe him with our heartes. For wee may well make many faire countenances and Ceremonies: but God will Matt.23.23 not take them for payment. And euen that is the cauſe why our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt ſaieth, that the chiefe pointes of the Law are Iuſtice, Iudgement, vprightneſſe, and faith, that is to ſay faithfulneſſe or truſtineſſe, for ſo doeth the woorde Faith betoken there. Then if wee liue vprightly among men, ſo as wee bee neither guilefull nor malicious, but deſirous to ſerue euerie mannes turne, maintaining the good and reſiſting the euill as neere as wee can: it is the chiefe point of the Lawe. Not that the ſeruice of God ought to bee forgotten in the meane while, or that it is of leſſe importaunce: but bicauſe it is vnpoſſible for men to diſcharge their duetie towardes their neighbours, if they bee not led by the feare of God.

Now let vs treate of the forerehearſed commaundement, which is of the honouring of our father and mother. Although mention bee made here of father and mother by name: no doubt but he meant to deliuer a generall doctrine for the honouring of all Superiours. For proofe whereof, wee knowe that the Lawe is a perfect Pſal.19.8. rule wherein nothing is wanting. But if there were nothing included concerning other ſuperiours, as Princes, Magiſtrates, and ſuch as haue the ſworde of Iuſtice, and Maiſters: there were ſome want. Therefore it is to bee concluded, that here GOD hath commaunded the honoring and obeying of all ſuch as are in degree of ſuperioritie. Moreouer ſeeing it is ſo that all preheminence commeth of GOD, and Rom.13.14 that it is an order ſet by him, without the which the worlde coulde not continue: what a thing were it that God ſhoulde haue made none account of it, in giuing vs the ſure fourme of good and holy life? It is not to bee thought ſtraunge, that he ſhoulde comprehend all vnder one particular: for I haue tolde you alreadie, that that maner of dealing is to bee found in the Law, and wee ſhalſee more of it againe hereafter. Neither was that doone bicauſe GOD coulde not haue ſpoken otherwiſe: but bicauſe it was beſt for our comcommoditie and inſtruction. For we know that although men couet to ſeeme ſubtle and ſharpe-witted: yet they ceaſe not to ſhroud themſelues vnder the couert of ignorance, when they ſee that Gods lawe preſſeth them: for then wee woulde faine haue ſome excuſe to exempt vs from the ſubiection thereof. Now if Gods Lawe Pſal.19.8. were not meete to teach the rude & vnlearned: many would alledge that they be no clarkes, and that they neuer went to ſchoole, and ſo they woulde beare themſelues in hande, that Gods Lawe bounde them not. But in aſmuch as we ſee that God hath ſtooped to our rudeneſſe, and ſpoken groſly according to our vnderſtanding: it bereaueth vs of all excuſe, and cutteth off all occaſion of quarelling, ſo as euery of vs muſt be faine to ſubmit our ſelues, and to acknowledge that there is none other impediment, but that wee be ſtubborne againſt God, and loth to beare his yoke. Thus ye ſee that Gods comprehending of all vnder one particular, was to traine vs on as little children, which are not of full capacitie to bee taught throughly and perfectly. Neuertheleſſe, that is the true and natural ſenſe of the text, as we ſhall ſee hereafter. For like as God gaue the tenne Sentences, as hee termeth them: ſo added he an expoſition of them, to the ende that nothing ſhoulde bee darke, nor men call the thinges in queſtion and diſputation which they had hearde. Wee ſee then that God hath opened himſelfe more fullie, and ſhewed howe his will is, that not onely fathers and mothers, but alſo all ſuperiours without exception ſhoulde be obeyed.

Beſides this, let vs marke that God ſpeaketh here of the honouring of fathers and mothers, of purpoſe to drawe vs by meanes moſt conuenient and agreeable to our nature. Wee knowe there is ſuch pride in men, as they bee loth to ſtoope one to another, and euerie man thinkes hee ought to bee a maſter. And ſurely it is harde for men to yeelde and come downe ſo lowe, as ſimply to obey thoſe that are in any authoritie ouer them: vntill GOD haue reclaymed them. GOD therefore perceiuing ſubiection to bee a thing ſo ſore againſt our nature: hath ſet vs downe the termes of Father and Mother, to drawe vs to it by a more louing manner. Nowe it is an owgly and vnnaturall thing, that the childe ſhoulde not know thoſe by whom he came into the world, and by whom he was nouriſhed and brought vp. Therefore if the childe diſdaine his father or his mother: he is a monſter, & euerie man wil abhorre him. And why? For without Gods ſpeaking, without hauing any holye ſcripture, without much preaching vnto vs, nature it ſelfe ſheweth vs, that the duetie which the childe oweth to his father and mother, is ſuch a one as cannot bee broken off. Wee ſee then that the intent of our God is to winne vs to himſelfe by ſetting downe the termes of father and mother, to the end we ſhould not be ſtubborn, but come meekly to receiue the ſubiection that he layeth vpon
Rom.13.1. vs. And becauſe all the authoritie which men haue proceedeth from him, he ſpeaketh according to the Lawe of ciuill order: meaning that we ſhoulde be diligent in doing him his due honour, and euery of vs on his owne behalfe obey thoſe that haue ſuperioritie ouer vs, and euerie Eph.6.1.5. Col.3.20. 22. 1.Pet.2.13. 18. man haue an eye to his owne ſtate and calling, ſo as the children honour their fathers and mothers, the people the Magiſtrates, and ſeruants likewiſe their maſters: and to be ſhort, that there be a good harmonie of concorde among vs, according to the order that our Lorde hath ſet, which ought to be inuiolable.

Furthermore whereas here is mention made of honour: it is not ment that children ſhoulde but onely ſpeake fayre to their father and mother, or put off their Cappes or bow their knees to them: for God ſtaieth not vpon ſuch things: but Honouring importeth much more, that is to wit, that the children ſhould follow their fathers and mothers counſell, that they ſhoulde ſuffer themſelues to bee ruled by them, that they ſhoulde ſtraine themſelues to doe their duetie to them, and to bee ſhort, that they ſhoulde knowe that they be not at their owne libertie, ſo long as they haue father and mother. That is in effect the thing that God ment by the worde, Honour. And that it is ſo, we cannot haue a better or faithfuller interpreter of this law, than the holy Ghoſt which ſpake by the mouth of Moſes, and of all the Prophets, and alſo of S. Paul. For we ſhall ſee hereafter, that God expoundeth the Deut.21.18. 20. effect of this ſentence, that is to witte, that it is not ynough for children to ſhewe ſome reuerence with the heade or with the knee to their parentes: but that they muſt bee ſubiect to them, and imploy themſelues in their ſeruice to the vttermoſt of their power. And Saint Eph.6.1. Paules auoching thereof is not to exhort vs to Col.3.20. obſerue ſome ceremonie: but his meaning is that children ſhoulde bee ſubiecte to their Fathers and mothers. He ſetteth downe expreſly the worde Subiection. So then we ſee now what this importeth, and what the natural meaning of this place is.

Nowe let vs returne to the thing that I touched briefely before, that wee may profite by it, by gathering ſome profitable leſſon of it. Firſt and formoſt let children vnderſtande, that ſeeing GOD hath giuen them fathers and mothers, it is good reaſon that they ſhoulde obey them, or elſe they ſhewe themſelues to bee deſpiſers of God: and the ſtubborneneſſe which they vſe to their ſuperiors, concerneth not men nor mortall creatures, but is all one as if Gods maieſtie and glorie were troden vnder foote. It Matt.23.9. is ſaide that (to ſpeake properly) wee haue but one father, which is in heauen: and that is ment, not onely in reſpect of our ſoules, but alſo in reſpect of our bodies. Nowe then this honor of bearing the name of Father, belongeth peculiarly to GOD alone, and cannot agree to men, further forth than it pleaſeth him to make them partakers thereof. Seing then that the title of father is as a marke which God hath ſet vpon men: wee ſee that when children make no account of their fathers and mothers, they doe wrong vnto God. As much is to bee ſaide of all ſuch as diſobey their princes & magiſtrates: and likewiſe of ſeruants that would haue all degrees confounded, and raigne without order. And for the ſame cauſe alſo did the Heathen mẽ apply this worde Godlineſſe to that honour that wee giue to fathers and mothers, and to all ſuch as are in authoritie ouer vs. Godlineſſe (to ſpeak properly) is the reuerence that wee owe vnto God: and yet the heathen, (notwithſtanding that they were blinde wretches) knew that God will bee ſerued, not onely in his owne maieſtie, but alſo by our obeying of ſuch folke as haue authoritie ouer vs: To be ſhort his will is to trie our obedientneſſe in that behalfe. And therefore in aſmuch as fathers and mothers, magiſtrates and all ſuch as haue ſuperioritie, are Gods Liuetenants and repreſent his perſon: ſurely if a man deſpiſe them and make light of them, it is all one as if he bewrayed that hee woulde not obey God. Hee may well proteſt the contrarie: but yet is it ſo in deede for all that. If the wretched infidels knew this, & that God left thẽ ſuch an affection: what excuſe will there be for vs, if wee knowe it not yet better? Sith we heare that all fatherhoode proceedeth of God, (as Saint Eph. 3.15. Paul auoweth,) and that we be directed thither by the vnion of Ieſus Chriſt: haue wee not a moſt expreſſe declaration of it? Muſt the heathen men bee faine to bee our teachers ſtill? But if thoſe which call themſelues Chriſtians, doe playe the blinde beetles in this behalfe, or ſtoppe their eares leaſt they might vnderſtande Rom.13.2. the thing that GOD hath tolde them by ſillie ignorant ſoules: woe worth them, for their condemnation wil be the more horrible. Wherfore let vs well marke this: that wee cannot indeede liue heere belowe on the earth together, except this order that God hath eſtabliſhed be holily and religiouſly kept, that is to ſay: Except thoſe that bee in authoritie bee honoured, eſteemed, and obeyed: verily without that, there wil be nothing but horrible confuſion. They then that cannot finde in their hearts to be ſubiect to magiſtrates, they that diſobey their fathers and mothers, they that will beare no yoke of maſters and miſtreſſes, doe well ſhewe that it is not long of themſelues that the whole order of nature is not peruerted, and heauen and earth confounded together as they ſaye. For that is the onelie meane whereby it is Gods will to preſerue mankind. And of a trueth we ſee that (as he himſelfe ſaith) when he ſendeth magiſtrates and princes, 1.Pet.2.14. he ſtriketh a feare of them, not onely into men, Dan.2.38. but alſo into beaſtes. After that maner is it ſpoken of in Daniel.

And therevppon wee may gather, that ſuch as riſe againſt the ciuill magiſtrate ordeined of god, and labour to ſet thinges in a broile and to bring all thinges to confuſion, are worſe than brute beaſts and worthie to be ſent thither to ſchoole. For our Lorde, to ſhame men which are reaſonable creatures, ſaieth that the feare of princes and magiſtrates ought to extende euen to brute beaſtes. Is it not apparant then, that the diuell poſſeſſeth all ſuch as cannot finde in their hearts to ſubmit themſelues meekely to the ſubiection which God hath ordeyned, and without the which all muſt needes periſh and goe to hauocke in this worlde, as I haue declared afore? Yes: and therefore if wee finde our ſelues ouerhighminded, ſo as it greeueth vs to be ſubiect: let vs ſtriue againſt pride, and let Gods authoritie ſuffice to bridle vs. For though wee were worſe than wild: yet ought this to bee as a fetter vnto vs, that wee heare how God telleth vs he is not honoured at our hande, except we honor him in the perſons of thoſe whome hee hath ſet in his place, and in whom hee hath printed his image. To be ſhort, wee ſee that charitie beginneth at the humbling and meekening of our ſelues, ſo as none of vs aduance himſelfe through pride and preſumptiõ, nor make too great account of himſelfe, but be willing to ſtoope and to yeeld to what ſoeuer pleaſeth God. And for the ſame cauſe doeth Saint Paul bring vs back to charitie, when he ſetteth forth the commaundement of obeying the Magiſtrate. For hee ſheweth vs that if wee haue not the meekeneſſe in vs to bow down our neckes, when our Lorde layeth the yoke vpon vs: we haue no loue towards our neighbors. And if we couet diſorder and turmoile, ſo as the ſuperiors ſhould no more be reuerenced: al muſt needes goe to hauocke and ſpoile. It were much better for euerie man to liue alone by himſelfe and without companie: than to ſee ſuch confuſion as woulde growe of it, if we ſhould not keepe the ciuill order which GOD hath ſet. Wherefore let vs beare well in minde, that if we will liue among neighbours, euerie of vs muſt pull downe this loftineſſe and ouerweening, and not harbrough it in our heartes, but learne to be lowly and meeke, aſſuring our ſelues that it is our duetie to ſubmit our ſelues euen to the meaneſt, as S. Paul ſaith. And that we may the better doe it, let vs conſider what may enhable vs thereto. For behold, the thing that makes vs ouerſhoote our ſelues, is that euery man woulde haue greater preheminence than God alloweth him: for our blindneſſe maketh vs to forget our ſelues. And beſides this we knowe not our owne wretchedneſſe and ſinfulneſſe. By reaſon whereof euery of vs thinkes himſelfe a marueilous fellowe, wheras indeede he is nothing at all. Again, wee bee ſo inclined to make no reckening of our neighbours, that wee deſpiſe euen the vertues which God hath put into them. Then is it ſpitefulnes and churliſhnes that prouoke vs to pride, by meanes whereof euerie man takes more vpon him than becommeth him. And that is the cauſe why wee cannot ſubmit our ſelues as wee ought to do. But inſteed of doing ſo, let vs learne to do homage to our God, foraſmuch as we ſee he hath commanded vs to obey our ſuperiors, & againe we knowe that whatſoeuer they bee, it is he that hath giuen vs them. If a child haue a father or a mother, he muſt not ſay, Tuſh, my father is not altogether ſuch a one as hee ought to be, I finde defaultes in him. But yet is hee thy father, and that ought to content thee: at leaſt wiſe if thou minde not to bring all to naught, and vtterly to deface the order of nature. Either the thing that God hath ordained muſt be diſanulled and Rom.13.8. Rom.12.16. Eph.4.2.& 5.21.

and adnihilated: or elſe thou muſt honour thy father whatſoeuer he be. And why? Becauſe that whatſoeuer father thou haſt, hee is of his giuing which hath commaunded thee to honor thy father and thy mother. As much is to bee ſaide of Maſters, Princes, and all ſuperiors. For they come not by haphazard: but they bee of Gods ſending, as S. Paul auoweth, and as all the ſcripture witneſſeth. Yea and we bee led expreſly euen by experience, to knowe Gods prouidence and fatherly care towardes vs, in ordeyning of Magiſtrates. Therefore let vs learne to behold Gods goodneſſe, in all ſuch as haue ſuperioritie ouer vs, to the ende to ſubmit our ſelues obediently vnto them. Thus yee ſee what wee haue to remember.

Rom.13.1. Iob 12.18. 1.Tim.2.2. 1.Pet. 2.14.

Now ſeeing that ſo it is that God hath in one worde and in a briefe ſumme giuen vs heere the rule of obedience to all ſuperiors: let vs marke that in ſo doing he reſigneth not his owne right ne forgoeth that which belongeth to himſelfe. Therefore God muſt holde ſtill the higheſt degree. And indeede ſeeing that all fatherhoode proceedeth of him, (according to S. Pauls text afore alledged): let vs marke that when we obey father or mother, prince or magiſtrate, maſter or miſtreſſe: it is done vnto them as officers of God. God then muſt be honoured aboue al, and that in ſuch ſort, as the honour which we yeelde vnto mortall men, hinder not the doing of the ſeruice and honour which wee owe vnto him, but that euery of vs indeuer to diſcharge our dueties chiefly towards him. It were a goodly ſight to ſee a man obey an vnderofficer, & therewithall to ſpitte in the face of the iudge or of the Prince. What a dealing were that? But euen in like caſe is it with vs, when we diſpoſſeſſe God of his preheminence, and obey men in ſuch ſort, as in the meane while wee make no reckening of him that is aboue all. For it is againſt nature, that the authoritie which men haue, ſhould in any wiſe deface the glorie of God. Therefore let vs marke well, that whereas we be commaunded to obey our ſuperiors: this exception is implyed, that the ſame be no derogation or impeachmẽt to the right that belongeth to God, which hath beene treated of alreadie in the firſte table. For wee knowe that the ſeruice wherewith God is honored, ought to be preferred before all things. And for ỹ ſame cauſe S. Paul minding to giue vs an expoſition of this text, addeth expreſly that children muſt obey their fathers and mothers, howbeit in the Lorde. And I told you alſo, that the foundation whereon we ought to build, that wee may bee obedient lowly and ſubiect to our ſuperiors: is to know that God is repreſẽted in their perſons. Now take me away the foundation, and muſt not all the whole building fall and go down to the ground? But all they ỹ regard not god, do take away the fundation of this doctrine: & ſo their proceeding is too faulty and froward.

Howebeit, this thing muſt as well warne them that are in autoritie, as them that are vnder ſubiection. Then if men and women haue children: they muſt vnderſtand that there is no ſubiection due vnto them, except they themſelues be ouerruled by God. Now then what is to be done? Let the father traine vp his childe diligently in the feare of God, and begin himſelf to ſhew him the way. Let the mother do the like, ỹ God may haue his honor both of great & ſmal, old and yong. Let magiſtrats indeuer to haue God ſerued and honored, & (as much as in them lieth) maintaine all things that may make thereto: and ſeeing he hath done them ỹ honor to make them worthie to ſit in the ſeat that is dedicated to his maieſtie, & to beare the ſword ỹ is conſecrated vnto him: let them ſhewe themſelues to bee his officers in deed. Seing then that he hath aduanced them to ſuch dignitie, whereof they were not worthy: let them at the leaſt ſhew that they beare autoritie in his name, & let them refer the ſame vnto him. After this manner ought princes to diſcharge their dueties. The like ought euery man to do in his owne houſe and family. Let thoſe to whom God hath granted the prerogatiue to haue menſeruants & womenſeruants, beare well in minde ỹ they themſelues haue a Maſter aboue al, & that he muſt be ſo obeyed, as his whole right be reſerued to him vnminiſhed. Loe what inſtruction all Superiors (of what degree ſocuer they be) ought to take of this that they are commãded to obey God. Furthermore when fathers & mothers and magiſtrats wil needs auance themſelues againſt God with ſuch tyranny, as to take vpon thẽ that which belongeth only to god, & to turne vs away from the obeying of him: it is an exceptiõ which I haue ſet down before, for the which they ought not to be obeyed. God then muſt go formoſt, & afterward the creatures muſt followe, euery one in his order of aray. And in very deed, oftẽtimes the cauſe why meekenes & humility be ſo il kept in the world, that childrẽ ſet themſelues againſt their fathers and mothers, and become like mad beaſts: that ſubiects are ful of ſpitefulnes and rebellion: that ſeruants are vntruſty & ſtubborne: and that none of all theſe can by any meanes be reclaimed: is the iuſt puniſhment of God vpon ſuperiors, for abuſing of the dignitie which God hath giuen them. For oftentimes wee ſee that Princes reigne not to magnifie Gods name, and to cauſe him to be honored as he deſerueth: but cleane contrariwiſe they would faine make thẽſelues ydols, and as it were plucke God out of his ſeate to ſit in it themſelues. This is apparant: at leaſtwiſe a man may ſee that Princes reigne looſely: & therfore God muſt needs be reuẽged of them. What zeale or minde haue fathers and mothers to bring vp their childrẽ in the feare of God? They paſſe not for that, ſo they may aduance them to the worldwarde. Nay rather it ſhould ſeeme that their intent is to traine them vp in all vngodlyneſſe, and in the contempt of God and his worde. If the fathers bee woolues, they would haue their children wooluiſh: if they be olde Foxes, they would haue them to be foxiſh: & if they be ſerpentes, they would haue their Image and ofspring like themſelues. This is to be ſeene. Therefore it is good reaſon that GOD ſhould be reuenged of the creatures, when they forget themſelues after that ſort, ſpecially when men conſider not howe God hath reached them his his hande to aduaunce them, and to make them partakers of his honour, one vnder another. This is alwayes to bee borne in rememberance. But is it not a ſhamefull vnthankfulneſſe, when a man that is in authority of iuſtice, conſidereth not with himſelfe: what am I? Beholde, I am a wretched worme of the earth, and yet GOD vouchſafeth me to beare his name as from him ſelfe, and withal to put the authoritie in practiſe which hee hath giuen me? Is not a man too vnthankfull when hee acknowledgeth not that? Againe, when fathers conſider not: Beholde, God is the father of all mankinde, and yet hath hee giuen mee the ſame honorable title: Therefore it is good reaſon that I ſhoulde looke to yeelde him an account of it: When maſters and miſtreſſes acknowledge not: We be no better than other folkes, and yet hath God vouchſafed to inhonour vs, not onely by creating vs after his owne image, but alſo by giuing vs this moreouer, that others are ſubiect vnto vs: if men (ſay I) acknowledge not this: is it not to be ſaid that they be become ſtarke beaſtes?

Then let vs marke well, that diuers times the ground of rebellion & diſobedience is this, that they which are in authoritie knowe not their owne duetie, namely that aboue al thinges they ſhould finde the meanes to haue God honored, ſerued, and obeyed. True it is that children, ſubiects and ſeruants ſhall not bee excuſed by that: but yet we ſee it is the iuſt vengeance of God, & therefore ſo much the more ought we to be prouoked to followe that which is told vs, as well in this text as in all the holie Scripture, where this commandement is declared vnto vs. Then to be ſhort, let vs be wel aduiſed, that we diſchardge our dueties euerie of vs in his owne calling and ſtate. Let thoſe to whome God hath done the honor to giue them the mace of Iuſtice, & whom he hath ſet in his ſeate, be wel aduiſed that they reigne in his name, that they cauſe all men to ſerue and honour him, that they be as mirrours to giue good example to their people, and ỹ they holde their ſubiects in ſuch good awe and order, as Gods name bee bleſſed, and the mouthes of all euill ſpeakers be ſtopped. Marke that for one point.

Againe let fathers and mothers haue a care to bring vp their children wel, and to make them knowe God for their onely father. And as touching their menſeruantes and womenſeruants, let them ſo vſe their ſeruice, as God haue always the preheminence. Let them not followe the common trade: for men doe commonly paſſe for nothing elſe, ſo as they may bee ſerued to their owne profite and contentation. As for God, he is forgotten all the while. But let maſters vnderſtande, that God muſt reigne both ouer themſelues and ouer thoſe that are vnder them. Thus much concerning thoſe that are in authoritie.

Now for our part, let vs beare wel in minde, ỹ when we haue Magiſtrates, if wee rebell againſt them, or riſe againſt the State, indeuouring to ouerthrowe the order that God hath ſet: wee reſiſt not mortall creatures, but it is God whom we aſſaile. And what can we winne by making warre againſt him? Can we ouermaſter him? No: but he will reuenge himſelfe without handieſtrokes, as men ſhalbe vtterly abaſhed, to ſee howe he maintaineth the thing that hee had ſpoken with his mouth, yea euen by wonderfull power. Thus much concerning the firſt point.

Againe let children beware that they bee not highminded, nor wildheaded, nor wilfull, but that they ſubmit themſelues quietly to their fathers and mothers, aſſuring themſelues that they fight againſt God, when they cannot finde in their heartes to ſtoope to the yoke which our Lorde putteth vppon them. And let ſeruauntes knowe that if they refuſe the ſubiection of the men whom they ſerue, God is offended at it, and in the end they muſt bee blamed for refuſing to be gouerned by his hand.

Eph. 6. 5. 6.

But let vs marke herewithall, that God muſte be honoured firſt, and the ſubiectes muſt ſo obey their Princes and Magiſtrates, as the ſame may be no derogation to the right that God reſerueth to himſelfe, as he is worthie. And if Princes will needs inforce vs to doe euill, and ouerthrowe the pure doctrine of God, (as we ſee too commonly in the worlde, inſomuch that a number are ſo madde as they woulde faine wreſt religion after their owne fancie, to make as it were an image of wax of it, that they might writh it which way they liſted, as all men may ſee): God will not like of it that they ſhoulde bee obeyed in that behalfe. For who bee they? When they once reuolt and climbe aboue him that hath all ſoueraine Dominion: forthwith they forgoe all their authoritie. The verie diuels muſt bow their knees before God and our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt: and beholde, mortall men vſurpe ſuch ſuperioritie, as the honour of God is defaced and all religion thruſt downe. So then let vs learne to obey both princes and fathers and mothers in ſuch wiſe, as God may holde ſtill his right vnimpayred, and wee not be letted to yeelde him his due honour. Neuertheleſſe we muſt obey them quietly, ſo farre forth as wee may without hurt of conſcience. And although that ſuch as haue authoritie ouer vs diſcharge not their duetie: yet muſt not children misbehaue themſelues when their parents are too ſharp and rigorous to them. True it is that the parentes are forbidden to vſe any crueltie towards their children, & ſpecialy to diſcorage them: but yet for all that though the parents bee not ſo well aduiſed as to gouerne their children with mildeneſſe: the children muſt beare it patiently. Finally wee muſt ſuffer at the handes of all ſuch as haue authoritie ouer vs. And ſo yee ſee what God ment to ſet out in this commaundement.

Esa. 45. 23. Phil. 2. 10.

Eph. 6. 4. Col. 3. 21.

Nowe hee addeth a promiſe. That thy dayes (ſaith hee) may bee prolonged, and that thou maiſt proſper in the Lande which the Lorde thy God giueth thee. But there is yet one thing more: which is, that foraſmuch as we be loth to yelde our ſelues to humilitie: God giueth vs here a ſtroke with the ſpurre, ſaying: thy God commaundeth thee. And it ſerueth to confirme the doctrine that I haue touched alredie: that is to wit, that it is but a fond & trifling ſhift, to diſpute whether ſuch as are in ſtate of honour aboue vs, doe deſerue to haue that roome: Or whether they do diſcharge their dutie, as well as they are aduanced therto. All ſuch geere muſt bee laide aſide. And why? For wee muſt holde vs contented with Gods ordinance, and reſt altogether vppon his good pleaſure. And that is ỹ cauſe why Moſes addeth here expreſly, according as the Euerlaſting thy God hath commaunded thee. As if he ſhoulde ſay, true it is that men doe alwayes kicke againſt it as much as they can. If one woulde bring them vnder awe, they will not abide it by their good will: Againe they haue ſuch loftineſſe in them, as prouoketh them continually to bee deſirous to exalt themſelues too much. By meanes whereof there will neuer be any willing ſubiection, vntill God haue wrought it. But you be alwayes rebellious againſt God (ſaith hee) when yee once enter into ſuch debatings as this: Shoulde ſuch a one raigne ouer mee, and I obey him, ſeeing hee is no better than I? If yee beare ſuch ſpite towardes men: God himſelfe ſtepeth forth, and deſireth to knowe whether yee will ſerue him or no: And if yee will not receiue his leeuetenantes when hee ſendeth them vnto you: it is a certaine ſigne that yee refuſe his yoke likewiſe, by meanes wherof his iuſtice is impeached, and hee feeleth himſelfe to bee iniuried by you.

Sith it is ſo then, knowe yee (ſaieth Moſes) that the children which are diſobedient to their fathers and mothers, may well alledge this and that: and the folke that rebell againſt their ſuperiors, may well make excuſes: but none of thoſe thinges ſhall ſtande them in any ſteede. The reaſon is, that God, who hath ordeined ſuperioritie in the worlde, will alſo haue it maintained: hee hath ſpoken the word, and it cannot be called backe. When God hath once giuen his definitiue ſentence, it is not for vs to call the matter in queſtion any more: but we muſt ſtand to it and holde our mouthes ſhut. Yet notwithſtanding, our Lorde vſeth ſtill his goodneſſe in this commaundement: and he doeth it to winne vs and to drawe vs the better to him, that wee might the willinglyer obey our ſuperiors, ſeeing he addeth a promiſe. For (as ſaieth S. Paul) it is the firſt commaundement of the lawe, that hath any ſpeciall promiſe. In deede wee haue ſeene heretofore, how God ſheweth mercie in a thouſand generations, to ſuch as loue him. And that was added to the commaundement wherein God ſhewed vs, that he woulde haue his ſeruice maintained in al pureneſſe, without ſwaruing aſide to idolatrie or ſuperſtition. But that promiſe extended to the whole Lawe, as wee ſawe there: whereas this is annexed onely to the commandement of obeying our fathers and mothers. For as much then as wee ſee it is an acceptable ſacrifice to God: let ſuch as are in ſubiection holde themſelues to it, and not play the rebels and madde bedlems, but bowe downe their neckes and ſubmit themſelues, ſo as it may appeare in deede that they bee willing to obey GOD, becauſe they refuſe not to obey the mortall men whom he hath ſent, and appointed in his name.

Eph. 6.2.

Thus yee ſee to what purpoſe this promiſe was giuen: namely, that God perceiuing vs to bee dull vppon the ſpurre, ment to ſoften our hearts, and to winne vs to him by mildneſſe and gentleneſſe, to the intent it ſhould not grieue vs nor be yrkeſome to vs to obey our ſuperiors. But foraſmuch as all cannot bee diſpatched at this preſent: Let vs beare in minde at a worde, that to ſerue God wel, we muſt lay down al pride and preſumptuouſnes. Although we haue naturally in vs the curſed roote of deſirouſnes to climbe, ſo as ambition reigneth both in great and ſmal: yet muſt the ſame bee laide downe, if we meane to prepare our ſelues to Gods ſeruice. And why? For lowlineſſe is the thing whereat the true obedience muſt beginne. And as concerning men, let vs marke well that we ſhal neuer bee able to liue in peace and concorde, except that thoſe whom God hath ſet in place of authoritie and preheminence, bee obeyed and receiued for his ſake, ſo as men ſubmit themſelues to them. For elſe all muſt needes goe to wrecke, and wee ſhalbee worſe than the wilde beaſtes that are abroade in the woods. Therefore al they ỹ are diſobedient to lawful ſuperioritie, are as enemies to God and nature, and to all mankind: yea they be as monſters whom al men ought to abhorre.

But when wee haue ſhewed our obedientnes by being ſubiect to thoſe whom God hath ſet ouer vs: let vs learne alſo, that it is good reaſon wee ſhoulde be humbled vnder him, and that in ſuch wiſe, as hee bee ſerued by vs: not in way of ceremonie, but in trueth and pureneſſe of minde, ſo as wee doe him his due homage, and make account of his honor aboue al things. Yea and all the ciuill orders of the worlde muſt leade vs therevnto: namely that God may haue his throne exalted aboue the heauens. And whereas children obey their fathers and mothers, and ſubiectes their Magiſtrates, and the like order is to bee ſeene in euerie houſe according to Gods ordinance, who hath appointed that there ſhoulde be ſome difference of degrees euerie where: Let the ſame drawe vs vp higher, to conſider that God who holdeth the chiefe ſoueraintie of the worlde, ought to ouerrule all creatures, and to be Maſter of our whole life in effect. And ſo wee ſee that all the obedience which is yeelded to mortall creatures muſt tend to the pure worſhipping of God. Whereby we perceiue the more plainly howe much we ought to abhorre the curſed Popedome. For it is an ouerſtatelineſſe crept vp in the worlde, to none other end than to driue God out of his ſeate, & to bereaue him of the honor ỹ belongeth to him. For the Pope will graunt well ynough that hee ought to bee ſubiect to his Superiors: But what thoe? Keepeth hee any order either of God or of nature? No: but cõtrariwiſe his meaning is to deſpiſe al that is cõteined in the holy Scripture, ouerthrowing all the order and policie that God hath commaunded vs. Hee termeth himſelfe Chriſts Vicar: and yet notwithſtanding the worlde ſeeth, that hee hath thruſt Ieſus Chriſt out of his ſeate, ſo as hee is no more the heade of his Church. Therefore let vs learne to abhorre the thing, which the diuell hath ſo ſet vp on the contrarie part, quite and cleane againſt that which God hath ordeined in the worlde. And therewithall though wee ſee that ſometimes thinges goe not as they ought to do, but that ſuperiors abuſe their power: let vs aſſure our ſelues they cannot ouerthrowe Gods ordinance as in reſpect of kingdomes and Empyres, and as in reſpect of the grounde of Iuſtice: but that all thoſe things muſt be mainteined ſtill. For they haue their foundation of God: and it is not with them as with this helliſh Popedome which hath no foundation at all: but contrariwiſe wee knowe that God will haue kinges and princes and magiſtrates of Iuſtice to continue ſtill: and therfore thoſe muſt needes bee maintained. And if the fathers doe not their duetie, but vſe tyrannie towardes their children: let vs bee ſorie for it, and aſſure our ſelues that the ſame ſpringeth of our ſinnes. Alſo when God ſuffereth his ordinance to bee vnobſerued, ſo as all is out of order: let vs vnderſtande that wee ought to runne vnto him the more carefully, and to beſeech him to ſet thoſe things in order againe, ſo as it may bee knowen that our whole deſire is to be gouerned by him, as the onely meane whereby hee worketh our welfare.

Nowe let vs kneele downe in the preſence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faults, praying him to vouchſafe tomake vs feele them better, that wee may with true repentance learn to miſlike of our ſelues for them, and ſo returne vnto him as we may profite more & more, euen vntill we be rid of al our ſinnes & throughly faſhioned againe like to him in righteouſnes. And ſo let vs all ſay, Almightie God heauenly father, &c.

On Munday the firſt of Iuly. 1555.

17 Thou ſhalt not be a murtherer.

WE haue ſeene alreadie, howe that to liue well with men, wee muſt obey our ſuperiors. For it is the firſt thing that God commaundeth vs in the ſecond table of his lawe: becauſe the meane in deſcending from him to men, is to honour thoſe whom he hath ſet ouer vs. In deede when wee ſpeake of men, there is ſome equall fellowſhip: for wee come all of Adams race: we be all of one kinde: and all this importeth an equalitie among men. Neuertheleſſe foraſmuch as it hath pleaſed God to ſet certaine degrees: wee muſt holde vs thereunto, and keepe that order, ſo as the partie which hath any preheminence and dignitie, may bee acknowledged for ſuch a one as is to bee honoured. And in this caſe we muſt not alledge, why is he more eſteemed than I? For that commeth not of any worthines that is in one more than in another: but of Gods will, who will haue them ſo honoured to whom hee hath giuen any preheminence. And it is not ynough for ỹ children to honor their parents by yeelding them ſome reuerence: but they muſt alſo ſuccour them, and ſpende themſelues to the vttermoſt for them, accordingly as our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt ſheweth howe it is but hypocriſie, when children doe but make ſome countenance of honoring their fathers and mothers, and in the meane while let them alone in their neceſſitie, without regarde of diſcharging their duetie towardes them at their neede. It is a defrauding of the parentes of that which is due to them, and a ſcorning of Gods Lawe, when men obſerue it ſo by way of Ceremonie. In like caſe is it with all manner of ſubiection. For it is not ment that men ſhoulde but onely yeelde ſome ſigne of honour: but that they ſhould yeeld the partie his full right, which hath any preheminence, yea and that the ſame ſhoulde bee done willingly. True it is (as I haue declared heretofore) that men would faine be exempted from all bondage. Howebeit foraſmuch as God hath ſet a contrarie order: wee muſt ſubmit our ſelues to it with a good wil, and not by force. For to what purpoſe is it to obey God ſpite of our teeth, when our heart goeth cleane againſt? The muſt our will goe with it, and whatſoeuer our Lord commaundeth vs wee muſt thinke it good and amiable. Thus the entrance into good conuerſation among men, is to conſider that our fathers and mothers and all our ſuperiors are aduanced to that preheminence aboue others, to the intent they ſhoulde be honored: Otherwiſe, God is miſuſed in their perſons, and it is all one as if we refuſed to honour him and to be ſubiect to him.

Nowe after that Moſes hath ſet downe this fift commaundement: he addeth, That wee muſt not be murtherers. In deede it may ſeeme at the firſt bluſh, that God ledde not his people to great perfection in forbidding them to commit murther. But wee muſt marke, that God intended to compriſe (as it were in a ſhort abridgment) all that is requiſite for the well ruling of this our life: and therefore it was not for him to forget any thing, or to leaue any thing behinde. Nowe wee muſt vnderſtande that the way for men to rule their liues well & orderly, is to abſtaine from al euil doing, iniury, & violence, and therwithall to liue chaſtly and honeſtly with out hurting or hindering of any man, and on the other

other ſide, to keepe their tongues from harming any man by any manner of falſhood and lying. All theſe good properties muſt be in vs, if wee wil frame our ſelues to Gods will and righteouſneſſe. So then, it is not to bee marueiled at, that God ſhoulde ſpeake here of murthers. For it is done to holde vs in awe, that we ſhoulde not goe about to doe any outrage or harme to our neighbours. But yet for all this, we muſt come backe againe to that which I haue touched alreadie: that is to wit, that God ſpeaketh after a rude and groſſe faſhion, to apply himſelfe both to great and ſmall, and euen to the very ydiots. For wee ſee howe euery man excuſeth himſelfe by ignorance: and if a thing bee ſomewhat darke and hard, we thinke we haue wherewith to waſh our handes of the matter. When wee haue done amiſſe, [wee thinke all is ſafe,] if wee can ſay, Oh, it was too high and too profounde for mee, I vnderſtoode neuer a whit of it. To the end therfore that men ſhould haue no ſuch ſtartingholes: Gods will was to ſpeake after ſuch a faſhion, as euen little babes might vnderſtande what hee ſaide. That is the cauſe why he ſaith in ſhort wordes, Thou ſhalt not bee a murtherer.

Let vs marke moreouer, that God, to the intent to leade vs by little and little to liue well, ſetteth vs downe the thinges that are moſt hatefull that we might learn to keepe our ſelues from euill doing. As for example, hee coulde haue ſaide, yee ſhall doe no wrong nor violence to your neighbours: hee could well haue ſaide ſo: but he liſted to ſet downe the word Murther. And why? Becauſe it is a thing againſt nature, when men goe about to wipe out Gods image after ỹ faſhion. Needes then muſt we abhorre murther, if we be not ſtarke beaſtes. Howe be it, this teacheth vs that there is not a more heinous thing, nor a thing that wee ought to abhorre more, than murther. GOD therefore to tye vs the ſhorter and to withhold vs from all anoying, and from all wrong dealing, telleth vs that wee muſte not defile our handes with the bloude of our neighbours. Well then: If a man abſtaine from murther, is that all? No not by a great deale, as ſhall bee ſhewed anon, and as the matter aſordeth alreadie at the firſt enterance into it. For Gods intent is to holde both our heartes and our thoughtes in ſubiection, and he will be ſerued ſo purely at our hands, as we nouriſh not any ill will towards our neighbours. Why then ſpeaketh he of murther? [It is all one] as if hee ſhould ſay, although ye had no lawe written, but were as heathen men: yet ought yee to haue this printed in your heartes, that murther is a ſhamefull and owgly thing. Nowe I tell you, that as many as doe any outrage to their neighbours, as manie as deuiſe any miſchiefe againſt them, and as many as nouriſh any hatred and rancour in their heartes: I account and condemne them all for murtherers. Thus yee ſee the cauſe why GOD vſeth that terme.

1. Ioh. 3. 15.

And nowe let vs marke well, that it is not for nought that God forbiddeth murther. Why ſo? For wee can haue no fellowſhippe with men, vnleſſe we abſtaine from al wrong and violence. And vnder one particular kind, God forbiddeth all. Why ſo? for had hee vſed long ſpeech: a man might haue ſaide, I cannot well beare my leſſon in minde, and it is too hard for me. Therfore hath God ſpoken here in one worde, to the intent that his doctrine might be ſoone learned, and his lawe bee eaſily borne in rememberance. There needes no great turning ouer of leaues: wee need not to haue many great volumes and regiſters: God hath comprehended the rule of good life in tenne wordes, and that is ynough for vs. Who is hee nowe that can alledge, I haue forgotten ſuch an article, I haue not borne it away? Howe ſo? Are wee not able to remember ſo much as halfe a ſcore wordes? Nowe then wee ſee it was Gods will to holde men conuicted of ſhameleſneſſe, if they vnderſtande not what they ought to doe. And ſo yee ſee the cauſe why hee ſpake ſo briefely. Moreouer he hath (as yee woulde ſay) chawed the thinges to vs, that we might learne to ſubmit our ſelues quietly to him, and that euen the verieſt ydiots might knowe, that they neede not to bee greate clearkes to vnderſtande his Lawe, for aſmuch as hee hath ſtooped ſo lowe, that there is not ſo ignorant a poore ſoule, but hee vnderſtandeth what is conteined in the Lawe. That is the effect of the matter which wee haue to remember here.

Furthermore ſeeing God hath forbidden murther as an owgly and outragious thing: let vs aſſure our ſelues that hee which riſeth vp againſt his neighbour to murther him, is not worthy to liue vpon the earth: for he is worſe than a wood beaſte. Wee ſee howe Beares, Lyons, and other wilde beaſtes doe play together. And why is that? Becauſe that although they haue no reaſon nor diſcretion, although they haue no Lawe nor equitie: yet notwithſtanding the common knowledge [or inſtinct] of nature holdeth them in order. Yee ſee then that the verie beaſts haue skill to liue well together with the beaſtes of their owne kinde, without hurting one another. And ſhoulde not men bee reſtreined by ſome conſideration, ſeeing that God hath imprinted it in their hearts that murther is a wicked thing? They ſee they bee all of one nature, and euerie man beholdes the image of God in his neighbor. And ſhoulde not this ſerue them for a bridle, to withholde them from all violence? What a dealing were it elſe? So then, let vs beare well in minde, that although God had neuer ſpoken to vs, yet haue wee ſufficient proofe in our ſelues alreadie, that if any man ſet himſelfe againſt his neighbour, hee defieth nature, and is vnworthy to be reckened in ỹ aray of men. But nowe ſeeing that the authoritie of God is matched with the knowledge which wee ought to haue had aforehande, and that hee ſheweth vs that there ſhall no bloude of man bee ſhed, but the ſame ſhall come to account before him: let the hearing thereof teach vs to liue without doing any man wrong, or els let vs aſſure our ſelues he will become our mortall enemie: for hee telleth vs that men are in his protection.

In deede the threate is not expreſſed heere: but yet is it all one, for as much as it is ſpoken of in other places. Seeing it is ſaid that man is Gen.9.6. created after the image of God: it is not lawfull to make any aſſault vppon him. For it were all one as if our Lorde ſhoulde ſay, yee bidde mee battell when yee goe about to hurt one another after that faſhion: for I haue printed mine image in you. If a man ſhoulde but deface the armes of a Prince, it were ſo great an iniurie as ſhould bee puniſhed as a murther. And why? Becauſe it tendeth to the confuſion of the ſtate. Beholde, Gods image is printed in men, and it is deſpiſed: and ſhoulde not ſuch an outrage be puniſhed dubble? Yes. Now then let vs mark, that God in telling vs that we aſſault him when we do any man wrong, intendeth to ſhew vs that that ought to reſtraine vs, or elſe we be too witleſſe and madde. Yea and to the intent wee ſhould the better bethinke vs thereof: our Lord telleth vs that a murther cannot bee committed, but the lande is defiled with it, as is declared in another texte, where it is ſaide that the Num.35.33 ſhedding of mans bloude bringeth ſuch a ſtayning and defiling with it, as can ſcarſly bee wyped out. When there is any ſpeaking of man-
1.Chro.22.8 ſlaughter, yea though it bee done lawfully, as in warre, which is allowed: yet is it ſaide to bee a defiling. And why? To the intent that wee ſhoulde learne to abhorre the ſhedding of bloud the more. If an enemie bee ſlaine in open warre, although GOD pardon it becauſe the ſlaier hath iuſt and lawfull cauſe, and doeth it of neceſſitie: yet notwithſtanding it is ſaide ſtill to bee a ſtaine, and the doer thereof is ſaide to bee defiled. And why is that? To the intent wee ſhoulde knowe that God hath created vs to liue quietly together, and that wee cannot giue a fillippe (as they ſay), but that it is ſtreitwayes a ſpotte vpon vs, and wee be by and by defiled before God. Seeing then that the holy ſcripture vſeth all theſe formes of ſpeech, ought we not to be held the better in awe, to liue without doing of any wrong to our neighbours? Yes.

Howebeit foraſmuch as God doeth ſo chawe thinges to vs heere, according to our raweneſſe and infirmitie: let vs marke further, that it is not ynough for vs to abſtaine from bloudſhed: but that wee muſt alſo abſtaine from all outrage and violence. To bee ſhort, mens perſons muſt bee deare and precious vnto vs. For till we bee come to that point: God will take vs ſtill for murtherers. If a man doe but ſtrike his neighbour, although hee kill him not: yet is he a murtherer alreadie in Gods ſight. And why? I haue tolde you alreadie howe GOD vſed that worde of ſet purpoſe to ſhewe vs that although wee take a quarrelling or the giuing of a blowe ouerthwartly, to bee ſmall and light faultes: yet they bee not ſo before God. And why? Becauſe there is alway a murtherous intent in it. And that is ỹ cauſe why God calleth it murther. And beſides that, if we beforbidden to commit murther, let vs vnderſtande that wee bee likewiſe forbidden to doe any wrong, or to make any aſſault vppon our neighbours. If wee doe but lift vp our fiſt againſt one, or touch him in anger: by and by there is murther committed before God. If wee thought well on this: woulde we not be mielder than we be? Wee ſee ſome men ſo teſtie, that if a word doe but miſlike them, by and by their fiſt is vp, to ſmite and beate the partie. For they thinke it is a ſmall matter, ſo they ſhedde no bloude. But wee muſt not make God to eate his worde, in that he telleth vs that all quarellers are murtherers. So then let vs learne to forbeare our owne fancies when we intend to iudge of our faults, and let vs quietly imbrace the ſentence that god hath giuen, aſſuring our ſelues that all ſuch as offer any violence to their neighbours, are alreadie guiltie of murther before God. That is the thing in effect which we haue to remember here.

But haue wee abſtained from all anoyance? Haue we done no outrage to the perſons of our neighbors? Then muſt we go euen to the heart. For God hath not giuen a ciuill Lawe, onely to make vs liue honeſtly: but he hath giuen a Lawe agreeable to his owne nature. We knowe he is a ſpirit, and he will haue vs to ſerue him in ſpirite Iohn 4.24 and trueth. Seeing it is ſo, we muſt vnderſtand ỹ he hath giuen vs a rule, not only for our hands and feete, but alſo for our affections & thoughts. True it is, that inaſmuch as men are fleſhly, when gods lawe is firſt vttered vnto them, they thinke they haue well diſcharged themſelues, if they cannot be blamed before the world: and ſo on ỹ otherſide they doe eaſily grant & take leaue to do euill. And for the ſame cauſe, euen ỹ Iewes themſelues, who ought to haue bin grounded in ỹ lawe of God from their childhood, tooke this ſaying too groſly, Thou ſhalt not kill. For they vnderſtood it, ỹ they offẽded not god, ſo they made no open aſſault vpon their neighbour to wound him. And therfore if the fault were not apparant to the eye: they bare themſelues in hand ỹ they ought not to bee charged with it before God.
Mat.5.21.22 Which thing our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt rebuketh, ſhewing that the law was too fõdly expounded. Becauſe it is ſaid Thou ſhalt not kill, you beare your ſelues in hand (ſaith he) that yee ſhalbe quit before God, if men cannot bring yee to the bar for it. But whoſoeuer calleth his neighbor foole, ỹ is to ſay, whoſoeuer doth but ſhew ſom tokẽ of diſpleaſure againſt him, is forthwith worthy of helfire. Whoſoeuer doth another man wrong: is in danger of iudgement from heauen, ỹ God and al his Angels ſhal ſet themſelues againſt him. And whoſoeuer doth but murmure againſt his neighbour, ſo as he doth but mũble ſomwhat betwixt the teeth though he vtter nothing at all: he is already in danger of iudgement. Wee ſee whereto our Lord Ieſus ſendeth vs: namely that when we may proteſt that we haue not done any outrage, nor giuen any blow, and ỹ we haue ſo litle ment to wounde our neighbour, that wee haue not ſo much as once drawen our ſworde at him: yet is not al this ynough, but wee muſt conſider that God wilouer rule both our tõgues, our thoughts and all our affections, as good reaſon is hee ſhoulde. Sith it is ſo: whoſoeuer miſuſeth his his neighbour [in ſpeeche,] ſheweth himſelfe alreadie to bee a murtherer: for the tongue cutteth as a ſworde. Although then that yee haue not your ſworde in your fiſt to ſtrike: yet if your tongue bee armed to ſpeake euill of your neighbour, ſo as yee haue railed vppon him: it is a kinde of murther, as in reſpect of God. And although yee haue not ſo miſuſed him as all the worlde may bee priuie to it: yet thinke not that ye ſhall therefore goe cleare. For if ye doe but mumble betwixt the teeth: it is ynough to make yee guiltie in the ſight of GOD, and yee ſhall be condemned before the heauenly throne, though ye bee quit before men, and though worldly iuſtice take no holde of you. When wee heare this: we may well perceiue, that he which ſpeaketh it is the ſame perſon whom God the father hath giuen to bee the iudge of the world. Therfore wee muſt not giue our ſelues too large ſcope in this behalfe. For wee ſhall win nothing by our cauceling and ſhifting. But let vs learne to looke at God, if wee will haue the right and naturall expoſition of the Lawe. Who is he that ſpeaketh? Euen hee that raigneth ouer our heartes and thoughtes: euen hee that can not abide to bee ſerued with eyeſeruice, nor that wee ſhould abſtaine from euill onely to the worldward, but which will be ſerued in ſpirit and trueth. He will haue our conſciences to be pure & cleane, ſo as wee bee cleanſed from all naughtineſſe. Seeing it is ſo: if wee conſider the nature of GOD, wee muſt no more reſtraine his Lawe to the outward deedes: but wee muſt conclude that when God ſpeaketh of murther, he ſpeaketh likewiſe of all enmitie, diſpleaſure, anger, and rancor that we haue againſt our neighbours. And in deede that is the verie cauſe why S. Iohn ſayeth, that he which hateth his neighbour in his heart is a murtherer. As if hee ſhould ſay, yee maye well ſet a fayre countenaunce vppon the matter: but bee the hatred neuer ſo ſecretly hidden in your hearte, and although yee diſſemble neuer ſo much, ſo as ye vtter no ſigne of any malice: yet thinke not that Gods eyes are ſhut for all that. Men may well bee ignoraunt of the thing that yee haue not bewrayed: but haue yee once hated your neighbours in your hearts, that is to ſay ſo ſecretly as no man may perceiue it: by and by ye bee murtherers before God. And truely the reaſon hereof is too too apparant. In deed when Princes and Magiſtrates make lawes, it is not after the maner of God. It is but onely to the end that men ſhoulde behaue themſelues well as touching outward ciuill order, ſo as no man bee miſuſed, but euerie man haue his right, & peace and concord bee maintained among men. That is the intent of Magiſtrates in making of their lawes. And why? For they bee mortall men, and cannot reforme the inward & hidden affections. That belongeth to God. Againe they cannot ſearch mens hearts, for ỹ is Gods peculiar office, and ſo doeth the holy ſcripture attribute it vnto him. Neuertheleſſe, when a ciuill lawe is once made: although there be not one drop of bloud ſhed: yet is the offender worthie to bee caried to the gallowes, if he be knowen to haue done what he could to haue murthered one. If one draw his ſword vpon a man, who notwithſtanding doth ſo ward his blowes as they neuer touche any bare of him: the Lawes euen of the heathen doe neuertheleſſe condemne ſuch a one to the gibbet as he is worthie. For why? The Lawe reſpecteth not the ſucceſſe, but the purpoſe and intent. Nowe ſeeing it is ſo that earthly Princes and Magiſtrates doe puniſh ſuch as haue indeuoured themſelues to doe amiſſe, though they haue bene diſappointed of their purpoſe, and not brought their attempt to paſſe: what ſhall God doe? Shall he haue leſſe authoritie than a mortall creature? To that point (ſay I) muſt wee come, to knowe that GOD doeth iuſtly condemne all ſuch for murtherers, as hate their neighbours. Why ſo? As I ſaid afore, let vs conſider what his nature is. Will wee then kecpe his commaundement? Wee muſt in effect begin at murthering: And why? For God meant to ſtrike a feare into vs aforehande, to the intent that whenſoeuer wee went about to hurt our neyghbours, or to doe any extorſion or wrong: wee might vnderſtand that it is a deteſtable and horrible thing vnto them, and ſuch a one as hee cannot abide. Why ſo? Bicauſe it is a kinde of murthering. Ye ſee then howe God meant to daunt vs at the firſt blowe: and that is the end that we muſt begin at.

Moreouer if we thinke it ſtraunge that God ſhould condemne a blowe to be murther, yea or a wrong offered but in wordes, yea and euen a frowne though the tongue haue bewrayed nothing at all, yea and euen the ſecret and vneſpied hartburning that is deeply ouercouered with in: I ſay if we thinke it ſtraunge that theſe things ſhould bee condemned for murther before God: let vs conſider what his nature is, and howe he is worthie that wee ſhould allow more to him than to mortall men. For if earthly Iudges haue power to puniſh a wicked intent when it bewrayeth it ſelfe: what ſhall GOD haue, from whom nothing is hidden? Againe wee muſt conſider howe the Apoſtle in the Epiſtle to the Hebrewes ſayeth, that the word of God reſembleth him that is the author therof, ſo as it muſt needs be as a two edged ſword, pearcing in ſuch wiſe to the verie marie of the bones, that there is not a thought within vs, which it eſpieth not out. And why is that? Bicauſe nothing is hid in the preſence of GOD. Nowe ſeeing that nothing is hidden before God: his woorde muſt needes ſearche and ſifte mennes heartes to the harde bottome. So then, the things that are vnknowen to men, muſt needes come all to account before God: whereby wee muſt take warning to liue in ſuch ſort, as wee beare no enmitie nor ill will to our neighbours.

But yet notwithſtanding we muſt go yet further. For it is not ynough for men to abſtaine frõ euill dooing: but foraſmuch as they bee created to helpe one another, they muſt ſeeke one anothers maintenance. God thẽ in forbidding vs to murther, ſheweth vs on the contrarie part ỹ wee muſt ſet ſtore by our neighbors liues, & indeuour to maintaine & preſerue them to ỹ vttermoſt of our power. But it was his will to begin at that end, to shewe vs what he commanded. And why? For we see howe sinfull we bee. Looke how many thoughts wee haue, and so many briers and thornes wee haue. Looke howe many affections wee haue: and so many bushes, brambles, and such other things wee haue. Not without cause therefore intended God to weede out ỹ naughtinesse and vice out of our heartes, yea and to amend all the partes in vs that are sinfull and corrupted. For without that, it were vnpossible to set so much as one finger to the dooing of any good, that wee should but so much as thinke one good thought. That is the cause why ỹ Prophet Ier.4.4 saith that men breake vp their layes & sowe not among bushes. As if he should say, I see how the world goeth w̃ you: if a man tell ye ỹ ye haue offended God, ye wil make some faire coũtenãce, & pretend as though ye were reformed, & yet in the meane while continue still the same ye were before. But it is not ynough to sowe corne in a field: but ye must also stub vp the bushes & clense the ground. So long as ye doe but indeuour to make some faire showe: thornes, briers, thistles, and other euill weedes growe still within. Therfore there can bee no good sowing, & much lesse can ye bring forth good fruite before God. And for the same cause doth our Lord say here, Thou shalt not kill, in stead of saying, Looke that thou preserue thy neighbors life. Now we see by experience howe men would faine discharge themselues to Godward w̃ faire countenances, and yet retaine still their vices and corruptions, according to ỹ which I haue alledged out of the Prophet. For if a man speake to vs of doing good to our neighbours: in deede we dare not altogither gainesay him. So then wee would discharge our selues after a sort. But in the meane season our sores doe rancle within, & we doe but plaster them aboue, like vnto those that are loth to open their purses whẽ their houses decay: but what do they? They parget them ouer, & stop the holes and rifts, but yet in the meane while their house is still in decay. Euen so is it with vs: wee doe but parget or plaster our selues ouer, of purpose to discharge our selues as lightly as might bee. But yet doeth nature teach vs the cleane contrarie. For if a mã be minded to sowe a field, will he cast his corne among the briers and thornes? No: but when he sees his field faire and cleane, then breakes he it vp & tilsit: and so must we do. Let vs learne then that it is not without cause that God doeth first of all condemne the vices. For hee sees they bee rooted so deepely in our nature: that it is hard to weede them out, yea and that he can neuer hold vs at such a stay, as to cause vs to liue in his righteousnesse, vnlesse he plucke vp the cursed rootes of this naughtinesse which he knoweth to be in vs. That is the cause why he saieth, thou shalt not kill. As if he shoulde say, will ye liue in good loue one with another? Euerie man must enter into himself, and examine wel whether he haue there any hatred, enmity, or ill wil towards his neighbours. Ye must looke whether ye haue not some harti sings & eagernesse in you, which prouoketh you to threaten your neighbors or to attempt somewhat against them. Ye must consider all these things. For when ye be cleare from all anger, hatred, and enmitie: then must yee come to this point, that it is not ynough for you to abstaine frõ anoyance, wrongfulnesse, & violence, so as yee haue not practised any thing against ỹ persons of your neighbors, nor norished any rancor or malice against thẽ in your hearts, nor bin infected with euill will: but you must also liue in charitie, and ye must bee as brethren one to another, worshipping God as your father. Lo to what point we must come.

So then let vs marke, that if we intend to profit well in Gods Law, we must haue an eye to the vices and imperfections that are in vs, and bee sorie for them: and moreouer straine our selues to weed them out. Haue we done so? that is not all that wee haue to doe. For God will not haue vs idle in this worlde. His creating of vs, is not onely to abstaine from euill: (for stones and trees and other senseleesse things doe as much as that comes to:) but wee must giue and applye our selues to the doing of good. Then let vs vnder- Psal.34.15. stand, that whereas our Lord will haue the life of our neighbours to bee deare and precions to vs: he sheweth therewithall ỹ he which helpeth not his neighbor at his neede, doeth what he can to murther him: in so much ỹ we become murtherers, not onely whẽ we beare any ill will, or keepe any hatred priuily towards our neighbours: but also euen whẽ wee succour them not in their necessitie. If we vouchsafe not to bestow our trauel for them when they haue neede of our helpe, we shall be blamed before God. Sith it is so, it is not for vs to flatter our selues any more in this case: for wee see howe straite the Law is: and yet not straiter than it ought to bee. For can wee refuse to bee knit togither in charitie at Gods commandement, seeing he hath created vs after his owne image? Or to yeelde him such reuerence being our father, as to maintaine brotherhood among our selues, seeing he hath vouchsafed to vnite vs in such bond? Shall wee say that God is too straite to vs, and layeth too heauie a burthẽ vpon vs, bicause he leadeth vs to such indifferẽcie & vprightnes? No: but howsoeuer come of it, let vs beware we flatter not our selues, seeing we vnderstand ỹ our Lord will haue vs to do our indeuour in helping one another, and that wee should set as much store by the life of our neighbour, as he himselfe doeth.

Nowe haue we the effect of this commandement, Of not killing. What remaineth then, but ỹ we pray God so to guide vs, as wee may frame our selues to his will? For it is to no purpose to alledge that his speeche is darke: Or to alledge that there be so many commandements, as wee cannot beare them in rememberance: (for God speaketh in a worde or twaine, and vseth briefenesse to take away all excuse.) Or to alledge that wee wote not whereat to begin: for he sheweth vs it: namely that in stead of taking leaue to doe euill as wee haue bin wont to doe, bearing our selues in hand that the thing which we doe is no great nor no deadly crime: wee must contrariwise thinke alwayes thus, if I doe my neighbour

the leaſt harme that is poſſible to bee named, I am a murtherer before God. When wee bee willing to doe euill, ſee howe the diuell blindeth vs, to bee deſirous at the firſt daſh to kill one and to cut his throte. This (as I ſayd) is an ougly thing. For euen nature reſtrayneth vs, that wee can not bee ſo madde as to ſay, I will kill. But if a man diſpleaſe vs, and we bee no more but angry with him: all is well, it paſſeth away as a ſmoke, and to our owne ſeeming, it is nothing. Againe, haue wee once conceyued any grudge, wee thinke it is to bee pardoned if wee requite like for like, ſo wee doe it not with ouergreat violence. Moreouer if a man doe but bend his fiſte to ſtrike or to beate: tuſh, it is ſtill but a blowe, it is no deadly offence. Loe howe men diſpence with themſelues. And why? Bicauſe all their imagining is howe to leſſen their faultes. But wee muſt keepe a contrarie way to this, as GOD telleth vs: namely that when wee goe aboute to ſtrike and to beate, or when we goe about to doe wrong, or when wee go about to conceiue any hatred or hearteburning: wee muſt ſet murther before our faces, and thinke thus with our ſelues: Wretched creature, whither goeſt thou? whither throweſt thou thy ſelfe? Wilt thou make thy ſelf guiltie of murther before God? So thē let vs no more alledge that wee wote not whereat to begin: for God ſheweth it vs, and we cānot be ignorant of any thing but through our owne wilfulneſſe: & therefore in the end it muſt needes be knowen, ỹ we liſted not to liſt vp our eyes, to ſee the things which we ought to haue ſeene moſt manifeſtly. Thoſe are the things which wee haue to gather vpon this place.

Againe, there is this further, that God hath not without cauſe forbidden murther before he come to command charitie, & to ſhewe vs howe we be bound to ſuccour one another, according as neede requireth. And why? For we be full of euill affections which had neede to be rooted out. Therfore like as a peece of ground that is ful of thornes & briers, had needs to be clenſed before it be ſowed: ſo haue we neede to be clenſed from the vices that are naturally in vs, or elſe we ſhall neuer bee diſpoſed to liue in good loue one towards another. But yet muſt euery man haue an eye to his owne abilitie. If I haue wherewith to helpe my neighbors: I muſt be fully reſolued w̄ my ſelf, ỹ the things which God hath giuen mee are not mine own, ỹ is to ſay, that I muſt not loue my ſelf ſo much, as to haue no regard of others: but if I be of abilitie to ſuccour other folkes that haue want of my reliefe, I muſt beſtowe it vppon them. For there is a commō fellowſhip amōg all men. It was not Gods wil to make ſo many ſeuerall worldes, euery one by it ſelf as there be ſeueral mē & women; but he hath knit vs al togither. Seeing then ỹ God hath brought vs one neere another: we muſt keepe & maintaine ỹ fellowſhip that God hath ſet among vs, & we muſt alwayes come to this point, that it is againſt kind to hate our owne fleſh. But yet there is a farre other reſpect than this among ỹ faithfull. For they muſt not only cōſider themſelues to be created after the image of God: but alſo remember ỹ they be members of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, ſo as there is a much ſtraiter & holier bond, than the bond of nature which is common to all mankinde. And therfore ſo much the more ought we to miſlike of thoſe, which do ſo forget the vnion that God hath ſet among his people, ſeeking nothing elſe but to put the thinges aſunder which God hath ioyned togither, by diſſeuering the body of his Church, as we ſee theſe vnderlings of Satan do, who practiſe nothing but all maner of miſchief, as though they were wilfully bent to defie God bicauſe he bindeth them to men, & therfore doe ſeparate themſelues frō ſuch as are not for their profit (as it ſeemes to thē,) nor yet for their fantie. Now when ſo brutiſh a diſpoſition & ſo far out of ſquare is entred into a mans mind, is it not a token that the diuell dwelleth in him, and that ỹ ſpirit of God raigneth not there, no nor any drop of him is there? Yes: and therefore let vs learne to frame our ſelues in ſuch wiſe to that which is ſpoken here, that being rid of all rancour and malice, wee determine to imploy our ſelues in the ſeruice of our neighbours, & to diſcharge our duetie according to the abilitie that God giueth vs. Again, if wicked affections, (notwithſtanding that they bee hidden) bee taken for murther before GOD: what ſhall violence & outrage be, when men ouerſhoote themſelues ſo farre, as to ſtrike & ſlea one another as much as they can? Muſt it not needes bee that they be worſe than all the Paynims in the world? Yes: but whatſoeuer come of it, let vs aſſure our ſelues that wee haue ill profited in Gods ſchole, if wee onely keepe our handes from dooing euill, and in the meane while leaue our heartes vnreformed. Nowe then, to ſhew which is the true perfection of Chriſtians, they muſt not only refraine from bearing any priuie euill will in their heartes: but they muſt alſo be as true brothers, to ſpend themſelues in their neighbours behalfe to the vttermoſt of their power. And if it bee not lawfull to nouriſh any ſecret ill will: much leſſe is it lawfull for a man to ouerſhoote himſelfe ſo farre, as to ſmite, to kill, and to doe outrage: and they that doe ſo, are worſe than wild beaſtes. Yea and if that that diſpoſition was condemned euen among the heathen, & by the lawes of men: much more ſhall it be condemned by the Lawe of God. And therefore let vs learne to ſubmit our ſelues to him, not after our owne imagination, but according to his owne nature. But foraſmuch as he is a ſpirit, he will haue vs to ſerue him with ſuch ſoundneſſe, that beſides the reſtrayning of our feete and handes, our heartes alſo muſt be ſubmitted vnto him, and that with ſuch ſubiection and obedience, as our whole indeuour be to ſhew by our deedes, that we be his true children, in as much as we maintaine brotherlineſſe with all thoſe whom he hath called to the ſame alyance with vs.

* Nowe let vs kneele down in ỹ preſence of our good God, with acknowledgment of our faults, praying him to make vs feele them better, and that wee conſidering howe hee hath bounde vs to our neighbours, and will haue vs to ſhewe the reuerence ỹ that wee beare towardes him by abſtaining ſtaining from all euill & wrongfull dealing: may liue in ſuch brotherly loue one with another, as the chiefe marke that we ſhoote at, may bee to honour him as our father, and to ſuffer our ſelues to bee gouerned by him and by his holy ſpirit according to his word, ſo as we may bee ſtrengthened more and more in it, knowing that his reaching of his hand to vs, is to the end to guide vs and to hold vs vnder his protection. That it may pleaſe him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs but alſo to all people and Nations of the earth, &c.

On Tewſday the ij. of Iuly. 1555.

The xxxviij. Sermon, which is the ninth vpon the fifth Chapter.

18 Thou ſhalt not bee an Aduouterer.

SAint Paul ſpeaking of the life of Chriſtians, and hauing exhorted them to the feare of God, addeth ỹ they muſt walk vprightly and ſoberly. Now it is not to be doubted, but that the ſame is to be referred to the ſecond table of the law. Wil we then obſerue the things that our Lord hath commaunded vs in the ſecond table? It is not ynough for vs to hurt no mã either in his perſon or in his goods: but beſides this rightfulneſſe, it is required that we ſhould liue ſtayedly and honeſtly, as is declared in another place. And in the former text of the Epiſtle to Titus which I haue touched, hee ſaith that we were redeemed by the grace of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, to the intent we ſhould liue in the feare of God in this world, and alſo in ſoberneſſe and vprightneſſe. In another place to Timothie he ſaieth, that if there bee good gouernment, ſo as the Magiſtrates doe their duetie, we ſhall liue vprightly and honeſtly in godlineſſe. And as touching the feare of God, it is the ſame ſpirituall ſeruice that we haue ſpoken of before, which cõſiſteth of our pure worſhipping of him, by indeuouring to truſt in him, by calling vppon him, and by yeelding him his deſerued reuerence: and in reſpect of our neighbors, [it conſiſteth] of knowing howe wee ought to behaue our ſelues one towardes another. Theſe are the two pointes that he ſetteth downe heare. The firſt, which is vprightneſſe, is that wee offer no man any violence, extortion or deceite as in reſpect of his goods: and the other, which hee ſetteth downe by the name of honeſtie, ſobrietie, or ſtayedneſſe, is that there be no looſeneſſe, wantonneſſe, leawdeneſſe, or vnrulineſſe in our lyfe. Wee haue ſeene that in expounding the commaundement where GOD forbadde to kill, I told you how he meant that we ſhould abſtaine from all outrage and iniurie: and not onely that: but alſo that wee ſhoulde indeuour to liue quietly with our neighbours, and not ſuffer any man to be troubled. And is it ſo? When wee come to treating of goods, it ſhall bee declared that wee muſt not play the theeues, nor beare falſe witneſſe againſt our neighbours: which things pertaine to Iuſtice or vprightneſſe. Nowe if wee will yeelde euerie man his right: we ſhal doe no hurt nor wrong to any bodie: and as touching goods alſo, wee ſhall not attempt to rob any of their ſubſtance.

Tit. 2. 13.

1. Tim. 2. 2.

But here God interlaceth a lawe that forbiddeth to commit adulterie: & that is comprehended vnder the terme of ſobrietie or ſtayednesſe. For although we ſteale awaye no mans goods, nor be murtherers and barreters: yet if wee bee vnchaſt, wanton, or of beaſtly conuerſation: we muſt not thinke that God is contented with vs. Vprightnes & Sobernes are things inſeparable: for God hath ioyned them togither in his lawe, and we ſee that he confirmeth it by his Apoſtle who largely expoundeth the thing ỹ is here touched in fewe words. And therfore if we wil haue the true meaning of this text: wee muſt vnderſtand that God commaundeth vs here to leade an honeſt and chaſt life, ſo as there be no diſhoneſtie nor looſeneſſe in vs. That is the effect of this commandement. True it is that here we be expreſly forbidden to commit Adulterie, that is to ſay, to breake the faith of mariage by intiſing other mens wiues to naughtineſſe. But let vs alſo weigh ỹ thing that I haue touched here: namely how that vnder one particular, God comprehendeth the whole, and ſetteth vs downe the thing that ought to miſlike vs euen of nature, to the end we ſhould abhorre all maner of whoredome the more. I told you yeſterday, that when men are tempted to doe euill, they beguile them ſelues, weening that the fault is but ſmall, and ſo from the leſſer they proceede to the greater. Contrariwiſe, to hold vs in awe, God ſetteth before vs the ſins that are heynouſeſt, to ỹ end we ſhould be ſtriken with feare aforehand, and not bee ledde ſo eaſily to commit any fault. As if he ſhould ſay, beware ye fall not: for it will make ye to breake your necke: beare not your ſelfe in hand that you ſhall but ſlide, for the fall will bee deadly: and therefore take heede of it. Thus ye ſee in effect why God proceeded in ſuch order in his law: & why he ſpeaketh not now generally of all whoredome, but of Adulterie, which is the breaking of Mariage. Nowe wee knowe that if any thing ought to bee taken for holye in the whole life of man: it is the fayth which the husbande plyghteth to his wife, and the wife to her husbande. In deede all the couenants and promiſes ỹ we make, ought to be kept faithfully.

Pſal. 15. 4.

But

Prou. 2. 17. God. For in so saying, Salomon sheweth that God is the Lorde of mariage, and therefore that if the husband breake the promise which hee hath made to his wife, hee is forsworne, not onely towardes her, but also towardes God. In lyke case is it on the womans behalfe. Shee doth wrong, not onely to her husband, but also to the liuing God. For it is he to whom she bindeth her selfe: & like as he hath ordeined wedlock and is the author thereof, so will hee haue a care for the maintaining therof. Therfore whē we heare the word Aduowtrie: we ought to lothe it, as an expresse defying of God, by wilfull breaking of the holy bond which he hath set in mariage, like mad beastes. And hereby we see in what estimation he hath honestie. Why so? When hee will haue vs sober, chaste, and modest: he sayth, If ye be not honest and well stayed, yee bee no better than Aduowterers. That is to say, whatsoeuer excuse ye pretend before men, and make ye your faults neuer so small and light: I hate ye, for yee stinke, & your whole life is infected in my sight. We see thē as I sayde afore, that here is a strait commaundement to keepe our selues honest & chaste. And hereby it appeareth how fond their excuse is, which say they do no man wrong, whē they be full of disorder and vnrulinesse. For our Lord knoweth well enough to what end he vsed such speach. It was not for ỹ he was toungtied & wist not how to vtter things in order: but because he intended to shew, that if men made but a smal matter of wantonnesse and vnchastitie: there is another balance [for thē to be tryed by:] namely that he condemneth & accurseth all those for aduouterers, which behaue thēselues vnhonestly or vnchastely. Therefore we haue so much the more neede to wey well ỹ words ỹ are set downe here, where he sayth Thou shalt not be an Aduowterer. But yet herewithall we must follow the degrees ỹ are conteined vnder this cōmandement.

First (as I sayd afore) let vs vnderstand ỹ God will haue wedlocke to be kept holy. For as our persons & liues are deere vnto him: so will hee haue ỹ faith and troth that is plighted betweene man & wife, to be mainteined in their price and estimation, that so holy a thing as mariage, be not giuen vp to shame & reproch. This ought to bring to passe, that no man should looke vpon his neighbors wife with vnchaste eye. And why? For God hath matched her to a husband already, &
Gen. 20. 16. he wil haue her husband to shadow her. And whē we thinke any euill, or feele any vnhoneste lust: he will haue vs to shun it for feare of that which is tolde vs, namely that God himselfe taketh
Prou. 2. 17. vengeance of them that breake the holy fellowship which was knit in his name. In lyke case is it with women in respect of their husbandes: so as a wife may not yeelde to wicked lustes when she beholdeth a maryed man. Why so? For God hath assigned her, her make. If we wil not make warre against our maker, we must liue euery one in his own house, ẇ such match as he hath: & ỹ order must be mainteined ẇout breach, because god is ỹ author of it. That is one principal point.

But besides this, we must alwayes come back to the nature of God: & remember that he is not an earthly lawemaker, which forbiddeth but only the outward deede, and in the meane while letteth the lewd affections alone: for God will 1. Sam. 16. 7.
admit no eyeseruice, neither is he lyke to vs. Men are contented if they perceiue no fault: but God who searcheth mens heartes, respecteth the Ier. 5. 3.
trueth as it is sayd in Ieremie. Therefore hee in his lawe meant not to restreine our bodyes only: but also had a speciall regarde to our soules. So then let vs marke, that God not onely forbiddeth the act, so as wedlocke be not broken by any actuall deede: but also hee forbiddeth all wicked lustes and lykinges. And therefore doth our Lord Iesus Chist say, that he which looketh Matt. 5. 28.
vpon another mans wife with a wicked eye, is an Aduowter already before God. Though he cannot be blamed by the lawes of men, nor punished as an aduowterer: yet is hee condemned already before God, as hauing transgressed this commaundement. Therefore when we heare this word Aduowtrie, which is so greatly condēned: let vs learne, not onely to abstaine from all whoredome as touching the actuall deede, but also to keepe our thoughts and conceits chaste, so as we be vndefiled both of eye and heart. For
1. Cor. 7. 34. after that maner doth S. Paul define true chastitie, when he saith that such as are vnmaried ought to haue a care how to please GOD, by keeping themselues pure and cleane both in bodie and minde. He saith not that those continue chast which haue not defiled their bodies with whoredome: but which haue indeuored to keepe themselues vndefiled both in body and minde.

And when we haue thus considered how God curseth and abhorreth all aduowtries: wee must proceede further, and reache out and apply the same to all maner of whoredome. True it is that he which breaketh the faith of wedlocke committeth a dubble offence, and it is much more haynous as I haue sayd already. But yet must we alwayes come backe to this poynt, that Gods meaning is that men shal not only not commit any thing against mariage, but also that they shall not leade a beastely lyfe, so as whoredome may haue full scope, and vnmaryed folke runne loose to giue ouer themselues to lewdenesse with euery one whom they meete with, lyke brute beastes: but that we shoulde be pure and cleane both in body and minde. For it is sayd, that
1. Cor. 6. 19. not onely our soules, but also our bodies are the temples of the holy Ghost, as was declared euen now. And they be Saint Paules owne wordes, where he telleth the Corinthians that it was too too much to their reproche and shame, to suffer fornication and whoredome among them as they did. Knowe ye not (sayth he) that your bodyes are the temples of the holy Ghoste? Beholde, God hath done vs the honor to choose these wretched bodies of ours which not onely are fraile vessels but also rotten carcases and earth. GOD (I say) notwithstanding this, hath so inhonored them, as to vouchsafe to make them the temples of his holy spirit, that he may dwell there: & shall we goe welter them in all filthineſſe, and make hoggeſcotes or ſwines ſtyes of them? What a treacherie is that? Again,

1.Cor.6.15. that is not all. Let vs haue an eye whereunto S. Paule leadeth vs. Our bodies are members of Ieſus Chriſt: therefore if a man giue ouer his body to whoredom, it is all one as if he tore Chriſts body aſunder. For it is certeine that wee cannot mingle Gods ſonne the fountaine of all cleaneſſe, with our filth and lothſomneſſe. Now then if a man caſt himſelfe into whoredome: it is as much as a rending of the body of our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt in peeces, as much as in vs lyeth. Not that wee can doe it in deede: for the ſonne of God is not ſubiect to vs to be ſo diſhonored at our handes: but yet are wee guiltie of ſuch trayterouſneſſe, foraſmuch as wee would haue committed ſuch iniurie againſt him. Now then let vs learne that God wil haue euery of vs not only to keepe our faith and troth in mariage for his own parte: but alſo generally to bee chaſte, to walke in pureneſſe of lyfe, and not to giue our ſelues the bridle to any vncleaneneſſe or diſhoneſtie. And why? The reaſons that I haue alledged, ought much to moue vs thereunto. And therefore looke what hath bin ſayd already concerning aduowtrie: let vs apply it lykewiſe to this preſent caſe: Namely that we hold al our ſenſes in awe with ſuch ſtayedneſſe, as the diuell may alwayes bee driuen backe when he tempteth vs to any vnchaſtneſſe, and not get any entrance into vs. There was a certeine heathen Pericles. man that coulde wel skil to ſay, that it was not enough for a mã to haue ſtay of his hands, (that is to ſay, that hee coulde refraine from rauine, outrage, and doing of wrong:) but alſo that he ought to haue ſtay of his eyes, that is to ſay, that hee ought not to caſte any vnchaſte looke. If the blinde and ignorant wretches were able to teach vs thus much: what ſhall become of vs when it is tolde vs (as I ſayd afore,) that God hath done vs ſo much honour, as to repayre for himſelfe, not onely our ſoules but alſo our bodies, notwithſtanding that they becorruptible, and that (as wee ſee) there is nothing but rottenneſſe in them? Seeing then that God taketh them for his owne, and voutſafeth to dwell in them: ought we not to learne to liue warely, that no vncleaneneſſe or filthincſſe bee committed that may driue God away from vs, when as he would haue vs to be his dwelling place and holy temple? Yea and we muſt call to minde how S.
1.Cor.6.18. Paule ſayth, that all other ſinnes are committed outwardly of mans body: but whoredome is committed in the body it ſelfe. For it is right certeine that wee defile our handes by robberie and ſtealth (as is auowed in the holy ſcripture:) inſomuch that when we do any man wrong, we haue Eſa.1.15.& 59.3. bloudy handes, as ſayth the prophet Eſay. But Saint Paule very well perceiuing whoredome to bee yet more ſhameſull, and that men haue ſo much the more neede to beware of it: telleth them that there remaineth ſome ſcarre thereof ſtill printed in the bodie of the whoremonger, ſo that his body is put to reproch by it. Surely wee would be very chare of the preſeruing of our honeſtie, and it would greatly greeue vs ỹ it ſhoulde be ſteyned or blemiſhed by any man: & why thẽ doe we make ſo light account of it, as to ſteyne and imbrewe it with infamie, before God, before his Angels, & before men? So then let vs beare this in minde, and we ſhall be bridled. Although wee finde ſuch frailtie in our ſelues, and the diuell doe continually tempt vs: yet muſt this ſerue 1.Cor.6.20.
vs as a bridle to pul vs back to the foreſaid clearneſſe, not onely of body, but alſo of minde.

Furthermore we muſt marke lykewiſe howe it is ſayd, that no man muſt deceiue himſelfe Eph.5.6.
through vaine words: for by reaſõ of ſuch thinges Gods wrath commeth vpon the vnbeleeuers. It is not now of late that men begin to flatter thẽſelues, and to beare themſelues in hand that it is not ſo great and deadly a ſin, to commit whordome. Nay wee ſee howe theſe ſcoffers doe skorne God, terming whoredome a naturall ſin, and a matter of ſmall importance. There are ſome ſuch filthie ſwine which ſpeake after that faſhion. Now for that cauſe S. Paul ſayth, let no man deceiue you. Such skoffes flewe abroad in the mouthes of the diſpiſers of God euen at that time, and many were blinded with them, after the maner of the world, which is to be giuen to ſelfſoothing. Let no man beguile yee with ſuch lyes, ſayth S Paul. Why ſo? For whoredome is a deteſtable thing before God, as he ſheweth by the puniſhmentes which he hath ſent for it, as Numb.25.9
S. Paul noteth in ỹ tenth chapter of the firſt E- 1.Cor.10.8.
piſtle to ỹ Corinthians. There he alledgeth this example, that a great nũber of men were ſlayne for whoredome: whereby it appeareth that God cannot abide it. For ỹ lyfe of man is precious in Gods ſight, as was ſhewed yeſterday: they bee creatures faſhioned after his own image. Seeing then that a two or three and twentie thowſande men were ſo diſpatched, & God deſtroyed ſuch a number of his owne images, that is to ſay of ỹ creatures ỹ he had made: is it not to be ſayd that there was a terrible fire of his vengeãce kindled? Yes: and wherefore? Euen for whoredome. Then let vs conclude that it is not for vs to deceiue our ſelues, as though it were a light fault and eaſie to be pardoned, ſeeing ỹ our Lord, who is not ouerrigorous, did puniſh it ſo ſore: but rather let vs aſſure our ſelues, that we muſt come to account for it before the heauenly Iudge. Whẽ men haue pardoned vs neuer ſo much, and we be of opinion that ſuch maner of vncleaneſſe and filthines is but a ſporte: then muſt God ſet to his hand. Therefore let vs haue an eye to him and to the examples that he giueth vs, that we may continue vnder his feare, and indeuer the earneſtlyer to keepe our ſelues from all ſpottes. And ſo ye ſee in effect how this ſeuenth commaundement of the lawe is to be vnderſtoode: namely that we muſt not defile our ſelues with any vnchaſtitie or vnſtayedneſſe.

Now if it behoue vs to keepe both our bodies and our ſoules vndefiled: ought wee not alſo to eſchewe the occaſions ỹ may intiſe vs to whoredome? Yes ſurely. Let vs marke then, that whoſoeuer doe giue themſelues to any looſenes, doe ſeeke nothing elſe than to caſt themſelues into Satans ſnares. And although they be not repro-

ned for it to the worldward: yet are they whoremaisters already before God. Were this wel cõsidered: we should see no more of the wantonnes in apparel, gesture and wordes, that is commonly in the world, which taketh too much libertie in that behalfe. And when men and women attire themselues of purpose to intice one another and as it were to lay baytes of lewdnesse: are not such doinges very trickes of baudrie? In deede their excuse shalbe, as for me, I haue committed no whoredom: but yet they set themselues forth as a pray to Satan, & are willing to drawe others with them, as much as they can. Then are they kindes of whoredome before God: and all the loosnesse and superfluitie that is vsed in apparell and attire, is nothing else but a laying of snares for men. Lykewise againe there are gestures and wordes. When a man and a woman haunt one anothers companie, to open a gap to Satan by acquainting thẽselues together, so as they may bee caught in his nette, and giue themselues ouer vnto him in bondage: it is whoredome before God. And although there be no deed done, no nor any thing fully agreed vppon: yet will not God leaue such doings vnpunished: for it is too manifest that they were attempted. And hereby it appeareth how fond and childish a shift it is to excuse ones selfe by saying that it is not euill to doe this or that, so there be no intent to doe euill. As for example, such as delight in daũcing and dissolutenesse: is that so euill a thing (say they,) so long as there bee no whoredome committed? yea truely: It is all one as if they would mocke God of set purpose, and blindfold his eyes to buffet him, and in the meane while bid him gesse whether it be euill or no. It is well knowen that dancing can be no better but a prelude to whoredome, to open an entrie purposely vnto Satan: and a crying out alowd vnto him, ẏ he should be bold to come in. That is alwayes the very effect and substance of dauncing. If thou say, I meant no euill: thou makest God a lyer. Behold, S. Paul auoweth that lewde wordes corrupt good manners. Yea and hee alledgeth that saying of an heathen man, of purpose to make vs the more ashamed. If we admit not the doctrine giuen by S. Paul: let vs goe to schoole to ẏ wretched infidels and idolaters: for thy coulde good skill to alledge, that vnhoneſt speech corrupteth good manners. Now when mens tongues are infected with naughtie and vnchaste talke, and there is nothing in their behauiour and wordes, but signes and marks of vtter dishonestie: if they say hereupon, that they had none euill meaning: is it not a manifest belying of the holy Ghost? Yes: and therefore let vs marke, that whereas al whoredome is forbidden: it is meant that wee should behaue our selues modestly both in our wordes and in our gestures, & that there should be no inkling of loosenes in vs that may tend to whoredome or whorishnesse. It is true that all thinges are cleane to them that haue a cleane conscience: but yet for all that, we must beware that Satan ouertake vs not, least hee make some breach vpon vs. Thus ye see ẏ this precept ought to be considered in such wise, as we must haue an eye, not onely to the very deede of whoredome, but also to all that matcheth with it, to al appurtnances of it, to all that commeth neere it, and to all that may intice or indure vs to it. To be shorte, wee must come backe to that which I touched euen now out of S. Paul: namely that as wee must not doe any man wrong either in his person or in his goods: so must wee also liue honestly, and put away all looseneſſe and disordernesse from vs.

1.Cor.15.33 Menander.

And lyke as all lewde talke, and dauncing, and other vnchaste dealinges are condemned before God for kindes of whoredome: so let vs marke that all other loose misbehauiours shall be condemned lykewise. Yee shall see a sorte of drunkardes that cram themselues lyke brute beastes. And when they be so full that they be ready to burst: thẽ fling they themselues into all maner of filthinesse till they euen stincke again, not perceiuing their own shame. Therefore whẽ men behaue themselues so beastly, ẏ they play the drunkardes and gluttons, and moreouer abandon their bodies to all villanie: thinke wee that they shall scape Gods hand, and not be cursed as whoremongers, though they commit not whoredome in actuall deede? Yes. Yee see then that the soberneſſe which Paul speaketh of, doth tell vs that if wee will bee chaste and stayed before God: wee must not onely absteine from whoredome it selfe: but also vse our eating and drinking soberly for our nourishment, and not to prouoke vs to lecherie, so as wee should haue no more stay nor holde of our selues. That is a thing which we haue to marke further.

But now it will be alledged: and howe then can we absteine from al vncleanneſſe, considering the frailtie that is in our flesh? For we see how little stay men haue of themselues: whereby it appeareth (doe what they can) how sinnefull our nature is. True it is that men be not able to be chaste: for our Lorde will haue vs to feele the cursednesse of Adams sinne in that behalfe, that is to say in the vnrulynesse of ẏ flesh, if hee himselfe preserue vs not by speciall gift, accordingly as it is sayd that it is not giuen to all men, but euery man must consider what GOD hath giuen to himselfe, and he must vse the gift that hee hath, assuring himselfe that hee is so much the more bound vnto God. But yet howsoeuer he fare: mariage is prouided for a remedy to all such as haue no stay of themselues. Although then that God list to leaue this marke of infirmitie in vs: yet doth hee appoynt a conuenient remedy for it. Is a man fraile in his flesh, or a woman lykewise? In deede it is a vice: and although it bee as it were a naturall inclination, (yea proceeding of the corrupt nature that wee take from Adam:) yet is it to bee condemned of it selfe. For all such vnstaydnesse is farre off from the excellent dignitie which God did put in mankinde, of purpose that wee should haue borne his marke, & haue bin as Angels. Therefore all vnrulinesse of the flesh is sinne. Notwithstanding, forasmuch as our Lorde beareth with vs, he hath ordeyned a meane whereby ẏ sayd vice shal not be imputed

to vs for ſinne. Now then whereas the vnrulineſſe of the fleſhe is of it ſelfe ſinfull and damnable: it ſhall not be imputed to vs before God, if it be couered with mariage. And when a man ſeeth that hee cannot forbeare, and thereupon prayeth vnto God, and hauing commited himſelfe vnto him, taketh a wife to the intent hee may not leade a lewde lyfe, by running at randon lyke a dogge, or a bull, or a brute beaſt: his entering into wedlock after ſuch maner as God hath ordeined, doth couer and hide his vice, ſo as it commeth not to account. And herein we ſee the ineſtimable goodneſſe of our God, that whereas hee leaueth this vice in vs, yea in ſuch wiſe as ought to make vs aſhamed: yet notwithſtanding hee ordeineth a good meane whereby to bury it. And although men be vnchaſte, yet are they not blamed for it before God and before his iudgement ſeate, ſo they hold thēſelues within the boundes of mariage. For all vnchaſtitie is vnlawfull. As for example, if a man take too much libertie with his wife, or the wife with her husband: it is no reaſon that they ſhoulde make their bed a brothelhouſe. But if a man liue honeſtly with his wife in the feare of God: although the companying in bed be ſhamefull, yet hath it no reproch or ſhame before God and his Angels. And why? Becauſe the couert of mariage ſerueth to ſanctify the thing that is vncleane and vnholy of it ſelfe, and to make cleane the thing that is foule and filthie of it ſelfe. Seeing then that our Lorde is ſo gratious, as to ordeine ſuch a remedie: are not wee the more lewde and vnthankefull if wee vſe it not, and put not away all the excuſes that men alledge, as who ſhould ſay that God had not prouided for their neceſſitie, nor played the good phiſition with vs in healing our diſeaſes, yea and euen preuented vs as wee ſee? Now then, ſeeing that our Lorde hath vouchſafed to ſuccour vs in this behalfe, and ordeined holy mariage to keepe men from abandoning thēſelues to al naughtineſſe, which haue not ỹ gift of chaſtitie: let vs put away al ſhifts of frailtie. That is the thing which wee haue to marke.

Heb. 13. 4. And hereupon let vs marke well how the Apoſtle ſayth, that when men and women holde themſelues within the feare of God and ſobrietie, the bedde of mariage is honorable: And whereas it ſhould iuſtly bee ſhamefull: our Lord conuerteth all to honor. It is no ſmall matter, ỹ the Apoſtle calleth the thing honorable before God, which would be ſhamefull euē before men, if God pardoned it not: & yet pronounceth curſe & vengeance againſt al adulterers. Sith we heare ſuch a ſentence: let vs learne to ſhrowde our ſelues vnder this honorable ſhadow, (if we haue neede of it,) to the end that our ſhamefull dealings be not accurſed and condēned before God and his Angels: and therewithall let vs ſtand in awe of the dreadfull ſentence that is giuen againſt all aduowterers and whorehunters. Yea & 1. Cor. 7. 5. if any be able to forbeare mariage, let them take good heede that they forbeare it not but for the preſent time, ſo as they reiect not the remedie that God hath appointed them, if they finde not that God giueth them a ſtay of themſelues. And ſo let their liuing out of mariage be but frō morrow to morrow, being alwayes ready to ſubmit themſelues to God, whenſoeuer he ſhall call them to that ſtate.

But here we ſee how Satan hath diſplaced al order, yea and that vnder pretence of holyneſſe. The world ſees what abhominations haue come of it. Inſomuch ỹ in poperie it ſeemeth to be the moſt Angelike vertue that can be, to liue vnmaryed. The ſtate of perfection (ſay the Munkes) is to be vnmaryed. The prieſtes ſay that they be vowed to God. Seeing wee bee the Cleargie (ſay they) and as it were the flower of ỹ Church: it behoueth vs to be ſeparated from the common defilementes of the world. So then, in poperie it is counted an approching to ỹ Angels of heauen, when men forſake mariage. But in the mean while, we ſee how God is mocked with ſuch diueliſh pride: for worſe than beaſtely abhominations haue happened through the diſpiſing of mariage after that ſorte. See how the Prieſtes, Munkes, and Nunnes defy God, by refuſing the benefite which he offereth thē: which is, that if they finde infirmitie in themſelues, they ſhould marrie. But this doe they diſpiſe and diſdayne, eſteeming it as an vncleane thing: and that is a fighting euen againſt nature. And therefore, was it not meete that God ſhould be reuenged of ſuch preſumption, when men trode the remedie vnder their feete, which he had giuen them? Is not that ſicke man out of his witte, which in ſteade of taking a medicine for his health, dooth fling it againſt the ground in diſpight of his phiſition? As much is done by theſe helhoundes of the popedome, euen all this vermine of Prieſts, Munkes, and Nunnes which haue refuſed holy mariage: wherein they haue made open warre againſt God. And they bee not contented with that: but wee ſee they haue ouerſhot themſelues ſo farre, as to be bolde to vtter blaſphemies, that ought to make all mens haires ſtand vp vpon their heades. If there were no more but that: the world may ſee that the diuell hath altogether ouermaiſtered them, and that the Apoſtatike or backeſlyding Church of Rome is the very ſeate of Antichriſte, inaſmuch as it hath giuen ſentence, that ſuch as are in the fleſhe cannot pleaſe God, but wee muſt bee ſeparated from all vncleaneſſe: And therefore mariage ought to be forbidden vnto prieſtes. Thoſe are the very wordes of a Pope: and yet notwithſtanding, they haue bin regiſtred as an Oracle comming from heauen. Now if the diuell had his full ſcope, yea and were incarnate in this world: coulde hee ſpeake more deteſtably in diſpite of God and holy wedlocke, than to apply this ſaying, they that are in the fleſh cānot pleaſe God, vnto maryed folke? It is as much as if he condemned all mankinde: For in ſo doing hee condemneth not onely thoſe that are aliue at this day: but alſo all the holy fathers that liued vnder the Lawe, and all the holy Patriarches, Apoſtles, and martyrs. Rom. 8. 8.

Yee ſee then that the diuell of Rome intendeth to baniſhe both the Apoſtles, and martyrs, and

and all the holy fathers out of heauen. And therefore whosoeuer listeth to bee in the Popes paradise, must bee a fellowe with the diuels in hell. For although it bee a monstrous thing, that the vngratious Pope Syricius shoulde vtter such blasphemie, as to goe about to shut the most part of the holyest folke that euer haue bin, out of the kingdome of heauen: yet would God neuer haue suffered so horrible blasphemie to bee spoken, but that it was his will to make the Sea of Rome abhominable, by letting those diuels haue their own swindge so farre, as to reiect mariage vnder pretence of holinesse, by meanes whereof (euen through iust vengeance) they tooke libertie to commit all wicked filthinesse, and so infected the worlde with their detestable Sodomie, that euen the very Paynims themselues did abhorre it. And hereby wee be warned (as I sayd afore) not to dispise Gods giftes: but to vse them with all modestie. And as for such as haue not stay of themselues: let them learne to bow downe their neckes, to receiue the yoke of mariage, and to submit themselues therunto, assuring themselues that if the husbandes beare with their wiues and the wiues indeuour to liue quietly with their husbands: it is an acceptable sacrifice to God. And if they haue charge of children: let them looke to the bringing vp of them, and to the finding of them, whether they bee poore or riche: assuring themselues that God accepteth that seruice. Also when the women take paynes and are troubled about their houshold businesse: let them vnderstand that their doinges are acceptable sacrifices to God. And although mariage be despised by those feendes, who in despight of GOD, doe surmise an Angelicall perfection in abstayning from it: yet notwithstanding let such as bee in that state vnderstande, that God accepteth and receiueth them, yea and that hee gouerneth their houshold. For seeing he auoweth himselfe to bee the author of mariage: hee will blesse it, if folke proceede to it according to his will. Let such as are vnmaried bee well aduised to walke neuertheless in the feare of God, and to haue mariage in estimation, and to honour it accordingly. And let both sorts bee carefull to maintaine themselues in all cleanesse both of body and minde, as S. Paul declareth in the seuenth of the first Epistle to the Corinthians. In that place he condemneth not widowes and such others as absteine from mariage: but exhorteth them to doe their dueties. For widowes and maydes and such as are vnmaried, ought to sticke the faster vnto God, and to liue as folke that are lesse hindered to giue themselues wholy vnto him. Why so? for they haue not so many worldely thinges to drawe them away. Maryed folkes haue mo incumberances: but yet must they beware that they giue not themselues the bridle, so as they should not walke cõtinually in feare and carefulnesse. Thus yee see how that in all states wee must haue sobrietie and honestie in such estimation, as wee may not onely shewe tokens of chastitie and honestie in our persons: but also make offerings & sacrifices both of our bodies and of our soules vnto God, seeing hee hath bought them so derely by the bloud of our Lord Iesus Christ, and will haue them dedicated to himselfe, to dwell in them as in his temples.

Now let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good GOD with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to voutsafe to make vs feele them better than we haue done, yea euen in such sorte, that being rightly sory for them, wee may learne to repayre vnto him, with acknowledgement of the faultes whereof wee bee guiltie, seeking to giue our selues to his obedience, and to please him in all things, euen vntill we haue finished our course and pilgrimage vpon earth, and bee come to the saluation that is prepared for vs, as it is already in the kingdome of heauen. On Wednesday the iij. of Iuly. 1555.

19 Thou shalt not be a thiefe.

IF wee vnderstoode Gods will in one worde, as hee declareth it familiarly enough vnto vs: wee should not neede any long study, to know how to behaue our selues well, and to leade a holy and righteous lyfe. But there is not so lewde and ignorant a person, as he that wil not vnderstand: nor so deafe a man as hee that wil not heare, as they say in the prouerbe. And that is the cause why wee play the blinde buzzardes, though our Lorde shewe vs his light to our faces. And wee see it as well in this cõmaundement of the lawe, as in the rest that haue bin touched. For if euery man would enter into his owne conscience to make true search: should hee not finde it easie to iudge, that howsoeuer things be cloaked, we bee guiltie of theft before God if we deceiue our neighbour, or doe him any wrong in his goods? Yes. But what for that? So we may hide our shame to the worldewarde: it is enough for vs. And in the mean while Gods Iustice is thrust vnder foote, & we thinke not on it. Yet notwithstanding, all these figge leaues shall stand vs in no ſtead, we muſt be faine at length to come to account before ỹ heauenly Iudge: and thẽ ſhall wee feele how it was not for naught ỹ he ſayd by his prophet Zacharie, ỹ his curſe ſhal light vpon the forſworne perſon, and vppon ỹ theefe: ỹ is to ſay, wherſoeuer we offend, what poynt of ỹ lawe ſoeuer it bee: he will finde meanes well enough how to puniſhe vs for it. Men then may well either iuſtify or flatter themſelues: but yet for all that, God will in the end vtter his wrath, both againſt forſwearers and againſt theeues.

Howbeit, to the intent wee may know Gods will the better, let vs marke that hee vſeth the worde Theft, to make vs hate all deceite and robbery, and all maner of wrong that wee can deuiſe to doe to our neighbor, as hath bin ſhewed heretofore in the expounding of murder and aduowtrie. If a man call one theefe, he will take diſpleaſure at it, (for it is a worde of iniurie) inſomuch that hee will not abide to bee ſo diſhoneſted before the worlde. Now God to bring vs to the hating of all fraud, couin, deceit, guile, harme, hurte, & extortion which we may doe to another man in his goods: ſetteth them all downe by the one name of theft. He coulde well enough haue ſpoken after another maner: hee could haue ſayd, keepe your ſelues from catching or plucking of other mens goods vnto you: keepe your ſelues from working any harme or loſſe to your neighbors: keepe your ſelues frõ doing any maner of violence: but hee ſayth in one worde, Steale not. And why? To the intent wee ſhoulde the more abhorre all deceite, all pilling and polling, all ſcratching and catching, and al maner of anoyance: and to the intent we ſhould bee aſhamed, once to make mention of doing any man wrong, yea and euen abhorre it from our heartes, ſeeing wee ſhall bee guiltie of theft for it before God. Moreouer, let vs mark ỹ there are diuers kinds of theft. For ſome vſe priuie packing and deceite in drawing other mens goods to themſelues by ſubtil meanes and practiſes. Some vſe open force, and that is properly termed either robberie, or extortiõ, or ſpoyling. And otherſome deale yet more couertly, ſo as they ſeem not to touch a man, neither can they be accuſed to ỹ worldward: neuertheleſſe forasmuch as they deale not playnly and vprightly, they be theeues before God. After ỹ maner muſt wee come to the particular kinds of theft, if wee intend to know what is forbidden vs in this text.

But by the way wee haue to note, that God iudgeth not of theft after the maner of men. For they that are in authoritie and eſtimation, ſhall not faile for all that to bee condemned before GOD, yea euen though no man accuſe them but onely the crying out of the poore for vengeance, whome they haue deuowred. And although they ſay neuer a word, yet the afflictions which they ſuffer ſhall cry out lowde and ſhrill enough before God, and make an inditement ſubſtantiall enough without vttering any word. So then wee muſt not bring our owne imaginations hither to iudge of theftes, nor thinke our ſelues eſcaped from Gods hand, when wee bee not puniſhed by men nor by worldely iuſtice: for GOD looketh farre deeper. And therefore let vs beare in minde at a worde, that all maner of harme and all maner of coueting to rake to our ſelues that which is none of our owne, is called theft in reſpect of God throughout the whole holy ſcripture. And in deede when as GOD threateneth by his prophet Eſay, that he which hath ſpoyled and robbed, ſhall haue his turne [to bee ſpoyled and robbed lykewiſe:] hee ſpeaketh not of the petie theeues that are caryed to the gallowes: but of the great princes and monarkes that bare ſway in the worlde. Alſo in the firſt chapter when hee ſpeaketh to the holy people that were the Church of GOD: Thy princes and gouerners (ſayth hee) are companions of Theeues. Yet notwithſtanding it is certeine that they were not arreigned: Nay, they themſelues arreigned other men: and yet neuertheleſſe they failed not to bee condemned before GOD. So then the theeues that are honorable here beneath, faile not to be accurſed by the Lawe, and God hath giuen ſentence of them in this text. Therefore wee muſt be faine to caſt downe our eyes knowing ỹ it ſhall not boote vs though our theeuery be excuſable before ỹ world, nor though it bee cõcealed or faced out. For yet for all ỹ, Gods Lawe ſhal haue his courſe, & the execution of it is ready at hand. God hath not forbidden any thing, which he calleth not to accoũt. Thus ye ſee what we haue to remember vppon this text.

But now muſt the thinges which I haue touched breefely, bee layde foorth by parcelmeale and ſpecifyed by examples, that they may bee expreſſed the better. As I ſayd afore, if we were diligent in harkening to the things that God declareth: there ſhould neede no long expoſition in this behalfe. But what? All our ſeeking is to intangle our ſelues, and to take occaſiõ of doubting though the matter be knowen vnto vs. And therefore doth it ſtand vs in hand to be preſſed the more. I haue tolde you already that there are moe kindes of ſtelth or theft than one. For ſome play the theeues by ſtealing away other mens goodes: as if a man ſay, ſuch a one hath ſtolne a horſe, he hath ſtolne monie, he hath ſtolne bedding, pottes, platters or ſuch other lyke thinges. Well the worlde can iudge well enough of theſe kindes of theft,

But when a marchant taketh more for his ware than it is woorth, or if hee ſell vnlawfull wares, and the ſimple man that knoweth nothing of it is beguiled, and woteth not how to winde himſelfe out of the ſnare: men deeme not this to be theft. Yet notwithſtanding ſuch a marchant is a theef though no man condemne him, becauſe hee hath dealt ſo vnconſcionably. Surely hee that hath bin bitten willbee a good and rightfull iudge in that caſe: if hee ſpy the colluſion, hee will by and by ſay, hee doth me wrong. We need not to goe to any doctor, [Sergeant, Coũſeller,] or great clerk to ſhewe vs ỹ we haue wrõg don vs: euery of vs knowes it wel enough: but yet for al this, we diſcern not ỹ ſame kinde of theft in our ſelues, neither doe we ſufficient-ficiently conſider it. Yet notwithſtanding, God will not faile to iudge him for a thiefe, which ſhal haue ſo abuſed a ſimple man, by deliuering him vnlawfull wares, ſeeing hee hath beguiled him for want of iudgement and skil. Lykewiſe hee that ouerſelleth his wares to an vnskilful perſon therein, is a thiefe as wel as the other. Againe, if a handicraftes man make ſlight or falſe ſtuffe, and the fault be not perceiued, but hee maketh what hee can of it, not regarding to ſell it according to the valew of it, but how to inrich himſelfe, alledging theſe excuſes for himſelfe: hee with whome I haue to deale is a rich man, it is al one to me, he hath a good purſe. A man doth in deed vſe theſe ſpeeches: but yet true it is, that albeit his ſhifts may well ſerue him to the worldward, yet ſhall Gods Iuſtice ſtill haue his courſe and take holde of him. When euery man hath bin asked his opinion, and all agree that it is no theft at all: yet will not God vnſay his worde for our pleaſure. Ye ſee then that the theftes which men let ſlip, ſhall neuertheleſſe come to accoũt before God, notwithſtanding that the takers of ſuch libertie, woulde neuer ſo faine haue the lewdeneſſe pardoned them. For beholde, Gods Lawe is vnchaungeable, as I haue tolde you already: and it ſhall be ſhewed hereafter that it caryeth execution with it.

Againe ſith it is ſo that we muſt not goe to worke with craft and ſubtiltie: wee muſt come backe to natural vprightneſſe, which is to do nothing to another which we would not haue don to our ſelues. Seeing we haue ſuch a rule, we neede no huge volumes to teach vs that wee ſhoulde not ſteale: for euery man may know in one word, how to behaue himſelfe towardes his neighbors: that is to wit, that he deale not lewdely, that hee goe not about to inrich himſelfe by other mens loſſes, and that hee rake not other mens goods to him as his owne. Thus needeth there not any moe wordes than this: and then the faireſt couerings & countenances that we haue, would vaniſh away. For when we haue once beguiled men: we beare our ſelues in hand that wee haue lykewiſe bleared the eyes of God. Let vs take an example whereby this poynt may bee plainlyer perceiued. He that hath gotten away another mans goods by ſute at the lawe, thinkes himſelfe to haue as iuſt title as can bee to poſſeſſe them. Why ſo? becauſe he hath them by order of lawe. I will forbeare to ſay, that perchaunce the lawe was corrupted. Of a trueth there are that make lawe a flat theeuery by their bribing and other wicked practiſes, ſo as they ouerthrow all right and equitie, and the courte of Iuſtice becommeth oftentimes as a market to ſell other mens right in, and to peruert all equitie. And although it be not ſo: yet if a man finde the means to get another mans goods by craft and ſubtiltie: alledge he neuer ſo much that Lawe hath ſo iudged it, and therefore that there is not a better nor a rightfuller title in the world: yet is it dubble theft, and hee had bin much better to haue robbed and ſpoyled his neighbors houſe, than to haue gotten his goods ſo vniuſtly by order of lawe. Why ſo? For in ſo doing there is theft, yea and the theft is committed vnder colour of Iuſtice, which is a moſt holy thing: and that is a treacherie that God cannot abide. If a houſe be robbed, it ſhall be grieuouſly puniſhed: and is it not farre woorſe than robberie, when the ſeate of Iuſtice which God hath dedicated to his owne maieſtie, is ſo diſordered that all things are turned vpſide down and confounded? So then let vs marke well, that what pretence ſoeuer we can make before men: Gods lawe ſhal ſtill keepe on his courſe: inſomuch that if wee vſe any craftineſſe or krinking, or any extortion or violence: wee ſhalbe condemned for theeues. If a man miſuſe his poore neighbor vnder colour that he is in authoritie, and by that meanes oppreſſe him: he is a theefe, and halfe a murtherer, and it is not ſingle theft or robberie, but (as yee would ſay) qualifyed with murder: and yet for all that, it ſcapeth and is pardoned. It is true that men will now and then mutter at it: but that is but with halfe mouth: and in the meane while hee that hath misbehaued himſelfe, ſootheth himſelfe, and (which woorſe is) the greater thief that he is, the more is he honored. For the more a man hath gotten to himſelfe, and the richer that hee is become: the more doe men ſtoope to him, and the highlier is hee aduanced. Yee ſee then that often times men come to greate honor in the worlde: by theeuery. And therefore let vs no: take any of thoſe ſkarffes to couer our eyes: but rather let vs conſider what ỹ holy ſcripture ſayth: namely that we be theeues, if we doe not vnto others as we our ſelues would be done vnto, ne yeelde to euery man his right. For we muſt define a vice by the contrary vertue. If we will knowe well what theft is: let vs cõſider what it is to doe right to our neighbors. Now, we doe not right to our neighbors, when we ſpoyle thẽ of their goods; and by any meanes rake ỹ things to vs which are theirs. To be ſhort, if we vſe any couin, violence, or extortion, it is proofe good enough of our theeuery.

Hereby wee ſee that theft is committed, not onely by taking away of mony and other thinges with our handes: but alſo by withholding a mãs owne from him, and by neglecting to preſerue the thinges that God hath put into our handes, according as his will is that euery man ſhoulde keepe that which he hath. As for example: If a ſeruant waſte or deuour his maiſters goods, hee is a thiefe. If a laboring man look to haue his wages, and in the meane while loue to loyter and to haue his hand in the platter: ſurely hee is a theefe, and wee can well skill to deeme him ſo. But it were expedient for vs to come to the other kindes alſo, and to make this compariſon, that if wee render not euery man the right ỹ belongeth to him, ſuch vnindifferent dealing ſhall alwayes bee taken for theft before God, and wee ſhall bee condemned for it.

But now remaineth to ſee how we may liue in ſuch ſorte, as God may not curſe vs as if wee were theeues. The firſt poynt thereof is to learne to loue our neighbors, as Saint Paul ſheweth in the thirteenth to the Romans. And it is a wonder that men ſhould make ſo light of the taking away of other mens goods, ſeeing that if a man aske vs whether it be ſo harde a matter to loue our neighbors: wee will aunſwere, no. For nature hath voutſafed to linke men together in vnitie, and God hath created them all after his owne image: and therefore it ought to bee no hard nor combersome matter to vs, to loue one another. Now it is ſo, that if a man haue loue hee will neuer bee a theefe, as ſayth Saint Paul: yea and if wee did willingly conſider, what wee owe to other men of right, and howe wee be bound vnto them: wee ſhould not neede all theſe warninges, Thou ſhalt not play the theefe, Thou ſhalt not play the aduowterer, Thou ſhalt not play the murderer. All this were needeleſſe, as Saint Paul ſheweth in the ſame place. But what? there are very fewe that thinke vpon that. Nay contrariwiſe, (as I haue told ye already,) when wee haue ſtolne other mens goods, wee fall by and by to ſeeking of vaine excuſes: and when we haue done any deceit, ſhrewd turn, or extortion, ſtrightwais we ſhift it off with an excuſe redy at hand: But yet in ſo doing it appeareth that wee haue no loue in vs, and that wee bee as wilde beaſtes, ſo as wee be not worthie to bee taken for men, becauſe wee breake the bonde of vnitie which GOD had ſet among all the children of Adam. Thus much for that one poynt, namely that it behoueth vs to minde this leſſon of charitie, if wee will not bee counted theeues.

Againe there is another poynt, which is that wee muſt not couet to bee rich. For as ſoone as the deſire of gayning is ſetled in vs: it is certeine that wee ſhall become theeues, and it cannot bee otherwiſe. This will ſeeme ſtrange at the firſt bluſh: but when euerie of vs ſhal haue gathered home his wittes to himſelfe, [we ſhall finde] (as the heathen themſelues coulde well skill to ſay) that euen nature teacheth vs, it is vnpoſſible for vs to couet to bee riche, but wee ſhall bee inflamed to rake to our ſelues by hooke or by crooke. Will wee then ſhunne theft? Wee muſt lay aſide couetouſneſſe, that is to ſay the deſirouſneſſe of inriching our ſelues. To the intent this worde be not cauilled at: how ſhall wee doe it? Let vs learne to bee contented with our ſtate. For as for him that hath no certaine ſtay, but is alwayes toſſed and turmoyled with coueting: his affections harrye him to and fro, ſo as hee can neuer haue any reſt, to ſay, Here muſt I hold my ſelfe within my bounds, I ſay that the ſtate which GOD hath giuen to euery man, muſt bee as a bound to hedge him in, as though it were ſayd to him: Beholde, thy God will haue thee to ſtay vppon that which hee giueth thee, content thy ſelfe therewith: if thou doe not, thou not onely troubleſt the whole order of the worlde, but alſo deſyeſt thy GOD, as though thou meanteſt to bid him battell.

1. Tim. 6. 9. 10.

Yee ſee then that the thing which we haue to marke, is that inaſmuch as we haue the rule of charitie to leade vs, wee muſt learne to bee contented with our ſtate. And why? Becauſe wee knowe it is Gods will, and that hee will haue a triall of our obedience. And that cannot bee done without keeping of Saint Pauls rule: which is, that we haue learned to bee riche and to be poore, to bee hungrie and thirſtie, and likewiſe to haue aboundance. Saint Pauls ſaying is, not onely that wee muſt bee patient in pouertie, whereof hee proteſteth himſelfe to haue felt his part, and therefore hath giuen vs an example thereof, and ſhewed vs the way: but alſo that wee muſt learne to bee riche and to haue aboundance. And how is that? They ſeeme to bee but wordes to no purpoſe: for euery man knowes wee haue neede to bee exhorted to patience when wee be in pouertie. Why ſo? For wee ſhall bee tempted: and it is a harde and grieuous thing, when a man hath not breade to eate. And although hee had but browne bread, yet would hee faine haue eaſe and quicneſſe with it. Phil. 4. 12.

So then as touching pouertie, euery man will graunt that wee haue neede to bee comforted, and to bee tolde that wee muſt not grudge againſt GOD, nor bee inticed to doe euill. But when hee ſayth that wee muſt know how to bee riche: men will laugh that ſpeach to ſkorne, as if it were not grounded vppon any reaſon, and yet is that leſſon needefuller than the former. And why? Let vs conſider a little what rich men are: They be gulfes that can neuer bee filled, yea and much more vneaſie to bee contented than poore men. If a man compare the rich and the poore together: lyke as hee ſhall finde poore men which martyr themſelues, and repine, and are induced to filching and to doe many lewde turnes: ſo ſhall hee finde the moſt part of them contented with that which God giueth them, and ſo keeping on their courſe. But if a man goe to the rich ſorte, ſpecially to kings and princes: hee ſhall finde them ſo inflamed, and ſo farre in loue with the riches of this worlde: as they cannot be ſatisfied. Nay, it euen greeues them at the heart, that the ſunne ſhineth vppon the poore. To be ſhort, it is ſeene that if God ſhoulde giue the whole earth in poſſeſſion to the riche: yet the moſte parte of them would neuer thinke it enough. For (as I ſayd) it greeueth them that the light of the ſunne ſhould be common to the poore, or that they ſhould haue water to drinke. Yea and although the poore take paynes, and do the beſt they can: yet doth the rich man malice him. Although hee ſhed ſweate and bloud for him: yet the riche man thinkes that hee plucketh the guttes and bowels out of his bellie, whē he eateth of his coſt. This nigardſhip, or rather beaſtly crueltie of the richer ſorte, is apparant: & it is too common a thing. Not without cauſe therefore doth Saint Paul ſay that wee haue greatly profited, when we haue learned to bee rich: that is to wit, when we be not deſirous to gather ſtill more and more, ſo as if GOD haue giuen vs any aboundance, we followe our trade ſtill without coueting in this wiſe: O, ſueh a peece of ground were good for me: I muſt needes purchace that, and the next to it.

Againe, not to be deſirous to be ſtil increaſing, is not all that a riche man hath to doe. Wee muſt must alſo bee poore in our heartes: that is to ſay, wee muſt not bee proude to truſt in our riches, nor take occaſion by them to oppreſſe the weaker ſorte, and ſuch as haue no eſtimation nor friendes in the worlde to maintaine them. And finally wee muſt bee readie to become poore whenſoeuer it ſhall pleaſe God. Let him that is nowe verie riche, which hath his garners, ſtorehouſes, and Cellars full, which hath his purſe well ſtuffed, which hath Landes and poſſeſſions, and which hath a good trade of marchandize: let him (ſay I.) not thinke it ſtraunge if GOD liſt to bereaue him of all, neyther let it grieue him and vexe him ouermuch, but let him bee patient, as Iob was and ſay, ſeeing it is Gods will to take againe the things that he had giuen mee, his name bee bleſſed for it. It is a verie hard thing (ſay I) to haue skill howe to be riche: yea verily, if wee ſubmit not our ſelues to Gods will, to accept quietly whatſoeuer he giueth vs, that is to ſay to beare pouertie patiently when he ſendeth it, and to holde our ſelues contented with the goods that he hath put into our hands, without ſetting of our heartes vppon them. Otherwiſe wee muſt alwayes needes be theeues. For the poore ſhall bee tempted to doe euill, and they beare themſelues in hand that God diſpenſeth with them for it: in ſo much that nowe and then they vſe this ſhift, O, I ſee howe ſuch a man goes about to eate the fleſh from my backe, and he would deſtroy mee if he could: & why then ſhould it not bee lawfull for me to bee reuenged of him? See how euerie man would be his owne caruer: but it is not for vs to doe ſo. Verily when a man is become riche euen by pilling and powling, by ſuttletie and deceite: yet is it not for vs to ſpoile him of that which he hath, bicauſe he muſt make account of it vnto God. Nowe then if wee bee poore, wee ſhall by and by bee prouoked to theft, if wee haue not this bridle to ſay, What thoe? It is our Lordes will to exerciſe vs, and therefore are wee needie of worldly goods: wee haue not as we would wiſh, and that is bicauſe God mindeth to humble vs by that meanes. Marke that for one point. And therewithall, let vs labour to ouercome this temptation. For wee ſee howe that euen Salomon deſireth that hee may not bee poore, for feare leaſt he ſhould bee prouoked to ſteale. Seeing that ſuch a perſon was afrayd, yea and made ſute vnto GOD in the name of the faithfull: ought not wee to ſtand vpon our garde? Yes: and therefore let al ſuch as haue lacke and ſcarcetie of bread and drinke, and wote not which way to turne them, but leade a verie ſlender life, ſo as ſome time they can ſcarcely get halfe their fill of bread: and let others alſo which haue not their commodities as they woulde deſire: let them (ſay I) put themſelues into Gods hand, and pray him to graunt them the grace to liue in ſuch ſort, as they may not bee caried to doe any man wrong or harme, vnder prerence that need driueth them vnto it. And as for them that haue the world at will, and money in their purſe: let them take good heede that they oppreſſe not the poore, as they commonly doe, by laying their ſnares for them. Loe howe the rich men deale. If they ſee a poore man going to decaye: they play the Hunters, they fall by and by vpon him, and they neuer leaue toſſing and turning of him about, till the poore ſoule bee at length intrapped. Therefore let ſuch as are wealthie beware that they bee not ouergreedie, but rather let them holde themſelues backe, ſo as they abuſe not their abundance. Let not ſuch as haue abundance ſteppe vp to oppreſſe ſuch as haue it not. After that manner muſt wee proceede in this caſe. Yea and in ſtead of being ſuttle to ſeeke thinges a farre off, let vs when occaſion ſerueth to doe it, let vs aduiſedly repulſe all ſuch naughtineſſe. And in ſtead of imagining all to bee well wonne when wee can inriche our ſelues by other mens loſſes: let vs aſſure our ſelues that ſuch riche folke doe cut the poore folkes throtes, & that they make many widowes and fatherleſſe children, though they thinke it not. Howbeit for as much as our fleſh is ſharpe witted and ſuttle in ſeeking ſuch occaſions: let vs thinke vpon our God, who intendeth to trie vs. Wee may well haue a ſword in our hand: but let vs beware wee doe no harme with it, and let vs conſider that if wee were in like caſe as poore folkes are, woe would gladly bee ſuccoured. To be ſhort, if we wil abſtaine from theft, let vs bee neither wolues nor Foxes. For as many as deale by deceit and craftineſſe, they be like foxes: and what needeſo euer the poore haue, if they followe the prouocation to doe euill, they ſhewe themſelues to bee no more men, by their vniuſt raking of other mens goods vnto them. And as for them that rob with violence: they be like wilde beaſtes, which ſeeke nothing elſe but to deuour all. So then, to ſ intent we be not theeues, let vs not be cruell.

Therewithall, whatſoeuer worldly thing wee want, let vs waite for it to haue it by the bleſſing of God. If wee helde this rule: ſurely all couetouſneſſe, all fleecing, all fraude, and all other like thinges woulde ſoone bee amended. Wee ſhould neede none other medicine to heale all our diſeaſes than this, namely that we coulde lifte vp our eyes to heauen to ſaye, God is our Father, hee will prouide all that wee want, it is hee to whom wee muſt truſt for all things that belong to the mayntenaunce of this preſent lyfe, and at a woord, his bleſſing is the welſpring of all riches. If wee were well perſwaded of this: wee ſhoulde not neede any more, eyther preceptes of the Lawe to forbid vs theft, or any other warnings and aduertiſementes. This onely one woord woulde ſuffice vs. But what? Wee aske GOD our dayly breade, proteſting that it is his peculiar office to feede vs: and yet in the meane whyle wee fall to filching, deceyuing, and malicing: and is not that an vtter ſcorning of God? I ſay with my mouth, giue me my dayly bread: and in the meane ſeaſon I goe and ſeeke it at the diuels hand. For if wee vſe vnlawfull meanes, ſo as wee beguile one and fleece another: at whoſe hand fetch wee our welfare? Is it at Gods hande? Are wee not companions with theeues and robbers? So then, it is certaine that our wholeseeking is to bee inriched by the Diuell, when wee giue our selues so to craft and extorsion. And moreouer the same is a sure token of our vnbeliefe, and that wee looke not for anye thing by Gods blessing, ne thinke him riche ynough to finde vs. Loe at what poynt we bee. Neuertheless these things ought to profite vs. When wee heare that our Lorde curseth theft and robberie, and that he abhorreth it: let vs likewise hate and abhorre it, assuring our selues that he iudgeth not after the fansie of man, but will haue vs to liue in such vprightnesse, as euerie man may haue his right, and no man bee hindred or impeached in his goods and substaunce, and therefore wee must still haue the more staye of our selues. Againe, forasmuch as wee bee so inclined vnto euill: let vs seeke meanes to holde vs in awe of our God, and to restraine vs from stealing as I haue shewed you before. And sith wee knowe that hee hath knit vs togither: let vs keepe that Law and rule of equitie. Furthermore let vs not couet to bee riche: but to bee short, let vs put this lesson in vre, of bearing pouertie patiently, and let vs not bee eager of getting, and of promoting our selues out of measure. And finally let vs abhorre all crueltie and deceite: and specially let vs learne not to bee so beastly, as to thinke that our catching & snatching by hooke and by crooke, is able to inriche vs. Let vs not beguile our selues in that poynt. Why so? For the true richenesse (as I saide afore,) is the blessing of GOD. Then must wee drinke of that fountaine, and bee filled with it, if wee will abstaine from all theft.

But nowe herewithall let vs come also to Gods threateninges. When he hath shewed vs sufficiently that this commaundement is exceeding rightfull, and hath also giuen vs meanes to liue vprightly without hurting or wronging of any man: perceyuing vs to bee harde hearted still, and that our wicked lustes doe turne vs the contrarie waye: hee addeth threates to make vs afraide. And is it a small matter when
1.Cor.6.10. Eph.5.5. he sayeth, that theeues and robbers shal not enter into the kingdome of God? Nowe then, shall wee set so much store by this present life, that to gather a little good for the maintaining of it in this worlde, wee shall wilfully prouoke God to displeasure? He telleth vs that we shall be banished out of his kingdome. If we had any spark of fayth at all, woulde not this threatening pearce vs to the heart? Yes: but our Lorde proceedeth yet further. For in as much as he sees vs to bee so fleshly, and so greatly giuen to the earth: he telleth vs that euen in this worlde he will make vs to goe backewarde: in so much that he which thinketh to further himselfe by his crinking, pilling, and deceyuing, shall bee consumed, and a secrete curse shall waste him away. According whereunto it is sayde in the forealledged text of Zacharie, that Gods curse shall lyght vppon the house of the theefe, and Miche.6.12. 13.14.15. there abide vntill he bee consumed. Also wee see howe hee speaketh of it by the rest of the Prophets: In so much that our Lorde telleth vs, that when men weene they haue inriched themselues and doone much: hee will blowe vppon them, yea and he will blowe after such a sorte, as all shall vanish away, and that so sodainely, as a man woulde neuer haue looked for. But God passeth yet further. In deede it is ynough and too much alreadie, when wee see howe our Lorde mocketh at those which martyr themselues so much in heaping vp of riches, when all goes to decay and slippeth away like water: but a man shall see moreouer, that the same goods are a cause of the ouerthrowe of such as haue beene in some reputation. Looke mee vpon a father that hath pilled & powled and prouoked Gods wrath against himselfe all the time of his life: When he dyeth, hee beareth himselfe in hand that his children shall become little princes. Nowe had he left them but a little, that they might haue falne in trade of occupying, and had he taught them to haue trauailed honestly, then they might haue had competent whereewith to find themselues. But behold, the father spinneth a halter for euery of his children, by making them to trust after that fashion in their euill gotten goods, so as they must needes eyther goe to the gallowes, or come to some other vnhappie ende. And what is the cause of it? The wrath of God which is present with them to consume all the goods that were gotten by stealth and by powling. The house of them must needes bee accursed, and God must needes shewe himselfe a iust iudge, both against the theeues, and against all such as dally with his diuine Maiestie. If a man tell them of it, they make but a iest of it, as these scoffers doe, who will say, well well sir, the tyme is worth the money they thinke, all is one. And if a poore man bee neither of abilitie nor of credite to make his part good against them: O how they welter themselues in the meane whyle in their wickednesse! But wote yee what? When God seeth men so sotted, and that hee can not bring them backe to the heauenly lyfe, in so much that they make no reckening of being banished from the kingdome of heauen: well then goe to (saieth he:) I summon you aforehand, for I will begin to put my sentence in execution. I will shew how my curse lyes vppon euill gotten goods, and that they which haue possessed them for a time, must be dispossessed of them, and that themselues and their goods with all their whole ofspring must be consumed togither. Now when wee see all these things: must wee not needes be mooued at them, if the diuell haue not vtterly bewitched vs? Yes. What remayneth then? We must holde faste the good conscience which God requireth of those that are his, so as euerie of vs trauell quietly for our liuing, and goe not about to grieue other mē, but seeke by al meanes to passe our life without offending of God, that if we haue no great reuenew nor much to spend: sobrietie may serue vs for a dubble portiō. After that maner must wee deale. Psal.127.2

But now if theft [to manward] be so condemned of God: what shall bee done if wee rob him of his honour? For wee must compare theste towardes man, and theft towards God togither.

Beholde,

Beholde, it is God that hath forbidden vs to bee theeues. And why? Bicause he will haue vs to keepe equitie and vprightnesse one towards another. Yea and looke what goods soeuer he appointeth to our vse, he will haue them so vsed, as wee possesse them not by wicked shifts. He that hath much, must spend them as one that hath but onely the laying out of them; and not the ownership of them: and he that hath but little, must be contented with it, as I haue saide alreadie. Now if God will haue vs to keepe such an euen hand towards our neighbours, for the preseruing of their goods which they haue in their hands: if he make such account of the goods ỹ he hath created, as he wil not haue them defiled by guilefulnes, by violence, or by such other like dealings: what will he doe in the thing which he setteth much more store by? So then, when wee haue liued soundly & vprightly in all respects among our neighbours, so as we haue indeuoured to giue euery man his due: let vs also yeelde our God his right: ỹ is to say, let vs glorifie him, and beware ỹ he remaine vnimpeached in his Maiestie, so as we take not more vpon vs than is lawful for vs as we see men commōly do, who are so bolde, that when they haue bin so mad as to oppresse their neighbors, by & by they set vp their hornes against God. When they haue spoiled other men of their goods, they woulde make God their vnderling too, and they will not obey him further than they list themselues. Therefore we must beware of al these things. And to conclude, let vs also beware, not onely ỹ we abstaine from all iniurie and anoyance: but also ỹ as neere as we can we suffer not any man to be vexed or indomaged. For these are the two things that God commaundeth: namely Iustice and iudgement: Iustice consisteth in yeelding euery mā his right: and Iudgement consenteth not to any euils, nor sustereth the poore to be misused, which haue no meanes to maintayne themselues. For if I see a man oppressed before my face, & indeuour not to helpe him: I am consenting to the theefe, so as the saying of the fiftith Psalme may be verified of mee, thou sawest a theefe & ranneste with him. Now is it not a running with theeues, when we labour not to restraine them, but either wink at them, or giue the the bridle [to doe what they list? Yes: and [in so doing] we be consenting to the robberie that is committed, and we must answere for it, as theeues before God, although no reckening be made of it among men. Therefore let no man thinke that he is bound but onely to keepe his own goods: but let vs also beware that we indeuour to maintaine and procure the welfare of our neighbours as we would our own, and as the rule of charitie willeth vs to doe. Thus ye see how we shal not be found to be theeues both before God & man, & how the goods ỹ he hath put into our hands may be blessed, so as he shall make them to prosper, and wee haue such contentment, as we shall euer mount vp to the heauenly heritage, being sure that there wee shall haue the perfect fulnesse of all good things.

Psal. 50. 18.

Nowe let vs kneele down in ỹ presence of our good God, with acknowledgment of our sinnes, praying him to make vs feele them better than wee haue doone, and that wee may profit more and more in the keeping of his holy Lawe. And bicause wee bee so corrupt and frowarde, that all our thoughtes and affections goe the contrarie way: it may please him to reforme vs by his holy spirit, and to draw vs in such wise vnto him, as we renouncing the world and despising these mortall and transitorie things, may mount vp to the heauenly kingdome, where we shall haue all contentation and rest. And so let vs all say, Almightie God heauenly father, &c.

Isa. 56. 1. Ier. 22. 3. Ezech. 45. 9

On Thursday the iiij. of Iuly. 1555.

The xl. Sermon, which is the eleuenth vpon the fifth Chapter.

20 Thou shalt not beare false witnesse against thy neighbour.

WEe haue seene heretofore, that it is not lawfull for vs in anye wise to vexe our neighbours in their persons, or to do them any domage in their goods. Notwithstanding for as much as harme may bee doone by the tongue: God hath vouchsafed to make mention of ỹ also in his Law, as we see in this text. Now then like as heretofore he forbad the doing of any outrage to our neighbors, (which thing he comprehended vnder ỹ word Murther:) & likewise all grieuing of them and all anoying of them by any meanes in their goods: so he sheweth here ỹ we must not speake euill of them, nor vse any such words as may cast any blemish or staine vppon them. It is true that he speaketh expressely of False witnesse: howbeit, that is according to the rule that I haue set downe, namely ỹ he setteth forth the thinges formost which we ought most to mislyke, to the intent wee shoulde mislyke the sinnes that come neere them. Then if wee speake euill of our neighbors, so as wee slaunder them: although it bee not taken for a grieuous sinne before men: yet doeth God take it for a false witnessing. But here a mā might demaund a question, why GOD speaketh here of false witnessing and periurie: seeing he had alreadie said, Thou shalt not take ỹ name of ỹ Lord thy God in vayne. For it seemeth to bee a needlesse repetition. For in so short a sum of ỹ law, where there be not aboue ten sentēces, it seemeth vn-conuenient to repeate one thing twise. But we must marke that the things which haue beene set downe heretofore, concerning the not taking of Gods name in vayne: were in the first table, where GOD respected onely the Maiestie of his name, to the intent it should bee had in reuerence. Therefore whensoeuer wee speake of God, wee must thinke vppon the infinite glorie that is in him, that wee may neuer open our mouth but with reuerence and humilitie. And whether wee intend to sweare, or to speake of him in any other wise: wee must euer thinke that his name is to bee reuerenced, and that wee must not fling it foorth at aduenture. Thus much concerning the thinges that wee haue seene alreadie vppon this matter. Now God speaketh of another thing: namely of the not hurting or harming of our neighbours in any wise by our wicked tongue. So then, in as much as there is a double intent: wee see nowe that these two sentences differ, & also that there is no superfluitie at all. Wherefore let vs marke well, that for as much as it is shewed here howe men ought to liue togither charitably and vprightly: although Gods name be dishonoured by lewd witnessing: yet the lawe is not superfluous which saieth, That we must not beare false witnesse against our neighbours.

I tolde you before, that Gods meaning here, is to condemne generally all slaunders, all false reportes, all diffamations, and all other such like things. And for proofe therof it is expressely saide in another place, Thou shalt not bring vp any euill reporte, nor speake euill on thy neighbour, nor cast any blot vppon him. If the Law of God containe all perfection of good life: it insueth that this also is comprehended therein. And where shall wee put it, but vnder this sentence? Therefore wee must conclude, that although GOD haue peculiarly set down here the name of False witnesse: yet notwithstanding hee meant to extend the doctrine thereof to all slaunders, misreporters, and crooked speeches that tend to the diffaming or defacing of our neighbours, or to the hurting of their good name. Wee see then that Gods meaning here, is to keepe vs in good friendship one towards another, and that so farre, as he suffereth not any man to bee impeached any more in his name, than in his person or his goods. Therefore whosoeuer diffameth his neighbour, or in any wise backebyteth him: doeth (to the vttermost of his power) breake the bond of charitie among men, and proclaime open warre. And if we consider all thinges well: it is certaine that sometimes misreportes, slaunders, and backebytings, doe much more harme than robberies. Wherefore let vs vnderstand that if wee minde to obey our God, wee must maintaine the honestie and honour of our neighbours, to the vttermost of our power. For seeing he hath forbidden vs to hurt any mans good name: it is his will on the contrarie part, that wee should indeuour to preserue all mens honesties. For it is not ynough to abstaine from dooing of euill: vnlesse a man doe good therewithall.

Now must we proceede by the degrees which God meant to set out vnto vs in this place, speaking of False witnesse. The first then is to beware that wee vtter not any false report, lye, or periurie in place of Iustice, whereby to hurt them whose honestie, honour and welfare we be boũd to procure. For hee that beareth false witnesse against his neighbour, doeth kill him and robbe him as much as in him lyeth, and doeth all the euill that may growe of his periurie. In deede most commonly men thinke it not to bee so: but yet is it so in trueth. And for the same cause did God expressely command in his Lawe that the witnesse should be the first in executing the partie that was to bee punished for any misdeede: to the intent a man might knowe, that their words and their tongues put him to death: and that the witnesses themselues might stande the more in awe, & consider ỹ they should yeeld account vnto God, of their witnesse bearing against any man. Therfore when any euidence is to bee giuen, it standeth euery man in hand to looke neerely to himselfe, that he inlarge not his conscience, but speake the thing simply & plainly which he knoweth to be true before God. Deut. 17. 7.

But the case concerneth not onely the giuing of false euidence in matters of life & death: but also in all matters that touch mens honour, honestie, good name, or goods. Therefore let vs haue a care to preserue the honour and welfare of our neighbour in all respectes, when we be to beare witnesse. Yet notwithstanding wee must not vnder this colour, cloake the offence of him that hath doone amisse, or lye against God to maintaine his good state. For if the honour of men bee precious vnto vs: howe much more precious ought Gods honour to bee? Gods forbidding of mee to beare false witnes against my neighbour, is bicause he will haue friendlinesse maintayned among men, and that no mã should bee impayred in his name or goods. Now if God haue such regard of vs which are but wretched Earthwormes: thinke wee that he forgetteth himselfe in the meane while? No. But if I by my false record, doe goe about to support or bolstar an offender, so as I couer or conceale his crime: it is certaine that I dishonour God as much as in mee is. Why so? For I protest to say the truth, & yet notwithstanding I make a lie. And is not ỹ a defacing of Gods honor? Is it not an imbacing of his glory? Yes: & therfore let vs vnderstand, that when God said, Thou shalt not beare false witnesse against thy neighbour: he meant not to gratifie or pleasure euil doers, or to couer mens faults: but to shew in few words, that we ought (as much as in vs lyeth) to maintaine our neighbours honestie, so it may be done with trueth.

And let vs marke further, that heere God had an eye to the wicked affections that proceede of malice and rancour, rather than to the deede it selfe, as wee shall perceyue better in the thinges that remayne as yet to bee discussed. For I haue tolde yee alreadye, that in this place, GOD speaketh not onely of the giuing of false euidence in place of Iustice, and in cases where solemne othe is to bee taken: but but also of all slaunders and diffamations, because that after what sort soeuer a man backebite his neighbour, hee shall euer bee counted a false witnesse before God. If I wisper any man in the eare to diffame my neighbour withall: surely it is a false witnessing. It was true that I was not called before a iudge: I laide not my hande vppon the Booke: I performed not the rest of the ceremonies in taking of an othe: but yet wee see howe God speaketh of it: and therefore am I guiltie in that behalfe. But now must this bee considered: if I spie a fault in a man without bearing him any ill will, whether am I to bee counted a false witnesse before God or men for so doing? No. For God hath a speciall respect to the euill will and enmitie. Then if I hate a man and therevppon misreport him, caried thereto by the ildisposed minde that I beare towardes him: in so doing I am to bee condemned for a false witnesse. If I haue desire to backebite, and that vice doeth so reigne in mee, as I must needes be snatching at euerie man: surely I am a false witnesse. And Prou.10.12. 1.Pet.4.8. that is the cause why it is saide that loue couereth the multitude of sinnes, but hatred bewrayeth them to shame a man. Loe howe Salomon hath in fewe wordes, in this sentence touched the roote of the false witnessing which GOD hath forbidden and condemned by his Lawe: namely, that we bee ledde by hatred. And why? For if we loue one another, surely wee will indeuour to maintaine one another. We knowe it is as a kindling of a fire, when wee backbite any man, so as hee must needes bee angrie with vs in defence of his owne honestie: by meanes whereof all friendshippe is broken. So then, if wee had any care to maintaine charitie: we woulde hide other mens faultes as much as wee coulde. But if there bee any enmitie, then will our tongues runne ryot. If the heart bee venemous, it must needes haue a vent, and we must needes vtter the malice that lay lurking within. Let vs marke wel then, that in this text God condemneth all backebitings that proceede of malice, and ill will, when we hate any man, and woulde wish him vndone, so as if wee cannot anoy his person, nor hurt him in his goods, by bereauing him of his substance: wee fall to touching of him with some priuie nippe, and we will goe about to diffame him. If we doe so: it is a wicked roote, which cannot but bring foorth like fruits. That is the point that we must resort vnto, to haue the right vnderstanding of this commaundement of God.

Howbeit let vs marke by the way, that whereas it is saide that loue couereth the multitude of sinnes: it is not ment that wee shoulde flatter one another, and foster our vices by lying: but that we should not blowe them abrode vpon desire to diffame the parties, who possible might take such a stomacke thereat, that they might giue themselues ouer to al naughtinesse through shamelesnesse, as desperate persons do. Wherefore let vs marke well, that the holy Ghost intendeth not to make vs flatterers and fosterers of our neighbours vices, nor yet lyers: but that wee shoulde labour to reforme their vices as much as wee can, and yet notwithstanding beare with them, that we make them not desperate when they haue done amisse. For when a man seeth himselfe defaced, and that it is done vppon reuenge: it spyteth him, & he giueth himselfe to the doing of euill, and so hee hardeneth in it. Therefore when men are in an euill plight alreadie, if we reproue them boystowsly without any charitable affection: wee cause them to disorder themselues the more. And therefore if Gal.6.1. wee rebuke mens vices: let it bee doone with mildnesse, that the parties which are so rebuked may perceiue that our meaning is to drawe them backe from the way of destruction. And for the same cause doth Saint Iames apply this text Iam.5.20. to such as labour to drawe their neighbours to God, by good, gentle, and friendely corrections. Therefore if I see a man deale leawdely, and I tell him his faulte, so as by my warning I win him, that he returneth into the right way: beholde (saith he) then is this saying fulfilled, that loue couereth the multitude of sinnes. True it is that Salomon speaketh it to another end: but yet hath not S. Iames misapplyed this lesson of Salomons by a similitude, for he doeth vs to vnderstande, that our couering of mens sinnes, must not bee by winking at them nor by holding of our peace when God is offended: (if a man destroy himselfe, wee must not then dissemble to conceale his vices through loue: that is an ill practising of this lesson:) but we must rather vse good and brotherly correction, & therewithall finde the meanes that his faults may bee buried before God, & also not come in remembrance before men. Therefore it must content vs to haue brought our neighbours home againe: and wee must alwayes keepe this measure, that when the faults are amended, we must not diffame the parties if it bee possible, least they haue shame of their repentance, and fall into dispaire to the worldwarde. But this is ill put in vre: and we see how men do amisse in going too farre both the ways. For the meane way, (that is to wit of correcting mens faultes with gentlenesse, and of seeking to couer them to the ende that euerie man should be reclaimed, and in the meane while not bee diffamed:) will in manner neuer be kept. Why so? For our desire to haue friendshippe with men, is by flattering them. When wee see them offende God diuers wayes, we let it slip: and as wee woulde that our friends should spare vs, so do we beare with the naughtinesse that is in them. Yee see then that this is a wicked cloking, because Satan blindeth the wretched sinners by it: and we bee the cause of it, forasmuch as wee winke at the faults which we ought to rebuke. And yet that inconuenience sufficeth vs not. For the worlde is come to that point nowadayes, that we cannot seeme to be good friendes, nor to be faithful and trustie to those whom we mach withall, vnlesse we agree to all naughtinesse for their sakes. If they haue offended, & it come to the point that they must receiue rebuke or shame for it: we must rather fall to flatte perturie. And howe? Euen

thus men speake, Shal I willingly hurt my neighbour? I am beholden to him: and shall I depose against him? What a thing were that? Lo howe wee esteeme Gods trueth: Loe howe wee turne it into a lye. Loe howe wee abuse the commaundement that forbiddeth vs to diffame our neighbours. Wherefore let vs learne that this ouercockering is wicked when wee support the euill, and feed mens vyces. And specially when we be called and required to giue record, if we bewray not the euill truely which is to be corrected: wee shall bee guiltie of it as accessories to our power. I conceale a mutther, a robberie, a leawde, pranke, a briberie, a false packing: surely in so doing I intangle my selfe in al those crimes both before God and man. So then the foresaide couering of our neighbours sinnes through loue, doeth no whitte hinder the bewraying of them, when it is needful and meete to be done, & when we be required thereunto.

But there is yet another foule extremitie, worthie of blame: which is that wee be too hastie in blasing abroade the misdeedes which ought to bee reformed quietly, and without making too great brute of them. And this groweth somtimes of enmitie, sometimes of ambition or vaineglorie, and sometimes of a fonde desire to vaunt our selues. Sometimes it is of enmitie. For vnder colour that wee bee desirous to chastise vice, and that we be loth to haue God offended: wee fall to lying in waite for those whome wee hate, and to whom we beare any priuie grudge: and if we find any thing to be blamed or caught holde of against them: by and by their tale shalbee tolde, and wee abuse Gods name falsely in playing the zealous persons after that fashion, when wee seeke nothing else but to vndermine our enemies: And our malice appeareth the better in this, that hauing rebuked a vyce in one whom wee hate, we beare with it and cloke it as much as wee can in our friends, and keepe not an indifferent hande. And doeth not that bewray that wee doe it not of any good wil, and that wee make not warre against the sinnes and vyces, but against the persons rather? It may be discerned too easily. And therefore whensoeuer we goe obout to bewray mens vyces and sinnes, let vs vnderstand that our hearts must be cleare and free from all ill will, so as wee may protest before GOD that wee bee desirous both of the welfare and of the profite of him whome wee finde fault with. Let that serue for one point.

Againe wee must keepe our selues from all fonde ambition or vaineglorie, (as I touched afore:) which is, that we must not bee desirous to vant our selues before men as a number do, who woulde faine make themselues as holy as saints, by crying out against other men, and by finding fault with them. As soone as they spie a thing amisse: by and by men must bee charged with it, and all the world must know it. O this is a good zealous man: and yet in the meane while all is but a fooliish desirousnesse to vaunt himselfe. For this cause God doth oftentimes punish such pride, because they beare themselues in hande, that so they rebuke other men sharpelie, they themselues are saintes and halfe Angels: whereas notwithstanding, they dispence with many misdemeanors in themselues, and though they offende more grossely than those whome they finde fault with, yet will they needes haue men to beare with them. And why? Because they haue well chidden others. Yea and yee shall see some that are not ashamed to say, What? haue I not done well in rebuking euill? Seeing I haue behaued my self so stoutly, is it not ynough for mee? Yes, and if thou couldest not beare with other men, how wouldest thou haue other men to beare with thee? If thou haddest but one droppe of good disposition in thee, wouldst thou not hate the vice in thy selfe, as well as in another man? So then, when we crie out against our neighbours in rebuking them: let vs beware that we be cleare from all ambition. If wee will discouer the euill that wee perceiue in another bodie: let vs deale so orderly, as to beginne at our selues. If wee intende to condemne other mens faultes: let vs serch and examine well what is in our selues, and reproue our selues first: and then let vs steppe to our neighbours. That is the order which we must keep if we intend to proceed according to Godlinesse. But let vs marke that here God condemneth generally al iniuries and all backebitings, so as if wee doe but open our mouth to speak any maner of euill of our neighbours, we be condemned for false witnesses before God. Neuertheles it is not ment herby, that men shoulde conceale the euill that is knowen. For as I haue shewed heretofore, that wee must not foster mens sinnes through flatterie and lying, vnder pretence of charitable hiding of them, so must wee not say that blacke is white, vnder colour that wee bee forbidden to doe men wrong. And that is to bee marked well. For there are some which would faine that nothing at all shoulde bee condemned, but that men shoulde alter their speech, so as if there be a robberie committed, it shoulde bee termed by some other title, and vyces shoulde not bee condemned by their proper names. This is to bee seene: insomuch that if wicked men bee to bee reproued, which haue not onely offended God, but also caused others to play the naughtipackes as well as themselues, and are as an infection to poyson all the rest: if a man fall to rebuking of them iustlie as hee ought to doe: by and by there are a sort of these nycelings which take greefe at it. Yea (say they)? And ought men to proceede so farre as to goe vp euen into the pulpit, when they will crie out against vyces? A man shall see blasphemie reigning, and a man shall see open wickednesse against God and his word, a man shall see as shamefull disobedience as may bee, a man shall see so outragious occasions of offence as he cannot possiblie beare with them, except hee will be a traitour to God: and yet if he crie out against them, by and by he shalbee answered, what now? The Gospell teacheth you to win all men by gentlenes. Did not Iesus Christ cal sinners louingly vnto him, by forgiuing them their faultes? Nowe then shoulde the preachers of the Gospel vse such rigour? Verily as who shoulde say that Iesus Christes will were that men shoulde abuse his grace, to stablish the kingdome of Sathan, that sinne might haue full scope, and men winke at it and let it passe vncondemned. Nay, contrariwise, he saith that by the Gospel hee exerciseth a iurisdiction, to condemne the whole world. Beholde, the thing that he aimeth at, is that when we be tolde of our naughtinesse, wee shoulde bee so ashamed of it, as wee shoulde not knowe whither to flee for refuge, but onely to his grace, and that wee shoulde bee vtterly confounded in our selues. Therefore let vs marke well howe wee bee forbidden to diffame our neighbours, vpon any hatred or euill will: but yet wee bee commaunded on the contrarie part, to blame the euill, and to rebuke them lustily that doe amisse, to the ende wee may assay to bring them to good againe, and also make other men take heede, that they bee not corrupted by euill examples. This wil be the better vnderstoode, if on the one side wee take ỹ meaning of our Lord Iesus Christ, where hee saieth that whosoeuer calleth his brother foole, shall bee in daunger of hell fire: and whosoeuer doeth but grunt at him, is alreadie damnable. And on the otherside, whereas it is saide that wee must rebuke the fruitlesse workes of darkenesse: let vs abhorre the euill as sainct Paul himselfe saith, auouching to the Corinthians that if the Gospell bee preached as it ought to bee, they that heare it shall bee constrained to glorifie GOD, by casting themselues vppon the earth, that is to say, by beeing ashamed of their sinnes. And why? Because they be brought to light, where as they were hidden before. Whereas their sinnes were not knowen: they see themselues as it were diffamed before GOD, and that it is not for them to hide theimselues any more. Then if I doe but grunt of ill will against my neighbour, yea though it cannot be saide that I haue called him naughtipacke, vnthrift or foole, but that I haue but onely nodded my head at him, or made but a flirt at him with my finger: behold, it is a false witnessing before God. And why? For I despise my neighbour, and am desirous to shame him. And what moued me thereto? The misliking of him which I haue conceiued against him.

2. Cor. 10. 4. 5. 6.

Eph. 5. 11.

2. Cor. 14. 24. 25.

But on the contrarie part, if I bee desirous to giue my neighbour good counsell, and to seeke his weldoing, so as I am not ledde by any euill affection, but I woulde procure his welfare as much as in me is: I may well say vnhappie man, looke to thy selfe, it seemeth that thou intendest to sell thy selfe to the deuill, wilt thou bee a slaue vnder that cursed bondage? Thou shewest indeede that thou art witlesse and starke madde, seeing thou wilt receiue no warning. Wilt thou needes perish so vnhappily? Go like a wretch as thou art, euerie man ought to spitte in thy face. I may alledge all this to a man, and yet doe him no wrong. For why? I coulde not otherwise reclaime him. When I see that Sathan hath so hardened him, that hee had neede to bee quickened vp with maine strokes of the hammer: I may deale thus vehemently w him, and it is the next way to couer his faultes. For to what intent doe I so, but that they shoulde be pardoned at Gods hande, and that he should no more be diffamed to the worldward? It greeueth me to see him pointed at with the finger, it greeueth mee to see him a laughingstocke to al men, it greeueth me to see him set as it were vppon a scaffolde for all men to gase at: I say this geere greeueth mee: and therefore I labour to bring him into the right way againe. In so dealing there is no wrong at all. But yet for all this we must not take leaue to bee ouer bitter. For although wee bee verie well minded, and bee not caried with any euill intent: yet may wee soone doe amisse, if we be too sharpe in rebuking. And therefore doeth Sainct Paul warne vs expressly, to deale mieldly in rebuking such as haue offended. And why? Consider (saieth hee) that thou thy selfe also maist fall. Therefore let vs bee mielde and gentle to our neighbours, as wee woulde they shoulde bee to vs in like case. But howe soeuer the worlde goe, let vs speake of vyces without colouring of them, and let vs indeuour lustilie to correct offenders, according as they bee able to beare, and after as wee see them disposed: and let charitie and brotherly loue moue vs thereunto, for if wee pray God to guide and gouerne vs in this case by his holy spirite: the thinges that are spoken roundly and charitablie cannot bee counted an iniurie. Yee see then that the way for vs to keepe this commaundement, is to beware that wee doe not so much as once open our mouthes to speake one worde of rayling or slaundering, vppon enmitie or euill will: and yet notwithstanding to rebuke offenders plainly and mieldly as wee would that others should do to correct vs in like case if neede required. If we vse this vprightnesse then shall we not bee false witnesses against our neighbours.

Gal. 6. 1.

Furthermore let vs marke, that where as Falsehoode or Falsenesse is spoken of: wee bee not onely forbidden to inuent or forge any lye, so as the thing that wee speake shoulde bee continued without any colour of trueth: but if a man doe maliciously marre deface or disgrace the thing that is not euill of it selfe: beholde, it is alreadie a false witnessing. According whereunto it is saide that the parties which gaue euidence against our Lorde Iesus Christ, that he had saide, Destroye yee this Temple, and in three dayes I will builde it vp againe, were falsewitnesses: and yet not withstanding it is verie certaine that Iesus Christe had saide so, and that hee had spoken the selfe same wordes with his owne mouth. Why then are the reporters of them called falsewitnesses? The reason is, because they wrested the wordes of the sonne of GOD, to another sense than hee had spoken then, and therevpon went about to ground their owne furie, and to charge him with wicked slaunders, as though hee had spoken of the materiall temple of Ierusalem, whereas he ment his owne bodie, which is the very temple wherein dwelleth the fulnesse of the whole Godhead: for

Col. 2. 9.

1.Tim.3.16. for he is God manifeſted in the fleſh. So then, we ſee in fewe wordes, that the falſeneſſe which God condemneth here, is not the contriuing of ſome lie, nor the forging of ſome thing that was neuer done nor ſaide, ſo as we ſhould report ſome fable, and men ſhould not knowe what it is: but alſo a malicious wreſting or defacing of words that might haue beene well taken, and a turning of them to euill: if we doe ſo we are falſe witneſſes. As for example ſome are ſo frowarde, that as ſoone as they ſpie a thing that miſlyketh them, although it be not altogether wicked and vngodly: yet they fall to picking of ſome quarrell to it. O ſay they, ſee, ſuch a man hath done ſuch a thing. If they ſpie neuer ſo little a ſpot or ſpecke, there needes no more with them to make vertue become vice. If wee doe but miſconſter ſome one worde that is well ſpoken, beholde, wee miſcharge the partie, and his good reputation is wounded. Yee ſee then that we bee falſe witneſſes, not onely when wee inuent thinges that were neuer doone nor ſaide: but alſo when either by ſuttle caueling, or by any leawde and indirect ſlight, we wreſt the thing amiſſe which might haue bin wel taken. Nowe (as I ſaide) this commeth to paſſe nowe and then by reaſon that men are ouercaptious. And if they bee frowarde: needes muſt they turne all thinges to ỹ worſt. But it is ſaide that loue is not 1.Cor.13.5. miſtruſtful, as Saint Paul ſpeaketh of it: & therefore wee muſt be ſure that a thing is euill, before we condemne it. It is true that wee may ſometimes bee deceiued in diſcerning of good and euill: But when there are apparant ſignes and tokēs, and the matter is manifeſt as we may bee able to ſay, This is ill done: if wee be ſtill too much wedded vnto it, it cannot bee but ſinfull. And ſpecially if our nature bee ſo malicious as to bite men and to ſlaunder them where there is no cauſe: ſurely we be condemned for falſe witneſſes before God.

Nowe if they that are ſtout in rebuking vyces be to be condemned, whē their ſtoutnes proceedeth of too rigorous a minde: what ſhall they be whoſe doings ſpring of manifeſt hatred and which will needes miſconſter ſuch ſayings and doings, as might neuertheleſſe be wel taken, and haue no apparant fault in them? If they marre ſuch thinges by their lewde conſtructions: are they not falſe witneſſes before GOD? So then, let vs learne in fewe wordes to maintaine the honeſtie and welfare of our neighbours in ſuch ſorte, that whether wee rebuke them, or whether we ſpeake of their vyces to the intent they ſhoulde bee puniſhed, and that ſuch as might bee ſeduced and miſcaried by their euill example may bee reclaymed: let vs alwayes haue this regarde in our ſpeaking, namely that wee ſeeke their welfare and benefite as much as in vs lyeth, and that wee keepe ſuch an euen hand continually, as we diffame not men after ſuch a ſort as they ſhoulde bee out of heart with it. For wee ſhoulde rather burie their faultes to the vttermoſt of our power both before GOD and man, to the intent they may call themſelues home againe, and not forgoe all ſhamefaſtneſſe, and ſo ruſh out into all naughtineſſe. That is a thing which we muſt needs take heede of.

Nowe if wee will obſerue the thinges that are conteined heere: we muſt reſort to a higher grounde: which is, to conſider for what purpoſe God hath made our tongues, and to what ende hee hath giuen vs ſpeech: namely to the intent wee might impart our mindes one to another by communication. And wherevnto ſhoulde the communication of men tende, but to the maintaining of themſelues in charitie and loue? Therefore at a word, wee muſt learne ſo to bridle our tongues, as the vnion which GOD hath commaunded, may alwayes bee mainteined as much as is poſſible. And that is the cauſe why ſaint Iames vſeth ſuch earneſtneſſe in ſpeaking of euill wordes. Iam.3.5,6. The tongue (ſaieth he) is a ſmall thing, and but a little peece of fleſh: and yet it kindleth ſuch a fire, as is able to burne vp the greateſt woods in the worlde. Nowe let vs come backe to the ſaide grounde: which is, to vnderſtande that God wrought vs a ſingular benefite, in giuing vs abilitie to common together. Beholde, the thoughtes of men are ſecret: and yet the tongue ſerues vs to vtter our minds. Therefore let vs be circumſpect in vſing ſuch a benefite, that it bee not ſteined by our vice and naughtineſſe. And ſeeing that God hath giuen it vs to maintaine loue and brotherly good will one towardes another: let vs not abuſe it in babling, or in gadding vp and downe with it to ſowe rancour & malice among our ſelues, by wreſting our words amiſſe. Thus ye ſee where to we muſt come backe.

And when wee knowe generally, howe to auoide the crime of falſe witneſſing: foraſmuch as it is a hard thing to bridle our tongues: let vs take the more paine and heede to doe it. We ſee tha tmany euill wordes doe eaſily ſcape vs. And when we haue talked to and fro vnaduiſedly: becauſe wee bee accuſtomed to it, we thinke it is no fault before God. But let vs marke that foraſmuch as wee bee naturally too much inclined to ſpeake vndiſcreetely, and to caſt foorth wordes of blame and reproch againſt our neighbours: wee haue the more neede to indeuour to impriſon our tongues and to holde them downe. For though wee bee giuen to ſome one ſinne more than to others: that will not ſerue vs for excuſe before God. But when wee perceiue any fault in our ſelues, we muſt not flatter our ſelues in it, but rather bee ſorie for it and ſay, Alas I ſee this diſeaſe reigneth too much in me, and therefore I muſt fight the more ſtoutly againſt it, and I muſt by Gods grace inforce my ſelfe to attaine to the repreſſing thereof, ſeeing I perceiue that God condemneth it. And herewithall let vs bethinke vs of the threates that are giuen out againſt it. For whenas ſainct Paul ſaieth that 1.Cor.6.10. neither whoremongers, nor drunkardes, nor theeues, nor mutherers ſhall inherite the kingdome of heauen: he addeth alſo Curſed ſpeakers, and he baniſheth them likewiſe from all hope of life and ſaluation.

Nowe when wee heare theſe thinges, is it for vs to couer our ſelues any more with leaues, or to beare our ſelues on hande that there is no harme in ſpeaking euil of our neighbors? Thinke wee that the threate which God hath vttered by the mouth of S. Paul, ſerueth but to ſcare little children, and ſhall not bee executed vppon ſuch as will needes exempt themſelues from it, as it were in deſpyte of him? Yes.

So then let vs take paine in this behalfe: and to conclude, let vs ſpecially make this compariſon, that if God will haue vs to mainteine the good name of our neighbours, forbidding vs ſo ſtreitly to lay blame or miſreport vpon it, whereby their honeſtie may bee defaced: hee will much more haue vs to regarde his honour. For are wee not a hundredfolde more bounde to maintaine Gods honour, than to preſerue the good eſtimation of men: ſeeing wee cannot by any meanes benefite him? Yes: And therefore let vs beware that we beare not falſe witneſſe againſt God, according to Sainct Paules ſaying, who auoweth that ſuch as corrupt the pureneſſe of the Goſpel, are falſewitneſſes, againſt God and not againſt men. What is to be done then? Wee muſt maintaine Gods trueth, and deale ſo roundly in it, that foraſmuch as wee ſee the doctrine is good, wee beare it abroade and maintaine it, knowing that God hath ordeyned vs to bee as his deputies. Then if I ſee the trueth oppreſſed, I muſt not ſuffer it, to my power. Why ſo? God hath appointed mee to ſee that lying and vntrueth bee ſuppreſſed in his name.

And this is to bee obſerued moſt ſpecially, when the doctrine of ſaluation commeth in queſtion. As for example, when wee ſee the doctrine in daunger to bee falſified, and that men woulde mingle Leuen with it, to imbrewe men with falſhood and leaſings: in that caſe we muſt be zealous indeede, not ſuffer falſe witneſſes to haue their full ſwindge againſt God, vnleſſe we mind to conſent to them, and to bee partakers with them, as I haue declared alreadie. Finally let vs learne, that when wee haue liued in ſuch plaineneſſe among men, as it cannot bee laide to our charge that wee haue gone about to deface any man by ſlaundering, rayling, or backbyting: wee muſt alſo haue ſuch zeale to Godwarde as his trueth may continue ſounde, and be maintained to reigne among vs. Thus ye ſee in effect what wee haue to conſider vppon this commaundement.

Nowe let vs kneele downe in the preſence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to make vs perceiue them better than we haue done, and to leade vs more and more to ſuch repentance, as we may learne to bethinke vs of our ſinnes, to be ſorie for them, and to miſlike of them, that hauing obtained forgiuenes of them, we may learne to direct our life according to his holy commaundementes, ſo as he may be honored of vs with true obedience, & not onely with confeſſion of the mouth. That it may pleaſe him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs, but alſo to all people & nations of ỹ earth &c.

On Friday the fift of Iuly. 1555.

21 Thou ſhalt not luſt after thy neighbours wife, neither ſhalt thou couet thy neighbours houſe, nor his fielde, nor his manſeruant, nor his womanſeruaunt, nor his Oxe, nor his Aſſe, nor any thing that is thy neighbours.

IT might ſeeme at the firſt ſight that this commandement were more than needeth, becauſe that in condemning of theefte & whoredome, God ment thereby to repreſſe all wicked affections. For I told you that we muſt expounde theſe commandements according to gods nature, and we knowe that it is Gods peculiar office to ſerch mens hearts, ſo as he knoweth euen the deepeſt, ſecreteſt, and hiddeneſt thoughtes. It followeth then that in forbidding men to be theeues and whoremaſters, hee ment alſo to bridle their affections and luſtes. And indeede, if it were not ſo: God had no more power in making of lawes, thã mortal men. For if an earthly man condemneth whoredome, he will alſo condemne the intent of it. If there appeare a wicked intent, it ſhal be puniſhed. If Gods Lawe were no more but ſo: it were a matter of no great importance: for it were but a ciuil order to gouerne vs honeſtly to the worldward. But there is much more in it: for we ſee howe S. Paul ſaith, that the lawe cannot be kept without a pure conſcience and an vnfeined faith. If it bee requiſite for vs to haue ſuch a ſoundneſſe in vs, for the well keeping of Gods Lawe: it followeth that all wicked luſts were forbidden vnder the name of whoredome. As much is to be ſaid of the word Theft. Alſo we might alledge the authoritie of our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt, who is a faithfull expounder of the Lawe. For it is by his ſpirite, that Moſes and all the Prophets ſpake. Why then is it added heere, that we muſt not couet? If all wicked luſtes were ſpoken of before: why ſhoulde they bee repeted againe? Wee muſt marke, that in this place God meaneth not to repreſſe the affections that are fully intended and determined vpon: but the other affections or motions that ſtirre vs vp and prouoke vs although we neither ſticke to them nor conſent to them. This requireth a longer and plainer expoſition.

Mart.5.28. 1.Pet.3.19.

Sometimes Couetouſneſſe or Luſt betokeneth the will in man. As for example, when I ſee my neighbours goods and am tempted to couet them, and to luſt after them: Now if I feede this temptation in my ſelf, and giue my ſelfe the bridle: then doth the ſinne ſo ouermaſter me, that my wil is fully reſolued vpon it, and I would faine that thoſe goods were mine. This is a kinde of couetouſnes or luſt that carieth the will with it: for the partie conſenteth to the ſinne, and hee would put his wicked intent in execution, if hee were able. Nowe ſuch kinde of wicked couetings and luſtings were forbidden heretofore where it is ſaide, Thou ſhalt not ſteale, Thou ſhalt not commit aduoutrie. For there God hath forbidden vs, not onely the actuall deeds of theft and whordome: but alſo the verie luſting and longing after another mans wife, goods, or poſſeſſions.

But there is another kinde of couetouſneſſe or luſt, wherevnto we doe not altogether cleaue, as to conſent thereto and yet notwithſtanding it tickleth and moueth vs in ſuch ſort, as wee feele ſome euill prouocation in our ſelues, which is againſt God, & ſtriueth againſt the righteouſnes that is conteined in the Law. Thoſe are the luſts that are forbidden in this place.

And ſo we ſee, that God hauing alreadie condemned all wicked intents and purpoſes: doeth iuſtly adde, that that is not yet ſuch a perfection as he requireth at our handes: but that we muſt vnderſtande that all manner of affections which ſtirre vs vp to euill, [are ſinfull:] inſomuch that although wee determine not vppon any thing in our ſelues, ne purpoſe it at all, but onely that ſome luſting or liking doe glaunce through our heart: A ſinne is forthwith committed, and wee bee guiltie before God. We ſee then what manner of ſoundneſſe is required in this text: namely howe that our Lorde hauing alreadie forbidden wicked intents, addeth that all our ſenſes & wits muſt be ſo impriſoned vnder the feare of him, and ſo inflamed with loue and deſire to liue in all holineſſe: as wee may not bee moued or ſtirred one way nor other, by any wicked paſſion, to luſte after another mans gooddes or wife.

Seeing wee haue Gods meaning: nowe let vs ſee whereto he bindeth vs: for the Lawe ſhoulde be as a lookingglaſſe vnto vs, to behold our own wretchednes in. And when we once knowe our dutie: let vs aſſure our ſelues we be worthy to be condemned, if we draw not to the perfection which God calleth vs vnto. Thus yee ſee whervppon wee muſt ſtand, that wee may make our profite by this laſt commandement of the Law. And to the end we may take the better heede to it, and conſider that it is ſuch a doctrine as deſerueth well to haue our whole mindes applyed vnto it: let vs beare in minde howe ſaint Paul ſaieth, that whereas hee had beene counted a great doctor, and a wiſe man, and had beene trained vp in Gods lawe from his childhood: yet notwithſtanding he had beene ſo blinde that he wiſt not what Gods Lawe ment, vntill hee had beene conuerted, and that our Lord Ieſus Chriſt had inlightened him by his Goſpel, and ſo made him to knowe whereunto the Lawe ought to leade vs. Yee ſee then howe S. Paul had beene brought vp in ſuch ſort, that he was of great reputation among men, howbeit not among the heathen, as who ſhould ſay hee had beene ſome Philoſopher, but as one that had beene trayned vp in the Lawe of God. And as in reſpect of his life, he proteſteth ỹ he had bin vnblameable before men. Yee ſee then that S. Paul was a holie and a wiſe man in common account: and yet for all that, hee is but a ſillie beaſt as in reſpect of Gods Lawe. Why ſo? He ſaith that he thought himſelfe to bee aliue, and to haue beene righteous before God, not knowing that hee needed the mercy which God offereth to all ſinners. For hee abſteined from whoredome, and robberie and ſuch other things: and againe he had no euill intentes that any man coulde perceiue or knowe, by reaſon whereof hee thought himſelfe to be a righteous man. But at the length when God had pitied him, hee opened his eyes and made him to vnderſtande by this laſt word, Thou ſhalt not luſt. Loe howe S. Paul began to learne the lawe newe againe, whereof he had beene a teacher before. S. Paul making profeſſion of the Lawe wherein he had beene brought vp from his tender age, ſaith that vntill ſuch time as he had throughly bethought him of the meaning of this text: hee poſted ouer it as it had beene vppon burning coales as they ſay, ſo as he taſted not the ſtrength and power of the lawe, ne knewe what ſinne was that hee might condemne himſelfe and flee to Gods mercie for refuge, wherein the hope of our ſaluation lyeth, and ought to bee grounded. Seing that S. Paul could not conceiue the meaning of the lawe, nor attaine to the right vnderſtanding thereof, but by this clauſe let vs determine with our ſelues to trauell ỹ earneſtlyer in it. And ſith hee was ſo blinde all the time of his life vntill his conuerſion, that he vnderſtoode not that ſaying: wee ought to take the better heede of it, as I tolde you before. For wee be not of better abilitie than hee: but God muſt bee faine to ſhewe vs by his holy ſpirite, what is ment by this coueting or luſting, which is condemned in this place.

Rom. 7. 7.

But nowe beſides this, we haue here another warning which is right neceſſarie for vs. For the diuel hath labored to couer this commandemẽt after ſuch a ſort, as Gods intent and meaning might not be knowen, but that men might lightly paſſe ouer all wicked luſtes, which were ſeene to be ſinne, and whereof euery man might haue proofe in himſelfe. Inſomuch that men reſtreined this worde luſt, to none other affections than ſuch as import a reſolute purpoſe or full intent: but that is contrarie to the plaine meaning of Moſes. And let vs conſider what is come to paſſe in the Popedome. For although the Papiſtes cannot denie, but that to be prouoked and ſtirred vp to euill deſires, is a damnable fault, and ſpringeth of originall ſinne, and of the corruption which wee receiue from our father Adam: yet notwithſtanding they imagine that after baptiſme it is no longer ſinne, though there come a thought into a mans

minde to doubt of Gods promises, and to grudge and repine against him. If a man bee afflicted, and his heart riseth against it, so as he blameth God of vnrighteousnesse and cruelties that is no sinne say the Papistes. And they be not the small fooles that say so: but it is a generall resolution in all their diuelish Synagogues or Schooles. There is not any synagogue in the Popedome, wherein this point is not receiued as an article of the faith, namely ỹ though a man bee moued and prouoked by any wicked lust, yet it is no sinne: insomuch that if hee bee tempted to murther, to poyson, to committe whoredome, and to doe all the crimes and outrages of the world: yet if he do not consent thereto, nor assent, (for those are the two termes that they vse) that is to say, so they determine not fully vpon the matter to say I will goe through with my wicked intent, nor stande vpon it to delight in that wicked affection: it is no sinne at all, it is but an exercising of our selues in battell, whereby wee shewe our selues to bee valiant champions, and that sinne ouermastreth vs not. Indeed it is true that the faithfull doe well shewe that Gods spirite reigneth in them, by their beating backe of such temptations. And when they hold themselues in awe, and as it were imprison them selues, and resist those things because they know they bee contrarie to Gods will, and that hee condemneth them: it is certaine that thing sheweth, that God hath giuen them the vpper hande of sinne, and that his power is resident in them, and that they be stout champions to fight against Satan: but yet doeth it not followe, that they bee cleare from all fault, and that they can pluck vp sin, and fully deliuer themselues from it, as though there were not any spot or blemish more in them. Alas, we come farre short of that. For surely on the one side wee haue cause to praise God, for giuing vs the grace by his holie spirite to ouercome all wicked affections. But yet must wee sigh with all humilitie, acknowledging our selues to be weake on our part, and that if he pitied vs not, we haue such a wicked minde alredy in vs, as prouoketh his vengeance against vs, so as we shoulde well deserue to be vtterly destroied at his hande. Moreouer it was requisite that God should discouer the shame of the popedome, and shewe that the greatest clarks there, are duller witted than the sillie Infidels that neuer hard one word of holy scripture. Why so? For we must take that which is written in the Law. It is saide that the whole summe of the lawe is that wee shoulde loue God with all our heart, with al our soule, with all our minde, and with all our powers. If it had beene saide, Thou shalt loue GOD with all thy heart: very well, a man might haue concluded, that it is no sinne vnlesse thewil doe fully resolue vpon it and purpose it. For although the word Heart, doe sometime signifie the vnderstãding: yet doth the holy scripture take it also for the will. Nowe then a man might alledge this shift: it is saide that wee must loue God with all our heart: therfore so we haue not our will bent contrarie to goodnesse, it is ynough, we be quite discharged before GOD.

Deut. 6. 5. & 30. 2. Matt. 22. 37

For men woulde take the wil for the wicked affection, and so it woulde seeme that the wicked lustes which stirre vs vp and prouoke vs, are not comprised vnder the name of sinne, so long as they holde vs not captiue. But when as hee addeth, with all thy heart, with all thy thoughtes, and with all thy powers: let vs see whether a peece of my soule or minde be not alreadie corrupted, when I conceiue any thing against God, or when I conceiue any wicked lust of whoredome or robberie, although I sticke not to it. Is it to bee saide that I loue God with all my heart, when a peece of my minde is bent against him? The case concerneth not the very heart or will, as I haue declared afore: but the conceit that is in the soule of man. Now then, I shew that there is vanitie in mee, and that the feare and reuerence of God restraine mee not as they shoulde doe: and therefore it followeth that I am condemned as blameable, because I haue not discharged my self in louing my God as I am commaunded. Again, is there no power of my soule which is not applyed to the thinking of some one thing or other that is contrarie to God and his righteousnes? Yes. We see then that naughtie and wicked thoughts are to bee condemned, and wee must no more qualifie them that they shoulde not bee punished at Gods hand: and also that the men which neuer consented to euill so farre as to purpose and fully intende it, should not faile to be cursed before God, if hee lusted to vse rigor against them. Nowe therefore we haue the true and plaine meaning of this text, whereby we see that it behoueth vs to looke neerer to it, that we be not beguiled nor misledde. And S. Pauls example ought to pricke vs the more forwarde, seeing he confesseth himselfe to haue bin ignorant of Gods lawe, vntill our Lorde Iesus Christ had inlightened him by his holy spirit, to the intent he should know what was ment by the word: Lust, or Concupiscence.

Nowe must we apply the foretouched things to our benefite, and vse. First therefore let vs learne, that to serue God well, we must not onely be desirous to doe well, and go forwarde therein to effect: but also tidde our hearts from all euill affections and corrupt thoughts, so as al our sences may tende to the giuing of our selues all wholly vnto God. Let vs not shewe our selues to haue beene drawen aside to reele one way or other: but let vs bee throughly stayed, to runne forwarde without stopping or stunting, yea euen to runne forwarde in the way that GOD sheweth vs, so as there may be nothing but perfect pureness in vs. And when we once knowe that well: then must wee take warning to stande vppon our garde. For we see howe men runne astraye and dispence with themselues. And what is the cause thereof? It is for that they make their reckening without their hoste, as wee say. For they conster Gods lawe after their owne fancie, bearing themselues in hand that it is ynough for them, so they had none euill intent with them, not rested vppon the thing with determinate purpose. Tush say they, God imputeth none of all this. And thereupon they walke for warde in leawde luſts, with a towell of their owne tying before their eyes, that they may not diſcerne their owne ſecret deceiuing of theſelues. But yet when men haue ſpoken ſo, they cannot ſcape the hande of the heauenly iudge. And therefore let vs looke to the reſtreyning of our luſtes. For God hath condemned not onely the wicked intents and purpoſes: but alſo all the luſtes that prouoke vs & thruſt vs forward vnto euill. Wherefore let vs liue in the greater awe, and let euerie man holde himſelfe ſhort, euen becauſe there is no part in vs which is not infected with ſin. Let vs make a trial of al the powers of our ſoule, and wee ſhall finde that ſinne is ſhed throughout, like as when a poyſon is ſoked into a mans bodie, it infecteth him throughout, and ſo is there as it were an vniuerſall leproſie which hath ouergrowen the whole man, both bones, and marrowe, and thoughts, and affections, and all that euer is of him. Seeing then that our nature is ſo corrupted, ought we not to be the more vigilant to holde our ſelues in awe, conſidering that God by his lawe condemneth all wicked thoughts, that tende to the prouoking of vs vnto euill, inaſmuch as there is a certaine inward mouing that tickleth vs, and wee feele our will pricked forwarde, although it be not ledde quite and cleane away as a priſoner? Sith we ſee this, haue wee not good cauſe to gather our wittes to vs, and to walke the more warely and carefully vnder the hande of God? So then whereas wee bee drowſie and ſlothfull, and woulde faine diſcharge our ſelues to Godward with eaſe: yee ſee howe this commaundement ought to waken vs. But wee muſt vnderſtande that it is not for vs to ſcape by ſuch ſhiftes. And why? After that God hath condemned wicked intentes: hee proceedeth ſtill to the condemning of euill luſtes too. And that ought to ſtande vs to a dubble vſe. The one is, that we muſt pray to God the earneſtlyer, to gouerne vs with his holye ſpirite, and to cleanſe vs from all vices and corruptions, & that hauing prayed vnto him, euery of vs ſhoulde inforce himſelfe, and as it were doe violence to our nature, and to all our ſenſes and powers of minde, foraſmuch as there is nothing in vs but rebelliouſneſſe againſt the Lawe of God, euen as Saint Paul ſpeaketh not onely of mens willes, when he ſaith: that men in their owne frowarde nature are enemies to God, but alſo of their affections and thoughts. Hee vſeth a worde there, which extēdeth euen to the thoughts ẏ we conceiue. Al of thē (ſaith he) are enemies vnto God.

Rom. 8, 7.

Seeing it is ſo: let vs aſſure our ſelues, that when we haue takē neuer ſo much paine to hold our ſelues impriſoned vnder the awe of God: yet there will ſcape manie euill luſtes from vs, the which it behoueth vs to bewaile before God. And ſo the firſt point is, that we muſt be earneſt in calling vppon God, to gouerne vs by his holy ſpirit, and doe our indeuer and diligence to bridle our ſelues in ſuch wiſe as ſatan may not haue any hoole to enter at, nor bee able to make any breach vpō vs, to win the poſſeſſion of our hartes: but that we driue them a great way of, ſo as if we perceiue any thought tending vnto euill, wee ſtraitwayes preuent it and ſet a barre in the way ſaying: No not ſo, Thy God muſt haue the whol dominion of thee, ſo as he poſſeſſe, not only thy heart, but alſo all thy ſenſes. And for the ſecond point wee muſt learne to condemne our ſelues, that we may glorifie God in cōfeſſing our ſelues to bee all giltie, and that if hee call vs to a reckening, we be all vndone and caſt away, if he vſe rigor againſt vs. To that point muſt wee come, or elſe we ſhall neuer profite in Gods Lawe as wee ſhoulde doe. But here it might bee demaunded, ſeeing that God knoweth mens frailtie, why hee doth not either ſtrengthen them better, or elſe make a Lawe that were leſſe ſtraite and ſeuere? For it ſhould ſeeme that God ment to oppreſſe vs, when he forbiddeth wicked luſtes, and thinks it not ynough for vs to yeld him obediēce in our willes, without adding of the other worde. And that is the cauſe why ſcoffers ſay that God ment to mocke men in his lawe, and intended (as yee would ſay) to forbidde men to ſcratch, when hee made them to itch. But wee muſt come to the curſednes that is in our ſelues: namely that wee haue neither thought nor affectiō in vs, (as I ſaid afore) but the ſame is diſobedient to Gods righteouſneſſe. Therefore let vs not wonder though there be ſuch a battle betwene Godslaw & mens luſts. For why? when we haue throughly ſerched what is in vs: we ſhall find nothing there but vtter corruptiō and damnable vice: for we cannot conceiue ſo much as one thought which tēdeth not to euill. Foraſmuch as it is ſo: beholde, God giueth vs here a perfect rule of all goodnes and righteouſnes. Needes therefore muſt there riſe vp as it were a thundering, and the fire & water muſt needes ſhewe their contrarie workings. Nowe there is leſſe agreement betweene mans nature and Gods righteouſnes, than is betwixt fire and water. Therefore let vs not thinke it ſtraunge, that God doth ſo repreſſe all our luſts And when we heare the blaſphemies which the ſcoffers that I ſpake of, doe ſpew out: let vs abhor them as monſters. For inſteade of glorifying God for his righteouſnes, they come daſhing againſt him like wild and mad beaſts. Thus much concerning this point of the frailtie of men.

Nowe although it be ſuch: yet is it not to bee marueiled at, that God hath condemned it in his law. Why ſo? For in ordering of our life and in ſhewing vs howe we ſhould walke, God reſpecteth not what we be able to doe, nor ẏ meaſure of our ſtrength: but what duety we owe to him, & what righteouſneſſe is, although it be not to be found in vs. We be Gods creatures: and ought we not then to giue our ſelues wholly to his ſeruice? Yes certainly. That is a peremptory reaſon. And men may well grunt at it, but yet ſhall they alwayes finde proofe in themſelues, that foraſmuch as they belong to GOD, they ought to dedicate all their ſenſes, all their affections, and all that euer is in them both in bodie and ſoule vnto him. Howbeit let vs mark well herewithall, that wee cannot diſcharge our ſelues thereof: and what is the cauſe thereof but our owne naughtineſſe? And we take that from Adam. That followeth not. For although wee bee holde in bondage vnder ſinne, and this bondage hindereth vs from wel doing, and driueth vs to all euill: yet howſoeuer wee fare, the roote of it is in our ſelues, and euery man ſhall feele himſelfe blame worthie, ſo as wee ſhall not neede to ſay that wee bee driuen by any other force: but euerie man is caried and driuen to it

Iam.1.14. by his owne luſt. And ſo is there no more excuſe for vs. Whereby it appeareth, that it is not for vs to meaſure Gods Lawe by our owne power and abilities. Why ſo? As I ſayde afore, GOD reſpecteth not what wee can doe, nor what our abilitie can brouk: but he reſpecteth wherein wee bee bounde vnto him, and hee hath an eye to the perfection that is without vs. That is the thing which wee haue to marke. And it is the thing that beguyleth the Papiſtes. For they haue this principle among them, That Gods Lawe is not vnpoſſible to men. It is a wonder that they ſhould bee ſo ſtraught, and that the diuell ſhoulde bewitch them after that faſhion. For it is moſt euident and apparant doctrine throughout the whole Scripture, that men ſhall alwayes bee condemned by the Lawe, and that they muſt bee fayne to flee for refuge Gal.3.10. to Gods onely mercie. When Saint Paule goes about to prooue that all men are curſed for as much as all men are ſinners, and that there is not ſo much as one righteous man: what argument vſeth he? He alledgeth this text of Moſes, Curſed are all they that perfourme not the Deut.27.26 whole contentes of the Lawe. Nowe at the firſt bluſh, it ſhoulde ſeeme that Saint Paule reaſoneth amiſſe, and that the ſayde allegation is impertinent. Well then, it is ſayde that all ſuch as tranſgreſſe Gods Lawe are curſed: but yet it followeth not therefore that all mankinde is accurſed. For if a man keepe the lawe and diſcharge his duetie: in ſo dooing hee is exempted from the ſentence of condemnation. Some then there are to bee founde that haue perfourmed the lawe: and therefore all are not accurſed. Yes. But Saint Paule preſuppoſeth, that the lawe is vnpoſſible. And if he ſhould not preſuppoſe that: he had ſpoken as a witleſſe and vnreaſonable man. Therefore we ſee that the Papiſtes haue taken a grounde that is cleane contrarie to Gods ſpirit: and ſurely hee beſotteth them in ſuch wiſe, as they knowe not the verye Apſie of the Chriſtian faith and Religion. So then let vs marke well, that when wee treate of Gods lawe, wee muſt not meaſure it by our abilitie, nor looke what wee can doe: but wee muſt looke what wee owe vnto God. Yea but ſaye they, not ſo: howe ſhall wee doe then? For to their ſeeming all the worlde ſhoulde bee damned. It is true, and ſo is it meete that it ſhoulde bee: that is to wit, that wee ſhoulde all be damned, if wee will not haue ſaluation in Ieſus Chriſt. For howe ſhall wee ſeeke Gods grace, vnleſſe wee thinke wee haue neede of it? Men will not begge by their good willes. So long as we thinke our ſelues to haue any righteouſneſſe of our owne, wee will not paſſe to ſeeke any elſe where than in our ſelues. Therefore it behoueth vs to bee vtterly ridde of it, and to feele Gods wrath and death lying heauie vppon vs: for without that, wee will neuer vouchſafe to ſubmit our ſelues to God to obtaine mercie. But this deſerueth to bee layde foorth more at large.

Therefore let vs beare well in minde firſt of all, that when wee feele any ſinfull thought in vs, and our luſtes doe tickle vs vnto euill: we be guiltie before God. But here it might bee demaunded, how then? If a man doe but conceiue a thought, ſo as he not onely hath no will to abyde by it, but alſo miſlyketh of it euen before he haue felte any ſting or pricke of it: is this ſinne? Nowe there are thoughtes which touche not our heart at all, neither are wee mooued with them, neither doe wee conceiue any euill deſire. A thought commeth vppon a man as it were ſleeping, and it flittereth afore him. What? ſo as his heart is moued with it, or his deſire inclyned to it? No. When it happeneth but euen ſo to vs, ſurely it behoueth vs to bewayle it before GOD, and to conſider that if we were not holde backe by his grace: there were a gap open for Satan, and he woulde by and by winne the aduauntage of vs. Therefore wee muſt ſtil ſigh in this caſe. But yet doeth not God impute this for ſinne.

The ſecond poynt is, when wee not onely conceiue ſome euill thought in our minde, and ſome thing preſenteth it ſelfe before vs: but alſo wee bee ſomewhat mooued with it, ſo as wee feele ſome ſting of Satan pricking vs, and then is the ſinne conceiued: that is to ſay, although there bee no conſent as they terme it, nor any reſolute purpoſe: yet is the ſinne full ſhaped before God, and it is damnable. It is expedient to alledge examples hereof. It may bee that a man beholding another mans houſe or ground, conceiueth ſome lyght imagination, and yet is no whit mooued therewithall in his heart, ne hath any deſire to ſay, I woulde this were mine, but paſſeth it ouer and ſees it but vanitie. Hee can not let the comming of it into his minde, but yet (as I ſayde afore:) although it bee not matched with any euill affection, GOD doeth thereby warne vs of the infirmitie that is in vs, and it behoueth vs to humble our ſelues, and to bee ſorie, and to conſider that it is ſuch a fault alreadie, as wee are well worthie to bee condemned for. For let vs ſee if this bee to be founde in the Angels of heauen. No vndoubtedly. And yet the righteouſneſſe of the Angels is hardly and ſcantly anſwearable to the Lawe of God. In deede there is a righteouſneſſe of God (as wee haue ſeene in the Booke of Iob) Iob.4.18. which ſurmounteth the righteouſneſſe of the Lawe. But though the Angels of heauen giue themſelues neuer ſo much to the keeping of Gods lawe: ſurely the vttermoſt that they can doe, is but to frame themſelues to the rule that is giuen vs here. Nowe then wee ſee how it is a fault alreadie, for the which men ought to condemne themſelues, though they haue not had any wicked thing preſented before them, but euen a little heartriſing, ſo as a man ſhoulde ſay, I woulde, and yet for all that he doeth verie ſodainely beate it back, and yeeldeth not thereto, though I ſay, he ſo cut it off, yet is he guiltie of that coueting or luſting whereof mention is made here. And ſeeing it is ſo, let vs learne to condemne our ſelues in all reſpectes.

Againe let vs looke that wee condemne our ſelues dubble, when wee haue not onely had ſome heartriſing to prouoke vs to euill: but alſo ſome ſettled affection by nouriſhing the ſaid heartriſing, as when a woman breedeth childe and nouriſheth the conception till it come to the birth. Now then, when wee haue giuen head after that faſhion to our euill luſtes, ſo farre forth that our will is ouercome, and wee reſt vppon the euill to conſent vnto it: behold (ſay I) there lyeth a dubble condemnation vpon vs. And then muſt wee bewaile our wretchednesse yet more bicauſe we ſee a dubble condemnation hanging ouer our heades, vnleſſe GOD of his infinite goodneſſe doe ſpare vs. Thus ye ſee what wee haue to marke. Iam. 1. 15.

But nowe herewithall wee muſt reſorte to the remedie. For wee ſhoulde fall into vtter diſpayre and confuſion, if wee had not Gods grace to ſuccour vs withall. Therefore if wee acknowledge our ſelues blamewoorthie in all reſpectes: then doeth GOD call vs to him, and ſhewe vs that although the wicked luſtes which are in vs, bee ſinne of their owne nature: yet hee will not impute them to vs for ſinne. Then if it bee demaunded whether euill luſt, bee imputed for ſinne to the faithfull: I ſay no: but they bee two diuers thinges. For if ye haue an eye to the nature of the vice: ye ſhall euer finde it to bee ſinne: but yet GOD pardoneth it. After that manner ſhall no euill luſtes bee layde to the charge of the faithfull, for as much as they bee forgiuen through Gods free goodneſſe: and wee knowe alſo that all our ſpottes are wyped out by the bloud of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt: and therof is Baptiſme a good warrant vnto vs. For there haue wee our ſpirituall waſhing, to cleanſe vs from all the filth and vncleanneſſe that is in vs, that wee may appeare pure and cleane before GOD. So then our wicked luſtes ſhall not come to account. Nay (which more is) euen the deadly ſinnes, notwithſtanding that they proceede euen into the acte or deede dooing, ſhall not bee imputed vnto vs: verily euen bicauſe (as I ſaide before) God reſpecteth not that: and yet notwithſtanding he will that we haue an eye to it. Howbeit, if any man beguile himſelfe by bearing himſelfe in hand that he hath not conceyued any wicked luſt: it cauſeth GOD to call him to account. And why? For in as much as men ſoothe themſelues, it is meete that they ſhould be condemned. And for the ſame cauſe hath the Diuell brought to paſſe to bleare mens eyes by making them beleeue that none of all thoſe things is ſinne: in ſo much that wee ſee howe the Papiſtes imagine, that euen the groſſeſt faultes that bee, are blotted out by the ſigne of the Croſſe, or taken away with the ſprinkling of holy water. To their ſeeming they be matters of no weight, and they dally with God as with a little babie. 2. Iohn 1. 7. Eph. 5. 20.

But on the contrarie part let vs alwayes beare this in minde. And for as much as wee be not only too negligent, but alſo inclined to ſooth our ſelues in our own vices: let vs take this lookingglaſſe to behold our ſelues in. Let vs not deceiue our ſelues. A man may bee ſmeared or grimed, and euerie man ſhall laugh at him, and yet he himſelfe ſhall not perceiue it a whit. But if he go to a glaſſe, and there ſpie his face all beſpotted, he will ſhrinke away and go waſh it of. Euen ſo muſt wee doe. Surely the whole Lawe of God is as a glaſſe to ſhewe vs our foulenesſe, to the intent wee ſhould bee ſorie and aſhamed of our lewd doings. And if we will haue a true lookingglaſſe, we muſt come to this preſent commaundement as I haue ſaide alreadie. For as long as we reade no more but Thou ſhalt not ſteale, Thou ſhalt not murther, Thou ſhalt not commit adulterie: all is well, euerie man will beare himſelfe in hand that he is not guiltie. But when wee come once to this poynt, Thou ſhalt not luſt: it is a ſharp lancing knife wherewith God launceth deeper, to ſearch not only the bottom of our hearts, but alſo of al our thoughts, imaginatiõs and conceits. There is not that thing in vs which commeth not then to triall and knowledge. In ſo much that the things which we tooke to be no faultes at all, muſt be condemned before God, and hee muſt haue the iudging of them, vnleſſe wee play the iudges with our ſelues aforehand. And herewithall wee haue to magnifie the mercie of our God, in that although we be faultie ſo greatly & ſo many wayes, yet notwithſtanding he accepteth vs for righteous. Let vs make compariſon here betweene the righteouſneſſe which we obtaine by faith, and the curſe that is vppon vs. Whereinto be we plundged? Are we faultie but in ſome one offence, or in ſome two or three, or in ſome certaine nomber? Nay we be plundged in ſuch a gulfe, that if wee begin once to fall to reckening, wee muſt needes be confounded. A hundred Millions of faultes is not the hundred part of the offences that wee haue committed before God. Then are we ſo guiltie, as there is none ende nor meaſure of our ſinnes. Yet notwithſtanding God receiueth vs to mercie, ſo as wee bee counted as righteous before him, as though there were ſuch full ſoundneſſe and perfection in vs, that nothing were amiſſe, but that we had performed the whole Lawe. Seeing then that God forgiueth vs ſuch an infinite nomber of offences, and clotheth vs with his owne righteouſneſſe, through the operation of the death and paſſion of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, in as much as wee lay hold by faith vppon the grace that is purchaſed for vs, and do him the honour to ſay, Lord, it is in thy meere and free beſtowed goodneſſe that our ſaluation conſiſteth: doeth it not appeare therein, how much wee bee bound vnto him? Yes. So then, whē Gods Law hath brought vs to our wittes end, not only bicauſe of the infinite nomber of our luſtes, but alſo bicauſe wee ſhoulde lye buried vnder them as vnder huge mountaines, if God ſhould deale rigorouſly with vs: let vs call to minde that Gods intent is not to leaue vs in deſpaire, but to lift vs vp againe as Rom. 3. 22. & 23.

ſoone as wee be ſunke downe. When he ſees our feebleneſſe, he reacheth vs his hand, and calleth vs to him, and will haue vs to bee comforted, for as much as he of his mercie layeth not any of al our ſinnes to our charge. Thus ye ſee howe the faithfull ceaſſe not to be of good cheere, though they bee ſo condemned in themſelues. But yet muſt wee begin at this ende of being vtterly diſmayed in our ſelues, that our Lorde may deliuer vs from the dungeon of death, and wee acknowledge ỹ our ſaluation conſiſteth in his only grace. Howbeit let vs notwithſtanding liue warely and keepe good watch, aſſuring our ſelues ỹ when we haue trauailed neuer ſo much, and taken neuer ſo much paine to ſerue God, ſo as wee haue on the one ſide eſchewed all occaſions of euill, and on the otherſide ſubdued our affections, & luſts, & alſo indeuored to repreſſe al wicked thoughts: yet wee muſt not ceaſſe to condemne our ſelues ſtill, and to ſtand ſtill in awe. Although we haue had victory through the grace of God, and ſinne hath not ouermaiſtred vs: yet doth it dwell cõtinually in vs, and there is ſtill ſome vncleanneſſe and ſpot in vs. Therefore let vs ſigh, and let vs ſigh in ſuch ſort, as it may ſharpen vs to doe our duetie. We ſee how S. Paule ſpeaketh of it. After he had profited as much as might bee, and was come to an Angelicall holineſſe: yet notwithſtanding he ſaith ſtill, wretch that I am, who ſhall deliuer mee from this body of death? Rom.7.24. And what is the cauſe that he conſidereth death in himſelfe, but for that he ſawe ſinne there? Neuertheleſſe let vs vnderſtand that wee muſt not bee out of heart. Although wee perceiue a Million of ſinnes day by day in vs: yet muſt wee ſtill paſſe on further. And therefore when Saint Paule exhorteth the faithfull to eſchew ſinne: He ſaieth not, Let not ſinne dwell in you: but Rom.6.12. he ſayeth, Let not ſinne raigne in you. In deede it were to be wiſhed that ſinne dwelled not in vs: but ſeeing it is in vs, yet muſt wee not bee too much diſcomforted. For whereas it is ſaide that ſinne dwelleth in vs: firſt it warneth vs of our wretched ſtate: and ſecondly it willeth vs to conſider that wee muſt bee occupyed in continuall warfare, and therefore flee the earneſtlyer to our God for ſuccour, praying him to ſtrengthen vs with his power, by the grace of his holy ſpirit which he hath giuen vs for our Lord Ieſus Chriſtes ſake.

Nowe let vs fall downe in ỹ preſence of our good God, with acknowledgment of our faultes, praying him to make vs feele them better, and that wee may learne to frame our lyues to the obeying of him, which beholdeth not onely our outward woorkes, intentes and affections: but alſo euen all our thoughtes and conceytes. And for as much as wee can not attayne to ſuch perfection out of hand: let [vs beſeeche God] that the ſame may bee an occaſion to humble vs: and therewithall to ſtirre vs vp continually to fyght luſtilyer, ſo as euerie of vs may inforce himſelfe to correct the vyces that are in his nature, vntill our Lorde hauing rid vs from this corrupt fleſhe, doe clothe vs againe with his owne righteouſneſſe, and faſhion vs al wholly like to his glorious image. That it may pleaſe him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs but alſo to all people, &c.

On Tewſday the xvj. of Iuly. 1555.

The xlij. Sermon, which is the thirteenth vpon the fifth Chapter.

22 Theſe are the woordes which the Lorde ſpake to your multitude, vpon the Mount from the middes of the fire, out of the Cloud and darkeneſſe, with a great voyce. And he added no more thereunto, but wrate them in two tables of ſtone, and gaue them vnto mee.

FOr as much as wee finde not a better excuſe of our lewdneſſe & diſobedience towardes God, than to pleade ignoraunce: we coulde finde in our heartes to haue alwayes that ſhrouding ſheete, ſo as wee myght ſaye wee vnderſtand not what GOD ſayeth, or that hee ſpeakes not vnto vs, or elſe that his voyce is too farre off for vs to heare. But GOD foreſeeing ſuch lewdneſſe, meant to preuent all that men could alledge, to the ende they might haue nothing to defend themſelues withall. And therefore in ſetting forth his Lawe, it was his wil that the doctrine which is contained therein, ſhould be vttered with a loud & ſhirle voyce. Yea & he ſpake it not onely to three or foure, but to all the people, both great & ſmall without exception. Beſides this, it was his will that the lawe ſhould be put in writing, that it might continue, and not ſerue for one age onely, but ſtand in force and authoritie to ỹ worldes end. And ỹ is the cauſe why it is ſaid in this place, That God ſpake with a loude voyce. Hereby Moſes ſheweth that the Lawe is no hidden doctrine, and that men can not alledge that they bee not ſufficient learning: for not with out cauſe did God ſo lift vp his voyce, when he intended to giue a rule for men to liue by. It is Matt.5.18.

added expreſſely, That is was doone to the whole multitude. As if he ſhould ſay, It is true that God hath choſen men from among you to gouerne you, and that he hath giuen them his ſpirit: but yet for all that, he will haue his lawe knowen euen of the rudeſt and moſt ignorant, ſo as it may be a wiſedome common to all men. That is one of the pointes which we haue to marke here.

The ſeconde is, That God added not any thing more, after thoſe ten ſentences. Wherein Moſes doeth the people to vnderſtand, that this briefeneſſe which God vſeth, ought to incourage vs to receiue the thinges that he ſpeaketh. For if he ſhould lay great volumes before vs: we might replie, that all our life would not ſuffice to ſtudie them. God therefore was not ouerlong in giuing vs his woord. There are but onely ten verſes of them. Let vs count them vpon our fingers, and wee ſhall haue inſtruction ynough in all things that are requiſite for our life. Yea & herewithall Moſes meant to doe vs to wit alſo, that ſeeing God hath giuen vs ſuch a ſure rule, as he intended not to adde any whit at all to ỹ which he had ſpoken alreadie: it behoueth vs to holde vs to it, and it is not lawfull for any creature to adde aught vnto it. Thus much concerning the ſecond point.

For the third point he rehearſeth that againe which he had ſayde heretofore: that is to wit,

Deut.4.11. That God in ſetting forth his lawe, ſpake from out of the cloud, and that the mountaine ſmoked, and that there were flames of fire, and flaſhes of lightening flew to and fro. Whereto tendeth all this? That the doctrine might carrie the greater Maieſtie, and that men might be moued to humble themſelues reuerently before GOD, and to ſubmit themſelues wholly to his word, and to obey the ſame. Theſe are the three notable points which Moſes rehearſeth here, before he proceede to the reſt.

Now as touching ỹ firſt, let vs remember what hath bene ſaid afore, that is to ſay, That God ſpake loud and ſhirle: and not to a fewe folke, but generally to all the people: which thing was doone to make vs vnderſtand, that Gods woord ſhall bee cleare and certaine to vs, ſo wee playe not the deafe folkes wilfully. True it is that our wits are ſo weake, as we ſhall neuer vnderſtand one word of the things that God ſpeaketh to vs, except he

1.Cor.2.13. inlighten vs by his holy ſpirit: for the ſenſuall man vnderſtandeth not the heauenly thinges. Thoſe then are too high for vs. But whereof cõmeth that fault and vice but of our owne blindneſſe? Yet notwithſtanding, Gods trueth, as in reſpect of it ſelfe and in it owne nature, is eaſie & open ynough: and therefore let vs not charge it with darkſomneſſe. Againe, what is to be done, if we would haue God to make vs profite in his word? Let vs be lowely and of ſmall reputation:

Pſal.25.9. for it is not in vaine, that he hath promiſed to teache the lowely. Then let vs not truſt to our own wit, let vs not come with ouerweening and loftineſſe, as though wee thought our ſelues of ſufficient capacitie to iudge of the thinges that ſhall bee ſaid vnto vs: but let vs rather beſeeche God to open our eyes and to reach vs his hand, and let vs confeſſe that we haue not the aptneſſe to profite in his ſchoole, further foorth than he giueth it vs. If wee bee at that point: let vs not doubt but that Gods word will be eaſie to vs, and wee ſhall vnderſtand what he intendeth to ſay. Hereby we ſee what wretchednes hath bin in ỹ world, whereby the cõmon people, and welneere all other men haue bene plucked backe from reading the holy ſcriptures. For it hath bene an opinion, that it belonged to none but Monkes & Prieſtes: yea & in the end there was ſuch beaſtlineſſe, as it ſeemed that diuinitie ought to bee locked vp in cheſtes or caskets. But yet for all that, this record hath indured, and muſt indure to the worldes ende, namely that God hath ſpoken with a loude voyce, & not hidden or ſhrunke himſelfe aſide into ſome litle odde nooke. Therfore it was too ſhamefull a thankleſneſſe, that men haue ſo left Gods woord as it were in a wilderneſſe. And wee ought to marke this text ſo much the more, where it is ſaide, that God ſpake not to ſome Doctor onely, but to all the people in common, yea euen to the verie ſimpleſt ſort of them. In reſpect whereof we haue cauſe to magnifie the goodneſſe of our God, in reſtoring the benefite vnto vs, whereof wee ſee the moſt part of the world bereft, for their churliſhneſſe and retchleſneſſe ſake, ſo that now adays Gods word ſoundeth among vs, and we may reade it, and be partakers of it both openly and ſecretly, and the treaſures thereof are ſet foorth to vs, ſo as wee may inioy them: and that is an ineſtimable benefite, which wee ought to magnifie. Againe let vs be diligent in giuing eare to our God, and let no man alledge excuſes to ſhift himſelfe from him. For ſeeing that God ſpeaketh to all ỹ companie of the faithfull, euen to as many as are baptized in the name of our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt: let euery man on his owne behalfe and in his degree, indeuour to profite thereby, and let all of vs in common take God for our ſchoolemaiſter, and bee readie to hearken to him whenſoeuer it pleaſeth him to ſpeake vnto vs, which thing he doth daily. Thus much concerning the firſt point, where it is ſaid that God ſpake to the whole multitude.

Now let vs come to the ſecond point, that is to wit, That he added not any thing: and that is to the end that we ſhould be the willinger to heare what is contained in the Lawe. It is true that all that euer is ſet downe in writing by Moſes, belongeth to the Lawe. Likewiſe the thinges that the Prophets haue left vnto vs, and finally that which is added in the Goſpell, containe all one ſubſtance. And though the Byble be very great yet notwithſtanding GOD hath made it all to ame at one certaine marke, to the intent wee ſhould not goe wandering at rouers, nor bee driuen to make too much ſeeking whither wee ſhould goe. For why? All is referred to ten verſes, as I haue ſaid alreadie. Let vs recken vppon our fingers, and wee ſhall haue Gods commaundements, we ſhall haue a ſumme of the thinges which we ought to beare in minde, that we may be good ſchollers to Godward. Seeing there is ſuch briefeneſſe, muſt it not needes be that men are too froward, if they refuse such teaching, and can finde no leasure to profite in Gods worde? Now then, let vs forbeare all such trifling replies as this, Oh sir, the holy scripture is a deepe sea, it is a bottomlesse pit. If a man would enter into it, how should he get out againe? Let vs alledge

1.Pet.1.12. no such thinges. It is true ỹ in the scripture God sheweth such secrets, as euen ỹ Angels doe reuerence. It is true ỹ we can haue but a small tast of 1.Cor.13.12 the so long as we be in this world. It is enough ỹ we know in part (as sayth Saint Paul) & darkely, and ỹ we see ỹ thinges now as it were through a glasse, which we cannot see as yet face to face. All this is very true. But yet for all ỹ, God hath so abased and applyed himselfe to our slenderneſſe: that the thinges are become easie vnto vs, or at leastwise wee conceiue so much of them, as is auailable to our saluation. If we meet with things that are doubtfull: let vs haue this modestie with vs, that wee rush not too farre forewarde, till wee haue first asked counsell at Gods mouth, knowing that wee bee yet farre of from our perfection. Yet notwithstanding, wee may alwayes glorie, that according to the abilitie that is giuen vs, our Lord will not leaue vs in doubt and ignorance, without giuing of vs such certeintie, as we may walke safely on our way, so as we shall knowe that his calling of vs to him is not in vaine, and that wee bee not let loose to runne at rouers: but that wee haue a certeine marke set vp for vs to runne at, whereunto if wee hold on our way, wee ought not to mistrust that we shall misse, forasmuch as wee haue so good direction. Therefore let vs beare in minde, that our Lorde speaketh not here according to his owne nature.

For if he should speake in his owne language, should it bee vnderstood of mortall creatures? Alas no. But how is it that hee hath spoken to vs in the holy scripture? As nurces doe to their
1.Cor.3.1,2 little babes. Saint Paul sayth that hee did as a nurce doth with her little children, when hee preached the Gospel. And in speaking of himselfe, no doubt but hee sheweth the goodnesse of God, who ruled him after that sort by his holy spirite. And looke what was in Paul: the same doe wee finde lykewise in Moses, and in all the prophets. Then let vs marke, that God made himselfe nurcelyke, who talketh not to her little babe as shee woulde doe to a man, but hath a respect of the childes capacitie. So then, GOD did as it were stoope, because wee should not haue vnderstood what hee sayd, vnlesse he had lowlyed himselfe vnto vs. That is the cause why that in the holy scripture, hee shewes himselfe the rather lyke a nucre, to the intent to conceale his high and infinite maiestie, whereunto wee could not atteine, no nor once come neere it. Seeing that GOD hath yeelded himselfe so courteously vnto vs: there hangeth the greeuouser condemnation ouer our heades, if wee indeuer not to profite in the doctrine, which is (as yee would say) chawed to vs aforehand, to the intent that we should doe no more but swallowe it downe and digest it. Furthermore let vs marke well, ỹ where as Moses sayth, that God added not any thing to these ten sentences: it is to the end that this breefenesse should stirre vs vp, and incourage vs, knowing that Gods intent is not to make vs to wander as in a thing that hath neither brim, nor bottome: but to set vs downe these onely ten sentences. True it is that he expoundeth these ten sentences by Moses, and consequently by all the prophets: and in the ende wee haue had Heb.1.1.2. a finall exposition of them, made by our Lorde Iesus Christ, as it is giuen vs nowadayes in the Gospell. But what for that? Yet haue wee still this one marke to aime at, that there are but tenne sentences. Sith it is so, must it not needes bee that men are too frowarde, when they dispise such grace of GOD, and cannot finde in their hearres to come to him when he intreateth them so gently? Yes. So then this is the effect of that which wee haue to remember here concerning the easinesse which Moses sheweth to bee in Gods word.

And by the way let vs marke also, that hee intended to cut off all occasion of quareling, to the ende wee shoulde learne to bee contented with the simplicitie of the lawe: that is to say, that wee should not fall to controlling of GOD, by adding of collups and morsells of our owne to his worde. For when hee spake: hee spake once for all. And hee will haue vs to holde our selues to that which hee hath spoken, as we shall see hereafter, where he forbiddeth vs straitly to swarue
Deut.5.32. to the right hand or to the left, or to adde any thing at all to the doctrine thereof. And in deede, seeing that GOD himselfe hath not added aught vnto it: what are wee, that wee shoulde presume to take vppon vs aboue him? Thinke wee that when GOD gaue his Lawe, hee had lost his remembrance, and wist not what was for our profite? Can a man bethinke himselfe of any thing that is vnknowen to God?

Againe moreouer, when as our Lorde hath applyed himselfe so familiarly vnto vs: thinke wee hee meant to teach vs by halues, and to leaue vs in the middest of our way? No. Then let vs remember that seeing God added not any thing after hee had once spoken those ten wordes: it becommeth vs to yeelde our selues wholy to the simple doctrine that is conteined in his Lawe, without interlacing of any thing of our owne, assuring our selues that our perfect wisedome is to obey our God. Had this bin wel obserued: we should not be so greatly cumbered nowadayes in correcting ỹ corruptions ỹ reigne in the world. For wherof came the corruptiõ of Gods religion & seruice, that is is to be seene in the Popedome? The Papistes vaunt they serue God, when they vse their kyrieleysons, their holy, holy, holy, their ceremonies & other petie trash. And why? Because they tooke vppon them to adde to Gods word, so as they thought it not enough to serue God after his owne deuising: vnlesse men also did forge what they listed in their owne brayne. Therfore all ỹ euer is termed by the name of Gods seruice

Esa. 29.13. Ier. 15.13. is fulfilled in them, namely that they haue despised Gods commaundementes, and in the meane while giuen themselues to their own inuentions. The worlde sees what mischiefe hath insued through this diuelish malapeartnesse, that men durst disguise Gods word w their owne dreames and dotages. So much the more therefore doth it stand vs in hand to marke this text where it is sayd, that after GOD had once spoken, hee added not any thing to that which he had sayd. And in deede, (as I sayd afore) it is an horrible blasphemie, when men take vpon them to finde some better thing than is conteyned in Gods lawe. It is all one as if they would reproue him as a lyer, or say he was misaduised, or that he had forgotten what hee should haue commaunded. But can men finde any better way? No. Then let vs learne to submit our selues in such wise vnto God, as wee may alwayes beare in minde, that when God had once spoken, hee made a finall ende and conclusion, as if hee should haue sayd, Holde yee there, these are my boundes and listes: whosoeuer goes any further, hee shal breake his necke: so as there will bee nothing but falling, if wee keepe not the right way which God hath made and hedged in after that fashion. And although God speake not presently after a visible maner as hee did then: yet ought we to bethink vs oftentimes of this lesson which is conteined in his lawe. In deede God spake not twice: but hee spake once for all, as they say. Wee on our part ought to heare it often, according to this saying of the threescore and Psal. 62. 12. second psalme, the Lord hath spoken once, and I haue heard him: but my hearing of it was not for once and away, I haue heard it twice. Hereby wee bee warned, that it is not enough for vs to bestowe one dayes hearing vpon the thinges which our Lord hath willed to be set forth in his Psal. 1. 2. name: but wee must minde them continually. Then let euery of vs occupy himselfe in them morning and euening all the time of his lyfe, and let vs not cease to recorde well the thinges which our Lord hath told and declared vnto vs. For though wee should apply our selues to them all the dayes of our lyfe: hardely shoulde we atteine to the one halfe of our iourney. It is true (as I sayd afore) that our Lord will instruct vs so far forth as shall be expedient for our saluation: but yet for all, wee shall alwayes finde our selues to haue neede to profit more and more in Gods worde. Therefore let vs bee diligent, and let vs not think our labor lost when we take y way, and apply our whole study dayly thereunto, so as we neuer leaue searching and seeking out of the thinges which our Lord teacheth vs. Thus yee see how wee must put this sentence in practise, where it is sayd, that our Lorde added not any thing more.

Now let vs come to the third poynt, which is: that hee spake from the middest of fyre, Clowdes, and whirlewinde. In deede this hath bin expounded already heretofore: Howbeit forasmuch as it is repeated by Moses: let vs marke that it is not superfluous. And in deede, it cannot bee tolde vs too often, that Gods worde ought to carry a maiestie towardes vs, to make all our wittes to stoope and to submit themselues to it. And why? First wee see there is such pride in men, as they cannot bowe their neckes. It is true that they will not say that they intend to resist God or to bid him battell: but whatsoeuer they say, are they plyable and meeke as they ought to bee? No: they come farre shorte of it. Againe, there is a blockishnesse in vs, so as wee dote vppon these worldly thinges. Wee cannot rayse vp our wittes to apply them to the hearing of God. Wee cannot attaine to that spirituall wisedome, because our wittes are occupyed afore hand aboute the affaires and cares of the world, and we neede nothing to holde vs here beneath. Therfore it is greatly for our benefite, that our Lord shoulde touch vs to the quicke, to the intent we may yeelde such reuerence to his worde, as it may not dye, partely through our stubbornnes and partely through our blockishnesse: that is to say becauſe we be partly so dull, grosse, and earthly, and partely so forepossessed with vanities, that we mount not vpwarde, but are holde downe heere in these corruptible thinges. And therefore not without cause did God speake from the middest of fire, clowdes, and whirlewinde, when hee went aboute to set forth his Lawe. For it was expedient that the people shoulde bee touched with some feare, so as they might say, it is not for vs to daly with our God. Seeing he appeareth to vs with so greate and terrible maiestie: what should wee doe but tremble vnder him, and yeelde him such subiection as hee may rule vs as sheepe, and wee all of vs bowe downe our neckes and holde downe our heades, suffering him to wealde vs at his will, and giuing our selues in such wise vnto him, as wee may bee abashed when hee speaketh, and haue none other desire, but onely to serue and honor him, and to submit our selues wholy to his guiding? Lo here the cause why God did so magnify his lawe at the setting forth thereof. He could wel haue spoken without the casting forth of flames of fyre, without making the hill to smoke, and without hauing any thicke or darke clowdes about him: but it was his will to adde all these miracles, to the intent that the people shoulde bee afrayde. And therefore let vs marke, that hee intended to bring the prophet Esayes saying to passe: namely, that his Esa. 66. 2. spirit shoulde not rest vppon vs, excepte wee tremble at the presence of his worde. For the thing wherein he will try our obedientnesse towardes him, is if wee doe loue him so well, that as soone as hee speaketh, wee receiue his word without gainesaying, so as wee thinke it good and agree thereunto, saying amen, not onely with our mouthes but also with our heartes, and seruing him quietly all our lyfe long. For Gods requiring of the seruice whereby hee will bee honored at our handes, is to shewe the obedience which wee owe vnto his worde. Howbeit, forasmuch as wee bee so hard and heauy that we rather dragge backe, and cannot abide

to bowe downe our neckes to beare his yoke: we haue neede to be helped by all the meanes that are mentioned here. And therefore let vs marke that these flames of fire appeared not for that time onely, to serue no moe but them that sawe it: but also to the intent that the Lawe of GOD should beare record stil at this day, of how great authoritie it ought to bee, and to the intent the remembrance therof should be renued vnto vs, that by calling to minde what happened at that time, wee may bee humbled vnder the maiestie of our God, and that whensoeuer wee goe about to aduaunce our selues, or to bee tempted with presumption and pride, the burning fire that made the people agast at that time, & the thicknesse and darkenesse of the cloude, and the sight of the smoking mountaine, may come before our eyes and serue to holde vs in such awe, as all loftinesse my be beaten downe in vs, and we bee so wakened in good earnest, as we may come & yeeld our selues to our God to deale with vs as he list, and to leade ys whither he will, so as wee may follow him whithersoeuer we bee called by his mouth. Thus ye see whereto we must referre the things that are spoken here concerning the smoking of the mount, the flaming of the fire, and the thickenesse of the cloude.

Besides this, let vs marke further that Gods appearing in whirlewindes, and thicke cloudes after that sort, serueth to represse mens foolishe curiositie. True it is (as I haue saide alreadie) that God speaketh to the intent to bee vnderstoode, and therefore vseth no doubtful wordes, nor goeth about the bushe (as they say): but hath vttered his will so plainely, as wee cannot but be throughly instructed, vnlesse we ourselues bee to blame for that wee will not hearken to him. But yet for all this, we must not bee too curious and inquisitiue in seeking whatsoeuer seemeth good to our selues, as we see men commonly bee, who are inclined to such a desire of glorie, that their eares are euer itching, to heare and knowe this and that. But behold, here our Lord saith the contrarie: would ye faine knowe? Behold, here is a cloude to stoppe yee: see what a darkenesse is here. So then let vs learne that if we wilbe good scholers to Godward, wee must not giue our owne desires the head, to searche the thinges that ought to bee hidden from vs: but content our selues to knowe what GOD telleth vs, and tary vntill the day of full discouerie for ỹ knowing of the rest which we cannot yet comprehend. To be short, let vs be ignorant in the thinges that God vouchsafeth not to shew vnto vs. For this ignorance of not coueting to knowe more than our Lord giueth vs leaue to knowe, excelleth all the wisedome of the world.

Nowe let vs come to that which Moses addeth. Hee sayth, that the lawe was written in two tables of stone, and deliuered vnto him. Whereas hee speaketh of the two tables: wee must call to remẽberance what hath bin treated of heretofore: namely that God could well haue written all his lawe in one stone: but it was his will to write it in two that the destinction might the better leade vs to the vnderstãding of the things conteined in the law. For wee see that our Lord doth as it were chawe the thinges to vs which are set downe there, to the intent wee shoulde not alledge ỹ he speaketh to high for vs. Because there are two principall poyntes of our lyfe: our Lord hath deuided his lawe into two tables, of purpose to make vs to know how wee shoulde behaue our selues towardes him, and also how wee ought to liue with our neighbors. Is a man desirous to rule his life aright in all perfection? First hee must giue himselfe to the seruing of God, so as hee be sure what thinges God requireth and alloweth: and secondly he must liue so vprightly and euenly with his neighbors, as he may shewe by his doinges that hee is the very childe of God. The first poynt then is, to know how God wil be honored at our handes: and the second is to yeelde our neighbors their dewes, and to keepe this indifferencie of nature, of doing nothing to another, which wee would not haue done to our selues. So then, in the one table God hath shewed how he himselfe will bee serued, accordingly as I haue tolde you already ỹ he did set himselfe alone there, to the intent ỹ men should not inuent newe Gods: declaring therewithall that he will not be resembled by any images or puppets: but that forasmuch as he is a spirit, he wil haue vs to serue him spiritually, and not to deuise one thing or other on our own heades, but to yeelde him spirituall seruice: & moreouer that he will haue his name sanctified, by our exercising of our selues in his worde, & specially by forbearing [our owne wits,] & by renouncing our owne imaginations & affectiõs; so as we rest from our owne doings, to suffer our selues to be gouerned of God. These are the thinges conteined in the first table. As touching the second, we haue seene how he commanded vs there, to honor our father & our mother, and how he forbad vs murder, whoredome, theft, euil speach, & all maner of wicked lusting or coueting. That is the cause why God diuided his Lawe into two tables.

Esa. 58. 13.

Now then, wil we lead our lyfe aright? Let vs alwayes haue regard, first to honor our God, & afterward to liue vprightly and indifferẽly w̃ our neighbors. For there are some ỹ forbeare to doe harme to their neighbors, but in ỹ meane while they make no reckoning of God: but they thinke they shall go quite & cleare, so no man cõplayne of thẽ in the world. And I pray you what matter is it though we steale not frõ men, if we rob God of his honor? Is it not a heynouser crime to rob God of his honor, than to rob a man, or to cut his purse, or to rifle his cofer? Yes. Then let vs not think we haue all done, whẽ men cannot indite vs nor complayne of vs. For ỹ case standeth vpon yelding vnto God ỹ which he demandeth, ỹ which also is dewe vnto him. For we be bound to honor him all our lyfe long. Therefore it stãdeth vs so much the more in hand, to apply our minds to ỹ keeping of ỹ first table of the lawe, so as we lead not a philosophical lyfe lyke ỹ heathẽ, onely to behaue our selues honestly amõg men: but specially ỹ we haue Gods honor in estimatiõ & make that the firsf poynt which wee begin at.

Lykewiſe there are ſome others which wil needs cary a countenance of deuotion towardes God, and of great zeale to ſerue and honor him: and yet when they come to bee conuerſant among men, they pill, they poull, they quarell, and they be ful of crueltie, enuy, and malice. But let vs marke that God hath not ſeparated the two tables of his lawe. In deede he hath put a differēce betwixt them: but he hath not deliuered to ſome men the firſt table, and to otherſome the ſecond to keepe. Hee hath ſayd, this is my lawe: and looke what I haue ioyned together, muſt not be put aſunder. True it is that ye muſt be put in remembraunce of the loue that yee owe to your neighbors, that ye may goe through with it: But yet notwithſtanding, when ye haue diſcharged your ſelues of that poynt, yee muſt frame your ſelues to the other alſo. Lykewiſe when yee ſhall haue ſhewed great deuotion in the worſhipping and ſeruing of me: ye muſt not bee careleſſe to liue iuſtly and vprightly with your neighbors. Alſo there are many that bee deſirous to ſerue God: but after what ſorte? Euen as the papiſtes doe: after their owne fancie. But our Lordes wil was to bridle vs in his giuing forth of the firſt table, to the end we ſhould learne to ſerue him as he commaundeth vs, and not lyke well of any thing but that which he alloweth for good. Thus ye ſee whereto this ſaying is referred, that God wrate the lawe in two tables.

And his wil was to write it in two tables of ſtone, purpoſely to the intent it ſhould continue: For it was not giuen for any little time, neither is it tranſitorie. True it is that the ceremonies had an end. And in that reſpect the lawe is called temporall: namely becauſe the order that had bin ſtabliſhed among the people of olde time, to continue till the comming of our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt, was then aboliſhed, and thinges were made perfect, ſo as wee be no more vnder the ſhadowes & figures which ſerued for that time. Neuertheleſſe, the ſubſtance and trueth of the lawe ſerued not for that one age onely, but is a thing that ſhall indure for euer, and neuer faile. Wherfore let vs learne, that Gods ſetting forth of his wil at the going of his people out of Egypt, and his ſpeaking to them vppon mount Sinay was after ſuch a ſorte, as he prouided and tooke order therewithal, that his doctrine ſhould ſtand in force for euermore. And for that cauſe did he ſet downe his lawe in two tables of ſtone, and not write it in barckes of trees as the maner of wryting was in thoſe dayes, or (as we might ſay nowadayes) in paper or parchment: but his will was to ingraue it in ſtone as an euerlaſting monument, to confirme vs the better in the thinges that he had ſayd. For he was not ſatisfied with the ſpeaking of it for that onely day: but by ingrauing it in ſtone, his intent was that wee all our life long, ſhould giue attentiue eare to heare what he tolde vs. Yet notwithſtanding, ſurely Gods ingrauing of his lawe in ſtone after that ſorte, would ſerue to ſmall purpoſe, vnleſſe it were alſo ingrauen in our hearts. What is to be done then? Let vs aſſure our ſelues that the doctrine which God ſetteth downe vnto vs, is behoofefull and neceſſarie for vs, and yet it ſhould ſtand vs in no ſtead, vnleſſe hee added a ſecond grace, which is, ỳ the thing which he hath vttred be forthwith printed in our heartes and bowels. Then lyke as God wrate his lawe at that time in two tables of ſtone with his finger, that is to ſay with his power: ſo now he muſt be fain to write it with his holy ſpirit in our heartes, which are ſtony and hard as the prophet ſheweth, where he prayeth God to giue vs heartes of fleſhe, that may be ſoft, lythe, and plyable to receiue whatſoeuer he ſhall ſay. Nowe then ſeeing that God hath ſhewed vs viſibly, ỳ it belongeth to him to write his Lawe, that it may be well knowen: let vs beſeech him to vouchſafe to write it in vs now adayes by the power of his holy ſpirit, to the end wee may holde it faſt, as the diuell may neuer wype it out of our remēberances, doe what he can.

And herewithall Moſes concludeth, that the Lawe was deliuered vnto him to bee the preſeruer and keeper therof, and to bee the miniſter and dealer forth of it to the people, ſo as euerie man might acknowledge him for a Prophet. For otherwiſe he could not haue executed his office, nor haue builded Gods Church, except mē had knowen that that charge had bin committed vnto him. Likewiſe now adayes, if we were not perſwaded that it is Gods will, ỳ his Goſpell ſhould be preached by the mouthes of men, and that there ſhould be Shepheardes in his Church to beare abrode his worde: who would vouchſafe to come togither? Neither I, nor any other creature is of abilitie to traine men to come to receiue the thinges that are to bee vttered by my mouth. When I ſpeake here in the name of God, and men giue eare to the doctrine, to ſubmit themſelues to it and to doe him homage: it is more than all the lawes and proclamations of kings and Emperors can doe. Is the mortal man the doer thereof? No. But when we once knowe it to be Gods will, that this order ſhoulde bee in his Church, and that it ſhould bee kept vnuiolably: namely that there ſhould bee ſheepheards to beare abroad his worde and to expounde the ſame, which ſhould be as meſſengers to bring tidings of the forgiueneſſe of ſinnes in the name of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, and to rebuke, reproue, comfort, and exhort: when we (I ſay) doe vnderſtand it to be Gods wil, that there ſhould be ſuch gouernment in his Church: then are wee aſhamed to withſtand him ỳ hath created and faſhioned vs. So then, ye ſee now why Moſes ſayd in this text, that God deliuered him his lawe for himſelfe, Trueth it is that God gaue it for all the people in generall, as I ſayd afore. Why then is Moſes now the poſſeſſor of it? It ſhould ſeeme that God meant to bereaue all his people thereof, and that none ſhould bee priuiledged but Moſes, ſo as the lawe ſhould be reſtrained vnto him, and the reſidewe be as it were ſhut out from it. But it is not ſo. For although the Lawe was giuen for all the people: yet was Moſes made the protector of it. And looke what God hath ſpoken of him: we muſt extend it yet further, accordingly as we heare that the prophets phets were put in the ſame commiſſion, to bee as it were diſpoſers or dealers foorth of the treaſure of ſaluation, and of Gods couenant, ſo as their office was to ſhewe Gods will from time to time, and to bring vs worde of it in his name.

1. Cor. 4. 1.

And the generall rule which Saint Paul giueth vs, is that men muſt eſteem vs as Gods miniſters & as dealers forth of the ſecretes which he ſendeth to the world. Now whereas Saint Paul ſayth wee bee dealers forth of Gods ſecretes: he ſheweth vs thereby, that it is not enough for vs to haue the holy ſcripture, and to reade it euery man at home in his houſe: but it is required that it ſhould bee preached vnto vs, that wee ſhould haue this order of being taught by the mouthes of men, and that there ſhould bee ſhepheardes to ſerue Gods turne, to the ende ỹ by giuing eare vnto them, wee might profite more and more in the doctrine of ſaluation. And for the ſame cauſe doth Saint Paule ſay in another place, that the Church is the piller of

trueth, and as it were the ground and ſtandard of the trueth. The Papiſtes alledge this text full doltiſhly, to clayme priuiledge to themſelues to deuiſe newe articles of fayth, and to lode men with lawes at their owne pleaſure. But Saint Paul meant the cleane contrarie: For hee ſaith that the Church is the piller or ground of Gods truth, becauſe that ſeeing God hath vttered his trueth to men by his Lawe, and by the Prophetes and Apoſtles: his will is that the ſame miniſterie ſhould indure continually, namely that there ſhould bee men ordeined and appointed to the office of expounding his worde, and of building vp his Church. Then let vs vnderſtand, that after that maner the Church is the meane of vpholding Gods trueth founde and vnappayred. For when God rayſeth vppe men indued with his ſpirite, to confirme vs in the faith, and to inlighten vs, and to ſhewe vs the right way: by that meane Gods trueth continueth in the worlde, ſo as it is not quenched nor vtterly done away. Let vs mark then that Moſeſes meaning here, is not to make him ſelfe the onely poſſeſſor or owner of Gods lawe, and to ſhake off the people and to ſhutte them out of the gate: but to vtter his minde plainely to this effect: my friendes, in deede the Lawe is common to vs all, all of vs are Gods children, I chalendge no more to my ſelfe in that behalfe than to you: but yet will I diſchardge my ſelfe of the commiſſion that God hath giuen mee, which is that I ſhould ſerue you for a faithfull expounder of the Lawe, and bee as a keeper thereof, that yee might not thruſt it vnder foote, nor forget it for euer, but alwayes bee put in minde of it by mee. Sith it is ſo: let all miniſters of Gods worde looke that they bee readie prepared to ſerue the ignoraunt: and let all men conſider howe it is not for vs onely to reade the holy ſcripture, but wee muſt alſo be diligent to profit therein, and humbly come to ỹ hearing of thoſe whom he hath appointed to be his miniſters, to giue vs the expoſition & vnderſtanding therof. Thus ye ſee whereto this text is to be referred.

Now let vs kneele downe in the preſence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to make vs feele them better, and to drawe vs dayly to ſuch repentance, as our whole deſire may be to ſerue him and to pleaſe him, without ſeeking any whit of our own will. And that foraſmuch as we be ſo greatly giuen to worldly thinges, it may pleaſe him to drawe vs from them, and therewithall to graunt that wee may ſubmit our lyfe to his will, and frame it to his righteouſneſſe, and that for the bringing thereof to paſſe, his worde may ſo ouerrule vs, as wee may bee gouerned by it, and all our whole lyfe be framed thereafter, vntill that being quite rid of all our fleſhly affections, wee be clothed againe with his heauenly glory, at ſuch time as wee ſhall haue no more neede, neither of writing nor of preaching. That it may pleaſe him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs but alſo to all people and nations of the earth. &c.

On Wednesday the xvij. of Iuly. 1555.

The xliij Sermon which is the fourteenth vpon the fifth Chapter.

23 And when yee heard the voice from the middeſt of darkeneſſe: becauſe the Hill burned, yee came to mee, all the heades of your tribes, and your Elders.

24 Then ſaide you, Behold, the Lord our God hath ſhewed vs his glorie and his greatneſſe, and wee haue hearde his voice from the middeſt of the fire: This day haue wee ſeene that GOD hath ſpoken with man, and man is ſtill aliue.

25 Now then: why die wee? for if wee heare the voice of our Lord God againe, this great fire will deuour vs, and we ſhall die.

26 For what man is hee that may heare the voice of the liuing God ſpeaking from the middeſt of the fire as we doe, and yet liue?

27 Goe thou and heare whatſoeuer the Lord our God ſhall ſay, and then tell thou vs what the Lord our GOD saieth to thee: and wee will heare it and doe it.

WEe bee of opinion, that where as God causeth his worde to be preached vnto vs by ỹ meanes of men, if he spake to vs in his owne maiestie, or sent some Angell to appeare vnto vs, wee would bee the better touched, and all the world would bee conuerted by and by, and euery man obey without gainesaying or rebelling: but wee knowe not what is for our owne benefite and behoofe. For if wee looke vppon our owne frailtie: it is not possible that God should make vs feele his power, but it shoulde be to our vtter vndooing and destruction. Now therefore when men are desirous that God should come downe from heauen, or manifest himselfe by some visible token: they know not what they bee, nor how frayle their state is. For did they wel consider it, they would bee agast at Gods infinite glorie, knowing well that they were not able to abide it. Besides this, let vs assure our selues that God tendereth our welfare and saluation, in shewing vs his will by the mouth of men, when hee ordeyneth and appoynteth them to be ministers of his worde, to bring vs such message as hee knoweth to bee for our benefite. Neuertheless, it was his pleasure to auowe it by open proofe to mens faces, that it is not good for them to heare his voyce thunder from heauen. And that is the cause why hee thought good to giue forth his lawe, not simply by Moses, but by comming downe in his owne person, as I haue declared already, and as I tolde you yesterday that the lightninges and whirlewindes, and the flaming of the fire, and all that is written in the ninteenth and twentith chapters of Exodus, was done euery whit of it to the end that the people of Israell should learne to yeede reuerence to Gods word. And this lesson belongeth to vs also. For Gods intẽt was that the remembrance of those thinges shoulde indure for euer, and that they should be put in vre continually. So then, we see here that God hath vttered his glorious maiestie once for all, to teach vs to receiue his worde with all reuerence and lowlynesse.

Exod. 19. 18. 19, & 20, 18

But yet furthermore hee intended lykewise ỹ the people should bee driuen of themselues to say, It is not good that God should speake to vs againe. Onely let vs haue a man to bring vs the doctrine which it shall please him to send vs. And this rule serueth to condemne vs, if wee followe not this people which stepped forth to say so. And if any man alledge, that the thinges which were spoken at that time cannot binde vs: The answere is easie, namely that if God should doe the lyke at this day, that is to wit, if hee should speake ỹ thinges with his owne mouth, which we heare at the mouthes of men: it were impossible for vs to abide his glory, wee should bee vtterly vndone. And therefore let vs learne that this is rehearsed vnto vs, to the ende that in the person of the people of Israell, wee might vnderstand that God applyeth himselfe to our slenderneesse and infirmitie, and that in voutsafing to send vs his worde, to bee preached vnto vs by men lyke our selues, whome hee maketh his messengers: hee hath respect to our benefite and commoditie: and therefore it proceedeth of a foolish and inordinate lust in vs, to desire that hee shoulde appeare to vs from heauen, or that hee shoulde worke any visible miracle: for wee cannot comprehend his glory and maiestie.

Furthermore although the proper nature of the lawe bee to fray folke: yet notwithstanding, the same may also bee verifyed of the Gospell. For wee must take it for a generall rule, that as soone as wee perceiue Gods presence, we must needes bee abashed. Wee see how the very Angels doe hide their eyes, because Gods glory is too great for them, and they be driuen to confesse that they bee too feeble, as creatures. And what will become of vs then? For wee be inferior to the Angels, and besides that, wee holde not still the vncorruptnesse of our nature. Wee be not as wee were created: that is to say, we be not earthly men as our father Adam was, but wee bee vtterly corrupted, so as there is nothing but sinne in vs: and therefore God is faine to be as an enemie to vs, and wee bee faine to shunne his throne, as offenders shunne the seate of the Iudge to the vttermost of their power. To bee short, we be but wretched wormes and caryons. Nowe then, looke how soone God commeth neere vs, wee must needes be dismaied, yea and vtterly stryken downe. And therefore (as I haue touched already) it is to our benefite that God sheweth himselfe after that fashion: that is to wit, by the meanes of men, so as hee appoynteth men to shewe vs his will as well as if hee spake himselfe, and hee will haue vs to receiue his word with as great reuerence, as if we heard him thundering from heauen. But yet it will bee good for vs to vnderstand more at large, the thing that I haue touched in one worde: namely that the Lawe frayeth vs far more in comparison than the Gospel, as is declared also more at length elsewhere. And why is that? Because that in the Lawe God requireth that which is due to him at mens handes. But now let vs see if wee be able to discharge our selues of it. No: but contrariwise wee bee lyke wretched detters, which haue not one dodkin nor dodkins woorth.

Esa. 6. 2.

Now then wee be vtterly vndone. For whatsoeuer come of it, God dischargeth vs not, but sheweth vs that wee deserue to bee cursed and damned at his hand. And for the same cause, after he hath shewed how the lyfe of man ought to bee ruled: he addeth this curse thundering downe vpon them: That they be all accursed which performe not all the thinges that are conteined there. As if hee should say: All men must bee faine to yeelde themselues guiltie in this behalfe, and from the greatest to the least they must all knowe that they be in my daunger, and that I may sinke thẽ downe to the bottom of hel.

Deut. 27. 26.

I doe

I doe already pronounce this ſentence, & there is no man able to reply againſt it, Behold then ye are all loſt and condemned: This is the language of the Lawe, and the ſpeach that God vſeth there: and now muſt not all men needes quake at it? Yes. So then it is not ſayd for nought that the lawe frayeth vs, and that we muſt needs bee forlorne, ſo long as God liſteth to demaund his due at our handes with rigor. But the caſe Exo.11.19. ſtandeth not ſo with the Goſpell. For there God
2.Cor.3.3 beareth with vs, and not onely forgiueth vs our ſinnes, but alſo wryteth his lawe in our heartes. And moreouer although wee ſerue him but by halues: yet doth hee pardon vs our defaultes, and as it were winke at them. And lyke as a father will not preſſe his childe too ſtraitly: ſo doth God vſe a fatherly gentleneſſe towardes vs in the Goſpell, to the intent wee ſhould not bee afraid to come vnto him. In reſpect where-
Heb.12.18.20 of the Apoſtle in the Epiſtle to the Hebrewes, ſayth that wee bee not come to this ſmoking mountaine, wee be not come to mount Sinay to bee aſtoniſhed at the ſight of burning fyre, and at the ſight of the lightnings and of all the other thinges that were done there to abaſh the people; but that wee heare a gratious and pleaſaunt melody, wherein we be accompanyed with the Angels of heauen, with the ſoules of the holy patriarkes and other fathers that liued vnder the hope of lyfe, notwithſtanding that they had as then but darke ſhadowes of it, and ſo GOD coupleth vs with thoſe, that waited in olde time for the comming of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt. Seing it is ſo: we muſt not recoyle backe, but goe ſtill on foreward with a chearefull courage to heare our God, becauſe he ſpeaketh to vs ſo kindely, and with ſo fatherly ſpeach, as doth not ſcarre away his children, but rather (as ye would ſay) allure them. This difference then is to be marked well, that it may make the Goſpell amiable to vs in compariſon of the Lawe.

But yet for all this we muſt come backe againe to the generall principle: which is, that it is much better for vs that Gods word ſhould be preached vnto vs by the mouthes of men, than ỹ God himſelf ſhold thunder it downfromheauen. And why? For let vs but here the naturall thunder, and by and by we be aſtoniſhed, and yet is nothing expreſſed there, God doth but (as yee would ſay) braye with a confuſed noyſe. What would come of it then if hee ſhould ſpeake to vs, & ſhew vs his glory? We feele ſuch a weakeneſſe in all our ſenſes that we cannot ſo much as looke vpon the ſunne which is a corruptible creature: and how then can we beholde gods maieſtie, if it ſhewe it ſelfe to vs playnely and in full perfection? And therefore it is ſayd that no man liuing can ſee God, and not dye and bee vtterly conſumed. Trueth it is that God ſhewed himſelfe to Moſes, and that, not as he did to the pro-
Exo.33.11. phets, not in dreame nor in viſion: but with a ſpeciall priuiledge, and (as it is ſayd in Exodus) face to face as a man ſpeaketh to his friend, and with ſo great familiaritie, that he was after a ſort exempted from the companie of men, that hee might become the more familiar with God.

But yet for all that, the trueth is ſo that GOD ſhewed himſelf vnto him but in portion & meaſure. For had he ſhewed himſelfe in his infinite being: what grace of the holy ghoſt ſoeuer Moſes had receiued, hee muſt needes haue bin vtterly ouerwhelmed. In deede once in his lyfe God ſhewed him his glory more fully than euer he did: but yet for all that, he ſawe but as it were the backe parte of him. In the which ſimilitude is expreſſed vnto vs, that when wee ſee but the backe of a man, wee ſee not the chiefe part of him, (for the chiefe ſight of a man is in his face:) ſo although Moſes had ſpeciall familiaritie with God, inſomuch that in ỹ ſouereigne ſight which was ſhewed him in the mountaine, he was ſeparated from the ſtate of this mortall and tranſitory lyfe, and was as an Angell of paradiſe: yet notwithſtanding he ſawe God but in part, as if wee ſhould ſee a man but on the back. Therfore let vs be contented when God vſeth the lyke order with vs: (that is to wit, that his worde bee preached vnto vs by men:) and let vs receiue it as if wee ſawe his maieſtie face to face. And why? For it is good for vs that ſhepheardes are ordeined to bee miniſters of his worde, becauſe we ſhoulde be vtterly confounded by the glory of God, if it were manifeſted to vs to the full.

And to the ende that no man ſhoulde haue cauſe to complayne, as though Gods doctrine were not ſufficiently ratifyed, but ỹ it were to be doubted whether a man might holde him to it or no: therefore did hee ſhewe himſelfe in the ſetting forth of his lawe. And wee haue record of it heere, in that the people ſay, It is the Lorde. This day hath bee made vs to ſee his glorie, and his greatneſſe: and wee haue ſeene that it is euen hee that hath ſpoken vnto vs: hee hath not put any other perſon in his place, but we haue heard his voyce with our owne eares. This was done but once for all. Howbeit let vs take the thinges that are reported here, to bee as a record that Moſes ſpake not on his owne head, nor deuiſed the doctrine of his owne brayne, which we receiue of him: but that hee was a faithfull ſtewarde to Godwarde, who aduoweth him ſo to bee, and not onely ratifyed his doctrine with miracles, but alſo declared in his owne perſon, howe it was hee himſelfe that was the author of the doctrine that Moſes taught. And foraſmuch as it was good reaſon that the Goſpell ſhould bee authoriſed as well as the Lawe: wee haue had recorde likewiſe from heauen, that the ſame is not a doctrine of man, but that it proceedeth of God. And this is the thing which Saint Peter 1.Pet.1.17. toucheth in his ſecond Epiſtle, ſaying that hee 18. & his fellowes had heard the voyce from heauē, whereby the father proclaymed his ſonne the chiefe maiſter and teacher of all his Church, ſaying, this is my welbeloued ſonne, heare yee him.

Seeing then that this voyce hath thundered from heauen: God hath ſhewed that wee muſt not take the Goſpel as a doctrine bred here belowe, but we muſt alwayes haue the ſayd maieſtie before our eyes. Lykewiſe noweadayes if we will bee Gods true diſciples, wee muſt at our reſorting to ſermons, remember what Moſes rehearſeth, namely that the lawe was giuen forth in ſuch ſort, as God was the ſpeaker thereof. Againe in the ſecond place we muſt adde the teſtimonie that I am about to alledge, ſo as the foreſayd ſaying of God may euer ring in our eares, whereby he proclaymeth our Lord Ieſus Chriſt to be the onely partie whom he will haue men to heare. Loe here the perfect ſeale whereby Gods word e hath full and perfect authoritie among vs as it deſerueth, notwithſtanding that it be brought vnto vs by mortall men.

Furthermore to the intent that men may not thinke that Ieſus Chriſt is not to bee heard, but onely in his owne perſon: hee ſayth, hee that Luke 10. 16. heareth you, heareth me, and hee that refuſeth or deſpiſeth you, deſpiſeth mee, and him that ſent me. In deede the Pope and his champions lyke a ſort of traytors to God, vſurpe that ſaying to mainteine their owne tyrannie: but it belongeth as much to them as to the diuell of hell. And why? for firſt they ſhould bring vs the pure doctrine of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt. For the ſonne of God hath not reſigned his office to men to be ſpoyled thereof, hee will not haue vs gouerned after the lyking of men: but hee himſelfe will alwayes haue the preheminence and ſoueraignetie ouer vs that was giuen vnto him. Now then, whereas hee ſayth that in hearkening to thoſe whome hee ſendeth, wee harken to him: his meaning is, that if wee obey the doctrine of his Goſpell, without deſpiſing of it when it is preached to vs by men: it is all one as if hee himſelfe ſpake to vs, and wee muſt not in this caſe reſt vppon the outward appearance.
2. Cor. 4. 7. And that is it that Saint Paul meaneth in ſaying, that although wee be brittle veſſels, yea and as broken veſſels of no valewe nor worthineſſe: yet the ineſtimable treaſure that is committed vnto vs, is not ỳ worſe or of leſſe eſtimation & valewe therefore. True it is ỳ we cannot purchaſe the word of God ſuch reuerence as we faine would. And why? For we haue not any thing in vs (I meane of our own) wherby it may be ſayd ỳ God ſhoulde bee exalted: but yet muſt wee approue our obedience in this behalfe, namely that wee deliuer God his worde with ſuch boldeneſſe, courage, and power as if hee himſelfe ſpake in vs. And herewithall let all lofineſſe be corrected in this caſe, and let euery man receiue the doctrine of the Goſpell in ſimplicitie, and without diſputing or ſcanning why we be bound to ſubmit our ſelues to mortall men. For in aſ-
Luke 10. 16 Matt. 17. 5. much as it were a deſpiſing of Gods ſonne, yea and of the heauenly father himſelfe who ordeined him to bee the chiefe teacher, if wee ſhould not heare thoſe whome hee ſendeth as his meſſengers: it ſtandeth vs in hand to yeelde in Luke 9. 35. ỳ behalfe. So then let vs learne to bowe downe our neckes and to beare the yoke of Gods ſonne by receiuing ỳ doctrine of ỳ Goſpel with all humilitie, though it bee preached vnto vs by men.

And as I ſayd afore, let vs thinke well vpon the ratification that was giuen thereof, which ought to bee enough to make vs to vnderſtand, that the lawe was brought from God himſelfe, and that the Goſpell alſo was warranted and ratified from heauen, when God pronounced with his owne mouth that he would haue vs to hearken to his ſonne. That is the effect of the thinges which wee haue to remember vppon this text. And therefore let vs followe the example of thoſe which are ſpoken of here, and let vs not couet that God ſhould come down frō heauen to feede our humors: but let it ſuffice vs ỳ he vouſafeth to cōmunicate his word vnto vs.

But it ſhould ſeeme at the firſt ſight, that heere were ſome contrarietie. For firſt the people ſay, This day haue wee ſeene how God ſpeaketh with men, and that they continue aliue ſtill: and afterwarde they ſay againe: wee dye if God ſpeake to vs. For by all lykelyhoode, if wee haue once found by experience ỳ God ſpeaketh to vs without deſtroying of vs: it ought to imbolden vs. And why? For ſeeing wee remaine aliue ſtill after wee haue heard the voyce of God once: why ſhould wee not doe ſo ſtill after twiſe or thrice, as well as after once? And here the people ſay, Wee haue heard the voyce of God: but if hee ſpeake to vs againe, wee dye for it, wee bee vndone, wee bee forlorne. It ſeemeth that they truſt not to Gods goodneſſe, but rather that they be vnthankefull, in that they acknowledge not the benefite which God did for them in letting thē continue in their ſtrength. But wee muſt marke how the people ſhew here, that they wil not try God any further, and that it is enough for them to haue had that one experience, that the lawe was not a thing inuented by man, but that God was the author thereof. Therefore it muſt be taken as if they had ſayd thus: This day haue we ſeene that God hath ſpoke to men, and they remaine ſtill aliue: that is enough for vs: we intend not to abuſe Gods patience in this caſe: he hath ſpared vs to day, but wee muſt not looke ỳ he ſhould doe ſo euer: he hath giuen vs a tryall for this once, & that was becauſe of ỳ lewdneſſe & hardneſſe of our heartes. For were we worthie to haue him appeare to vs in his glory? No: but he knew ỳ we would neuer be fully tamed & ſubdued to his obediēce, except he had come in his viſible glorie, & made vs ſo afraide as we had bin at our wits end. Therfore if he had not won vs ſo by force, he knew wel that we would haue bin always as wild beaſts. But ſeing it hath pleaſed him to pardon the fault that we haue cōmitted, & to beare with vs this time: we wil not fal to it again: for ỳ were ouermuch: it were a skorning of his patience. So then, this one recorde ſufficeth vs, both for our owne liues and for the liues of our children, & ſo forth for euer to the worlds end, ỳ they which come after vs may knowe ỳ it is not for vs to draw God out of heauen any more, as though he ought to be but our mate. Thus yee ſee how theſe two ſayings agree very wel.

Now hereupon we haue to note, ỳ although Gods word be of force to bring vs to naught: yet he vſeth ſuch mercy towards vs, that wheras it ſhould cōſume vs, it giueth vs life. And whē I ſay ỳ Gods word can bring vs to nought: I meane not ỳ word alonely as Moſes diſcribeth it here: but alſo that if our Lord liſt to make vs feele the power of his word, it would vtterly vndo vs, notwithstanding that it be vttered by men. Neuertheleſſe wee ſee how our Lord quickeneth vs by his word, ſpecially now adayes by the preaching Iohn 5.24. 25. of his Goſpell. For that which is ſpoken in the fifth of Saint Iohn, is dayly accompliſhed: namely that as many as heare the voyce of the Sonne of man, are reſtored to life. For naturally we bee ſtraungers to God, and baniſhed from his kingdome, and ſo by that meanes wee bee as it were in our graues. But here our Lord Ieſus Chriſt offereth vs the remiſſion of our ſinnes, and God his father adopteth vs for his children: and ſo doeth he ſhewe vs the light of ſaluation, and we bee quickened againe by meanes of the Goſpel. And therefore wee haue good cauſe to glorifie our GOD in that he maketh his woorde to ſerue to deliuer vs from death and to reſtore vs to life, notwithſtanding that it bee of power to conſume vs, at leaſtwiſe if he turned it not to the contrarie vſe.

But by the way let vs marke well, that if our Lorde haue at one time giuen vs more than we deſerue: wee muſt not therefore take leaue to tempt him, and to ſubdue him ſtill to our luſtes, as wee ſee the Papiſtes doe nowe adayes, who excuſe themſelues of their not comming to the Goſpell, bicauſe they ſee no myracles wrought in our time. No ſurely. But whereto ſerue the myracles that our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt wrought, and which he committed to his Apoſtles to doe likewiſe? Shoulde thoſe ſerue to no purpoſe at this day? Ye ſee then ỹ God vttered an excellent po-

Luke 4.41. uels themſelues did homage to ỹ glorie of God which was vttered at that time: and to be ſhort, GOD ſhewed both from aboue and beneath, that the Goſpel came from him, (as I haue tolde you already,) as well by the healing of diſeaſes, as by al the other myracles ỹ were wrought. And this ſerued not for ỹ time onely, but the remembrance thereof continueth vnto this day, and it behoueth vs to receiue that record to ſeale vp our faith withall, to the end wee may not doubt, but that our Lord maketh his Goſpel of as great force by them at this day, as he did at the ſame time that they were ſhewed. Yet notwithſtãding wee ſee howe the faithleſſe doe ſtill alledge, that if they ſawe myracles, it woulde conuert them. But it is certaine that if they ſaw neuer ſo many myracles, yet would they continue in their ſtubbornneſſe, & take occaſion of greater rancor againſt God. What is to bee doone then? Let vs learne to bee contented, as I ſaid afore. If God haue giuen vs more than he owed vs, let vs receiue it with thankſgiuing, & learne not to prouoke him to wrath, nor to tẽpt his patience. That is the thing which we haue to remember in this text, where the people ſaith, let not ỹ Lord ſpeak to vs any more, for it ſuffiſeth vs that wee haue heard his voyce once already, and that yet notwithſtanding, he hath let vs liue ſtill.

And to the end that the thinges which I haue declared heretofore may bee the certainer: let vs beare in minde how it is ſaid here, Was there euer man that heard the voyce of the liuing God, and continued ſtill aliue? Here it is ſhewed vs that the people of Iſrael ſpake not in their name onely: but as it were for all mankinde in common. They ſay not onely, who are wee, but what is all fleſh? And in deede, (as I ſaide at the firſt,) it muſt needes bee that men are beſotted, when they cannot humble themſelues. For they neede no more but to looke to their owne ſtate and to ſay, what are wee? There is nothing neither in our bodyes nor in our ſoules, but all maner of frailtie, (I mean not, as we may be conſidered in our nature as we were firſt created:) But now be- Rom. 8.7. ing fallen as wee bee, what are wee but as water Eph. 2.3. that glydeth away, & as a ſmoke that vaniſheth away? Nay, which wors is, we be enemies to god, and he muſt needes be againſt vs, bicauſe he findeth nothing in vs but ſin and frowardneſſe. And therefore when wee bee tickled with our fonde luſts, ſo as we would faine that God ſhould work myracles, and that we might heare Angels from heauen: let vs repaire to that which is tolde vs here, and ſay, What is all fleſh? Let vs (ſay I) enter into conſideration to ſee what wee bee: and our owne vnabilitie will teach vs ſufficiently, to praiſe God for not making vs to feele his preſence to conſume vs and confounde vs: but to make vs feele it in ſuch wiſe as it may drawe vs to him with amiable gentleneſſe, by hearing mẽ like our ſelues, and our owne brethren ſpeaking as it were in his perſon.

And whereas the people of Iſrael ſay, What people is it that euer heard the voyce of the liuing God, and continueth ſtill aliue, as wee haue done: it is to ſhewe that this deede of his ſhould not bee drawen into a common example, [ſo as others ſhoulde looke to haue him doe the like.] And therefore let vs not ſay, why doeth not GOD ſpeake to vs now adayes after a viſible maner, as he did vpon Mount Sinay? It pleaſed him ſo to doe: but it is not for vs to lode him with any law, or to binde him to do ſtill as he hath done once heretofore. Therfore (as I ſaid erſt) let vs not abuſe Gods grace, neither let vs fall to diſputing with him, to ſay, ſeeing that God did ſo at other times, why ſhould he not do ỹ like now adayes? For when men auaunce themſelues after that faſhion, it is a diueliſh preſumption. Wherefore let vs yeelde God ſo much honour, as to giue him leaue to manifeſt himſelfe to vs as he himſelfe liſteth, and as he knoweth to be expedient, and let vs not bind him to any neceſſitie, vnder colour that he hath vouchſafed to ſhewe ſome ſpeciall fauour at ſome time before. Let not vs threape vpon him to doe the like againe, but let vs be contented with his ſingle wil, for it becommeth vs to be ſubiect therevnto.

In the ende it is sayde, Goe thou to God, and heare what hee will say to thee, and bring vs woorde thereof, and wee will heare it and doe it. Heare we see first, that the people desireth Moses to bee their Spokesman, and to bring them woorde what he receyueth at Gods hand. Nowe this is written for vs, that all men shoulde submit themselues to the order that GOD hath set in his Church. For (as I haue sayde afore) his will is to speake to vs by the mouthes of men. That is the cause why hee woulde there should Matt. 28. 19. bee Ministers. It was not deuised by men: but Luke. 10. 16. our Lorde Iesus Christ hath tolde vs that hee will haue that kinde of gouernment in his Churche. Nowe then, that there shoulde bee shepheardes in the Churche, to preache godly doctrine, which it behoooueth vs to receiue for our owne saluation: it is an inuiolable ordinaunce, and such a one as proceedeth ffom GOD. Sith it is so: let no man striue against it, but let vs beare it patiently, and when GOD raiseth vp men to serue him, in bringing vs the message of saluation: let vs not grudge that euerie of vs hath not the same preheminence: for it is his will that his bodye (that is to saye his Church) shoulde bee gouerned after that fashion. Ye see then that the thing which wee haue to gather vppon this text, is, that seeing God hath ordayned Ministers of his woorde, we must hearken to them quietly, and not beare any spyte or malice in our heartes, though all of vs bee not teachers, nor put in that office by GOD: for wee must yeelde our selues to his will as I haue told you before. Let that serue for one point.

But by the waye, let vs marke also with what condition wee must haue shepheardes. For this text teacheth vs to discerne betweene ỹ deceyuers ỹ abuse Gods name falsly, by taking vppon them ỹ title of prelates without cause or reason: & the true Prophets, the good seruants of God, & the Ministers of the Gospell. The Pope & all his rable will surely say that men ought to hearken vnto them, and to receiue their doctrine wout gainsaying. And why so? Bicause it is Gods will ỹ there should be prelats in the Church, and that men should heare them and obey them. All this is true. But yet for al that, hath he set vp the title of Prelacie without discretion? No, but he hath also declared therewithall, that he himselfe will continue chiefe stil, so as we must obey him, and not be in bondage vnto men. Seeing it is so, we must consider what maner of Prelates & teachers God sendeth vs. And that is, (according to the contentes of this text) ỹ they must hearken what God sayes vnto them, & afterward report the same faithfully to the people. Therfore they that are desirous to be heard in Gods name, and will haue their doctrine receiued reuerently: must first hearken vnto God, so as they take not vpon them to adde any thing to his woorde, but yeeld themselues teachable vnto him. And whē they haue learned at his hand: let them deale forth the things to others, which they haue receiued. For no man shall euer bee a good Minister of Gods word, vnlesse he bee a scholer first, so as he take not vpon him as a Maister ouer other men, to tell them what he listeth. And a mā must not be ouerwise in this case: for God reserueth to himselfe the office of appointing what things he will haue vs to know. It is not said here simply, Hearken what the Lord will say to thee, and then come and bring vs word: but it is said, Hearken vnto all ỹ the Lord shall say vnto thee, so as there bee not one point nor one article omitted. By meanes whereof Moses is restrained of all libertie here, and not permitted to report any thing, but that which God cōmandeth him, as we haue seene alreadie in other places. And Deut. 4. 2. what are nowe these rascals, that dare auaunce themselues aboue Moses? We shall see in the end of this booke, that there was neuer any Prophet Deut. 34. 10 raised vp with such grace. And in deed, although we see there was a wonderfull spirit in Esay, & in all the rest of the Prophets: yet is Moses preferred before them all. Whereas it is said, be mindfull of the Lawe that was giuen you in Horeb: Malachie which spake last of all the Prophetes, Mal. 4. 4. doth notwithstanding referre all to Moses, as if he had bin the first teacher, & as though the law were the fountaine from whence wee ought to draw all things. Now seeing that Moses being so greatly preferred, & hauing so excellent preheminence giuen him of God, might not for all ỹ, take vpon him to speake aught of his own head, but was bound to deale forth the things faithfully to the people, as he had heard them of God: is it not too diuelish a pride now adayes, that lewd lozels should aduaunce themselues so farre as to say, ỹ it is in their power to lay lawes vpon mens consciences, and to binde them vnder paine of deadly sinne? Is it not too barbarous a tyrannie? Therfore to the end we fall not into the two extreme vices: let vs hold the meane way that is shewed vs heere: which is, that sith it is Gods will to haue his Churche gouerned by the outward preaching of his word: euerie of vs must submit himselfe thereto, and be diligent in hearing of Sermons, and hold this as a holy & reuerent order: to wit, ỹ we should be taught by the mouth of men. And yet in the meane while, men must not haue authoritie to bring vs what they list, but they must be faithfull dealers foorth of 1. Cor. 4. 2. Gods word, so as we may euer be able to protest, that our faith is grounded vppon Gods will, and that we depend not vpon the wisedome of men, but that our Lord holdeth vs so in obedience towards him, as we may say ỹ wee heare him from heauen, though he vse the meane and trauell of men in the doing thereof.

Now let vs kneele down in ỹ presence of our good God, with acknowledgement of our faults, praying him to make vs so to feele them, as wee maye learne to mislike more and more of our selues for them. And for as much as the verie remedie to rid vs from al our diseases and corruptions, is to heare his holye woorde: it maye please him so to open our eares, as wee maye receyue it with all reuerence and humilitie, and so print it in our heartes, as wee may make it auayle to the vse for which hee ordeyned it, namely to quicken vs and to drawe vs to saluation, tion, that wee may deſire it with all out heartes, and apply our indeuour thereunto more and more. And therefore let vs all ſaye, Almightie God heauenly father, &c.

On Thurſday the xviij. of Iuly. 1555.

The xliiij Sermon which is the fifteenth and laſt vpon the fifth Chapter.

28 At the ſame time the Lord heard the voyce of your words when you ſpake to mee: wherevpon the Lord ſaid to mee, I haue heard the voyce of this peoples words which they haue ſpoken vnto thee: all that they haue ſaid is good.

29 I would they had ſuch heart to feare mee, and to keepe my commaundementes alwayes, that it might goe well with them and with their children for euer.

30 Go ſay vnto them, Returne ye into your tentes.

31 But as for thee, tarie thou here with mee, and I will tell thee all the commaundements, Ordinaunces and Lawes which thou ſhalt teache them, that they may do them in the land which I giue them to poſſeſſe.

32 Therefore ſee that ye doe as the Lord your God hath commanded you. Ye ſhall not bow aſide to the right hand nor to the left:

33 But walke in all the wayes which the Lorde your God hath commaunded you, that ye may liue, and that it may bee well with you, and that your dayes may bee lengthened in the land which you ſhall poſſeſſe.

ACcording to that which was declared yeſterday, God in this text ſheweth that he graunteth the peoples requeſt, and giueth them the choiſe of that which ſhoulde bee beſt for them. And hereby wee ſee, that he meant to make the people to feele his goodnes, of purpoſe to win them the better. True it is that he might iuſtly ſubdue vs to him by authoritie, and he could doe it: but hee had much leuer to deale with vs by fatherly gentleneſſe. That then is the cauſe why he ſhewed himſelf agreeable to the people. Therefore let vs marke well, that God hath ſuch regard of our weldoing and welfare, as if the choiſe were in our owne hands, we could not wiſh better thā he doeth. It ſeemeth not ſo at all times: but yet is it ſo in deede. Furthermore he addeth ỹ he graunted not the peoples deſire in any other reſpect, than for that he himſelfe liked of it. For now and then God graunteth men their requeſtes, howbeit, it is for their importunatneſſe ſake, and the thing turneth to their condemnation. As for example, when the people were deſirous to eate fleſh, it is true that they had their fill of it: but they paide right deare for their ſhot, for they ſpited God by their wilfull deſiring of the thing that was withheld from them. Neuertheleſſe it is true that God did fully ſatiſfie the murmurers, ſo as they had wherewith to fill their bellies: but it had bin much better for them to haue ſtarued for hunger. But it is not ſo in this requeſt whereof Moſes ſpeaketh here: for GOD ſayeth expreſſely, That they meant rightly. As if he ſhould ſaye, keepe that courſe ſtill, and yee ſhall ſee howe I will pleaſure you. Yee haue deſired that yee myght haue a man to ſpeake to you in my name, and I am contented with it. Nowe then it ought to perſwade you the more, to receiue the doctrine that ſhall bee preached vnto you from mee, on my behalfe, for as much as I haue done it at your deſire and choyſe. But yet yee muſt not thinke that I meant to pleaſe you without reaſon or cauſe why. For I aſſure you, all thinges ſhall goe well with you, if yee keepe on this courſe of profiting in my woorde, ſo as whenſoeuer Moſes ſhall come vnto you of my ſending, you giue reuerent eare to the thinges that hee ſhall tell you for your welfare. And ſo let vs marke well, that when Gods woorde is preached vnto vs by men, they doe it not vpon their owne head, but bicauſe GOD hath giuen vs here the doctrine that is for our benefite. And this ought tō ſettle vs the better, that wee bee not mooued with any fond affection, to chaunge as our manner is, to delyght alwayes too much in Nouelties. Let vs vnderſtande that the thing whereunto wee muſt holde our ſelues, is that wee muſt giue eare to the preaching of Gods woorde, all the time of our lyfe. And why? For it is not onely his will that wee ſhould doe ſō: but alſo he ſheweth vs that it is for our behoofe.

Num. 11. 33.

Beſides this, GOD wakeneth the people here, to the ende they ſhould thinke better vppon the keeping of the commaundements of his Lawe, than they had doone. For the people had ſaide, we wil do it. And ſayth God on his ſide, who will giue them the heart to doe it, and who will giue them ſuch diſpoſition of minde? And by thoſe wordes he doth vs to wit, that it was an eaſie matter for them to promiſe, as men commonly make great proteſtations with full mouth, but whē it commeth to the performance they ſhewe well that their promiſing was at alauenture. God therefore to make the people perceiue how hard a matter it is to keepe the lawe, ſayeth here, I would fayne it were ſo. For the Hebrew woord which he vſeth where he ſayth, who wil giue thē the heart, importeth as much as when wee ſay, be it ſo: I would faine it were ſo. True it is that here God ſpeaketh after the maner of men: for he needeth no more but wiſh things done, all things are in his hand. And therefore it might be replyed, Lord it belongeth to thee, and askeſt thou who ſhall giue them the heart? To whom belonges that to doe? Man of himſelfe will neuer incline to good, but he muſt bee driuen to it by ſome other meanes, and that can no creature doe, but it is thy ſpirit that muſt doe it. Now then ſeeke not thou who ſhall giue them the heart, but let the power of thy ſpirit vtter it ſelfe, and then ſhall they doe it. Likewiſe Deur. 30. 6. we ſhall ſee howe God will ſay, I will giue you a heart to feare mee. If it were in vs, why ſhoulde he ſay ſo? But he ſaieth that it belongeth to him to doe it, like as he addeth by the Prophet, I will

Ie. 32. 39. & Ezec. 11. 19. and 36. 27. giue them a heart to obey mee. As much ſhall wee ſee hereafter, where he ſaieth, I will cauſe them to keepe my commandements. God then chalengeth to himſelfe the inſtructing of men, and the gouerning of them by his holy Ghoſt, to the intent they ſhould be ſubiect vnto him, & ſubmit themſelues to his righteouſneſſe. And why then doth he pretend to wiſh it in this text? It is bicauſe he ſpeaketh after the maner of men, as he doeth in many other places. And (as I ſaid afore) it is to the ende that when there is any mention made of walking in obedience to Godward, wee ſhould vnderſtand that it cannot bee done without hardneſſe, and that our wits ſhould be wakened to apply our ſelues earneſtly to that ſtudie. Therefore whereas men promiſe vnaduiſedly, that they will worke wonders in obeying God and in keeping his Lawe: let vs vnderſtand that we muſt examine our owne abilitie, and then we ſhall finde that there is nothing but all maner of weakeneſſe in vs. So farre off are wee from being able to perfourme all that is commaunded vs: that wee knowe not at which ende
Phil. 2. 13. to begin. Nay, wee haue not the skil to conceiue one good thought, vntil God haue reformed vs, drawen vs to him, giuen vs the minde, and therunto added abilitie to put our deſires in execution. Thus ye ſee what is ment by this ſaying, And who ſhal giue thē the heart? or I would it were ſo.

Hereby wee be warned to take heede, that we preſume not vpon our owne ſtrength, to bee too bolde. For when we beare our ſelues in hand that wee can doe all things, it is the cauſe of our ruin. And God doeth iuſtly laugh ſuch ouerweening to ſcorne. But let vs learne to feele that we can do nothing: and that although we be bound to fulfill all that euer God commaundeth vs: yet it followeth not therefore that wee bee able to doe it, but rather that we be vtterly vnable. Neither is it ſo ſmall and common a matter to loue God with all our heart, with all our minde, and with all our power, as if wee needed no more but to ſay, yea, I will goe about it out of hand: but it is a thing that paſſeth all that is in man. When we once know that the law containeth too high a righteouſneſſe for vs to attaine vnto, and that wee on our part are ſo weake as is pitie to ſee: then will we learne to ſigh before God, and conſider well that wee bee bound to doe whatſoeuer he appointeth, but yet wee will craue power at his hande, that it may pleaſe him to helpe vs with his holy ſpirit, and not onely ſupplye our frailtie, but alſo be the beginner and perfourmer of all thinges in vs, ſo as he make vs willing, and confirme vs in that willingneſſe, and with that conſtancie match alſo power to accompliſh our deſires.

And by the way God ſheweth here, that his ſending of his worde vnto vs, is to the intent to be ioyned vnto vs, and that wee alſo ſhould bee vnited vnto him: ſo as he requireth nothing but obedience, that we might be his children, and he ſhewe himſelfe to bee our father. And ſo Gods intent in cauſing his word to bee preached vnto vs, is to gather vs as it were vnder his winges, that wee may bee defended and ſaued, yea verily ſo wee come vnto him quietly, and ſuffer our ſelues to bee ruled by his woord, and bee ſubiect thereunto. But it is true (as I ſaid afore) that it is not in our owne power to doe this, but God muſt giue vs that grace, and he giueth it not to all mē. Neuertheleſſe it is not for vs to bee inquiſitiue of Gods ſecrete purpoſe in that behalfe, why he reformeth the one ſort by his holy ſpirit, and letteth the other ſort goe on ſtill in their corruption, without bringing of them backe. Wee muſt not enter into that maze: but it muſt ſuffice vs that God liſteth to make men vnexcuſable, in ſaying, I would faine it were ſo. As if he ſhould ſay, that after we haue once beene taught by his word, wee haue no more excuſe: God is not to blame if wee be not ſaued. Why ſo? For we ſhall perceiue that to walke as he hath commaunded vs, is the way to attaine to all goodneſſe. And therefore let vs lay the blame of all our miſeries [vpon our ſelues:] and if God afflict vs and puniſh vs with aduerſitie, let vs vnderſtande that wee haue no cauſe to grudge or complayne of him, for wee be faultie, bicauſe wee haue not followed his lawe. That is the thing in effect, which wee haue to marke vpon this text. Yet notwithſtanding, it is true that wee muſt haue recourſe to his aide, knowing that wee of our ſelues are too weake to performe his lawe, in ſo much that we be neuer able to come at it, no nor any thing neere it. But yet if we liue not as becommeth vs, we muſt alwayes yeelde our ſelues guiltie, knowing that the fault remaineth in our ſelues, ſo as if God doe beate vs with his rod, we can not ſay it is vndeſerued on our part. For why? Seeing we haue Gods word, wee haue matter of record that he is deſirous to bee at one with vs, and to doe the ductie of a father, and to maintaine vs in all proſperitie, if wee burie not his grace, ne withhold the thing that is due on our part. Yee ſee then that men are iuſtly conuicted and condemned for refuſing Gods grace, and for ſhutting ting the doore againſt him, in that they profited not in his worde when they were taught it. And ſo it is a very profitable warning for vs, when we ſee in this texte howe God wiſheth that wee ſhoulde doe the thinges that hee commaundeth vs, to the intent it might go well with vs. Wherby wee ſee that if wee receiue the doctrine with humilitie, and deſire to obey it, the ende thereof cannot bee but happie, ſo as wee ſhall bee ſure of our ſaluation. Howbeit wee muſt alwayes come backe to this point, that wee pray to God to giue vs heartes: (for it belongeth to him to doe that): and yet if wee doe amiſſe, wee muſt learn to condemne our ſelues, that he may acquite vs.

On the otherſide let vs reioyce inaſmuch as we ſee howe hee procureth our ſaluation, and intendeth the furtherance thereof, as oft as his worde is preached vnto vs. And let vs remember howe it is ſaide in Salomons prouerbs, That it is the delight and pleaſure of Gods wiſedome to dwell among men. See heere howe God auoweth, that his ſending of his worde vnto vs, is to teach vs the full perfection of wiſedome, as if hee ſhoulde ſende his owne wiſedome from heauen. Yea, and to what ende? Wiſedome is brought in their ſaying thus, All my delight is to dwell among men. And that is as much as if God ſhoulde open his heart and ſay, Beholde, my teaching of men by my worde, is of purpoſe to binde my ſelfe to them with a holy band. And if they on their ſide bee not ſtubborne, they ſhall perceiue that I wil alwayes be among them without departing from them at any time. This ought to inflame vs greatly with a reuerence to Gods worde, ſo as we may ſeeke to profite in it, and neuer ſuffer our ſelues to bee turned from it, foraſmuch as it bringeth ineſtimable benefite vnto vs, namely that our Lorde vniteth himſelfe vnto vs thereby.

Prou. 8. 31.

Nowe it followeth in Moſeſes texte, that God commaundeth the people to goe euerie man to his tent, and Moſes to tarie there ſtill: and then he addeth, I will ſhewe vnto thee all the commaundements, ſtatutes, and ordinances which thou muſt teach to all the people. Heere God ſheweth againe, that hee ceaſeth not to continue his teaching of the people, though he vſe the foredeclared meanes, that is to wit, though hee make Moſes as it were the vtterer of his will, and the bearer of his meſſage. This is to bee marked well: for it ſerueth to make vs knowe, that God intendeth to holde vs alwayes to himſelfe, and will not haue our faith grounded vpon men, nor to depend vpon them: And that is a very requiſite thing. Truely as for them that followe their owne good intentes, or ſay they holde the thinges that haue beene determined by the Church, or by the auncient fathers: they may many times be groſſely deceiued. And if a man tell them they doe but as it were hang in the aire, and haue no certaintie in beeing ſo wedded vnto men: they bee wilfull in their owne opinions, as we ſee the Papiſtes are, whome the diuell hath ſo bewitched, that they content themſelues with the reſolutions made by men, and boldely deſpiſe the worde of God. Inſomuch that if a man bring record from thence, to reproue their ſuperſtitions: they bee at a full point, for they bee ſo doted that they regarde not to haue God againſt them. Men then may well for a time haue this ouerluſtineſſe of running boldly whither ſoeuer their fooliſh imagination carieth them, & they may harden themſelues againſt God: but when it commeth to the verie puih, they be ſo diſmaied as they wote not where to become. And therefore let vs note that wee ſhall neuer haue any ſure and longlaſting ſtay, vnleſſe our faith be grounded vppon Gods worde, and that wee bee able to ſay, that looke whatſoeuer wee haue wee holde it of him, and that it is the verie trueth, ſo as wee wander not in our owne imagination, nor take the doctrine of men for our ſtay. And wheras we heare God ſay in this text, I will tell thee the things which thou muſt teach: Let vs marke that wee likewiſe muſt reſt wholly vppon him and vpon his infallible truth, ỹ our faith may not be wauering and doubtfull. And the thing which wee haue to ſeeke when we come to ſermons, is to haue this point well warranted and ſealed in our conſciences, namely that we haue Gods word wherein lyeth our life.

And herewithall let vs marke alſo, that God ment to holde the preachers of his word in ſuch awe, as they ſhoulde not preſume to put forth any thing of their owne, but be contented to bee faithfull ſetters forth of the things that he commaundeth, ſo as they may alwayes proteſt, that they haue ſerued god in executing his commaundement, and in deliuering it foorth from hand to hand. This is a thing which wee haue to marke, we (I ſay) whom God hath appointed his miniſters to preach his worde, and to whom hee hath committed the office of teaching: namely that we adde not aught of our owne deuiſing, but deliuer the thing ſimply which we knowe to bee proceeded from God. 1. Cor. 4. 2.

And to the end that folke ſhould knowe ỹ God ment not to teach them by halues: he reherſeth the thing again which we haue ſeene heretofore namely his ſtatutes, ordinances, commandements and Ceremonies. As if he ſhould ſay there wanteth not any thing in his doctrine, neither ought the people to couet any thing more. This hath bene declared more at large alreadie. Notwithſtanding, whenſoeuer God vſeth ſuch diuerſitie of wordes to vs, wheras he might ſay in one word the Lawe: let vs marke, that it ſerueth to reſtraine men the better from fond curioſitie of adding any thing to his law, as the thing which wee ſee we bee too much giuen vnto by nature, foraſmuch as our fleſh prouoketh vs continually to inuent, I know not what new thing. And ỹ is the cauſe why in popery euery mã hath aduẽtured to caſt to his collup, & to make ſo many lawes one vpon another. For why? They thought it not ynough to liue plainly according to gods word, but ỹ it would be good to ad ſtill ſome minglemangle. But contrariwiſe God telleth vs that if we haue his law, we haue ſtatuts, commandements, ordinances and rites ynow: as if he ſhould ſay ỹ mortal mẽ ought not to ſtand ſo much in their own conceits, as to goe about to be wiſer than hee. For when they haue made neuer ſo large diſcourſes, yet can they not amende any part [of his doings] nor ad any thing to them, but whatſoeuer they put too further of their owne, it ſhall bee not onely ſuperfluous and vnprofitable: but alſo a marring to all the reſt, as if a man ſhoulde mingle vineger with good wine.

And now God hauing ſpoken after that manner, addeth that they ſhoulde take good heede that they kepe the things which he commaunded them, without bowing to the right hand or to the left. Here our Lorde ſheweth vs againe, that the honoring of his Lawe which he requireth at our hands, muſt not be an onely allowing of it with our mouthes, after which manner wee woulde faine diſcharge our ſelues thereof: but hee telleth vs that his giuing of it forth, is to holde vs in his ſubiection & ſeruice, and that to the ſame ende he will haue it preached ſtill at this day. For thereby he intendeth to trie whether he can weeld vs as quiet people that ſubmit themſelues to him. Therefore let vs marke, that our reſorting vnto ſermons muſt not be to commend the doctrine for good and holie: for God ſhalbe much beholden to vs for ſaying that his word is worthie to be receiued: hee will not haue vs to be his iudges. It is true that we owe him that acknowledgement, ſo as when wee haue hearde his worde, euery of vs ought to confeſſe it to bee the pure trueth, and that there is none other righteouſneſſe, righteouſnes, nor wiſedome than is contained there. But yet muſt we paſſe further therewithall, and yeeld our ſelues to the ſeruing of our God. That is one point which wee haue to gather vpon this text. Another point is that we muſt beware that we keepe it. Wherein God ſheweth, that wee muſt applie all our ſtrength earneſtly in that behalfe. For men ſhall neuer followe God by ſleeping. Although they inforce themſelues neuer ſo much, yet the infirmitie of their nature is ſuch, as they can hardly keepe their feete. Therefore let vs not think that we can diſcharge our ſelues to Godwarde without taking of paine. For the thing is too hard conſidering what we be, namely ſlowe and ſluggiſh to good thinges, yea euen though God haue already made vs willing, and do gouerne vs by his holy ſpirit. And if he let vs alone as we be of our ſelues, we ſhall not only be ſlowe, but alſo drawe cleane backe from his wil. If he call vs to him, we ſhall go from him: yea & wee ſhalbe ſo little able to couet any good at all: that wee ſhalbe inforced to doe euill. But let vs marke what I haue touched afore, namely that although our Lord haue giuen vs ſome good diſpoſition of minde, and ſet vs in ſome good forwardneſſe: yet are we ſlothfull ſtill, and when we ſhould ſteppe one pace forth, whereas the ſame ſhold be done in leſſe than a minute of an houre, we muſt haue a whole houre to do it in. Nay we fall to kicking, or elſe by that time that we haue gone one pace, ofttimes we ſtumble, or retyre backe, or elſe take ſuch foule falles as is piteous to ſee. Therefore it is not for nought that God ſaith here Take heede that yee doe them. As if hee ſhould ſay, in deede my lawe is giuen you to the intent you ſhoulde put it in execution and obey it: but yet thinke not you that it is ſo eaſie a matter to be done. What is to be done then? Prepare your ſelues to walke after my commaundements, thinke vpon them, put to your indeuour, be diligent therein, take a taſt & ſauour of them, keepe good watch for feare of being turned away, and take very good heede to your ſelues. Thus we ſee in effect, that our Lorde exhorteth vs here to labor erneſtly, when the caſe ſtandeth vpon walking in obedience towardes him. And why? For the thinges that he requireth of vs are not ſo eaſie to be don. And beſides that, we be ſo ill diſpoſed therevnto, as is pitie to ſee: inſomuch that if we be not ſpurred and driuen by force, we cannot goe forward. Therefore it ſtandeth vs in hand to awake, and to take heede, and to ſtande continually vpon our garde, that wee may performe ỹ things that our Lord hath commanded vs. Nowe afterward he addeth, that this muſt bee done without bowing to the right hand or to the left, ſo as men walke throughout in the way that he hath ſhewed them. In deede this text ſhalbe expounded more at length in the twelfth chapter: but yet muſt we not paſſe it ouer without knowing what God ment by it. In forbidding vs to bowe to the right hand or to the left, he ſheweth vs that hee will haue vs to harken to him in all things without exception. And this importeth two thinges: namely that wee muſt neither put any thing to his lawe, nor take any thing from it. As concerning putting to, it is as if we would go to the right hand: for they ỹ ad to Gods law, do it vpon an imaginatiõ ỹ the keeping of the things conteined there, is not al that they haue to do, & therfore ỹ it is good to put ſomewhat more to it. Loe howe men would giue place to their owne fancies, ſo as if any thing come in their heades, they thinke that God forgate that, and that it were good to be done. And that was the very cauſe of the great number of ordinances, lawes, and ceremonies that are ſet vp in poperie. The Iewes had the like vice among them, according as they be blamed for deſpiſing of Gods commandementes & ſtatutes, for their owne traditions ſakes. Nowe then, let vs keepe vs from walking on the right hand, ſo as we ſhould turne from the way which God hath ſhewed vs. And why? For the right hand is when we will needs bee too wiſe and too righteous, bearing our ſelues in hande that it is good for vs to do more than we be commaunded. But in ſo doing we be the diuels ſeruants, for God vtterly refuſeth all that euer we addeto his word: he will haue no ſuch mingling.

And we decline or bowe to the left hand, when wee diminiſh Gods worde, that is to ſay, when wee bee contented to ſerue him by halues, and therewithall would haue him to giue vs leaue to follow our owne luſts. Some man peraduenture is not ſubiect to ſome vices: and well coulde hee find in his heart to diſcharge his duetie to Godward in ſeruing him ſo farre forth: but foraſmuch as he cannot ouermaiſter himſelf in ſome other vyces, hee woulde haue God to holde himſelfe contented, & to enter into a bargaine with him, as if he ſhould ſay, very well, if I faile in this behalfe, halfe, I will recompence it in another. But let vs keepe our ſelues from walking on the left hande, that is to ſay, from taking any thing away from Gods worde. For as he hath forbidden to murther: ſo hath hee alſo forbidden to ſteale and to commit adulterie: and therefore we muſt ſubmit our ſelues to his commaundements in all points and all reſpectes without making of any reply thereto. For as wee muſt not in any wiſe adde aught to his Law: ſo is it not lawfull to take any thing from it, but we muſt walke in all the wayes that he ſheweth vs.

And whereas hee termeth it a way, it is to the ende to exhort vs to keepe vs in it, according as we ſhal ſee in the ende of this booke, where Moſes will ſay, This is the way, walke therein. Deut. 28.9. As if he ſhould ſay, whoſoeuer turneth away from the doctrine that I ſet before you, goeth aſtray, hee doth but runne gadding ouer the fields, and yet for all that hee commeth neuer the neerer his wayes ende, but rather is ſtill further and further from it. Therefore in this place, walke in the way is as much to ſay, as wander not ye wretches wilfully, goe not aſtray. Sith your God is your guide, you cannot goe amiſſe in following him. But if you followe your owne heade: in the ende God muſt bee faine to ſhewe you, that yee ſhalbe no better than ſtray beaſtes, and that yee haue not helde the right way. Know ye therefore that Gods doctrine is your way. If this ſaying were well printed in our mindes, we ſhoulde be helde ſo in awe, as our itching appetites ſhoulde not be able to make vs runne aſtray as wee doe, but our life ſhould bee reſtreined by it. For God ſheweth vs dayly which is the way, & yet notwithſtanding men diſpute & make much queſtioning with What is to be done? & what is to be done? Verily as who ſhould ſay it were not told vs, that God neuer openeth his mouth, but it is to ſhewe vs the right way. And ſeing he ſheweth it vs, do not we offer him wrong and iniurie if we followe it not? Do we not blame him as though hee had loſt his time & trauel about vs? Now we ſee what this worde way importeth: that is to wit, that out of Gods doctrine there is nothing but error and deceit, and that men beguile themſelues when they thinke they do wel, furtherforth than when they ſuffer themſelues to be ruled by gods word, which ſheweth vs the good and right way.

And he ſaith purpoſely, All the wayes. For he intendeth not to make ſuch a parting of ſtakes in this behalfe, as men woulde that he ſhould, ſo as they would faine reſerue ſomewhat alwayes to themſelues. Here God ſaith contrariwiſe, either you muſt obey me throughout in all pointes, or elſe I renounce you. So then, are wee deſirous to make our life alowable to God? Wee muſt not be obedient vnto him in part, but we muſt loke that all our whole life be framed according to his cõmandements, ſo as we may ſay wee haue kept all ways. But here it might be demãded, whether it be poſſible for vs to walk throughout in the way of the Lord. For on the contrarie part, ſeing that men do not the good which they faine would: it is much for vs if we ſhal haue indeuored to come to ỹ good way, & to go towards the ende, though we be not come at it. S. Paul himſelf complaineth that he was not able to do as he would in the diſcharge of his duety towards god. Here is no ſpeking of ſuch perfection as is required by ỹ Lawe: but we muſt only vnderſtand that God will haue men to yeeld & giue ouer themſelues vnto him, & inforce themſelues to run thitherward though they attain not to the mark. Although then that we do as it were drag our legs after vs in our going all our life long, and neuer come fully vnto God: yet muſt we keepe on to himward, and that not in part, but in all the things that are conteined in the lawe. Truth it is that we cannot ſo diſcharge our ſelues, as there may bee a full anſwerablenes betwixt Gods word and our liues: but if wee bee deſirous to ſubmit our ſelues vnto God, and to frame our ſelues thereafter, not in ſome one point but in all without exception, indeuouring the ſame to the vttermoſt of our power: it is as a keeping of all the wayes of God. For he beareth with vs, and taketh ſuch willingnes in good worth, when he ſeeth vs go to it roundly, & that we be not dubble minded, nor deſirous to reſerue any peece of our owne willes or to take leaue to do them, but labour [and ſtriue to the contrarie] as much as in vs lyeth, according to the grace that is giuen vs. Rom. 7.18.

Nowe hereunto he addeth alſo, That they may proſper, and that it may goe well with them and with their children. Whereof hee ſheweth, (as I haue touched alredie) that all the miſeries and griefes which we indure in this world, are chaſtiſements for our ſinnes. And we cannot wite our vnhappineſſe vpon any thing elſe than our owne faultes. True it is that euery man couets to liue at eaſe and in proſperitie: we neede no teaching to deſire that: for our owne nature leadeth vs thervnto. But in the meane while it ſhold ſeeme that we haue conſpired our owne miſchiefe. For ỹ meane of proſperitie is to obey our God. And then will he bleſſe vs in ſuch ſort, as we ſhal feele the fruits of his grace and fauour in all reſpects. But what? We be loth to yeeld him his due obedience: and therefore muſt we alſo bee bereft of his bleſſing, and reiected as vnworthy to be of the number of his creatures. And ſo let vs marke, that here our Lorde ment to rebuke men, and to ſhewe them that they themſelues are to be blamed for al the aduerſities and miſeries which they indure in this worlde, and that they muſt wyte the ſame vppon their ſinnes. But yet moreouer hee ment therewith to drawe his owne to him, by ſetting the reward before them. As if he ſhoulde ſay, Go to, I deſerue well to be ſerued at your hand without looking for any thing at my hande for it: for ſeeing you bee my creatures, is it not reaſon that you ſhould be ſubiect to me? Ought not all your life to bee giuen vnto me? Yes: but yet intende not I that you ſhall ſerue mee for nought, I will forbeare mine owne right, which is that you ſhoulde bee bounde to doe whatſoeuer I commaunde you, without looking for any thing: and I tell you that I am readie to bleſſe you, and to make you to proſper if you ſerue me. Our Lorde then in ſaying ſo, ſheweth that his meaning is to winne his ſeruants to him by gentlenеſſe, & as it were were to breake their harts, that they may be the willinger to serue him, seeing hee goeth not to worke with such rigour as he might, but forbeareth his right, and rather playeth the father, telling vs that if wee behaue our selues like children towards him, he wilbe gratious and liberall towards vs, and although hee owe vs not any thing, yet will he not faile to rewarde vs for the seruice that we yeelde vnto him.

Hereby we bee warned that Gods intent is to drawe vs vnto him, but yet must wee not inferre therevpon, that men can deserue any thing in seruing of God, as the Papistes doe, who when they heare such texts doe by and by fall to their merits, and beare themselues on hand that God is beholden to them therefore. But contrariwise Gods meaning is to shewe vs that he is readie to apply himselfe to vs after the manner of men, so as he seeketh nothing else but to induce vs to obey him. And that is not for any benefite to him selfe: for what profite can hee receiue by vs, though wee shoulde performe his whole Lawe? Should that aduantage him any thing at al? No. Yee see then where at God aimeth, and what we haue to marke vppon this sentence. Wherefore let vs learn, that if we haue obeyed our God, and he make vs to prosper: it is not for that hee oweth vs any thing, or for that wee haue deserued aught, and can boast that he recompenseth our deserts: but because it pleaseth him to vtter his free goodnesse so farre forth vnto vs, as to terme that thing a wages, [hyre, or recompẽce], which hee giueth vs of his owne onely free liberalitie, without being bounde any thing at all thervnto. Againe, when he chastiseth vs, and wee bee distressed with many miseries: let vs assure our selues that we reape the fruits of our own seede: and because we haue liued amisse, our Lord also must be faine to giue vs some signe of his wrath, to the ende that hee may bee knowen to be the iudge of the worlde. But yet hath hee also a regarde of our welfare, namely to mislike of our faults and to bee sorie for them, and to resort to him by true repentance. Thus yee see that God in shewing of himself angrie with vs ceaseth not to vtter his loue towards vs. For he indeuoreth to bring vs home to himselfe therby. He seeth that we be falne asleepe in our sinnes, and hee wakeneth vs, as one knowing it to be expedient for vs so to be. That is the thing which wee haue to marke vpon this place.

Nowe in the end Moses speaketh of the land, and saith: That thou maist prosper in the lande which I will giue thee: and afterwarde he setteth downe this saying againe, That it may goe well with you in the land which yee must possesse. Nowe it seemeth heere at the first sight, that God promiseth none othere rewarde than in this earthly and transitorie life. And if it had beene so, then had the hope of the children of Israel bene quite dashed. But wee must note that our Lorde vsed another maner of dealing towards that people, than hee doth towards vs, though they tende both to one end. For the sacrifices that were ordeined by the lawe, serued not to drawe the people away from the saluation which we haue in Iesus Christ: but rather to leade them to it: so as Gods mind was to doe men to vnderstande, that they were condemned, and that there was none other meane of reconciliation, but by the bloude of our Lorde Iesus Christ. But yet in the meane while men ceased not to kill brute beasts, and God said vnto them, your sinnes shal bee forgiuen you when you shall haue offered me a Calfe, a Lambe, or a Sheepe. It should seeme by this, that God ment to set the remission of sinnes in the sacrificing of brute beastes. But hee did not so. That was done to leade the people after that grosse manner to the redẽption that was at the length purchased for vs by our Lord Iesus Christs owne person. In like case is it with the land of Chanaan. For first of all Gods will was to set foorth the euerlasting heritage of saluation to the children of Abraham, in saying to Abraham, I am thy large reward. He promiseth not Abraham the lande as though he would haue him to stay himself there, but willed him to put his whole trust in him, and to raise vp himselfe aboue the worlde, & to looke for the heauenly life both for himselfe and for his ofspring. Howbeit forasmuch as our Lord Iesus Christ was not yet come, nor the veile of the temple was not as yet broken, I say it was meete that the Land of Chanaan should be as a pledge of it, because it was fully behighted him for an inheritance. Then let vs marke well, that whereas God saith, that thou maist prosper in the land: his intent is not that his people shoulde set their mindes vpon this present life, but to guide them higher by that meane, namely to the hope of the immortalitie which hee had promised them. Neuertheless our Lorde promiseth his blessing in such sort to his people, as they shall feele it euen in this worlde and haue some taste of it here, in waiting for the discouerie of the full inioyment thereof, at such time as they shalbe taken out of the worlde. And euen at this day also wee must bethinke vs of this text of Saint Paul, that if we feare God, we shall haue the promises both of the life present and of the life to come. For God will make vs to feele his goodnesse in this worlde, to the ende to drawe vs vp higher, and to teach vs so to receiue his benefites heere, as wee may looke to haue our fill of them when we be come to his kingdom, where we shal haue the whole fulnesse of them.

On Friday the nineteenth of Iuly. 1555.

The xlv. Sermon, which is the firſt vpon the ſixt Chapter.

THeſe are the Commaundements, Ordinances and Lawes which the Lorde your God commaunded me to teach you: to the end that you ſhould doe them in the Land whereinto you ſhall enter to poſſeſſe it.

2 That thou maiſt feare the Lord thy God, in keeping al his ordinances & commaundements which I commaund thee, all the dayes of thy life, both thou and thy children and thy childrens children, that thy dayes may be prolonged.

3 Hearken therefore O Iſrael and take heede that thou doe them, that it may goe well with thee, and that thou maiſt be mightilie multiplied in the land that ſloweth with milke and honnie, as the Lorde God of thy fathers hath ſayde vnto thee.

4 Heare O Iſrael, the Lord our God is the onelie Lord.

WE haue ſene oft heretofore howe Moſes ſpake to the people concerning ỹ contents of the law: yea and euen yeſterday we ſaw ỹ hee made mẽtion ther of: and here we ſee the like againe. And yet for all that, it is not a needeleſſe repetition, conſidering howe ſoone men forget the thinges they haue learned of God, if they be not put in mind of them: and wee knowe that we neede not any thing to turne vs away from them. For we be ſo giuen to vanitie, that nothing is harder to vs, than to holde our ſelues in obedience vnto God. As ſoone as any toy takes vs in the heade, it carieth vs away, and wee minde no more what God had ſaide vnto vs. Againe foraſmuch as he is very deſirous to winne vs to him: he muſt bee faine to plucke vp ỹ falſe opinions by the roote, wherewith we be ouergrowen aforehande. For when a grounde is buſhie, it will aske much labour before it can be put to any vſe: and euen ſo is it with vs. And that is the cauſe why Moſes ſaieth againe, that theſe are the commaundements, ſtatutes and ordinances which the Lorde committed to him, to giue them forth to the people, that they might be kept. Nowe by theſe wordes hee giueth an incling, that Gods intent is to holde the people vnder his obedience. What meane yee wretched folke to goe aſtray after that faſhion? I giue you my Lawe: and hauing that doctrine ye cannot goe amiſſe: it is the way of ſaluation, and therfore holde you to it. But yet for all this, men are fickle and fleeting to and fro: and God reigneth them with a ſtrong bitte: like as when a horſe is harde to bee ruled, hee is faine to bee raigned backe more than once, and if hee fling out and will not ſuffer himſelfe to be handled, the ryder is faine to reine him ſtreyt againe & againe. After the ſame manner doeth God deale with his people. And thereby hee ſheweth that mans minde is full of ſtubborneneſſe, or elſe of lightneſſe, ſo as hee cannot reſt vppon Gods worde, wherein notwithſtanding lyeth our whole ſaluation and welfare. Sith it is ſo: let vs marke that in the perſon of the people of Iſrael, wee bee warned heere, that when God ſetteth his worde before vs, wee muſt not onely minde it for one day, but wee muſt exerciſe vs in it all the dayes of our life, and wee muſt alwayes haue this ſaying before our eyes, theſe are the Statutes, theſe are the Ordinances, theſe are the Commaundementes, ſo as it is not for vs to frame rules and Lawes wherewith to gouerne our life, foraſmuch as that authoritie belongeth only to God.

Beſides this wee bee alſo put in minde, that God hath ſhewed vs the right way. Therefore let vs followe it, and not ſtand queſtioning what wee haue to doe. For there is no more cauſe of doubt when our Lorde hath once ſpoken. Wee muſt not any more alledge, I cannot tell whether it bee good, I wote not whether I neede to do more or no: but let vs be contented with that which God hath ſhewed vs. For hee will alwayes be a good ſchoolemaſter vnto vs, if we bee not euill ſcholers vnto him. And for the ſame cauſe ſpeaketh hee here againe of Commandements Statutes and Ordinances, to the intent we ſhold not think that God ment to teach vs by halues.

Then is the perfection of wisedome conteined in the Lawe: and there remaineth no more for Psal.19.8. vs to doe, but to obey it, so as we be not curious in coueting more than God hath shewed vs, or in fonde deuotions to draw vs one way or other, but perswade our selues that God hath not enuied those of whome hee tooke the charge, but hath taught them all that is for their benefite. Let vs behaue our selues according to his will, and apply all our wittes therevnto, and let his lawe suffice vs. Although all the worlde reiect vs, wee shall not passe for it, for wee haue our iudge. And therefore although the worlde wander away in vaine imaginations, and euerie man deuiseth what hee thinketh good: Let vs alwayes remember that wee must appeare Rom.2.16. before the iudgement seate of our God, so as it is hee to whome wee must make our account. But hee hath giuen vs his Lawe, and Rom.2.12. according therevnto will he iudge vs. And therfore let vs leaue al worldly imaginations, assuring ourselues that they are al but vanity and leasing.

Herevnto Moses addeth, that as concerning his office he had not brought them any thing of his owne deuising, but had set forth Gods Lawe faithfully according as hee had giuen him in charge. And this protestation is well to be marked. For wee must bethinke vs of the thing that hath beene treated of heretofore: namely that Moses was the excellenteſt Prophet that euer
Deut.34.10 God raised vp: and yet notwithstanding he taketh no libertie here to teach what hee himselfe deemed good: for he knew himselfe to be a mortall man, and subiect to the Lawe as wel as other men. That is the cause why hee protesteth that the things which hee bringeth are the same ỳ he receiued of God, so as he deliuereth them as it were from hand to hand. Seeing ỳ Moses did so: who dareth say that it is lawful for him to passe further? And yet we see what hath come to passe. For in the whole Popedom is there any hearkening what God saieth, that they might put a difference betwixt it and the doctrines of men? No: but they haue their holy mother ỳ Church as they terme it, they haue determinations and decrees of their owne, and they thinke it ynough to take couert vnder the name of the Church: and in the meane while they rob God of his authoritie to bestowe it vpon men, which are no better but dung. Therefore it is an intolerable traiterousnesse, that God should not bee suffered to be any more the Lawemaker that hee might guide his people, and holde them vnder his yoke but that men should vsurpe such authoritie against him. And therfore we haue so much the more need to marke what is conteined here: namely that although Moses was as an Angel of heauen, and had beene exalted aboue all men by God, and had beene fortie dayes and fortie nights with him vpon the mount without eating or drinking, to shewe that he was no more of the common aray of other men: yet notwithstanding when hee came from that heauenly glorie and as it were from the company of Angels: hee humbled himselfe still, and shewed that hee did not put forth aught of his owne, ne followe his owne fancie in that behalfe, but was contented to harken what God said, and reported the same as a good seruant that had neither added any thing, nor falsified the commission that was giuen him. That is another thing which we had to marke againe vppon this text.

Nowe followeth an exhortation what the people should discharge themselues in doing the Lawe. As if hee should saie, that the giuing thereof was not to the ende that men shoulde but onely confesse that all that is conteined therein is good, iust and rightfull: but also that men shoulde thereby shew whether they were obedient to God or no. And in that respect he saith, to the ende that thou shouldest feare the Lorde thy God, and keepe his commaundements and statutes. By this word Feare he doth vs to wit, that God in giuing forth his Law, ment to trie what we be, and whether we be willing to serue him or no. For although we coulde doe all his commaundements in such sort as no fault could be found in vs to the worldward, if in the meane whyle the feare of God be not rooted in our hearts, to yeelde him such reuerence as to be willing to be his: all our life shalbe but a fond pompe: for wee must not thinke that God is satisfied with outward apparances. Howmuchsoeuer they be commended of men, they bee but Luke 6.15. smoke before him. Then if wee minde to keepe his Lawe dewly, and to haue our life acceptable vnto him: we must beginne at this point of yeelding him such reuerence, as to be desirous to bee vnder his hande and gouernement, and to doe him homage as to our soueraine Lord & to giue ouer our selues to him as to our maker, and to honour him as our father. If we be thus minded, it is the beginning of all the Lawe and of al righteousnes. And that is the cause why it is sayde that the true wisedom is to feare God. And if we will Prou.1.7. & 9.10. know whether we haue profited in gods lawe or no: we must alwayes sift & search our selues whether we haue such desire & zeale that God shold be honored & glorified by vs. For if there be that feare in our hearts, ỹ fruits therof wil shew themselues both in our feete and in our handes, ỹ is to say in al our members, according to ỹ rule which he hath set downe in publishing his law. And as for them that boast of the feare of God, & neuertheleſſe behaue themselues lewdly in their conuersation: they belie thẽselues w̃ their own mouthes, & bewray ỹ they be shameles in bragging so of the feare of God. Now then we see here a text which is well worthie to be marked: wherin Moses declareth, that to serue god well, first we must giue our hearts vnto him, so as it sufficeth not to haue all ỹ vertues ỹ can be imagined to outward shew, vnleſſe a vertuous mind go before them: & secondly that the feare of God is no secret or ydle thing, but ỹ although it bee inclosed in mens harts, yet neuertheles it must shew it self in their liues: for it is the heart that gouerneth both the hands and the feete and all that euer is besides. Therefore if wee feare God, we must learne to shew it by our deeds and by proofe, euen by framing our life according to his will.

Now herevpon we may gather, that God disalloweth all that euer men can doe, when they

turne away from his worde. As for example, the Papiſtes are alwayes ſeruing of God (as they themſelues ſay): but in the meane ſeaſon what doe they? They take much paine, but they bee neuer a whit the forwarder, becauſe they haue nothing among them but mens inuentions. Their ſeruing of God, is to biblebable or to kneele downe before puppets or idols, to ſcudde from altar to altar, to cauſe Maſſes to be chaunted, to gadde on pilgrimage, to faſt ſuch a day in the honour of ſuch a ſaint, and to eate no fleſh vppon fridayes and ſaturdayes. To bee ſhort, it is a gulfe of all baggage, couered with the name and title of Gods ſeruice. But ſhall ye find that euer God vttered one word or ſyllable concerning ſuch thinges? No. It was euerywhit of it deuiſed by men. Nowe let vs conſider by this texte, whether God accepteth ſuch ſeruice for good and lawfull. Nay contrariwiſe he ſaith, thou ſhalt feare the Lorde thy God, and keepe all his commaundements and ſtatutes. So then, when men turne from that way, and followe their owne imaginations and the inuentions of men: thereby they ſhewe ſufficiently that they haue no feare of God in them, for elſe they woulde offer him the ſacrifice which hee preferreth before all things: namely the ſacrifice of obedience, as is ſhewed in the firſt booke of Samuel the fifteenth Chapter. Inſomuch that if a man herken not vnto Gods voice to ſubmit him ſelfe thereto, but contrariwiſe followeth the inuention of his owne braine, or the thinges that other men haue deuiſed: ſurely it is an ydolatry, and as badde as witchcraft, which God abhorreth. After that manner doth Gods ſpirit ſpeake of it, notwithſtanding that mortall men doe deeme the cleane contrarie. Now then wee ſee howe Moſes declareth here, that if we feare God in good earneſt, we will alſo doe him the honour to be ruled by his will, ſo as we wil not take leaue at mens handes to doe what they thinke good, but ſtop all mens mouthes when God ſpeaketh, and open our eares to hearken what hee ſaieth, and receiue the ſame.

1.Sam.15. 22.23.

But yet for all this, it is not ynough for euery of vs to imploye himſelfe in the ſeruing of God: wee muſt alſo procure to the vttermoſt of our power, that he may be worſhipped of al men: yea and that his ſeruice may continue euen after our deceaſe, ſo as his honour may abide faſt ſetled when we bee deade and gone out of the worlde, & not be aboliſhed with our tranſitorie life. And that is the cauſe why Moſes ſaith, thy children, and they that iſſue of their race, ſhal continue in ſeruing God & in keeping his law. Therfore let vs mark well, that here Moſes not onely exhorteth euerie man to ſerue God by framing his owne life according to the Law that he hath giuen vs: but alſo willeth fathers to take paine in bringing vp their children, and to leaue ſuch ſeed after them (ſo neere as they can), as God may be honored in their ofspring, and his name bee euer purely called vpon, that by that meane ſuch as deſcend of vs may bee bleſſed, and his couenant (which conteineth our ſaluation) indure for euer, & not periſh though we our ſelues be mortall. But wee ſee that fathers are ſo farre of from diſcharging their dueties in this behalfe: that they giue ſuch examples to their children, as they may ſeeme to haue conſpired to aboliſh al feare of God, and all keeping of his Lawe. And therefore no maruell though God withdraw himſelfe from vs, and ſeeme to be minded to cut off the benefits which he hath beſtowed vpon vs. For are we worthy of ỹ continuance of them towards vs, ſeeing we bee ſo negligent in cauſing his ſeruice to continue in perfect and vnappaired ſtate? But yet for al that, this muſt not bee ſpoken to vs in vaine. Therefore let vs indeuour to teach ſuch as ſhal ſucceed vs, ſo as God may euer bee worſhipped, and knowen to bee the father and Sauiour of the whole worlde, and men giue themſelues whollie vnto him.

Immediatly herevppon, Moſes addeth that which he had ſaid afore: namely, to the end that their dayes might bee prolonged, and that God might make the people to proſper, according as he had promiſed to their fathers to giue them a land that flowed with milke and honnie. I haue declared alreadie heretofore, what Moſes ment by this ſaying: that is to wit, that although God might at one worde haue compelled vs to ſerue him, yet notwithſtanding he vſeth a more louing kinde of dealing towards vs: which is, that hee promiſeth vs rewarde for ſeruing of him: not that our workes deſerue aught, or that hee is any whit bounde vnto vs: but that his benefiting of vs after that ſort, is to the end that we ſhoulde be the better allured to ſerue him the more earneſtly. For is it not too ſhamefull a thankleſneſſe, that when wee heare howe God bindeth himſelfe to vs after that maner, of his owne accorde, and vouchſafeth to ſet rewarde before vs, is it not (ſay I) too great a ſhame and vnthankfulneſſe, if we giue not our ſelues wholly to his ſeruice? Wee bee his, and whatſoeuer we can doe, wee be beholden to him for it, as our Lord Ieſus Chriſt ſpeaketh thereof. Howe ſay you, ſaieth hee? tell mee, if a man haue a ſeruant, or rather a ſlaue whom he may put to toyle like an Oxe or a horſe, and the ſame haue done him ſome ſeruice: will his maſter riſe from the table to ſerue him at his turne? No: for whatſoeuer a man doeth that is in bondage, hee oweth it to him that hath the ſuperioritie ouer him. So owe you all thinges to God (ſaith Chriſt), and God oweth you nothing. Yet notwithſtanding God binding himſelfe of his owne free good will, promiſeth that if wee ſerue him wee ſhalbe well recompenſed, and not loſe our labour. To what purpoſe doth hee ſo? euen to breake our hearts, for (as I ſaide afore) we bee too churliſh if wee bee not wholly inflamed to ſerue God, when wee ſee that he of his owne free goodneſſe vouchſafeth to beheight vs rewarde, whereof we be not worthie.

Luke 17. 7.

And herewithall let vs marke alſo, that if God had couenanted a thouſande times with vs to rewarde our workes: yet coulde wee ſo little ſay that hee owed vs any thing, as hee might rather curſe and abhorre vs. For which of vs performeth his Law as we ought to do? If wee doe one point, we faile in a hundred: and when we thinke

we do the thinges that God commandeth vs in his Lawe: we do but drag our legges, and there is alwayes much imperfection in vs, so as wee can neuer runne as were requisite. Therefore wee should be curſed and damned, if God liſted to iudge vs with rigour. Then is it not for men to vaunt theſelues in this behalfe of the obteining of any rewarde for deſertes ſake, or to boaſt of their workes. But rather they muſt vnderſtand that all the promiſes which God hath giuen in his Law, import a condition, and therefore that they ſhould not boote vs at all, becauſe none of vs diſchargeth his dutie, if God did not accept vs & beare with vs of his own mere goodnes. And hereby we ſee how mad the papiſts are to boaſt of their merites, ſo as it ſeemeth to them that they haue to bargaine with God, and thereupon enter boldly into account with him through deuliſh malapeartnes, bearing themſelues in hand that God is greatly bounde vnto them. And for what maner of dealinges? They alleage their ſatisfactions, their workes, and their merites. And where ſhall a man finde theſe merites? O (ſay they) we haue done this and that: and therefore we needs not ſticke to enter into account with God. But on the contrary parte, God requireth here that we ſhoulde ſerue him throughly in all reſpectes: which thing we can not do as we haue ſeene heeretofore, and as is declared in many Ro.7.14.18. other places. For lette all the worlde examine themſelues, and ſee if euer there were anie one that performed the Lawe. Nay, ſo farre off is that to be found, that there is none which may proteſt that he hath done the hundreth parte of it. Therefore all muſt needes confeſſe themſelues to bee accurſed. Beſides this, euen in that little portion which men can bring, howe ſmall ſo euer it be, there is alwayes ſome default and blot: by reaſon whereof God might well refuſe it and abhorre it. Nowe then let men conrinue confounded in their ſhame, and confeſſe themſelues to be all faultie before God. And let vs note that this promiſe can not be performed, vnleſſe God beare with vs, and reſpecte not the great number of infirmities and vices that are Pſal.32.1,2. in vs, but bury them through his mercy. Our workes then are receiued at Gods hande, inaſmuch as he reſpecteth not what they be, but accepteth them as good and holy, through the power of the death and paſſion of our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt. And although there be euer ſom blemiſh and blot in them, yea and that God could finde euen ſome filthineſſe in them if it were not blotted out by the bloud of Ieſus Chriſt: yet doth he accept vs by that meane, and not otherwiſe. Wherefore let vs learne to glorie in Gods meere mercie, and not to boaſt of any deſe ruings. And yet therewithall let vs not ceaſe to ſteppe vppe with the better courage to ſerue him: when wee ſee that he vouchſafeth to drawe vs ſo vnto him and to winne vs by ſuch gentleneſſe.

Verily Moſes ſheweth that all that euer God promiſeth to his people for keeping of his Law, ſpringeth from the ſame fountaine, rather than from any bond. And that is it which he meaneth by ſaying, As God promiſed to thy Fathers. As if he ſhould ſay, my friendes, ſerue God and hee will be good maiſter vnto you: and thinke not that ye ſhall haue loſt your time when yee ſhall haue kept his Lawe: for ye ſhall haue the large rewarde that is behighted you. But yet for all that, conſider from whence the ſame commeth. The fountaine thereof (ſayth he) is, that before yee were borne into the worlde, God promiſed your fathers to bring them into a lande that floweth with milke and honnie. Moſes by bringing the people thus backe to the promiſe that had beene made to the Patriarkes, ſheweth ſufficiently that God promiſed not any thing anewe, but onely that he performeth the thing that hee had promiſed afore. And why ſo? Was it for that hee was bounde to them, which were not yet borne into the worlde? No: but becauſe he Deut.4.37. loued their fathers as is ſaide heretofore. It is true that heere Moſes ſheweth that the people ſhould be partakers of that promiſe, ſo they kept Gods Lawe. But what for that? Yet behoued it them to come backe ſtill to this point, that men are vtterly vndone if they ſet themſelues againſt God, and that if they alledge any worthines, they ſhall abide ſtill in their condemnation, and finde themſelues all accurſed. Therefore they muſt haue none other refuge but to Gods mercy, & they muſt vnderſtand that when they haue inforced themſelues neuer ſo much to liue according to Gods Law: yet ſhall God owe them nothing at all, neuertheleſſe hee will not faile to performe his promiſe to them euen of his owne mere and freebeſtowed goodneſſe. And ſo ye ſee how this text is to bee vnderſtoode. Nowe foraſmuch as here is mention made of the Land that was promiſed to the Iewes: let vs marke that we nowadays ought to bee much more prouoked to Iohn 4.21. ſerue God, ſeeing hee hath dedicated the whole earth to himſelf, & wil haue his name to bee called vpon euery where. For the bloudſhed of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, hath ſactified the whole world which was then in vncleanneſſe. For we knowe there were no moe lands but this, which God reſerued to himſelfe, and wherein he would reigne til the comming of his ſonne. But when our Lord Ieſus Chriſt was once come: then got hee the Pſal.2.8. Mat.28.19. Coloſ.1.6. poſſeſſion of the whole worlde, ſo as his kingdome was extended from the one ſide thereof to the other, ſpecially at the publiſhing of the Goſpel. Seeing it is ſo, let vs marke that we nowadayes are ſo much the more ſtraitly bounde to ſerue God, becauſe hee hath ſanctified the whole earth by the precious bloude of his ſonne, that wee might dwell in it and liue vnder his reigne, and beware that we addict our ſelues vnto him, as well as we would that hee ſhould haue vs in his protection and ſafekeeping.

Howbeit foraſmuch as men are alwayes ſo tickliſh, that (as I haue ſaide alreadie) they cannot bee bridled ynough to reſtraine them: Moſes confirmeth the whole doctrine that hee had vttered heere, ſaying, Harken therefore O Iſraell, the Lorde thy God is one God. Hee had ſaide afore, Hearken: he had ſaide, take heede: hee had ſaide that it behoued them to keepe the law: but heere hee confirmeth the whole matter much better, by ſetting downe expreſly that the God of Iſrael is the one God. And hereby his meaning is to exclude all the Gods which the world forged to it ſelfe, and to ſhew that it is not lawfull for vs to conceiue any thing in our owne imagination, whereof wee haue not warrant in Gods woord. Therefore whereas the God of Iſrael is called the one God, it is all one as if Moſes ſhould compare the God that had ſet foorth his lawe, (who had alſo manifeſted himſelfe before to his ſeruant Abraham, and to the Patriarkes,) with all thoſe whom the worlde weened to be Gods, and ſhould ſet him againſt them all. For in deede God had beene called vpon in all ages, and that name was common to the heathé. But what for that? The Heathen wandered at rouers, ſo as euerie man ſaid I worſhip God. And yet in the meane while, what was it they did? nothing but dreames and fantaſies: for when men take vpon them to worſhip God without knowing him: no doubt but they worſhip idols. The Turkes at this day doe ſay they worſhip the God that made heauen and earth: but yet is it but an idoll which they worſhip. And howe ſo? They name him the maker of heauen and earth, and they haue none images. That is true: but yet for all that, they haue but an idoll in ſtead of God, bicauſe they admit not our Lorde Ieſus Christ, who is ỹ liuely image of God his father. And we knowe how S. Iohn ſaieth that he which denieth the ſonne, denieth the father too. Therfore they haue not God, but an idoll. As much is to be ſaid of the Iewes. The Iewes boaſt of their hauing of the lawe, and of their worſhipping of the God of Abraham, Iſaac and Iacob. But what for that? They bee but backſliders and haue renounced Gods lawe, for as much as they haue reiected Ieſus Christ who is the ſoule of the law. It is he in whom God the father intendeth to manifeſt himſelfe vnto vs: It is he, whom he will haue to bee worſhipped. And in that reſpect he ſaieth, Kiſſe the ſonne whom I ſend vnto you. And againe, he that honoureth not the ſonne, honoreth not the father that ſent him. Let vs marke wel then, that here Moſes meant to compare the God which vttered himſelf by his word, with al the Gods that are honored through the whole world, and to ſhew that in them all there is nothing but mockerie and leaſing. And why? For wee can neuer worſhip God aright, vnleſſe we firſt knowe him. And wee muſt alwayes haue an eye to this ſaying of Ieſus Christ which hee ſpake to the woman of Samaria, yee knowe not what ye worſhippe. Ieſus Christes vſing of ſuch ſpeach, is as much as if he ſhoulde ſpit at all the worſhippings which ỹ world had ſet vp in thoſe dayes. There was not that nation which boaſted not themſelues to ſerue God: but Ieſus Christ reiecteth quite and cleane the things which mé tooke to bee good and holy. Ye knowe not what ye worſhip ſaieth he. Hereby he ſheweth that it is expedient for vs to be told of it. We muſt not goe to it at all aduenture, but wee muſt bee ſure which is the God whom wee ſerue. And ſeeing it ſtandeth vs on hand to knowe God, if wee will worſhip him and ſerue him aright: let vs conſider from whence this knowledge cõmeth. Groweth it in our owne garden as they ſay: May wee get it by our owne trauell or policie? Is it lawfull for euerie man to imagine what he liſteth, and to ſay, I knowe God? No no: but God muſt bee faine to vtter himſelfe, and to come vnto vs. And ſo the onely meane to knowe God aright, is to be taught by his woorde. And that is the cauſe why he ſaieth, The Lord thy God. For this people had receiued the lawe: and beſide, the couenant had bin made with their fathers: God had ſhooled out that flocke from the reſt of the world. Iuſtly therefore doeth Moſes here bring back the people to the knowledge of God, to the ende they ſhoulde reſtraine themſelues from all the ſuperſtitions of the heathen, and haue nothing at all to doe with the vnbeleeuers, but know that in as much as God had manifeſted himſelfe ſo familiarly vnto them: they had the certaine and infallible trueth.

Now although this was ſpoken in the time of the lawe: yet doeth it agree better ſtill to vs. For although God gaue the Iewes ſufficient warning that they ſhould not haue to doe with the defilings and idolatries of the heathé: yet haue wee a much larger light nowe adayes, ſince the comming of our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt. Hee is the liuely image of God his father (as I haue ſayde alreadie,) and we may well agree to this ſaying in the firſt of Saint Iohn, That no man euer ſaw God, but the ſonne who hath alwayes beene in the boſome of the father hath reuealed him vnto vs. The fathers of olde time had a knowledge as I ſaid, but that knowledge is eſteemed as none at all, in compariſon of the knowledge which we haue now adayes by the Goſpell. God ſheweth himſelfe more plainely vnto vs by the ſhining forth of the dayſunne of righteouſneſſe. And for the ſame cauſe the Prophet Eſay treating of the redemption that was to bee perfourmed in the perſon of the ſonne of God, ſaith expreſſely: Behold, this is he: beholde, this is our God. The Prophet crieth out, this is he, this is our God. He contenteth not himſelfe to ſay, behold our God: but he ſpeaketh as if the thing were preſent, and as though God had appeared vnto him. How ſo? And was not God in ỹ mids of his people? Yes: for he ſaid, I will dwel among you. And againe, This is my reſt, Sion is ỹ place where I will dwell. And afterward he proteſteth that he will neuer depart thence, and that the people is his temple and a royall Prieſthood. Why then doeth the Prophet Eſay ſay, Behold, behold our God: this is he, this is he: when our Lorde Ieſus Christ was to come into the world? Euen bicauſe God reuealed himſelfe to vs in greater perfection. Now then we be the leſſe to be excuſed, if we run gadding nowe adayes without holding of our ſelues to the pure trueth, ſo as euerie of vs turneth away after his own dotages, to ſay, it ſeemeth ſo to mee, this thinke I good. Let vs aſſure our ſelues that all this is nothing worth, but we muſt repaire to the certaintie that is brought vs by our Lord Ieſus Chriſt.

bent to ſpyte God, and haue conſpired to turne their backes vppon him, and to ſhake off all ſubiection, that they may haue libertie to continue in their diſorders, and to ſcape in the meane while vneſpyed with their lewdneſſe. The Iewes are vnexcuſable, according as wee ſee howe the Prophetes vpbrayde them with their wilfull forſaking of God, ſo as they coulde not excuſe themſelues by ſaying ỹ they had not heard any thing, as the poore Paynims might doe: for God proteſteth that he ſpake not in vaine. And now adayes when God ſpeaketh to vs with open mouth, and wee haue him perfectly diſcouered vnto vs by the Goſpell, is it not too great a lewdneſſe that men ſhould runne aſtray after that faſhion? Were there euer any ſuperſtitions more groſſe and more outragious, than are to bee ſeene nowe adayes in the Popedome? It is true that the Iewes medled with the ſuperſtitions of the Heathen, and tooke much filth and vncleanneſſe of them: but if all bee well ſearched, it will bee founde that the Papiſts haue farre exceeded them. For Gods word is as it were, at this day buryed among them. When they treate of fayth, they fetch the points of it from mens inuentions: and the holy ſcripture is in as much reuerence among them as if it were dead, and that all thinges went to hauocke. Loe at what poynt they bee. And if a man ſpeake to them of Gods ſeruice, (as I ſayde) they bee buſie about their owne inuentions. Yea verily, myne intent is good ſay they: and ſo they beare themſelues in hand, that God will ſuffer himſelfe to bee dandled lyke a little babe, and will neuer come to examine any whit of the doctrine of Poperie. Againe if they ſpeake of fayth: exhort they men to reſort to Gods free promiſes? No, but they chalendge all to themſelues. When they take in hand to treate of the office of Ieſus Chriſt, they ouerthrowe the vertue of his death and paſſion, as much as they can. When they treate of their ſaluation: then ſtep forth their owne free-will, their merites, and their ſatiſfactions. But contrariwiſe we ſhould reſort to the mere grace of the holy Ghoſt, acknowledging our ſelues to bee in bondage to ſinne, vntill God deliuer vs from it through his mercie. And thereuppon it commeth that the holy Scripture calleth the forgiueneſſe of ſinnes our righteouſneſſe. That is the point which wee muſt reſort vnto, to know that when wee haue done amiſſe, wee can bring none other amendes or payment for it, than ſuch as wee borrowe of the death and paſſion of our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt. But there is not a word of all this in Poperie. When God is to be prayed vnto, they make their vagaries to their Heeſaintes and Sheeſaintes: & in the meane while Ieſus Chriſt is not knowen to bee as he is, neither is let alone with the office that is giuen him by God his father: but they depoſe him, lyke a ſorte of theeues and traytours that ſeeke nothing elſe but to burie him againe, and to make hauocke of all the glorie that was giuen him by God his Father. After the ſame ſort deale they alſo in all other things. Wee ſee how the Sacramentes are defiled to the vttermoſt. In ſtead of the Supper of our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt, they haue ſet vp that ſame helliſh abhomination of the Maſſe, wherein they ſay that Ieſus Chriſt is ſacrificed, as though he had done nothing already, nor were appointed to be the onely & euerlaſting Prieſt by God his father. Wee ſee then that the Papiſts haue ſo dalyed with Gods word wherein he hath reuealed himſelfe: as it ſhould ſeeme that they meant of ſet purpoſe to wype away the knowledge that is in the Goſpell. And therefore wee haue ſo much the more neede to marke well this ſaying, That the Lord is God, yea euen the onely one God.

Nowe then, as oft as this word God commeth to our minde, let vs aſſure our ſelues that it ſerueth to cut off all toyes that may come in our heades, and all inuentions of men, and all other things whereof we haue not warrant in the holy ſcriptures. For God will haue vs to conſider him in ſuch wiſe, as wee ſnarle not our ſelues in the imaginations and errours of idolatrie. And of a truth, we cannot haue the true God, except wee haue him alone: that is to ſay, without adding any companion vnto him. For as ſoone as we fall to bringing in of vndergoddes, we forſake the liuing God. And why? Bicauſe his will is to bee alone, as he auoweth in another place by his Prophet Eſay ſaying, I am the liuing God (ſaieth the Lord) and I will not giue my glory to any other. Againe we haue ſeene heretofore how he called himſelfe a iealous God. And why was that, but to withdrawe vs from all corruptions, as S. Paule affirmeth in the ſecond to the Corinthians? For as ſoone as we be turned aſide from the ſimplicitie of Gods word, it is all one as if a wife ſhould hearken to a bawde that came to whiſper hir in the eare. By and by we be corrupted, and ſo wee commit foule whoredome againſt God, when we falſifie the faith that we haue plighted him in Baptiſme. We caſt away his law, and ſtain al religion, when wee ſwarue neuer ſo little from the pure Religion. Wherefore let vs beare well in minde, that as oft as this word God commeth to our rememberance, God muſt be all alone. And if wee accompanie him with any creatures: he forſaketh vs as backſliders, and as folk vnworthy to haue any thing to doe with him, bicauſe wee vouchſafed not to yeelde him his deſerued honour: that is to wit, to take him for our [onely] Lord, but haue vnhallowed that name by imparting the ſame to creatures, or rather to our owne dreames.

And herewithall let vs marke, that it is not ynough for vs to reſerue to the liuing God the tytle of the onely God: but all that euer belongeth vnto him muſt alſo abide vnminiſhed and vnappaired. As howe? His meaning is not alonely to be called the onely God: but alſo to be acknowledged to be almightie, and to be our father and Sauiour, which hath all authoritie ouer vs to gouerne vs, in whom wee ought to put our whole truſt, and whom wee ought to call vpon. Thoſe are the chiefe things which wee ought to minde when mention is made of the honoring of the onely one God. Trueth it is that the Papiſts will well well ynough say, that S. Michael and S. William are not their Gods: but yet for all that they worship them, yea euen the stockes of them. Although they hope to scape by this shift, that the images are not the Saintes themselues whome they pray vnto, but onely rememberances set vp there to represent them: yet is it expressely against Gods forbidding. And againe, we see that they cannot by any meanes discerne the difference how God will bee worshipped, when they intangle themselues after that maner with their idols of stone and timber, whereby they surmise themselues to represent their Saints. True it is ỹ they countenance the matter with the termes of Doulia & Latria, which they themselues vnderstand not, saying that they serue their puppets and yeelde reuerence vnto God: for that is the thing which they meane by those woordes. But surely God is much beholden to them, in ỹ they shew that they doe but honour him, and in the meane season serue their idols. Againe, is it not a holy thing to pray vnto God? Yes: for it is ỹ very seruice that he requireth, as it is saide in the fifth Psalme. So then, we see that the world doth dally too shameleslly with God, in corrupting his seruice so lewdly, yea and that it is too detestable a thing, that men should runne astray so, after so cleare and open reuelation or discouerie of thinges, as is contained in the Gospell. And therefore it behoueth vs so much the more to stand to this doctrine, knowing that our Lorde will haue vs tyed wholly to himselfe alone, so as there may be an inuiolable vnion betwixt him & vs. Which thing will come to passe, if wee holde our selues simply within the boundes and listes of his word, so as we giue no enterance to mens inuentions, nor suffer our mindes to wander at rouers, but hearken to the thinges ỹ are contayned in the holy scripture, & not only say amen to them readily with our mouthes, but also settle our faith throughly vppon the thinges that are proceeded out of the mouth of our God.

Now let vs kneele downe in ỹ presence of our good God, with acknowledgement of our faults, praying him to make vs feele them better than wee haue doone, so as wee may knowe more and more wherein wee bee bounde vnto him, and not thinke to discharge our selues thereof lightly, but bend our selues wholly to him and to his seruice, not hauing any other intent or desire than to keepe his holy Lawe. And seeing wee bee yet verie farre off from it, so that straine wee our selues neuer so much, wee stop in the middes of our waye: let vs flee for succour to the forgiuenesse of our sinnes, praying him to vouchsafe to receiue vs to mercie, and to beare with vs in such sort, as he neuer ceasse to guide vs with his holy spirit, though wee deserue to bee vtterly shaken off at his hand. And therewithall it may please him so to open our eyes, that wee beholding the brightnesse of our Lorde Iesus Christ, may bee wholly rauished thereat, to renounce these worldly things and our fleshly affections, which carrie vs awaye: so as wee may haue none other desire than to humble our selues vnder him, to the ende that beyng striken downe in our selues, wee may bee lifted vp at his hand by his woorde, wayting till it please him to transfigure vs after his owne image at the latter daye. That it maye please him to graunt this grace not onely to vs but also, &c.

On Saturday the xx. of Iuly. 1555.

4 Hearken O Israel & c.

6 And these woordes which I commaund thee this day, shall be in thy heart.

7 Thou shalt rehearse them to thy children, and talke of them when thou art at home in thy house, and as thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou risest vp.

8 And thou shalt binde them as a signe vpon thy handes, and they shall bee as frontlets written betweene thine eyes.

IBeganne yesterday to tell you wherefore Moses auoweth that There is but onely one God: that is to wit, bicause mẽ can neuer giue themselues to the seruing of the true God, vnlesse they discerne him from all things imagined by the world. For euerie man forgeth gods at his owne pleasure, and the verie fountaine and welspring of all superstition and idolatrie, is that men cannot bee contented with the liuing God, but giue heade to their owne fansies, and thereuppon builde a great sort of fables to beguile themselues. Therfore it is requisit before all other things, to know which is the true God, that wee may holde our selues wholly vnto him, and worship him simply with-without adding any thing at all to his word. For as ſoone as any thing is mingled thereunto, by and by it is corrupted. And here is expreſſe mẽtion made of the God of Iſrael, bicauſe God muſt needes haue manifeſted himſelfe, or elſe wee could neuer haue knowen him. For where are the wings wherewith we ſhould flie to ſo infinite a height, as to comprehẽd the Maieſtie of God? But when it pleaſeth him to reueale himſelfe to vs by his word: it is as though he came downe to acquaint himſelfe with vs: and then doe wee knowe him. And this certaintie of being fully reſolued that we worſhip not a new forged god, or a god that is brought in by men, but the ſame God to whom all praiſe is due: is the verie foundation of all Religion. Herewithall let vs beare in minde, that he will bee worſhipped all alone, not onely by reſeruing to himſelfe the name of God: but alſo by hauing all that is his, that is to wit, all that belongeth to his Maieſtie, and as ye woulde ſay to his office. I ſpeake after this maner, to expreſſe the better, that God hath not reſpect alonely to his being. His will is not that men ſhould onely call him the euerlaſting, or confeſſe him to be the maker of the world: but that they ſhould alſo knowe him to bee almightie, and that it is he to whom the gouernment of vs belongeth, it is he in whom is all vertue, wiſedome, goodneſſe, and righteouſneſſe, it is he to whom wee muſt runne for ſuccour, it is hee in whom we muſt put all our truſt, it is he to whom wee owe all glorie. Yee ſee then how Moſes, in ſhewing that there is but onely one God, meaneth that men ſhould commit themſelues vnto him, knowing that they be in his hand, that they bee maintained by his onely power, that it is he at whoſe hand they muſt looke for ſaluation and all welfare, and finally that it is he in whom they haue their lyfe, moouing and being: and therefore that it is he whom wee muſt honour, as well with prayer and ſupplications, as alſo by praiſe and thanſgiuing.

Pſal. 50. 14. 15.

And nowe to ſhewe his meaning the better, Moſes addeth, Thou ſhalt loue the Lorde thy God with all thy heart, with all thy ſoule, and with all thy ſtrength. In theſe wordes wee ſee the thing that hath bin touched alreadie: that is to wit, that Gods intent is to hold vs wholly to himſelfe, and to poſſeſſe vs in ſuch ſort, as wee ſerue him not by halues, ne wander in the meane while to and fro. Then like as God of his gratious goodneſſe giueth himſelfe to vs: ſo doeth it behooue vs to bee altogether his poſſeſſion and inheritaunce. That is the ſumme of the thinges contained in theſe wordes of Moſes, where he ſpeaketh of the louing of GOD with all our heart, with all our ſoule, and with all our ſtrength. As if he ſhoulde ſay, There is no meane way in this caſe, deceiue not your ſelues by imagining to ſerue God by parcelmeale, and by making any reſtraint from him: for he will keepe his owne right throughout in all points. What is to be done then? You muſt giue your hearts wholly vnto him, ſo as ye reſerue not any peece of it to idoles. For that were a corrupting and a baſtarding of his ſeruice: eyther he muſt haue all whole, or elſe he will haue none at all, accordingly as we ſee how he renounceth the people in Ezechiel, for mingling of ſuperſtitions with his Lawe. Goe your wayes (ſaieth he) and ſerue your owne idoles: I will no more of you. He giueth them leaue and caſteth them vp to Satan, telling them that hee liketh not any of all the things which they doe: for he will not bee matched with idoles. What an outrage and blaſphemie is that? Thus then we ſee now the meaning of Moſes.

Eze. 20. 39.

Now as concerning theſe words, Soule, Minde, and Strength: the Iewes did miſunderſtãd them. Their ſaying is, that Thou ſhalt loue God with all thy ſoule, is as much to ſay as thou ſhalt not ſpare thy life for the loue of thy God, but thou ſhalt ſet ſo much ſtore by his glorie, that in compariſon thereof thou ſhalt not eſteeme thine owne lyfe, ſo as if neede require that thou ſhouldeſt die to ſhewe the loue which thou beareſt vnto God: thou ſhouldeſt doe it. Againe Thou ſhalt loue thy God with all thy minde or Heart, betokeneth with them but as it were a compariſon, ſo as a man ſhoulde preferre GOD aboue all other things. And finally, Thou ſhalt loue God with all thy ſtrength, importeth among them, that thou muſt loue him with all thy ſubſtance and with all thy goods, ſo as if the caſe required that thou ſhouldeſt bee impoueriſhed, thou ſhouldeſt rather giue ouer thy worldely goods, than forſake thy God. But this expoſition is too ſtraite laced, and attaineth not to the verie meaning of Moſes. For proofe whereof there needeth nowe no long diſcourſe. For what better expounder of the Lawe is there to bee found, than our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt, by whoſe ſpirit it was giuen? For it was at his hand and by his authoritie, that Moſes receiued the Lawe which wee holde of him. So then, we muſt fetch the expoſition thereof at his mouth, and we muſt receiue it without gainſaying. And for the ſame cauſe doe the three Euangeliſts S. Matthew, in the 22. S. Mark in ỹ 12. and S. Luke in the 10. ſet downe this louing of God to be the whole ſumme of the well keeping of the lawe. True it is that he addeth, Thou ſhalt loue thy neighbour as thy ſelfe. Howbeit, in anſwering he ſaieth, thou ſhalt loue thy God with all thy heart, with all thy ſoule, with all thy minde, and with all thy ſtrength. Our Lord Ieſus Chriſt addeth there one woorde more: not to make a new ſenſe, but to aſſure vs the better of the ſame thing that Moſes meant by the wordes Soule and Heart. So then he ſetteth downe Soule, Heart, and Minde, as if he ſhould ſay, The man that intendeth to keepe Gods Lawe well, muſt yeeld himſelfe wholly and throughly to the obeying and louing of God. Nowe wee ſee that in our ſoules, firſt there is the power of thinking, when wee conceiue thinges to iudge and diſcerne of them. That is the firſt power of the ſoule: namely that vpon the inſight of things, we enter into deliberation and iudgement, and conclude one way or other. Gods will then is to reſtraine all theſe thoughtes to himſelfe. Againe there is the ſoule, which is not onely the life, but alſo the meane betwixt the thoughtes and the heart. For the Heart betokeneth the affections, deſires, & will.

Matt. 22. 37 & Mar. 12. 30. & Luke. 10. 27.

It

It is one thing to think a thing, & another thing to desire it, and to set a hartie affection vpon it. Ye see then that the heart is matched with the thoughtes, to shewe that we must loue our God with all our mind. And there is the Soule, which is as it were betweene both: as if it were sayd, that whether wee debate and take counsell of our owne affaires we must alwayes begin at the loue of God, and referre all thinges thereunto: or whether wee couet one thing or other in seeking our own profite, Gods loue must alwais gouerne vs, so as al our desires be as it were restreined and bridled vnder it. Yee see then that the whole soule with all the powers thereof ought to bee throughly possessed with the loue towardes God. And the word strength serueth to shewe yet better, that God admitteth not any exception, neither may wee reply in this behalfe, and say, is my doing of this or that an impeaching of any part of my loue towards God? No no, if thou doe neuer so little a thing, & that al thy thoughts tend not to the louing of God, so as the loue of God doe guide thee: all is mard, and there is nothing but sinne in thee & in all thy whole soule. For hast thou any strégth or power there, which is not giuen thee from aboue? No. Therefore must thou reknowledge it vnto God of whome thou holdest it. Now then, seeing that our Lord Iesus Christ hath expounded vs this text, wee neede not to make long discourse of it, as I sayde afore, but onely to holde vs to the authoritie of him which is the very Lawegiuer.

Now remaineth the practising of this doctrine, that is to say, to knowe how wee should put it in effect and execution. And let vs marke first of all, how this onely one text sheweth vs sufficiently, that Gods law passeth al our abilities, so as it is not possible for vs to fulfill it, & to discharge our selues of it, or of the hundreth part of it, as long as wee liue here beneath. For why? doe we knowe God throughly as we ought to doe? No no, wee come farre short of it. Then is it impossible for vs to loue him with all our strength and with all our affections: for knowledge goeth before loue. If our knowing of God bee but in part, so as wee be wrapped as yet in much darknesse: our louing of God must also be weake lykewise. Moreouer wee see what the fondnesse of our minde is: for in stead of seeking heauenly thinges, wee looke alwayes downeward. And if wee be desirous but so much as to lift vp our head: wee must be faine to striue and to goe to it by maine force, and yet wee returne still to our owne nature. How fickle are our desires? and how fight they one against another? So as men are tossed and turmoyled without ende or measure, and haue no rest at all, but are tormented with vnquietnesse, of ambition on the one side, and of couetousnesse on the other. Againe they would faine liue at ease and in pleasure, and they would faine be had in honor and estimation. Finally they be combered with fleshly lustes and such other lyke thinges. Hereby then it appeareth enough and too much, that wee come farre short of louing God with all our heart, and of giuing our selues wholy ouer vnto him, as wee be commaunded here. And so let vs marke, that the righteousnesse of the Lawe respecteth not what men can doe, but what they ought to doe. We be bound to loue our GOD with all our heart, with all our minde, and with all our soule. Although we haue no such perfection in vs as to come any thing neere it, yet notwithstanding wee bee bound vnto it. If any man say, How so? why should God require more of vs than we be able to performe? we must consider from whéce the mischief springeth namely euen from our owne fault. The originall sin that is in vs is the cause thereof, so as we take it by byrth. And is it meet ỹ because we be naughtie and frowarde, therefore God should bee bereft of his seruice and lose his right? No. If a man haue played the vnthrift and wasted away both his owne goods and other mens: shall his creditor bee bound to bring him his obligation and to say, take thee here thy bond, thou owest me nothing? The creditor will at leastwise keepe still his obligation, and although the vnthrift haue not wherewith to pay: yet ought he to doe homage to his creditor, and to stand bound vnto him still, and not to deny him his dette. Now God deserueth well to bee much more priuileged than mortall men. Wherefore let vs consider that we owe him a hundred thowsand fold more than al the debts of gold and siluer in the world. So then, Gods righteousnesse is an inuiolable thing, so that the order of nature ought rather to bee abolished. Now then if men bee lewde and froward, doth it follow therefore, that they should pluck the sonne out of the skie, or make the earth to bee confounded? True it is that there happen many confusions by reason of our sinnes, insomuch that our Lorde sendeth both raine, and thunder, hayles, and tempestes, and such other like thinges: but yet for all that, the order of nature continueth vnappayred after such turmoyling. Therefore wee must vnderstande, that although wee bee lewde, and there is nothing but vnrighteousnesse and naughtinesse in vs: Yet must Gods iustice and righte continue perfecte and vnappayred as in respecte of the commaundementes: and we must needes stoope to them, and suffer our selues to bee condemned for not discharging our dueties. Do we then heare this summe of the Law, Thou shalt loue the Lord thy God with al thy hearte, with all thy soule, with all thy minde, and with all thy strength? Let it make vs conclude that we be all damned and accursed before God, and that there is none other shifte for vs, but to flee to his mercie: and that we bee not condemned for any one sinne, or for two or three: but ỹ God findeth vs guiltie in al pointes & al respects. And for proofe therof, let vs examine wel ỹ best works that we can haue done in all our life: and there wil be stil some fancie or other to turn vs away, so as we shal not goe on so freely towardes God, but ỹ there wil be some temptatiõ mingled therwith, or som toy to pluck vs back, & the diuel shal haue endeuered to coole vs. And when it fareth so ẅ vs, it is a plaine corruption to infect ỹ thing ỹ shold be good and commendable in our works.

Yee

Ye ſee then that wee take not any deliberation, any counſel, or any deſire in our whole life, but the curſe of God is with vs and vpon our heads. Were this well printed in our hearts: all glorying to the worldeward ſhould bee beaten downe in vs, and there would be no more ſo much meriting, wherewith the Papiſts are ſo bewitched, that (to their owne ſeeming) they may enter into account before GOD. Alas, they ſhoulde then ſee that they be far off from their account. Howebeit foraſmuch as the Diuell hath blinded them with ſuch pride: let vs on our ſide make our commoditie of this text.

And ſith wee heare that God requireth that we ſhould loue him perfectly with all our heart, with all our minde, and with al our ſoule: let vs be of opinion that hee condemneth vs vtterly, vntil hee haue acquit vs of his owne infinite goodneſſe. But yet for all this, we muſt plucke vp our hearts and quicken vp our ſpirites, ſith wee ſee that our Lorde prouoketh vs after that faſhion. For what maketh vs ſo cold and negligent? It is our bearing of our ſelues in hande that wee bee diſcharged. The cauſe therefore why men doe flatter themſelues, is for ỹ they take themſelues to be perfect, when they haue brought ſome petie trifles vnto God. When we bee at that point, let vs bethinke vs how it is ſaid here, Thou ſhalt loue God with all thy heart. If it happen that we be not very diſordered in our life, but that wee haue praied vnto God at our vpriſing in ỹ morning, wee haue done no man wrong all the day long, we haue not played the whoremaſters, nor the drunkardes, wee haue not hurt any of our neighbors, we haue not conſpyred any euil, we haue not blaſphemed God, but wee haue occupied our ſelues about ſome good matters, inſomuch as wee haue indeuoured to doe good to ſuch as were in neceſſitie, and laboured to apply our ſelues to the things that God commandeth, and haue done them ſome ſeruice which had neede thereof: when night commeth, we thinke our ſelues to be litle Angels, and that God hath no more to demaund of vs. That is the cauſe that cooleth vs, and why we ſerue not GOD ſo earneſtly as were requiſite. For wee beare our ſelues in hand, that wee bee perfect, and we bee contented with our ſelues, and we need nothing elſe to content vs withall, for we be too much inclined to like well of our ſelues. But behold here is wherwith to waken vs frō ſuch follie, namely, Thou ſhalt loue ỹ Lord thy God. And after what manner? after our owne meaſure? No no: but ẅ al our heart, ẅ al our ſoule, & with al our ſtrēgth. And therefore let vs looke that wee ſearche well our thoughtes: and in examining of our liues, let vs conſider what a number of vaine and fonde fancies haue paſſed vs. And if it be alleaged, yea but I yelded not to them: very well, diddeſt thou not conceiue any ſuch thought? Will not thy God poſſeſſe thy whole ſoule? Shal ỹ diuel beare rule ouer thy thoughts, & God in ỹ meane while haue nothing to doe ẅ thē? And ſeeing he hath giuen thee thoſe thoughtes, if thou fall to mingling of thē ẅ any corruptiō, whence procedeth ỹ, but frō ỹ affection of our mindes? Therefore if wee were well fraughted aforehand with the loue of God, ſhould not all the powers of our ſoules be brought vnder his obedience? Yes. So then, our forging of ſo many fond imaginations, our letting of our deſires and delightes looſe to followe this and that, and our forgetting of God in the meane while, or rather our excluding of him from bearing any ſway at all in vs, doth prooue ſufficiently that the true loue of God is not receiued into our ſoules. Alas, doth it not appeare that we be yet farre off from diſcharging the hundreth part of our duetie?

Beſides this foreſayd condēning of our ſelues, wee muſt alſo quicken vp our ſelues, and ſay, what doeſt thou wretched creature? doeſt thou giue thy ſelfe to doe well ſith god exhorteth thee ſo earneſtly? In the meanwhile thou ſeeſt ỹ thou haſt much adoe euen to begin. Thus ye ſee how wee ought to beare this text in minde, that it may inflame vs with the loue of God, ſeeing we be yet ſo farre off from the perfection which hee requireth and commaundeth. Againe let vs marke well, that our Lordes vppening of all the abilities of our ſoule here, is to make vs looke better to the good turnes that he hath done vs, to yeelde him homage for the ſame, and to apply them to his honor. For what a thing is it that wee haue the gift of conſulting, the choyce of diſcerning betweene good and euill, and the abilitie to cōceiue things ſo as we can ſay we wil doe this or that? Lo here an excellent gift wherwith wee be indued. Now then ſeeing wee haue will to chooſe, ſo as wee can ſay, go to, I finde this to bee good: and againe, ſeeing wee haue a ſoule which beareth Gods image printed in it, and ſeeing we haue ſo many goodly vertues, wherethrough wee excell all other creatures: ought not the conſideration thereof to prouoke vs the more to ſerue God, and to honour him with thoſe ſo precious giftes which hee hath put in vs? Yes: and therefore let vs learne, that whē our thoughtes are ſet vppon vaine and wicked thinges, and when our deſires runne at rouers and rebell againſt God: we vnhallowe ſo holy a treaſure, as wee deſerue well to bee vtterly caſt vp at Gods hand, becauſe of our vnthākfulneſſe. Now then whereas Moſes ſpeaketh here of the thoughts and the will: and our Lord Ieſus Chriſt addeth one word more, that is to wit, minde, Soule, and will: let vs vnderſtand that hereby we be warned, that if we ſubmit not our ſelues wholly vnto God, it happeneth for want of conſidering the good thinges that hee hath beſtowed vppon vs. For if wee feele him liberall, as hee ſheweth himſelfe towardes vs: ſurely it wil drawe vs wholy vnto him. So then let vs conſider, that Gods making of vs ſo excellent as to haue his image printed in vs, was not to any other end, thā ỹ we ſhould do him homage for them, & by that meane be ỹ more moued to loue him, & to keepe our ſelues well from defiling ſo precious gifts, as reaſon, will, diſcretion, & all ỹ reſt of the powers of our ſoules which he hath giuē vs. Thus ye ſee in effect what we haue to remēber vpon this place.

But yet herewithall wee muſt marke alſo the thing that I haue tolde you heretofore: that is to wit, that God wil not be ſerued by conſtraint, but of free loue. He could ſay, Thou ſhalt honour thy God, thou ſhalt obey thy God, thou ſhalt feare thy GOD: and ſo hee doeth in other textes, and it is good reaſon that it ſhould be ſo: but he ſpeaketh expreſſely of loue. And why? To ſhewe that if our ſeruing of him bee by conſtreint, ſo as wee goe to it againſt our wils: though wee honor him neuer ſo much, and doe all that is poſſible to glorify his name: yet if the ſame proceede not of loue, ſo as our heart yeeld vnto him freely and without gainesaying: hee vtterly diſaloweth it, and ſuch ſeruice is not acceptable vnto him, for he loueth him that giueth with a free will and pure affection, as ſayth Saint Paul treating of Almesdeedes. Seeing then that God loueth him which giueth with a chearefull courage: thereby hee ſheweth that if a man ſhould ſpend all his goods, yet ſhould it not boote him at al as to Godward, vnleſſe hee haue a delight in well doing. And why? Becauſe God hath commaunded it, and wee ought aboue all thinges to deſire that hee be glorifyed, that his righteouſneſſe bee obeyed, that he bee exalted at our handes, that hee reigne ouer vs, and that we be his people in very deede. Ye ſee then that the chiefe ioy which wee ſhould haue to incline vs to doe well, is a hartie and free affection. And that is the cauſe why the worde Loue was playnely ſet downe in this text.

2. Cor. 9. 7.

* Notwithſtanding, God will not haue vs to loue him as our fellowe: but hee will haue vs to loue him, honor him, and ſerue him as our God. And therefore let vs marke well, that if wee will obſerue Gods lawe as we ought to doe: we muſt not conſider him alonly in the degree of a maiſter, thereby to yeelde him reuerence: but wee muſt alſo ſet before vs the title of father, and aſſure our ſelues that Gods intent is to win vs to him by gentleneſſe, that our heart may bee as it were tyed vnto him, according to this ſaying of his by his prophet, If I be your maiſter, where is my feare? and if I be your father, where is my loue? In deede he ſetteth downe honor in that place, to betoken that a ſeruant ought to feare his maiſter: but yet immediatly after hee ſetteth downe the worde Loue alſo, of purpoſe to ſhewe what honour the childe yeeldeth to his father.

Mal. 1. 6.

And therefore let vs remember, that the firſt point of ſeruing God aright, is to bee led vnto him, yea and to be led thither vpō knowledge of this worde Sauiour, ſo as we couet aboue all things to be ſo knit vnto him, as all our ioy, contentation and reſt bee there, that by that meane we may no more be giuen to the thinges that are contrarie to his righteouſneſſe. And that is the cauſe why wee ſay, that we muſt firſt know Gods grace and goodneſſe, before we can ſerue him. For as for ſuch as ſerue God for feare of being damned, not knowing that hee will bee their ſauiour: what doe they? They ſeeme to inforce themſelues greatly foreward: but in deede they drawe cleane backe. Though they breake both their armes and their legges, yet are they neuer the forewarder. And for that cauſe is it ſayde in the hundred and thirtith pſalme, Becauſe the Lord hath bin mercifull, and men haue found him gentle and gratious: therefore is hee feared and dreaded. In deede the world thinketh to ſerue GOD well enough, without knowing him, and wee ſee that the Papiſtes doe this and that vpon ſuch opinion. But what for that? In the meane while they haue no truſt in God, they neuer knewe his will nor his louing kindeneſſe: and therefore are they alwayes in terror and vnquietneſſe.

Pſal. 130. 7.

True it is that they yeelde ſome outward ſeruice vnto God: but all that euer they doe is not woorth a pin, inſomuch that God reiectes euen their keeping of the Lawe: for wee muſt be led by loue and by a franke and free goodwill, as I ſayd afore. And how may that bee done? Euen by knowing God to be our father and Sauiour, as I alledged out of the text of malachie, and as is yet better expreſſed in this verſe of the pſalme, that wee muſt firſt know Gods mercy, and reſt thereupon, or elſe wee can neuer feare him, and come neere him to ſerue him. That is the true & plaine meaning of this text, and ſo muſt wee apply it.

Pſal. 130. 7. & 131. 24.

Moſes hauing ſpoken after that faſhion, addeth now, that the Lawe muſt bee ſo deare vnto vs, as to take it for our chiefe treaſure. And foraſmuch as wee bee too much ſubiect to the ſeeking of the corruptible thinges of this world, and forget God out of hand, and withdrawe our ſelues too farre from him: hee ſayth, that men muſt haue Gods lawe continually in their ſights, and make as it were a Headroll thereof, as if a woman were attyred after the auncient maner, with borders on her head, bracelets on her armes: or as if a man ſhould make borders of thē about his houſe, or ingrauers vppon the doores of his houſe, ſo as Gods glorie might be euery where. And whereas hee ſpeaketh heere of frontlets and bracelets, and of painting and ingrauing of Gods lawe vpon doore poſtes: it is to ſhewe that whereas men giue themſelues to vaine glory in decking and attyring of themſelues, and the ſame turneth them away from God: they muſt make all their deckinges of Gods Lawe: that muſt bee their Iewels. Like as if a man or a woman haue a coſtly Iewell vpon their finger, and take pleaſure therein: in ſteade thereof they ſhoulde haue Gods Lawe continually before their eyes, ſo as a man ſhould no ſooner looke vpon himſelfe, no though it were but vpon his nayles, but it ſhoulde come to his minde to thinke, Thou haſt a maker who faſhioned thee, and whoſe will it is that thou ſhouldeſt ſerue him by yeelding thy ſelfe wholly to his obedience. Although thou bee a ſillie vnprofitable creature: yet will thy God bee glorified in thee. Thus yee ſee howe we muſt make all our deckinges of Gods Lawe. Againe, in ſtead of the beautifying of houſes, with thinges of goodly ſhewe and furniture, to the ende it may bee ſaide, this is the houſe of ſome man of eſtimation: the Lawe of God muſt be written vpon it. Now wee ſee what the meaning of Moſes was.

ruption of mankinde. For it is manifeſt, that euen of the holyeſt thinges in the world, men take occaſion to mocke God, and to marre all, and to turne them to a contrary ende. As how? This ſaying, Hearken O Iſraell, the Lorde thy God is one onely God, is a notable ſaying, and worthie to be had in remembrance aboue all others. For it ſerueth to magnify the liuing GOD, that hee might bee diſcerned from the idols that haue bin forged, to the ende that our religion might be certeine and infallible. Then is it as excellent a leſſon, as a man ſhall reade any: and yet what haue the Iewes which were Gods people fared the better for it? They haue turned it into a charme and ſorcerie, imagining ỹ the ſpeaking of thoſe words would make a coniuration, lyke to the Agnus Dei in poperie, and to ſuch other geugawes as the papiſts hang about their necks, in the which Agnus Dei they write ỹ beginning of Saint Iohns Goſpell and I wote not what els, wherewith they beare themſelues in hand that they can coniure both God and the diuill. As much haue the Iewes done with this leſſon: inſomuch that they haue abuſed euen the very letters of it. There is one letter (ſay they) which importeth foure, betokening that God is Lorde of the fowre partes of the worlde. They haue taken otherſome according to their numbers and ciphers, to ſignify thinges which they haue deuiſed of their owne brayne. And in the meane while they had no reuerence to God, but would that hee ſhould haue no more power nor authoritie ouer them. And that doe they ſhewe full well, not onely by their deſpiſing, ſhunning, & reiecting of Ieſus Chriſt, who ought to haue reigned ouer them: but alſo by their crucifying of him in deſpite of God, and by their turning away from the ſaluation that had bin promiſed them. And euen as much haue they done with this text. For they haue turned to pride and ambition the thing that is ſayd here, as wee ſee how our Lord Ieſus Chriſt in the Goſpell vpbraideth the Scribes and Phariſies with their large gardes, inſomuch that if the common people had any narrowe garde of wryting, wherein the commaundements were ſet downe, theſe great Rabbies (to the intent to become holyer than other men,) had gardes of an handbredth vppon their garments, wherein Gods lawe was written in great letters, that it might be ſeene a great way off. O, thoſe were holy perſons, for they had Gods lawe written in great letters, whereas the common people had it in ſmall. They knew the lawe much better, and therefore was God much magnifyed in them. Nay, contrariwiſe, ſuch vaine bragging was a flatte mocking of God: but yet it was the faſhion of all men, as I haue declared already. And by this which befell the Iewes, let vs take vnderſtanding and inſtruction, that the ſame muſt ſerue vs to behold that we bee ſo froward, that whereas God laboreth to drawe vs familiarly vnto him, we deſpiſe it, and in ſtead of profiting our ſelues by the doctrine that is ſet before vs, wee turne it vnto laughter, wee vnhalowe it lyke Churchrobbers, and we turne quite and cleane contrarie to his meaning, ſo as it had bin better for vs neuer to haue heard one worde of his mouth. Thus yee ſee what wee haue to marke.

Matt. 23.5.

But now herewithall we muſt come to the meaning of Moſes, which I haue touched ſhortly already. Remember theſe wordes ſayth hee. And howe? By talking and conferring of them in thy houſe, and as thou goeſt abroad. Here wee ſee well how our Lordes meaning was not to be honored with gardes of garmentes and ſuch other thinges, but to haue his lawe printed in his peoples heartes, and to haue it kept alwayes freſh in remembrance. Therefore let vs conſider, that whereas wee haue ſo much needeleſſe talke our Lord will haue his people exerciſed in talking and conferring vppon his lawe, whether it bee in reſting, or in iourneying, or when they be at home in their howſes. If wee minded this warning well, ſurely it would be a bridle to reine vs backe and to withdrawe vs from the vnprofitable talke whereunto wee bee ſo much giuen. For wee can ſpend, I ſay not ſome forenoone, but the whole day continually in light talke: but if wee ſpeake but two or three wordes of God, by and by wee bee wearie and it greeueth vs. Yet notwithſtanding, this talking of him is not the chiefe poynt. For wee muſt come to this ſaying of the pſalme, I beleeue, and therefore will I ſpeake. For oftentimes and moſt commonly, they that haue Gods lawe in their mouth and at their tongues end, haue it not at all in their heart and affection. Therefore wee muſt ſpeake of Gods lawe, much more with our heartes than with our mouthes. But yet muſt we talke of it alſo, to edify our neighbors, that the father may teach his children and the maiſter his ſeruantes, to ſerue God. That is the cauſe why our Lord commaundeth men to talk of his Lawe: not to diſcharge themſelues lightly of it, as though the whole matter lay in ſpeaking of it: but to quicken vp and correct our vnluſtineſſe, ſo as euery man help foreward his neighbor, and drawe him with him, and the fathers and maiſters in the meane while be careful to teach their children and ſeruants, as I ſayd afore. That is Moſeſes ſimple meaning when he ſpeaketh here of talking either at home or abroad: namely that mens talke muſt alwayes be of Gods Lawe.

Pſal. 116.10

Afterward here inſueth, thou ſhalt muſe vpon it in thy heart. Herein wee ſee how our Lord rebuketh vs, and ſheweth vs how fickle headed we bee, inſomuch that if wee be not holde faſt by diuers meanes, wee forget God his lawe out of hand. For what is the cauſe that he ſetteth as it were frontlets here before our eyes? Wherefore is it that hee will haue vs to weare as it were Tablets, Ringes, and Bracelets: but for that whereas we bee woont to gaſe chiefly at ſuch thinges, and to make a ſhewing of them, he will haue his own law to be ſet in them? Now the excellenteſt part of man is his face and his eyes: and our Lorde wil haue his lawe to be there. Againe he will haue it vppon our handes: and we cannot doe any thing, but our handes muſt needs goe foremoſt ſtill in it. Now our Lordes will is that wee ſhould not be able to ſtirre one finger, but we ſhould be put in minde of his law by it. Hereby he ſheweth vs (as I ſayde afore) that if wee haue not good ſtore of bridles, we ſhall play the looſe coltes: and if the lawe be not brought to our minde, and the remembrance thereof refreſhed by many meanes: we wil ſoone haue forgotten it. Wee neede no more but to cloſe our eye, and the thinges that wee had learned and which had bin tolde vs and retold vs afore, are ſtreightways out of our thought. Let vs vnderſtand therefore that our Lord blameth and condemneth vs in this text, for being ſo cuſtomably carried too and fro, and that hee muſt bee fayne to quicken vs vp, and to giue vs ſo many helps, if hee will enioy vs and haue vs to obeye hym. That is one thing which wee haue to marke vpon this text.

Beſides this let vs marke alſo, that our Lord could not better haue taũted the vanities wherunto men and women are giuen in all their prettie toyes and trifles, in attyring and decking themſelues with gardes, imbroyderies, and borders and ſuch other lyke thinges: God (I ſay) could not haue skorned ſuch vanities better, thã by telling vs that in the meane while wee forget the chiefeſt poynt of all, which is the minding of his lawe which wee forget eaſily, to occupy our ſelues about vaine and vnprofitable thinges. And this is ſpoken chiefly to women, becauſe they giue thẽſelues ouer curiouſly to theſe nice attires and deckings. For if they conſidered that they ſhoulde apply themſelues to the minding of Gods lawe, they would not be ſo much occupied in decking or rather in diſguiſing of themſelues: but they would rather conſider which is the true decking of faithfull women: that is to wit, to feare God, to liue honeſtly, mildely, chaſtely, and ſoberly, to gouerne well their houſholdes, and to occupy themſelues in bringing vp of their children. This is a beautifull attyre, and ſuch a one as is precious in Gods ſight, as Saint Peter termeth it. So then let vs marke, that whereas the worldlinges doe decke and diſguiſe themſelues, and make ſo many deuiſes to pleaſe and allure one another: we muſt beware that wee take the true decking which wil make vs acceptable before God: that is to wit, that wee beare his Lawe in minde, and can glory that wee haue a God which guideth and gouerneth vs accordingly as it hath pleaſed him to receiue vs for his people, and to giue vs his word to rule our liues by. 1.Pet.3.4

Now let vs kneele downe in the preſence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to make vs ſo to feele them, as we may learn to miſlyke thẽ more and more, and to flee for refuge to his mercie, being vtterly voyde of all truſt in any ſtrength of our owne: And yet notwithſtanding that wee may not leaue to inforce our ſelues, ſo as we may be the more giuen to his ſeruice, knowing that we bee not yet come to perfection by a great way, no nor yet to the midde way thereof: and therefore that theſe warnings which hee giueth vs may inflame vs more and more to yeelde him prayſe al our life long, by acknowledging the benefites which hee hath beſtowed vppon vs, and the nobilitie and worthineſſe which hee hath giuen vs aboue all creatures, that we may learne thereby to withdrawe our ſelues from all the vaine and tranſitorie thinges of this world, and to ſeeke the ſpirituall and heauenly thinges, to the intent that being knit vnto our God, wee may not onely withſtand all worldly temptations, but alſo drawe our neighbors from the ſame by our example. That it may pleaſe him to graũt this grace not only to vs but alſo to al &c.

On Wednesday the xxiiij. of Iuly. 1555.

10 And when the Lord thy God ſhal haue brought thee into the land, which he ſware to thy fathers Abraham, Iſaac, and Iacob, to giue thee great and goodly Cities which thou buildedſt not:

11 And houſes full of all maner of goods which thou filledſt not: and welles which thou diggedſt not: and vineyardes and Oliuegardens which thou plantedſt not: and thou ſhalt haue eaten and filled thy ſelfe:

12 Then beware, leaſt peraduenture thou forget the Lord which brought thee out of the land of Egypt, from the houſe of bondage.

13 Thou ſhalt feare the Lorde thy GOD, and ſerue him, and ſweare by his name.

WE haue ſeene how it was Gods wil that his law ſhould alwayes bee before his peoples eyes, and that the remembraunce thereof ſhould bee renewed by all meanes. For this cauſe hee commaunded them to ſet gardes vppon their garments, and to wryte the ſentences of the Lawe therein, and to weare them in ſtead of bracelets, and other ornaments, and to haue thẽ in their cappes and in the reſt of their apparell, and to ingraue them vpon the poſtes of their houſes. All this rehearſall tended to this ende, that becauſe men are too forgetfull of GODS Lawe, they muſt haue certeine helpes and meanes to put them in minde thereof: and ſpecially that whereas the children of this worlde are curious in decking themſelues, and in making themſelues braue to the eye, and giue themſelues to pompe when they bee rich: in ſtead thereof GOD woulde that his faithfull ones ſhoulde decke them ſelues with holineſſe of lyfe. For it is not enough for them to beare skroules of the lawe aboute them vnleſſe all of it be referred to the right end.

Now we muſt alſo cal to minde what hath bin touched afore: namely that if we were as wel inclined to thinke vppon God and vppon the doctrine which hee ſetteth forth vnto vs, as were requiſite: we ſhould not neede any other helpes. Therefore it is a token that wee bee full of vanities, and that our wittes wander too and fro, and that it is very harde for vs to ſettle our ſelues vpon God.

But yet notwithſtanding wee ſhall bee neuer the more excuſed for all that. Seeing then that wee be eaſily led away after our owne follies, and there are a great number of temptations in this world to bleare our eyes withal, and to wipe Gods law out of our hearts and mindes: it ſtandeth vs in hand to take the more payne in the thing that is commaunded vs here, namely that wee make a continual exerciſe of returning vnto God, ſo as it be our whole ſtudie, and that whereas wee ſee the vnbeleuers caryed away in their owne follies, wee ſeeke vnto God, to ſettle our ſelues vppon him, and to referre all our thoughtes and deſires vnto him, ſo that euen in making mirth wee haue him before our eyes, and in our remembrance, to the end he may be glorifyed in the thinges that wee take pleaſure in.

And now Moſes addeth, that when the people ſhall bee come into the land that was promiſed them, & inioy the goods that are there: (for we know it was a fruitful & fat land:) they muſt beware that they forget not him to whome they were beholden for all thinges, but rather honor and ſerue him, and ſhewe themſelues to holde all things of him who is their God. Now at the firſt ſight it might ſeeme ſuperfluous to warne the people that they ſhould not forget the Lord their God, after they had poſſeſſed the land that was giuen them to inherite. For is it poſſible ỹ a people which hath bin guided by the hand of God, and ſeene ſo many miracles, ſhould turne away, yea and bee ſo blinded, as to bee vnmindefull of him to whome they were ſo much bound? That were againſt nature. But what? The vnthankfulneſſe of men is ſo great, that notwithſtanding all the benefites which they haue receiued at Gods hand, yet they ceaſe not to defy him, or at leaſtwiſe to ſhew that they haue no further care of ỹ thinges that were tolde them. True it is that here Moſes ſpeaketh to the people of Iſraell. But yet in that people hee ſetteth vs forth a lookingglaſſe, wherein to ſhewe vs our frowardneſſe in that we cannot finde in our heartes to doe homage to God for all his benefites, but that all that euer hee beſtoweth vppon vs is loſt, becauſe it is miſbeſtowed, vnleſſe wee be exhorted and pricked foreward to doe our duetie better. Therefore let vs not thinke that this doctrine was written for the Iewes onely: but let vs rather vnderſtand that it is directed vnto vs alſo.

Howbeit, firſt of all wee muſt marke what Moſes meant: and afterward the doctrine conteyned therein muſt bee applyed to the inſtruction of our ſelues. When thou art come (ſaith hee) into the land which the Lord thy God promiſed to thy fathers Abraham, Iſaac, and Iacob. Moſes ſpeaketh expreſſely of Gods promiſe, to the intent that the people might bee throughly perſwaded, that their going into that land was not by haphaſard, nor their winning of ſo many victories againſt their enemies was by good fortune (as they terme it) or by their owne ſtrength and pollicie: but that it was wrought by Gods owne hand, and all came of his power. True it is that the wonders which were ſhewed at that time, were ſufficient enough to haue made them beleeue, ſo as they needed not to haue ſought any further.

When the people ſawe Gods ſcourges vppon the Egyptians, was it not a ſure recorde of the diuine and heauenly power which ſhewed it ſelfe there? Againe, whereas they paſſed the red ſea, whereas they were guided with a clowd by day and with a fire by night, whereas they were fed with manna from heauen, and whereas they ſawe the clowd vpon the tabernacle which was a token of Gods preſence & maieſtie: ſhould they not haue concluded that God bare rule ouer them and ſhewed himſelfe to be their guide? yes: and yet for all that, Moſes beholding the hardheartedneſſe of the people, thought it not enough to tell them of the thinges which were ſeene at that time, but alſo alledged the promiſe that had beene made fowre hundred yeeres afore.

Behold (ſayth hee,) the Lorde thy GOD will bring thee into the land of Chanaan. If thou aske what proofe thou haſt that it is Gods hands thou needeſt no long diſputing of the matter, thou knoweſt what promiſe was made thereof. This heritage thē was aſſigned vnto you aforehand by the free goodneſſe of your God, euen before you were borne. If God had giuen this land ſimply to the people of Iſraell without promiſing of it before: it had bin ſomewhat the darkeſomer.

But ſeeing that GOD made an agreement and as it were a ſolemne league with Abraham, ſaying, this is the ſigne that I enter into couenant with thee and with thine ofspring this day, namely that thou ſhalt inherite this land: howbeit, that ſhall not bee preſently, but thou thy ſelfe muſt liue and dye there as a ſtraunger, and alſo they that come of thee and their ofspring lykewiſe, muſt bee ſoiourners in a ſtraunge lande, and Gen. 15. 13.

bee there vexed and greeued with continuall tyrannie: neuertheleſſe they ſhall returne thence at the end of foure hundred yeeres, and then will I performe my promiſe. Doth it not appeare by theſe ſayinges, that God wrought in that behalfe? Should any further proofe be ſought therof? may not euen blinde folkes feele it with their hands? We ſee then for what purpoſe Moſes alledgeth here ỹ promiſe ỹ had bin made to Abraham, Iſaac, & Iacob: yea and Gods rehearſing of his promiſe againe, was a larger proofe thereof, ſo as the thing became the better knowen and of more authoritie. In deede the people are alſo put in minde therewithall, that this inheritance befell them not by their owne policie, nor for any worthyneſſe that was in themſelues, nor was conquered by their own power or ſtrength, but was giuen them freely of God, ſo as it behoued them to acknowledge that they had receiued it, and that their poſſeſſing of it was not as though they had obteined it by their owne power. The Lord (ſayth hee) promiſed you this land. At what time? when none of them was yet borne or bred. Then coulde they not haue earned or deſerued aught. And therfore it behoued them to acknowlege that Gods onely free gift was the cauſe of it, and that they obteyned not any thing but through his freebeſtowed mercie, becauſe it pleaſed him ſo to doe. For men will neuer ſufficiently perceiue themſelues bound vnto God, vntill they bee vtterly bereft of all their merites and that it bee ſhewed them that they haue not any thing of their owne to bring, but that it is God which doth all, not of duetie, but of good will. Men muſt bee fully perſwaded of that, or elſe they will neuer duely perceiue themſelues to bee bound vnto God.

Pſal.44.4.

And whereas Moſes ſpeaketh afterward of the great and goodly Cities, of howſes full of gooddes, of vineyardes, oliuegardens, and of all other commodities: it is to make the people to vnderſtand the better, that God delt not nigardly with them, but had powred forth his treſures, to the intent that they ſhould be the more prouoked to ſerue him. And that is another point well worthie to bee marked. For ſo long as God dealeth with vs but after the ordinarie maner, wee will not perceiue that he is willing to bee our father, becauſe wee conſider but the order of nature and ſtand muſing therupon. That then was the cauſe why God voutſafed to adde the full meaſure of all liberalitie, by handling his people as is ſhewed here, ſo as hee gaue them not a meane land, that was neither barrein nor abundant, of which ſort ſome are to bee found: but hee gaue them faire and ſtrong cities, houſes throughly furniſhed, and groundes throughly manured. Seeing it is ſo: the people ought to haue bin the more prouoked to acknowledge, that ſeeing God had ſhewed himſelfe ſo bountifull, it became not them to fall a ſleepe, but to knowe him to whom they were ſo greatly bound. And it is ſayd expreſſely heere, that the people ſhould poſſeſſe the thinges which they had not made, or gotten to themſelues. There is not any thing of thine owne labor, ſayth hee. Diddeſt thou build the houſes wherein thou dwelleſt or ſhalt dwel? (For hee ſpeaketh here of the time to come.) When yee come into the land, yee ſhall finde fayre houſes, and that of other mens building: ye ſhall finde all maner of houſholde ſtuffe and neceſſaries ready made: yee ſhall finde vineyardes and Oliuegardens throughly planted: ye ſhall want nothing: yee ſhall finde welles ready digged: for that land had not water at will. We know what payne and diſtreſſe the holy fathers were driuen vnto, onely to haue water for themſelues and their cattell, namely how they were driuen from place to place, yea and that not for any pretious thinges, but when they digged ſome poore pitte, their neighbors came and draue them from it. Not without cauſe therefore is here expreſſe mention made of pittes or welles, to ſhewe that the people ſhould finde all commodities there, without the putting too of one finger to take any paynes for them.

Gen.21.25. & 26.19. 20.21.22. 32.

And therefore hee addeth, take good heede that thou forget not the Lord thy God when thou art full. This is the chiefe matter which we haue to wey. For Moſes doth vs to vnderſtand, that me are a kin to reſtie horſes: if they be ouerpampered, they fall to kicking, and will not be handled nor ordered any more: and this ſimilitude is ſet downe more expreſſely in the two and thirtith chapter. But in this place hee ſheweth playnely, that ouermuch eaſe is the cauſe of wilfull ſtubbornneſſe: ſo that if God hath once pampered vs, wee forget him, and play the drunkardes ſo as we cannot order our ſelues in ſuch wiſe in the inioying of the benefites which hee beſtoweth vppon vs, as to yeelde him thāks for them and to ſerue him the more effectually, but contrariwiſe we deuoure them vp with ſuch greedineſſe and exceſſe, as our nature becommeth vtterly brutiſh, and God hath no more authoritie ouer vs, but wee beare our ſelues in hand that wee could well enough forbeare him. Yee ſee then that men become brutiſh through pleaſures and abundance of wealth. And that is the thing which Moſes hath noted here, in ſaying: take good heede that thou forget not the Lorde God when thou art full.

Finally hee concludeth, that wee muſt feare God, and honor him, and take him for our GOD, which thing he betokeneth by this word Sweare. For wheras ỹ people are commanded to ſweare by the name of God, as wee ſhall ſee more fully heereafter: it ſerueth to ſhewe how it was his wil that they ſhould kepe the Religion that was giuen them by the lawe, and not mingle it with any idolatrie, ſo as they might throughly proteſt that they had not any moe Gods than that one which had ſhewed himſelfe by his lawe and word. That is the effect of the matter which is conteined here. In deede the land of Chanaan which had bin promiſed to the fathers of olde time, and giuen to the people of Iſraell by ſo many miracles, had more to be conſidered in it, than haue the countryes wherein the faithfull dwell at this day. For wee bee not ſetled in them them by the mightie and miraculous hand of God, as it shewed it selfe in those dayes. But yet for al that wee must come backe to this poynt, that none of vs commeth into this worlde by his owne power, and that our dwelling in it is the singular benefite of God. For there should bee no earth at all, if God listed not to assigne it vnto men.

It is for our sakes that the seas & waters withholde themselues: or else they would ouerflowe and drowne the whole earth. And therefore although there were no more but the order of nature, it were a miracle great enough to shewe vs that God voutsafeth to nourish vs here. We Deut. 32. 8. know what is sayd in another text which we shall see hereafter: that is to wit, that God did spred out his meetelines ouer all the nations of the world, so as hee deuided the countries and did set the boundes of them. Then let vs vnderstand, that wee cannot bee in any nooke or corner of the world, without Gods mainteyning of vs there, nor haue any place to dwell in, which is not giuen vs of his free fauour. And as the land of Chanaan was dedicated to the seruice of God at that time: so is the whole world consecrated thereunto at this day. For it is sayde Psal. 2. 6. 8. that our Lorde Iesus Christ is a king, and that hee hath inlarged his dominion from the one ende of the worlde to the other. Wherefore let vs vnderstand, that our Lordes setting of vs here and his mainteyning of vs here, is to receiue such prayse at our handes as hee deserueth.

Now it is certeine that wee must liue of our labor, and most men shal not haue the world at will, but a number haue much a doe to get bread, and God will handle them very hardly: but yet howsoeuer they fare, one bit of bread is enough to make them beholden to the Lorde. Yea and although men labor for their liuing: yet must they be fully resolued of this which we shall see hereafter, namely that it is not their labor that findeth them, but the blessing of God, whereby the children of Israell were fed in the wilderneſſe. Trueth it is that the falling of the Manna from heauen was more manifest token. But yet howsoeuer the case stand, God hath left a continuall president, that by what meanes soeuer wee liue: it is hee that mainteyneth vs, and it is at his hand that wee receiue both sustenance and nourishment and all that euer wee haue. Yee see then that no man can exempt himselfe from seruing of his God, and from shewing by our deedes that we thinke our selues beholden vnto him, both for our lyfe and for all thinges belonging thereunto. Again the more bountifully and liberally that GOD dealeth with vs, the more ought wee to be prouoked to serue him. Therefore let euery of vs on his owne behalfe learne to beare Gods benefites well in minde. Let not the poore murmur though they wot not oftentimes which way to turne them: but let them assure themselues that GOD will so blesse the little which they haue, as it shall well ynough susteine them to liue therewith. And as for the richer sorte which haue more aboundance, let them vnderstand that Gods shewing of himselfe so gratious towardes them, is to the ende they shoulde the better knowe him and honor him.

For although the riche sorte may now and then alledge that they haue taken much payne in gathering the thinges which they possesse, or that they haue atteyned to them by some other meane, and that they haue them by succession from their fathers and aunceſters: Yet will not God lose his right, for (as I sayd afore) it is his blessing that maketh men riche. Therefore they that possesse most must knowe that Gods being liberal to them after that fashion, is to the ende to binde them the streitlyer to him, and to allure them the more to serue and honour him as their father, yea and as a kindehearted father which desireth nothing but to giue his children their fill of al good thinges, so as they may not want any thing.

Thus haue wee heere a generall rule: which is, that after as GOD giueth vs ease and the commodities of this world, so must wee bee the more disposed to loue him: for that gentleneſſe of his draweth vs vnto him. And when we haue so tasted of his goodneſſe and found sauour in it: needes must there bee too great vnkindeneſſe and churlishneſſe in vs, if wee bee not moued to loue him as we ought to doe. And that must be not only in our eating & drinking, but also in all thinges that concerne this present lyfe. As for example, if GOD giue vs peace and quietneſſe, whiles others are in trouble or at warres: if wee bee vnuexed of plagues and diseases, while wee see a number of other folkes afflicted: let vs vnderstand that our Lord alloureth vs gently vnto him, and would faine winne vs by such kindeneſſe, and therefore if wee voutsafe not to come vnto him, wee shall pay right deare for the thinges that wee shall haue receiued at his hand. True it is that God requireth not any payment at our handes: for we haue not any thing to giue him: but yet will he haue vs to bee thankefull towardes him for our dueties sake. If wee doe not so: it must bee layd to our charge, that being not his children, wee haue treacherously robbed him of his goods.

For what right haue wee to the inioying of them, but that hee is our father? And if wee honor him not, dare wee say wee bee of the number and company of his children? Rom. 2. 4.
And that is the cause why Saint Paul is so hotte against such as returne not vnto GOD when hee spareth them. What meane yee you wretches (sayth hee?) know yee not that yee abuse the great treasures of Gods goodneſſe? For his dealing so gently with you, is as an alluring of you to repentaunce. True it is that GOD doth sometimes chastise vs sharpely, to waken vs and to make vs knowe our faultes, that wee may bee sory for them: But yet for all that, if hee deale mildely with vs, it is as much to say as he woulde faine winne vs by friend-friendly meanes, as hath bin ſaide already. Nowe if this can beare no ſway with vs, wee ſhewe our ſelues to be too too leud, and ỹ we deſpiſe Gods goodneſſe, yea and that wee make but a skorne and mockage of it. And therefore muſt horrible vengeance hang ouer our heades, according as S. Paul threatneth in the foreſaide place, to al ſuch as abide hard harted and ſtubborne in their vices, when God beareth with them. And nowe let vs looke to our ſelues. For although euery mans ſtate be not ſo wealthie as hee would wiſh: yet are wee handled very gently in reſpect of others. What remaineth but that our Lord ſhould enter into account with vs, if wee on our ſide haue no luſt to ſerue him, and that the eaſe and reſt which hee giueth vs, bee not applyed to ſhewe that wee take him for our father indeede, foraſmuch as hee handleth vs as his children? If wee (ſay I) acknowledge not this: then ſhall not our vnthankefulneſſe eſcape vnpuniſhed.

Alſo by the way let vs not forget howe Moſes exhorteth heere the people of Iſrael to beware that they forget not the Lorde when they were well fedde and growen full. But ſeeing that we bee inclined to ſuch frowardeneſſe as well as they, let vs conſider our owne diſeaſe, that wee may ſeeke remedie for it. For though there were no more but this one point: it were enough to occaſion men to miſlike of themſelues, and to bee aſhamed. For wee bee as monſters againſt kinde: inſomuch that whereas God offereth himſelfe to vs, and reacheth vs his hande, ſo as if wee ſawe him in his owne perſon, wee coulde haue no greater aſſurance of the fatherly loue that hee beareth vs, than that hee is ſo liberall that wee may haue our fill of his benefites: yet notwithſtanding wee forget him euen when hee putteth vs in minde of him, not onely by ſpeaking to vs, but alſo by ſhewing vs by experience that hee knitteth himſelfe to vs, and hath a care of vs in watching ouer vs, not onely for the ſauing of our ſoules, but alſo for the nouriſhing of our bodies, feeding vs like litle babes, and as it were ſtretching out of his wings ouer vs, as a hen doeth ouer her chickens, as Matt. 23. 37 compariſon is made in the holy Scripture. Seeing that God giueth vs ſuch proofe of his goodneſſe, and alſo knitteth himſelfe vnto vs, of purpoſe to gather vs together and to take vs vp to himſelfe: were it not a diueliſhe madneſſe to forget him, and to turne our backes vpon him, and to ſhut our eyes againſt him, yea and to conceiue ſo exceſſiue rage as to ſay, wee wil not thinke vpon him that ſeeketh vs, is not this a diueliſhe madneſſe? Yes: and yet is there not any of vs all, that can excuſe himſelfe to bee vnſubiect to ſuch naughtineſſe. So then, this text ought of right to humble vs, and to make vs aſhamed afore GOD, becauſe wee ſee wee bee ſo malicious and ſpitefull as not to regarde God when hee is neere vs, nor to wake and open our eyes that we might ſee his goodneſſe when it is ſhewed vnto vs, yea euen after ſo euident and eaſie a maner. That is the thing which we haue to remember. True it is that wee make common prouerbes of it, but in the meane while no man thinkes vppon it. Wee ſay that nothing marreth men but eaſe: Wee ſay that ouermuch welth maketh men vnweldie: and yet in the meane while the ſame thing befalleth vs, and none of vs findeth fault with himſelfe. And although God preuent vs and blame vs, and doe vs ſuch ſhame as to make vs heare of it: yet will not wee thinke vppon it. Notwithſtanding it is not written in vaine, When thou haſt thy fil of the benefites of thy God, beware that thou forget him not. Wherfore let vs marke, that proſperitie of it ſelf ought to prouoke vs to reſort vnto God, becauſe it is all one as if he ſhould reach out his hands and armes vnto vs. Like as when a father offereth his childe a thing and ſayth to him, Come hither, and holdeth out his armes: ſo likewiſe Gods deſire in beſtowing his benefits vppon vs, is nothing elſe but to ſee vs quiet, as it were in his lap or vnder his winges. Nowe then, if wee haue an eye to the order of nature: proſperitie ſhould drawe vs to God, and make vs well minded to ſerue him: and yet notwithſtanding, wee ſee how wee deſpiſe both GOD and nature and all kindeneſſe, and become wooꝛſe than wilde beaſtes. For whereas GOD allureth vs to him after that gentle manner: wee turne our backes vppon him, and in ſtead of cõming to him, retyre from him: nay (which wooꝛſe is) wee kicke againſte him. For it is not inough for men to deſpiſe Gods goodneſſe, and to ſtop their eyes, and to deuour al ỹ good things which they haue, without knowing who giueth them: but alſo they proceede ſo far as to ruſh againſt him, and to gnaſhing their teeth at him, and to ſpurning at him. If a man ſhould liken vs to ſwine, wee woulde thinke hee did vs greate wrong. And yet are ſwine contented with rooting in the ground, to fill themſelues with the Acornes that are fallen downe, and they be not ſo fearce as to fall to rending downe of the tree, they leape not vp againſt it, they byte not the boughes, they haue their groines hãging alwais downward. As for vs we play indeede the ſwine, becauſe we haue alwais our groines in the earth: inſomuch that When we cram our ſelues neuer ſo full, there is none of vs whiche lifteth vp his mind on highe to ſaye, it is Gods hande that giueth vs this thing: but either we impute al things to our owne policie, or we thinke that the gaine commeth of our ſelues, or wee imagine that it happeneth vs by ſome chaunce, and to be ſhort wee neuer thinke of God. But beſides this, wee fall to ſpiting of him, we caſte out our furye and rage againſt him, we ſtrike at him with our tusks, wee withſtand him ſtubbornly to the vttermoſte of our power, and we could finde in our hartes that his Iuſtice were vtterly aboliſhed. For wee treade it vnder foote, as much as in vs lyeth. We ſee then that we bee wooꝛſe than ſwine, and wooꝛſe than the vileſt brute beaſtes that are, yea we be euen vnkindly monſters.

But behold, our God calleth vs to him by this exhortation, wherein wee ſee the patientneſſe which hee vſeth towardes vs. If a father had handeled his child as gently as could be, farre

aboue the common maner, and the child ſhould thereupon growe proude and deſpiſe his father: woulde not the father beare him ſuch diſpleaſure, as to diſdaine to open his mouth to him, to tell him of any thing bicauſe of his deſpiſing of him after that faſhion? Yes. Then is it moſt certaine that wee bee much leſſe to bee borne with when it falleth out, that wee reſiſt GOD who is more worth than all the fathers in the world, without compariſon. So then, ſhould he not haue iuſt cauſe to let vs alone as wee bee, when he ſeeth that wee haue no minde of him, and that euen his benefites are an occaſion vnto vs to diſpiſe him, ſo as wee turne them the cleane contrarie way frō the lawfull vſe whereunto hee had ordained them? Might hee not iuſtly leaue vs in that ſtate as curſed creatures and vnworthy that euer hee ſhoulde open his mouth to ſpeake to vs? Yes: and yet for all that he commeth to ſeeke vs. Beholde (ſaieth he) I knowe yee bee inclined to forget mee, when I haue fed you well and fat, and the more abundance that you haue, the more ye refuſe to come to me, and therefore ye deſerue to be ſhaken off, & that I ſhould neuer remember you any more. Yet notwithſtanding, my deſire is not that you ſhould periſh, but that ye ſhould returne vnto mee. What naughtineſſe or lewdneſſe ſo euer I eſpie in you, I am contented to take you ſtill for my children, I will preuent the vices whereto you bee giuen: therefore take heede ỹ ye forget me not when you be at your eaſe. Seeing that our Lord beareth with vs after that faſhion, ought it not to breake our hearts though they were harder than ſtone?

So then, firſt of all let vs miſtruſt proſperitie. In deede we couet it, & for the loue thereof wee ſhun the things that are hard and comberſome. If we ſuffer hunger and thirſt, it grieueth vs, & we neuer leaue ſtorming vntill God haue prouided for it: but yet for all ỹ it would be more for our profit oftentimes, to indure hunger than to haue abundance. Howſoeuer the caſe ſtandeth, whenſoeuer God beſtoweth his benefites vpon vs, let vs haue proſperitie in ſuſpitiō, as I ſaid afore. Not that it ought of it ſelfe ſo to deceiue vs & blindfold our eyes, as wee ſhould not knowe God: but for that it behoueth vs to perceiue our owne nature to be ſo ſinfull and euill giuen, as we cannot profit our ſelues by any of the benefites which we receiue at Gods hand. Yea and we ſee howe euen Salomon was afraide to bee ouerriche, for feare of aduauncing himſelfe againſt God, leaſt he ſhould deſpiſe him and forſake him. See here howe Salomon who was indued with ſo excellent giftes of grace, did neuertheleſſe ſee the frailtie of man to bee ſuch, that when he had all ỹ his heart could wiſh, yet he might forget himſelfe, & be ouerſotted as he ſhould fall to renouncing of God by aduauncing himſelfe againſt him. Now then, let vs liue in feare and aw, and if God giue vs not ſuch aboundaunce as we would deſire, but doe cutte our morſels very ſmall: let vs vnderſtande that the ſame is for our benefite, in that wee haue neede to bee dyeted, for feare leaſt fatneſſe ſtoppe our eyes, and ſo make vs ſtarke blinde. If wee thinke well vpon this, it will make vs to beare pouertie the more patiently. When wee want our pleaſures and delyghtes, when wee want our delicate morſelles, and when wee want abundance to fill our ſelues withall: let vs knowe that our Lorde hath a regarde to holde vs in awe by that meane: for we ſhoulde bee in daunger of forgetting him, if we ſhoulde growe too fatte. And therefore when wee haue wealth at will, let vs bethinke vs thus: why was it ſayde to the people of Iſrael, forget not thy GOD when thou haſt thy fill? It was bicauſe men can not brouke their wealth, in ſo much that if they haue all that they haue neede of, yea and more too: they ouerſhoot themſelues, they play the looſe coltes, they arme themſelues againſt GOD, and they haue no more care of him. Is the winde in that doore? Let vs learne to haue God alwayes before our eyes: ſo as if he deale graciouſly with vs and giue vs more than he doeth to other men, wee may haue the skill to conſider, See howe my God commeth to me, and to what intent but that I ſhoulde bee as it were brooded vnder his wings, and liue obediently towardes him, honouring him and referring my whole life to the glorifying of his holy name, ſo as it may bee as a bond whereby to binde mee ſtraytlyer vnto him, than others on whome hee hath not beſtowed the lyke benefites as he hath doone vppon mee? Thus ye ſee that both poore and riche ought to tend to Godward, eche one according to his degree.

Againe, the comparing of the people of Iſrael with our ſelues, ought to quicken vs vp yet better, to ſtand vppon our garde. It is ſaid, when the Lorde thy GOD ſhall haue giuen thee thy fill. And of what goods? Of wyne which thou ſhalt haue gathered of other mens labours, and of all other thinges to lyue by which thou haſte not earned: when thy God ſhall haue fedde thee ſo of his owne free goodneſſe, ſee thou forget him not. If the people of Iſrael myght forget GOD hauing had moſt apparant recordes of the fauour that was ſhewed vnto them: what will become of vs which are helde here vnder the common order of nature? For wee haue no myracles to ſpurre vs foorth to Godwarde: wee haue not a lande of Chanaan as a ſpeciall elected and choſen dwelling place. And therefore wee myght eaſilyer forget GOD than that people coulde, if wee ſhoulde not remember this preſent leſſon earely and late. And for as much as wee ſee our owne coldneſſe, let vs learne to matche the ſpirituall benefites as well which God hath beſtowed vppon vs heeretofore as which we looke for heereafter, with the thinges that pertaine to the maintenaunce of this tranſitorie lyfe. True it is that although wee thought vppon no more than the thinges that are giuen vs for this bodie: yet were wee ſufficiently bounde to God, yea and a hundred folde more than wee coulde diſcharge our ſelues of. Notwithſtanding, beſides all this, our Lorde giueth vs cauſe ynough to ſerue him, in that he graunteth vs ſo many ſpirituall benefites that belong to the ſauing

uing of our ſoules, whereof wee haue a portion alreadie. For whereof commeth fayth? whereof commeth it that wee bee graffed into the bodie of our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt by being baptized in his name, and that wee bee taken into Gods houſholde to bee auowed for his children? Whereof come theſe thinges but of his giuing of the ſpirit of adoption vnto vs, to the intent wee ſhould call vppon him as our father, bee aſſured of the heauenly heritage, ſtande in awe of him, and liue according to his woord? And is not this dooing of his a ſpeciall gift? Yes, and yet beſides this, there is a lyfe prepared for vs, whereof wee haue but onely a taſte as yet. For wee haue receiued (as yee would ſay) ſome firſt fruites of it: but wee ſhall not haue the full fruition of it, vntill God haue taken vs quite and cleane away to himſelfe: it is ynough for vs as nowe, that we followe after it aloofe. Now then ſith we ſee that beſides ỹ things which our Lord giueth vs for our bodyes and for this tranſitorie lyfe, he hath alſo giuen vs benefites farre nobler and preciouſer, as which doe leade vs to his euerlaſting kingdome: muſt it not needes be that wee bee too lewd, if wee bee not drawen vnto him? And if wee take occaſion to forget him for al his drawing of vs vnto him after that ſort: what horrible damnation deſerue wee for ſuch vnthankfulneſſe? Yee ſee then in effect, that the thing which wee haue to remember vppon this place, is that euerie of vs muſt bethinke him of the great nomber of benefites which hee hath receyued at Gods hand, and which wee receyue ſtil day by day: and that the ſame muſt ſtirre vs vp to put our ſelues continually forewarde in going towardes him, and teache vs to doe him homage for all thinges and in all reſpectes. For we defyle all his benefites, if the end whereunto we referre them, be not the honoring and glorifying of him.

Eph. 2. 8. Rom. 7.

Eph. 1. 5. & 2 Gal. 4. 6. Eph. 2. 14.

Againe as touching the goods of this worlde: let vs vnderſtand that our Lord cannot deuiſe to do ſo little for vs, or to giue vs ſo ſlender a portion of them, but we ſhall bee exceedingly much beholden to him though he doe no more: but if we perceiue that he dealeth gently with vs, and that hee beareth with vs: that ought to quicken vs vp and to prouoke vs ſo muche the more to come vnto him. And therewithall let vs beware that our vnthankfulneſſe leade vs not to forget him, ſeeing it is not for nought that hee warneth his people heere by the mouth of Moſes, to beware that they forgat him not whē they came to the inioying of the benefites which hee would beſtowe vppon them. For wee haue examples thereof euen among our ſelues. I pray you hath not GOD wrought after a wonderfull faſhion heere in planting of his Goſpell, and moreouer vttered his bleſſinges in ſuch ſorte, as they that perceiue them not, muſt ſpite of their teeth knowe that hee hath ſhewed his mightye arme? neuertheleſſe I ſhall not neede as nowe to blame mens vnthankefulneſſe, it is too apparant and openly knowen. For haue not many beene aſhamed, yea and are not many aſhamed ſtill, to bethinke themſelues of the miſerable ſtate out of which God hath deliuered them? Wee heare howe Moſes ſayeth heere, Forget not thy GOD which brought thee out of the lande of bondage or bondmen. As if hee ſhoulde ſay, when GOD ſhall haue graunted you the grace, to dwell quietly in the lande which he will giue you in poſſeſſion: call to minde the ſtate wherein yee haue beene; that yee maye acknowledge the good which GOD hath done you in deliuering you from it. Heere then are two thinges done you to vnderſtande: The one is, that the preſent benefites muſt prouoke ye to honour him that hath ſhewed himſelfe ſo liberall towardes you: [and the other is,] that the remembering of your former miſeries, muſt alwayes humble you and holde you in awe, ſo as ye mount not vp in pryde to like well of your ſelues and to bee puffed vp, nor the proſperitie that is giuen ye make yee to forget what bondage yee haue beene in.

Now although this was ſpoken to the children of Iſraell, I pray you doeth it not fitly agree vnto vs? Ought not wee to conſider well to whom wee bee beholden for this chaunge, that God hath vouchſafed to giue his children (as ye would ſay) a quiet neſt heere, ſo as they which were oppreſſed and ouerlayd with bondage and tyrannie, are nowe at full libertie, and inioye the thinges which they neuer hoped nor looked for? Seeing then that our Lord ſheweth himſelfe ſo gratious, are we on our ſide to bee excuſed, if wee feare him not? Though all the world might bee acquit, and all men ſcape Gods hande for misknowing him: yet deſerue we to be condemned in that behalfe. But ought not the remembraunce of all the miſeries whereout wee bee ſcaped, to be ſo printed in our heartes as wee might liue continually in awe of our God? And although we haue proſperitie as nowe, let it not puffe vs vp, nor miniſter occaſion to vs to ſtand too much in our owne conceites. And generally, ought not all Citizens, Burgeſſes, yea and ſtraungers of Geneua to bethinke themſelues thus? It is not long agoe ſince wee were in ſuche bondage and tyrannie in this Citie, as there was no likelyhood that euer wee ſhoulde haue ſcaped them. Nay rather wee ſeemed to haue beene as a people forlorne and paſt hope of recouerie: and yet hath our GOD looked mercifully vppon our miſeries, and prouided remedy for them, and that after ſuche ſorte as men woulde neuer haue thought, and as ſurmounted our deſire. The Citizens and Burgeſſes that haue beene priuie to the calamities and miſeries from the which GOD hath deliuered them, haue they not good cauſe to magnifie ſuche goodneſſe and mercie? And as for the ſtraungers whome God hath conueied hither as it were into his folde, ought they not to conſider thus with themſelues? Alas, wee were as in the gulfe of hell in the horrible deſolation of the popedome, and God hath pytied vs, inſomuch that hee hath reached vs his hande to take vs thence and to bring vs hither into his Churche, that wee myght worſhip him with one common accorde.

Now then let vs put this text in vre, seeing it was not written onely for the people of Israel, but also ought to serue vs now adayes more than euer it did. For seeing that the Gospell is preached vnto vs, should we looke for an Angel from heauen, to giue vs larger certaintie, when wee see that God hath so ratified his doctrine alreadie for our instruction?

Now let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to mortifie vs in all our affections and wicked lustes, and to renew vs so againe, that being gouerned by his holy Ghost, wee may desire nothing but to submit our selues vnto him, and to profite more and more in his doctrine, that wee may bee settled in his feare and loue, euen vntill he haue rid vs of all imperfections and vices. And so let vs all say, Almightie God heauenly father, &c.

14 Yee shall not walke after other Gods, I meane the Gods of the Nations which are round about you:

15 (For the Lord thy God is a iealous God in the middes of thee:) for feare least the wrath of the Lorde thy God bee kindled against thee, and he roote thee out of the Land.

WEe haue seene heretofore, that the welspring of all mischiefe is the forgetting of our God after he hath once shewed him selfe to vs, and that wee haue once knowē his wil. And this is the warning that Moses gaue vnto the people, that when they had once their fill of Gods benefites, they shoulde not forget him to whom they were so greatly bounde. Pursuing still the same matter, he addeth, Feare the Everlasting, your God. Wherein he sheweth what it is to mynde God aright: namely that it is not a bare musing or speaking of him onely, but a yeelding of his due honour vnto him. For it is not possible that we should think vpon God and not be moued to honour him vnlesse wee make an idoll of him. For when Gods maiestie commeth to our remembraunce, must it not needes touche vs to humble our selues vnder the same? Ought wee not to vnderstande that he hath created vs with condition to bee wholly at this deuotion, and to dedicate our selues to his seruice? Then let vs marke, that the remembering of God importeth the reuerencing of him. And so, To feare GOD, and not to forget him, are two groundes which are so knitte togither as they cannot be put asunder. Againe, vnto Feare Moyses addeth Seruice, that is to say, the worshipping of him. For the terme Seruice betokeneth a dewtifull submission and reuerence, when men humble themselues before GOD, and yeeld him the honour that is dew to him to serue him withall, as is sayde of it heere. Feare then goeth formost: and from the same feare proceedeth the duetifull submission that wee yeeld vnto him. I tould you that it is all one as if wee shoulde protest, that wee hold our life and all our goods of him, and that hee is worthy to hould vs vnder his subiection, and that wee shoulde glorify him in all respectes, by referring all our workes to the honoring of him. Thirdly hee addeth that men should sweare by the name of God, which is a kinde of confessing of our fayth. For wee haue seene heretofore, that suche as sweare (I meane as they ought to sweare) doe take their othe by the name of God, because that only hee is the sufficient witnesse of the truth, and will judge all suche as turne his trueth into leazing. And so in this text Moses sheweth againe, that when wee haue worshipped GOD, we muste also make a declaration of our fayth, so as men may perceiue vs to bee his people, and that he raigneth among vs, that wee bee free from all superstition and idolatrie, and that wee hold none other religion than that which the lyuing GOD hath giuen vs. That is the summe of the thinges conteined heere. 2. Cor. 4. 5. Ierem. 5. 3.

Now, that wee maye fare the better by this doctrine, wee muste vnderstande that GOD accepteth not any seruice at our handes, except that first and formost we haue learned to feare him, that is to saye, to yeeld him suche reuerence, as to bee desirous to obey him, and to bee ruled by him, and to graunt him all superioritie ouer vs. Then if men take neuer so much trauell in doing this and that, and in the meane while haue not the feare of GOD rooted in their hartes: all that euer they do is but vanitie and lost labour. And therefore let not our only handes and feete bee applyed to weldoing, neither let our indeuour bee so imployed vppon outwarde workes, as the sayde roote shoulde not goe before: But let vs conceaue suche knowledge of GOD, as our whole seeking may bee to submit our selues vnto him, so as wee may saye, Seeing that GOD hath shaped vs, is it not reason that hee shoulde raigne

ouer vs? Seeing we be his creatures, shoulde wee not offer our selues to him with al humility, that he might inioy vs? Seeing we hold all our goods of him, is it not reason that wee shoulde doe him homage for them, and that our life shoulde bee dedicated vnto him? Seeing he hath done vs the honour to bee our father, ought we not to yeeld him childely obedience? This is the point which we must beginne at, if we will keepe Gods Lawe, to please him well all our life long. Herewithall let vs marke what was saide afore namely that in thinking vpon God, wee must not imagine a deade thing, but we must set his glorious maiestie before our eyes, that wee may bee touched with the foresaide feare of him.

Moreouer, when wee feare our God, let vs learne also to worshippe him. For if a man boast that hee feareth God, and in the meane while despise all his commaundementes, so as hee regardeth not to doe him honour to whom hee knoweth himselfe to bee subiect: is it not too grosse hypocrisie? Then let vs marke that the feare of God bringeth with it a desirousnesse to serue him, and to direct our whole life according to his commaundementes, and specially to yeelde him the duetiful submission which hee requireth in our worshipping of him. For the meane whereby hee will be separated from ydoles, is that whereas the heathen and vnbeleeuers worshippe Gods inuented of their owne braine: wee must shewe our selues to haue none other than the liuing God. And why? For by our yeelding of that honour vnto him, we reiect all the fancies that haue beene deuised by men. And therefore with our fearing of the Lorde, let vs learne to shewe by our deedes, that our whole desire is to serue him.

Nowe this seruice is properly inwarde: that is to saye, the chiefe pointes thereof are, that wee put our whole trust in him, that wee acknowledge all our good thinges to come of him, that wee call vppon him with the saide trust, and that wee yeelde him the praise of all things that hee bestoweth vppon vs. This consisteth not in bare Ceremoniousnesse, but it lyeth altogether in the heart. And like as wee must worshippe God by acknowledging all our good thinges to come of him, and that it is his onely goodnesse whereunto wee bee beholden, both for this present life and also for the hope of our saluation: so on the other parte, wee must make men priuie to this our spirituall seruice which wee yeelde vnto God, that they may commonly beare recorde thereof and bee edified by our example. And all this respecteth the swearing that Moses speaketh of heere, saying, Thou shalt sweare by the name of thy God.

It shoulde seeme at the first blush, that heere is no great reason in this case: for we bee but too forwarde and readie of our selues to sweare, without any furtherance thereto at Gods hand. Why then doeth Moses take order that wee shoulde sweare by the name of GOD? By all likelyhoode he shoulde rather haue commaunded vs to abstaine from all othes, and haue saide, Thou shalt not sweare in any wise at all. But (as I haue touched alreadie) when othes bee made lawefullye and according to Gods Lawe, wee shewe that it is hee whome wee worshippe, and whose people wee couet to bee. Nowe let vs consider the right vse of othes. The right vse is, that if neede require that the trueth must bee witnessed and warranted: then God must bee brought in as a pledge. As howe? Hee nameth himselfe the trueth: and therefore in thinges vnknowen to men, wee cannot haue a fitter witnesse than him. When a man sweareth faithfullie in a matter that is not knowen, sauing that men woulde get the confession thereof at his hande: if hee take the name of God [to witnesse], it is to shewe that hee goeth to worke vnfeynedly: like as in a case of iustice, if the iudge beeing desirous to finde out the certainetie at a witnesses hande, doe cause him to * lifte vp his hande vnto GOD: such swearing is as it were a doing of homage to GOD, as though the partie shoulde say: I knowe that GOD is the trueth, and the iudge of mens heartes, and I protest heere that I speake as in his presence, euen in trueth, knowing well that I shall yeelde him an account of my saying. Psal. 31. 6.

* That is the maner of taking an oth in some other countries like as our maner is to lay our hād vpō a Booke.

Thus yee see that the true vse of othes and swearing, is to warrant and ratifie the trueth when it is not knowen to men, in which kinde of case God must bee set as Iudge, and the deponent must protest that hee speaketh as before him, to the intent there may bee no counterfeiting at all. But yet is it not ment that it is lawfull for vs to sweare [in all cases], though wee say the trueth. For it may bee that the matters are not of such weight and importance, that Gods name shoulde bee auouched: and then were it an vnhallowing or defiling of it. But if the matter deserue it and require it: then doeth God lende vs his name, as hath beene declared in the last chapter before. He vseth such courtesie towardes vs, as hee is contented that wee shall borrowe his name to the ende that the trueth may bee warranted by his recorde.

Thus wee see nowe, after what sort it is lawfull for vs to sweare: that is to wit, when there is such a case as deserueth it, and againe when wee cannot otherwise satisfie men, to shewe them that the thing which wee say is certaine and true, that they ought to stande to it. After that manner doth God giue vs leaue to sweare by his name.

Nowe seeing it is so that hee which sweareth doeth call God to witnesse, and also submit himselfe to punishment if hee shall haue abused his holy and sacred name: is it not a doing of homage vnto God? For our swearing by him is because he hath souereine Dominion ouer vs, because it belongeth to him to search our hearts, because hee must be our iudge, and because wee must yeelde account of our whole life before him. 2. Chr. 6. 30. Iere. 17. 10. 1. Cor. 4. 4. 5

Seeing

Seeing it is ſo that all that euer belongeth to the one onely God, is conteined in an other: muſt it not needes follow that it is a curſed ſuperſtition, when we ſweare by the name of an ydol? Yes: for the honour that is due to the onely one God, is conueyed away to the creature. All they therefore which ſweare by any other than by the name of God, doe ſhewe themſelues vnworthy to bee his people, yea and that it is not long of them that they bereeue him not of his due homage. Nowe wee ſee howe it was not for nought that Moſes hath tolde vs here, that wee muſt ſweare by the name of God. And indeede when the prophets intende to ſhewe that the Eſa.65.15. right Religion ſhalbe ſet vp euery where, they ſay that all tongues ſhall ſweare by the name of God. The heathen men liketwiſe had the ſame opinion, that their ſwearing by their ydols was a token of their ſeruing of them. And that was comprehended vnder the worſhip which they yeelded vnto them. If they had not imagined that there was ſome diuine maieſtie in an ydoll: they woulde neuer haue ſworne by the name of it. True it is that afterwarde they diſguiſed their othes, ſo as they ſware likewiſe by their kinges and princes: but that flatterie was an vnhallowing of Gods name, and they themſelues knewe full well that they were blameworthie in ſo doing. For in going about to flatter men, they vniuſtly ſnatched to their ydols ỹ honour which they pretended to be due to them. Seeing that the Infidels knewe that an oth is a kinde of worſhipping, ſhoulde not they that haue beene rightly taught, haue a much more ſurer rule? Yes: and therefore let vs marke wel, that Moſes in commaunding men to ſweare by none but by the name of God, ſheweth that therein they doe him the honour of acknowledging him for onely
1.Cor.4.5. Iudge, and attribute vnto him the office of ſerching mens harts and thoughts, and of bewray-
Pſal.31.6. ing the thinges that are ſecret and hidden, & finally acknowledge him to bee the certaine and vntallible truth, and therefore that he is able to be ſufficient witneſſe thereof. That is the effect of that which he ment to ſay.

Nowe hereby wee ſee, that ſuch as ſweare by the names of creatures are ydolaters, & rob God of the proteſtations which hee will haue men to make vnto him, inaſmuch as hee will haue none to be ſo honored but himſelfe. It is a common thing among the Papiſts to ſweare by the virgin Mary and by the reſt of the ſaints. True it is, that men haue not thought that to bee ſo great euill: but although there were no more but that, yet there appeareth to bee manifeſt ydolatrie in ſo doing. For why? They that ſweare by the virgin Marie, doe ſet her in Gods ſeate, as though it belonged to her to iudge the worlde: and a man coulde not deuiſe to doe greater wrong to our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt, than to attribute that thing vnto her which is giuen vnto him alone, yea and
2.Chr.6.30. giuen vnto him in reſpect that hee is God manifeſted in the fleſh. Againe, they attribute vnto her the ſearching and knowing of mens ſecret thoughts, which title the holie ſcripture reſerueth peculiarly vnto God. Then is it horrible trecherie to ſweare by the virgin Marie, or by any other creature. And would God this ſuperſtition were vtterly aboliſhed among vs, that it might neuer be had in remembrãce any more: But what? There are a number of wilfull folke, from whom that curſed cuſtome cannot bee taken, and ſay what yee will to them, they continue doted in it, inſomuch that if a man doe ſo point them to it with his finger, that as blinde as they bee they may ſee the meane howe to yeeld God his due honour: yet all is one with them, they will not in any wiſe bee made to beleeue it. And why? Becauſe the diuell hath bewitched them. Howſoeuer the caſe ſtande let vs note that al ſuch as ſweare by any other name than by the name of God, are ydolaters. And why? I tolde yee the reaſon before: namely becauſe we cannot ſweare by the name of God, but wee muſt confeſſe that he is our iudge, and that it is onely hee to whom it belongeth to knowe our ſecret thoughts, and to puniſh vs for falſifying his truth and for turning of it into a lye, wheras we ſhould beare witneſſe vnto it. And let vs marke that one kinde is put for all of that ſort. By reaſon whereof wee bee commaunded, not onely to ſweare by the name of God, but alſo to yeelde ſuch confeſſion of him before men, as we may ſhewe our ſelues to bee his people in deede, and that we woulde faine that hee ſhoulde reigne among vs, and that his name ſhoulde be glorified. And ſo let vs extend this leſſon generally to the honoring of God, ſo that if the caſe concerne religion, wee giue not that thing to creatures, which our Lorde telleth vs is peculiar to himſelfe. And therefore whenſoeuer wee ſpeake of the name of God, let vs yeeld him al that belongeth vnto him, let thoſe thinges bee reſerued vnto him, and let vs not bereaue him of his honour, to giue it away by peeces and colluppes to men and other creatures. This extendeth verie farre. Neuertheleſſe it is ynough for vs to be admoniſhed in faire wordes, that when Moſes ſaith wee muſt ſweare by the name of God, it is as much as if he ſhould ſay, my friends, like as yee worſhip the Lord, ſo muſt ye alſo maintaine his honour before men. Inſomuch that if any man will compell you to transforme or chaunge your religion, you ſhall not ſuffer it in any caſe whatſoeuer: but ſtande ſtil in this vncorruptnes to ſay, we haue the one God who hath called vs to him, and both created and redeemed vs: and Deut.4.20. therefore it is good reaſon that wee ſhoulde bee his heritage, and continue wholly his. Thus yee ſee in effect what Moſes meant to vtter in this text.

But heere wee ſee the frowardneſſe that is in men, which is a thing greatly to be lamented. For an othe (as I ſaide) ought to bee a recorde of ỹ honour which we yeeld vnto God: and wee ſee howe men cleane contrariwiſe will needes ſpite him in vſing of othes. Firſt of all, when men ſweare vnaduiſedly, is it not a manifeſt deſpiſing of Gods name? It muſt bee rapt out when there is neither why nor wherefore. The talke ſhalbe but of mirth and laughter: and yet notwithſtanding Gods name muſt bee mingled with with it. And is not that too great and too shamefull a skorning of him? Nay moreouer, a mannes patience is no sooner stird, so as he entreth into a litle choler: but by and by gods name must answere for it. In so much that it is not enough for them to some out their rage against their nighbours, but they must also stepp vp against God, and shew themselues wode and starke mad. And they be no simple othes which they vse: but othes matched with blasphemie, whereby ỹ maiestie of Gods name is as good as trampled vnder foote. Othes are referred to nothing lesse than to the end that I spake of, (that is to wit to the glorifying of God among vs) when they be applied to so deuilish outrages as the wilfull defying of God, and the skorning of his name, by tossing it too and fro like a tennisball, without yeelding any reuerence vnto it. And therefore let vs learne that it is too too detestable a vice when trifling othes are so rife among vs, and also that in our cholerik passions of impatiencie Gods name shoulde be so tent and torne, and that men are not contented to haue sworne after some simple manner, but also take vp kindes of othes that are matched with blasphemie, so as it appeareth that their intent is to make warre against God, and euen to spyte him when they cannot bee reuenged of men. Thus yee see what wee haue to marke vpon this text. Therefore to bee short, let vs vnderstande that it is not ynough for vs, that the spirituall seruice which wee owe vnto God bee yeelded vncorruptly vnto him: that is to wit, that wee put our trust in him, that wee call vpon him, and that wee offer him our soules and bodies in sacrifice: but we must also shewe openly before men what religion wee holde of, and wee must make it knowen that wee bee separated from all the defilements of the Infidels and vnbeleeuers. The thing which is expresly required heere, is that when othes are to bee vsed, wee must vse them with such sobrietie as God may bee glorified, and that whensoeuer wee sweare, wee must beare in minde that God is to bee reuerenced as our iudge, and offer our selues in such wise before him, as hee suffer nos any falshoode to abide vnpunished, and as wee yeelde vnto him the office of serching euen our heartes. If wee deale so: then shall our othes be holie vnto him, and accepted as a part and portion of the seruice that he requireth and alloweth. And by that meanes wee shall abhorre and loth not onely the blasphemies whereby he is spyted out of measure: but also all fonde and trifling othes, that are made without cause or reason. Thus wee see in fewe words what wee haue to note, and howe this text is to bee put in vre.

Nowe Moses addeth immediately, Yee shall not followe any other Gods, the Gods of the heathen which dwell rounde about you. When hee saieth, yee shall not followe any other Gods: hee sheweth vs that wee cannot mingle the true religion with any abuses, or with any thing deuised by vnbeleeuers, but by and by all is mard, and God disauoweth it, as soone as wee swarue one way or other from the plaine trueth, and from the rule that hee hath giuen vs. For it is not saide simply, you shall not renounce your GOD: but they bee forbidden to followe any other Gods: So then let vs marke wel, that if wee intende to serue the liuing God, we must holde our selues to him alone, and worshippe him with such vncorruptnesse; as all ydoles bee vtterly cast downe, and all superstitions cut off and cast behinde vs. And if this were well obserued, wee shoulde no more bee put to such paines, neither shoulde wee haue so manie bickerings as wee haue: For what causeth the troubles that are nowadayes in the worlde, and that there is such diuision betweene vs and the Papistes? For both of vs confesse that there is but one God: that grounde is common to vs both, both of vs name him the maker of heauen and earth, and both of vs take Iesus Christ for our redeemer: and yet notwithstanding we bee at so greate oddes, that the Turkes and the Iewes are not more deuided from vs than the Papistes are. Whereof commeth this? Not that the Papistes doe vtterly renounce GOD: but becausse they will needes make a mingled and confused hotchpotch of all the Religions of the worlde. They haue raked together all abuses, all Sathans trumperie, and all the superstitions that euer haue beene: and that terme they the seruice of God. It is no part of their meaning to holde themselues to the pureneſſe of the holy scripture, and of the Lawe and the Gospell: but to the thinges which they haue deuised of their owne braine. They will needes haue those thinges mingled with the pure seede: and that is such a corruption, as God is vtterly shaken of by it. Although men thinke it not, or at leastwise confesse it not with their mouth: yet hath hee no more place where those thinges are. So then (as I saide afore), if this saying which forbiddeth vs to followe any other Gods were well obserued: we might easily agree nowadayes with the Papistes. For the controuersie heere concerneth not the onely name.

True it is that the Papistes call not their Sainctes which they haue forged, their Gods: but yet they serue them and worshippe them as Gods. And therewithall they haue deuised such lawes and ordinances as they thinke good: and yet the thing which they terme Gods seruice, is but vtter follie of their owne inuention. Nowe it is a flatte following of the Gods of the Paynims, when men vse straunge fashions in the seruing of God, and in steede of praying vnto him alone, doe call vpon the creatures, so as they cannot tel whom to choose when al comes to all. And therefore let vs beare wel in minde the meaning of Moses: which is, that to worship God aright, we must sticke simply to his word: wee must stop our eares against all thinges that are brought vs from elsewhere: and we must not admit any thing but ỹ which we haue from God onely. Let vs then submit our selues wholly to the obeying of our god, & not receiue any thing which procedeth not out of his mouth. And if we followe not that rule, but giue eare to all Satans trumperie, and to all manner of ſuperſtitions inuented by man: then haue ſtraunge Gods their full ſcope among vs. Although wee giue them not the name of Gods: yet hath not our God the thing that belongeth vnto him for the ſeruing of him according to his onely will.

And Moſes ſaieth expreſly, namely the Gods of the nations that dwell rounde about you. As if hee ſhoulde ſay, it wil not ſerue for excuſe to alledge contrarie examples, that ſuch and ſuch doe ſo: none of all thoſe thinges wil paſſe in account. But if we will needs ſhielde our ſelues with mens our Lorde will diſallowe ſuch ſhifts. That is the cauſe why Moſes ſpeaketh heere expreſly of the nations that were rounde about them. And therefore let vs beare wel in minde, that to haue the true and right religion, wee muſt not inquire what men doe, but wee muſt heare God ſpeake, and agree to whatſoeuer hee ſaieth to vs. And although wee ſee the whole worlde againſt vs: yet muſt wee not be abaſhed. For what are men in compariſon of our God? Dare we make ſuch compariſon, that men ſhoulde rather be heard than God, and that they ſhoulde haue more authoritie than hee? But ſo wee doe when wee bee not contented with Gods pure and ſimple word, but alledge mens doings and deuices to the contrarie. Wherefore let vs beare well in mind, that wee muſt not eſteeme the true religion by the wayes which wee ſee men walke: but although wee be hemmed in rounde about with ydolatrie, and ſee nothing but ſtumblingblockes about vs, and wee meete with ſtore of incounters to tempt vs and to ſeduce vs: yet muſt wee not be moued therefore, but reſt ſtedfaſly vpon the thinges which our Lorde ſhall haue tolde vs. Haue wee Gods worde? Let that ſuffice vs: But let vs goe on: I ſee that the worlde doeth ſo, I ſee men behaue themſelues after that manner, I ſee great countries vſe that faſhion. Yea, but yet our Lorde doeth well deſerue to be obeyed. Though men drawe all the cleane contrarie way: yet muſt they not beare ſuch ſway with vs as to make vs to checke againſt our God. Marke it for a ſpeciall point, that wee muſt renounce all that euer men can ſay or doe, if wee intende to ſerue our God duely. And hereby wee ſee howe ſore the ignorant wretches are beguiled, which weene themſelues to bee armed with good defence when they can ſay, O, it was not of mine owne deuiſing, it was the faſhion of our aunceters and forefathers, they doe ſo in France and Italy. But what doeth Moſes ſay? Though all the worlde conſpire in ſuperſtition, and thou ſeeſt neuer ſo many trades of life differing one from another: yet muſt thou not fleete, but ſtande faſt neuertheleſſe in the faith which thou holdeſt from Gods worde, and haſt learned of him. Content thy ſelfe with that, and defie all men: paſſe not for the whole worlde, let it beare no ſway at all with thee, when the caſe concerneth Gods trueth. Seeing it is ſo then, let vs aſſure our ſelues it is a miſerable excuſe to alledge the examples of men to ground our ſelues vppon, conſidering that our Lorde will haue vs to receiue his worde in ſuch wiſe, as all the world may not bee able to thruſt vs from it. And therwithall let vs marke alſo, that foraſmuch as the diuell caſteth temptations in our wayes: wee haue neede to bee armed and fenced. It is not without cauſe ſaide heere, Thou ſhalt not followe after the Gods of the Nations that are about thee. For God regardeth the weakeneſſe of his people, and ſeeth that they ſhould ſoone be turned away from the true and pure religion, if they were not reſtreined with this bridle, Take heede to thy ſelfe, for thou ſhalt be tempted, becauſe thou ſhalt bee beſet on all ſides with ſtumblingblocks.

Nowe if this were ſpoken in old time to the Iewes: it pointeth alſo to vs at this day: for wee be not ſtronger than they were. Let vs not beare our ſelues in hande that there is ſuch a ſtrength and ſtoutneſſe in vs, that we be able to hold our owne when wee once knowe Gods truth. For come the deuill once to imbrew vs with the falſe doctrine, and to draw vs to ſuperſtition: we bee caried away out of hand. Seeing then that we be ſo weake: let vs learne to fence our ſelues againſt corruptions, that wee maye beate backe temptations when they aſſayle vs. And we ſee in what plight wee be. For our Lorde holdeth vs heere as it were vnder his hande: whereas in the meane while if wee looke about vs, wee ſhall ſee the wretched world corrupted with all abhominations. We ſee how Gods ſeruice is vtterly defaced, and Idolatrye raigneth euery where. Nowe then if wee depended vpon men, what would become of vs? But ſeeing it is ſo that wee might bee ouerwhelmed by ſuch ſtumblingblockes, let vs looke that wee arme our ſelues with that which is ſaide heere: that is to wit, that we may boldly walke on in the Religion which we hold by Gods woorde, and laugh them all to ſkorne which ſwarue from it. Accordingly alſo as there are ſome which think, alas, ſhal I be wiſer than ſo many nations whom I ſee liue otherwiſe? Behold, the great kinges, behold, the wyſeſt men of the world hold of that religion: and ſhould I not ſtand too much in mine owne conceit, if I ſhoulde not agree to it as well as they? The queſtion is not heere, whether they or wee be the wyſer: but whether God ought to beare al the ſway and to bee acknowledged to bee onely wiſe, ſo as there is nothing but fooliſhneſſe in vs, vntill wee haue learned to ſubmit our ſelues to him. Therefore let vs be fully reſolued of this, that we muſt not turne aſide neither one way nor other, though they that dwell about vs doe hold ſtraunge religions: but we muſt ſtand faſt grounded vppon Gods worde, and holde our ſelues contented with this, that he alloweth vs though the worlde miſlike vs and condemne vs. For wee knowe that if wee followe Gods worde, wee ſhall one day iudge them which do nowe condemne vs: & that it is a dueliſh malapertneſſe for them to behaue themſelues ſo after their owne fancie and liking. Thus much concerning the point where Moſes ſheweth that the people muſt not follow the ſtraunge Gods that were worſhipped in all the countries about them.

1. Cor. 6. 2.

But

But this extendeth yet much further: namely that although the worlde flowe out into all naughtineſſe: yet ſhall not we be excuſed, if we bee corrupted as all the reſt bee. And why ſo? It is not for nought that our Lorde hath ſanctified vs to himſelfe. In theſe dayes wee ſee blaſphemie, wee ſee murther, we ſee enuie, malice, and backbiting, wee ſee whoredome, wantonneſſe & ſuch other things raigne almoſt euery where, and to haue their full ſcope: now if we ſhould alledge this for an excuſe to doe euill, it would not ſerue our turne. For although we were hedged in with thornes rounde about: yet ought wee to walke in ſuch ſorte, as wee might perſiſt in the ſeruing of our God. Yea and euen when wee ſee nothing but naughtineſſe euery where: let vs vnderſtande that our Lord intendeth to hold vs in the ſtreiter awe. And therefore wee muſt alwayes ſet this ſaying before our eyes: Take heede to thy ſelfe, and beware that thou be not corrupted, ſeeing thou canſt not open thine eyes, but thou ſhalt meete with ſome euill thing or other to allure thee vnto naughtineſſe. Thus yee ſee howe wee haue neede to liue ſo much the more warely and carefully in theſe dayes, foraſmuch as the diuell hath obtained to peruert the whole worlde. Therefore let vs marke well this ſaying, that wee muſt not followe the trumpèrie that is rounde about vs.

Nowe Moſes addeth, The Lorde that is in the middes of you, is iealous. Beware therefore that his wrath kindle not, or that his countenance wax not angrie (for the hebrewe worde that he vſeth in this place betokeneth the countenance, and by ſimilitude and tranſlation it betokeneth wrath or anger,) leaſt thou be rooted out of the lande which the Lorde thy God hath giuen thee. In this text Moſes ment to proue by particular, that if men abuſe Gods goodneſſe, in the ende they ſhall not be able to ſhunne or eſcape his hande. God (ſaieth hee) is in the middes of you: and hee is iealous: and therfore beware of his wrath. When as he ſaith, Gods is in the mids of you: it is an vp braiding of the Iewes with the grace that was giuen them, in that God had communicated himſelfe ſo familiarly vnto them. And it ſerueth to make vs the more blameworthy, if wee ſerue him not in all pureneſſe. Wee knowe that the more benefites wee receiue at Gods hande, the more he bindeth vs vnto him. Now he dwelt in the middes of this people, and kept his reſidence there: it was meete therefore that they ſhould haue cõſidered ẏ more aduiſedly, that ſeing god came ſo neere to them, & had made thẽ to feele his goodnes: they ſhould not haue turned away from him, nor from the true religion, foraſmuch as if they did ſo, they ſhoulde bee the more to blame. As if it were ſaide, As touching the Paynims and Infidels, it is true that they ſhall at length yeeld account: they may well blindfolde their owne eyes as now by ſoothing themſelues: but yet ſhall they bee driuen to knowe that God hath not ſurrendered nor giuen ouer his right. And whereas they abuſe thẽſelues in their falſe religion, and yet thinke not themſelues to be beguiled: [the time wil come that] they ſhal know it to their coſt. But yet ſhall they bee excuſable in compariſon of you. For they bee blinde wretches walking in darknes, our Lord is a ſtraunger vnto them, and he hath not vouchſafed to draw them to him, nor to gather them as it were into his flocke. Yee ſee then that they bee as it were in vtter confuſion. But it is not ſo with you: for a man may iuſtly caſt you in ẏ teeth, that yee haue falſified the faith which yee gaue to your God. Yee ought to bee well acquainted with him becauſe he fitteth in the mids of you, and he hath choſẽ you for his people, and you alſo haue perceiued him. For you haue his power which faileth you not: hee heareth you, and hee ſheweth himſelfe fauourable in all your requeſts. Seeing then that your God dwelleth among you: yee ought to vnderſtand that there is not any other thing wherby you ſhould be inſtructed than his law: and ye ought to know after what maner he will haue your liues ordered. Sith it is ſo, aſſure your ſelues that ſo much ẏ horribler vengeance will light vpon you, if yee ſtep aſide. Yee ſhall not paſſe the ſame way that the ignorant wretches and vnbeleeuers doe: but yee ſhalbe puniſhed a hundredfold more grieuouſly for your vnthankfulneſſe, in that yee haue not offended God through ignorance, but through ſpitefull wilfulneſſe, ſo as he could not hold you vnder his yoke nor wield you, though he gathered you into his flocke to be your ſheepherd and gouernour.

Eph.2.12. Deut.4.6.& 5.32. Luke.12.47 48.

Although this were ſpoken a good while agoe to the Iewes: yet it concerneth vs likewiſe. For we ſee how our Lord ſitteth in the middes of vs. Firſt we haue this promiſe concerning ẏ church, This is my reſting place, heere wil I dwell for euer. Beſides this, experience teacheth vs, ẏ our Lorde not onely will dwell among vs: but alſo auoweth our ſoules and bodies to be his temple, & that we be members of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, in whom dwelleth the whole fulneſſe of the godhead. Nowe then ought not euery man to dedicate himſelfe to God, as though hee were his temple? And againe we know howe it is ſaid, that God dwelleth in vs by his holy ſpirite. So then, God is not onely familiar with vs as he was with the people of olde time, whom he ſaid he would holde as it were in his lappe: but alſo he dwelleth in euery of vs. Seeing it is ſo: if we turne away to the ſuperſtitions of the heathen, if wee will needes reſemble the vnbeleeuers in defiling our ſelues with them, and if wee will needes make a hotchpotch or minglemangle (as they terme it): thinke we that ſuch vnthankefulneſſe ſhall ſcape vnpuniſhed, conſidering that our Lorde commeth ſo nigh vnto vs? No: and yet for all that, after we haue ruſhed againſt him, wè runne gadding away from him like ſtray beaſtes. Thus ye ſee what we haue to remember vpon this ſaying, where Moſes declareth that God reſteth among the people of Iſrael.

Pſal.132.14. 1.Cor.3.16. & 6.15.19. 2.Cor.6.16. Col.2.9.

And heerewithall hee ſaieth that God is iealous and therefore we muſt beware that we kindle not his wrath. Whereby he doth vs to vnderſtande, that Gods dwelling among vs, is not to bee deſpiſed at our hands. True it is that he will bee louing vnto vs, and he telleth vs that hee will

Esa.42,3. beare with our infirmities, and that he is always pitifull. Although we deserue to sinke vnder his hande: yet will he alwayes shew mercie towards vs. But doth it followe therefore, that he will be scorned at our handes, and that wee may come pranking against him to despise him? No: but contrariwise, forasmuch as he sheweth himselfe gratious and louing towards vs, it ought to break & soften our harts, to make vs submit our selues wholly vnto him, and at leastwise to applie our selues altogether to the seruing & honouring of him, when he preuēteth vs through his free goodnesse. Then let vs mark well, that when our Lord is neere vnto vs, although it bee of purpose to make vs glad, and also to giue vs contentation and rest: yet notwithstanding hee ceaseth not to be zealous in the maintaining of his glorie, neither will he suffer it to be trampled vnder foote, without sending horrible vengeance for it. Doe we then know that our Lord dwelleth among vs? Let vs on our side beware that wee sanctifie our selues wholly vnto him, for feare least his wrath bee kindled, that is say, least hee withdraw his goodnesse which he hath once shewed towards vs, and bereaue vs of it as we deserue, and therewithall powre out his wrath vppon vs, when hee seeth that hee cannot winne vs, nor any whit preuaile by shewing himselfe pitifull in bearing with vs with such louingkindnes and gentlenes as he doth. Ye see then after what sort we ought to vse ỹ goodnes and patientnesse of our Lorde. That is to wit, knowing that we may boldly stay vpon him, not doubting but that he wilbe fauorable vnto vs, wee neuertheless must indeuour and inforce our selues to the vttermost of our power to serue and honour him. And forasmuch as we cannot do it of our selues: wee must pray him to hold vs in such obedience by his holy spirit, as our whole seeking may bee to shewe ỹ his comming so vnto vs is not in vaine, but that we be truly knit vnto him, and that hee hath set such a holy and vnuiolable bond betweene him and vs, that as he once gaue himselfe to vs to be our inheritance, so he also possesseth vs, and maketh vs to be throughly contented with him, and to proceede in such wise in profiting to his honor & glory, as our whole life may shewe that we desire nothing else but to bee reteined vnder his protection. Psal.16.5.

Nowe let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good God w acknowledgment of our faults, praying him to humble vs more & more by true repentance, so as we may not onely be sorie for our faults, but also amend them and submit our selues duetifully vnto him, to the intent we may be more and more rid of all our naughtie lustes, and bee clothed againe with his righteousnesse, that by the shining of his image in vs, wee may shew our selues to be his true children and that our desire is to be ruled by his holy spirit, euen vntill he haue made vs partakers of his heauenly glorie. That it may please him to grant this grace not onely to vs but also to all people and Nations of the earth, &c.

15 For the Lord &c.

16 You shall not tempt the Lord your God as you tempted him in Massa.

17 Yee shall keepe the commaundements of the Lord your God diligently, and his testimonies and ordinances which he hath commaunded you.

18 Thou shalt doe the thing that is right and good in the sight of the Lord, that it may goe well with thee, and that thou maist go into this good land and possesse it according as the Lord hath sworne to thy fathers.

19 And that hee may beate backe thine enemies before thee, as the Lorde hath saide.

WE sawe yesterday howe Moses shewed the people, that forasmuch as God vouchsafed to dwell among them, they also ought to liue in his feare. And wee likewise must thinke, that his approching vnto vs after that sort, is not to be despised of vs, but rather to the intent that his goodnesse should prouoke vs to honour him the more. And there was a threatning added immediatly, For feare least thou be bereft of the land which thy God hath now giuen thee. Wherein Moses declared, that when we haue receiued any good alreadie at Gods hand, we must not be proude of it, but rather yeelde him due honour for it, that we may inioy it still: for after as he sheweth him selfe liberall to vs, so doth he binde vs vnto him. And therefore let vs marke, that when wee haue the possession of his benefites, it is not to the ende wee shoulde fall asleepe in them, but rather haue the greater care to serue and honour him. And herewithal let vs note, that vnder this terme of ỹ lande of Canaan, Moses comprehended generally all that belonged to the peoples election: for that lande was an outwarde testimony thereof. Therefore in effect hee ment to say, Beholde, God hath chosen thee to bee of his housholde and Church: wilt thou continue therin? Then must thou be carefull to honour him, and walke after his guiding. Nowe to apply the same same to our vse, it is all one as if a man shold say vnto vs, seeing that God hath promised to be our father and Sauior, let vs feare him, to ỹ intent he may continue alwayes so. And this importeth ỹ he wil haue a care of vs, during this mortal life of ours. And although we passe through many miseries, yet will he deliuer vs from them. Howbeit that his defending of vs in this world is not the chiefe benefite, nor the thing that we must stay vpon, but we must mount vp higher to ỹ endlesse life. And so to be short, whensoeuer we think vpō the benefits that god hath giuen vs, let vs vnderstande that hee can well bereeue vs of them as soone as we abuse them, and pluck away our fethers ỹ make vs so proude. For his bestowing of his benefits vpon vs, is not to the intent that we should despise him, & take occasion to stande in our owne conceits, & so be negligent and cal no more vpon him: but the blessings which we inioy tend to this end wee should dayly and howerly haue ỹ better regard of him, & lift vp our minds on high to yeeld him due thanks, and to glorifie him in our whole life. Now herevnto Moses addeth, Thou shalt not tempt the Lorde thy God, as yon tempted him in Masa. Hereby he meaneth ỹ the people must not abuse gods patience. As if he shold say, look wel to it my friends: although god deale gently with you, ye must not think but your sins shal come to accoũt, if you serue him not with all humility. If ye say, we be Gods friends, we neede not be afraid ỹ he wilbe angry with vs or work vs any displeasure, for we see how well he dealeth ẇ vs: beware how ye daly so with him, for ye know what befell to your fathers in Masa. Therefore do no more so, but preuent the chastisemens of your God, & before he arme himself against you, know him to be your iudge, and tary not till hee shewe forth the tokens of his wrath and vengeance by his deeds, but in ỹ meane time while he vseth mieldnes & gentlenes, consider ỹ hee alluReth you to repentãce, & so let euery man be prouoked to amend his faults, that God may be honored by ỹ mean. For if ye tempt him againe, he wil not bere it. He sharply punished your fathers in Masa: but you shal feele much greater & horrible punishmẽt, if you go on stil. And let vs mark, that here he toucheth the story which is written more at length in the seuenteenth of Exodus. There it is saide that the people being in a drie place of the wildernesse, did grudge and repine against Moses, because they had no drinke, crying out that they were betrayed, because there was no more water in the desert, so as it had bin better for them to haue taried still in Egypt, where were graues ynow to haue buried them in. God punished the people with the bytings of Serpents: but yet howsoeuer they fared hee had pity vpon them, and vsed mercie towards them, sending remedy conuenient for ỹ same. And yet notwithstanding his will is to haue the name therof to continue stil, for a memorial to vpbraid the people with their vnthankfulnesse. It is his pleasure ỹ it should remaine still, to the intent ỹ the childrẽ might know ỹ their fathers were rebels: for ỹ word Masa betokeneth as much as temptation. Now for ỹ better vnderstãding of ỹ things that are saide here, we must consider what it is to tempt God: for that is done diuers wayes. But chiefly it is said that we tempt God, when we be too importunate in requiring more than is lawfull for vs, and when we will needs haue further trial of his power and abilitie than pleaseth him, so as we fall to spyting of him as if we would say, Go to we shal see now whether God be mightie or no: let him do what wee will haue him to doe. When we go to work with such outrage, & haue no modestie nor stay of our selues, so as we consider not what is lawful for vs, but wil needs haue God to please vs without awe or measure: then do we tempt him. And why so? This word Tempt betokeneth properly to assay or trie. See nowe, God is willing to vtter his power, howbeit not at our pleasure: neither were it reason that he shold be subiect vnto vs. True it is that he vseth this amiable kind of speech, that he wil doe the will of Psa.145.19. such as feare him. But this will is ment, not of an inordinate lust when men take leaue to craue whatsoeuer commeth in their minde: but of the desire that is subiect and conformable to Gods ordinance, so far forth as he giueth vs leaue. And by that meanes God is glorified. It is not ment ỹ he will do whatsoeuer commeth in our head: for that would oftentimes turne to our vndoing. As for example, whẽ he gaue the people flesh: it had bin much better for them to haue died for hunNum.11.33. ger, than to haue crammed & glutted themselues after that fashion vnsatiably in despite of God. But God performeth our wil, whẽ we be obediẽt vnto him, & haue respect vnto goodnes in al our requests, according as S. Iohn exhorteth vs to at 1.Ioh.3.22. tempt nothing further than pleaseth him. If wee doe so, God will also pleasure vs. But if wee come malapertly with a lofty countenance, to say I wil trie whether God can do this or no: ỹ we shal come short of our desires. What? Is it a conuenient fashion of dealing, that we shold stepforth so to trie God, & that we wil needs haue him to giue vs proofe of his power by making himselfe subiect to vs? Is it not a diuelish malapertnes that carieth vs so away? Yes So then, we se now what is signified by this word Tempt, namely a trying of God, as though we douted of his power or abilitie, & a repining at him & a charging of him with infirmitie when he doth not whatsoeuer we lust, so as we measure him by the things that we perceiue with our eyes. That is the temptation which is forbidden here. And indeede our Lord Iesus Christ is a good & faithfull expounder of this text. For he alledgeth it to beat back Satan, as is written in the fourth of S. Mathew. Yea and Matt.4.7. ỹ diuell himself taketh ỹ holy scripture to tempt our Lorde withall, facing him with this text, It is written that God hath giuen his Angels charge psal.91.11. ouer thee, to beare thee vp in their hands, & not to suffer thee to dash thy foote against a stone. Wel then, herevpon we may gather, ỹ God hath committed vs to the keeping of his Angels, so as we shalbe borne vp by them, & preserued from all euill that may incounter vs. Wee must assure our selues of that. But yet it is said therewithall, that they shall keepe vs in all our wayes, that is to say, which we haue to go in. Now then, let vs

keepe on our wayes, that is to ſay, let vs looke about vs how God hath diſpoſed our life, & let vs not attempt any thing raſhly & vppon our owne head, but let euery of vs cõſider his own calling: & then we may be ſure ỹ Gods hand ſhal always be reached out ouer vs, and ỹ Angels of heauen ſhall trauel after vs: let vs not doubt of it. Neuertheles whatſoeuer come of it, let vs not paſſe the bounds & liſts ỹ he hath ſet vs, nor play the loce colts to ſay, I will go trie this or that: for ỹ were a tempting of God. Why ſo? For whoſoeuer liſteth not to take paines, but ſaieth: is not God able ynough to maintain me? He trieth gods power too far. For why? God hath promiſed that his bleſſing Pſal.128.2. ſhalbe vpon ỹ handes of them that take paines. His will is ỹ the lande ſhould be tilled, and ỹ men ſhould follow husbandrie, & other labors, euerie one according to his calling. And yet notwithſtãding if they wil needs refuſe al this, & diſdain to vſe thoſe ordinary meanes: is it not a tempting of him what hee can doe? It is all one as if I ſhold ſtep vp into ỹ pulpet, without vouchſafing to looke vpon any book, & fondly imagine to ſay, thus in my ſelf: tuſh, whẽ I come thither, god will giue me ynough wherof to ſpeak, & in the mean while I holde ſcorne to reade, or to ſtudy aforehand what I ſhal ſpeake, & come hither without minding how to apply ỹ holy ſcripture to ỹ edifiing of ỹ people, by reaſon wherof I ſhould play ỹ preſumptuous foole, & God alſo would put me to ſhame for mine ouerboldneſſe. In like caſe is it with al other things. So then we ſee in effect ỹ to tempt God, is to be vnruly, and to omit the meanes which God giueth vs and ſetteth downe vnto vs, & to refuſe to put thẽ to their right vſe, ſo as wee wil needs haue God ſerued after our owne fond liking, and make him as it were ſubiect vnto vs. And foraſmuch as our Lord Ieſus Chriſt alledged this ſame text againſt Satan: we ſee which is the true and naturall ſenſe thereof.

Nowe then, whereas it is ſaide, Thou ſhalt not tempt thy God: It is al one as if Moſes had ſaid, my friends, beware ye play not mockholiday. When God is patient, and powreth not out his rigour vpon you at the firſt daſh: thinke not that therefore ye ſhal ſcape ſcotfree, neither take occaſion to fall aſleepe & to flatter your ſelues for it: but liue in feare, and preuent the wrath which God hath not yet powred out vppon you, becauſe hee ſpareth you. To be ſhort, we be ſaid to tempt god, when we abuſe his benefits which we poſſeſſe, & which he hath put into our hands, & in ỹ meane while acknowledge not him to be the founder of them. For why? vnder pretence that God dealeth gently with vs, we beare our ſelues in hande that wee may deſpiſe him. And that is a turning of his goodnes to the cleane contrary end that it ought to be applied. Doth not god apply himſelf to vs, of purpoſe to win vs, and to the end that we ſhould haue his loue ſo printed in our hearts, as we might be wholly knit vnto him and made one with him? But if euery of vs do contrariwiſe run at rouers, & deuour the goods ỹ he hath beſtowed vpon vs: is it not a tempting of him? Yes. And aboue all thinges whereas it hath pleaſed him to impart vnto vs the doctrine of ſaluation: it is to the intent wee ſhould take him for our father, and Ieſus Chriſt for our ſhepherd, and that wee ſhoulde harken to his voice. Againe he hath taken vs as it were into his houſe, to the intent we ſhould be his very houſholdfolke, applying our ſelues more and more vnto him, and bee vtterly ſeparated from ỹ vnbeleeuers, by dedicating our whole life vnto him. But on the contrarie part, if we will needs be vnruly, & yet in the mean while vaunt our ſelues of hauing the Goſpel, inſomuch ỹ we feede our ſelues with this vaine hope to ſay, O ho, ſeeing we haue Gods word, he cannot but loue vs, for it is his power to ỹ ſaluation of al that Rom.1.16. beleeue: I ſay if men dalie after this ſort, & abuſe the name of faith to make a ſhrowding ſheete of it, to the end they may giue themſelues the more boldly to all naughtines: it is a tempting of God. For inaſmuch as hee vttereth not his power at ỹ firſt daſh by thundering downe vpon them: hee ſeemeth to them to be as a little babe & a weakling, & ſo they play with him [at their pleaſure]. Therfore let vs learne to feare God: & although we perceiue not that he hath drawen his ſword, bent his bow, & made readie his arrowes againſt vs: yet let vs not tary till ỹ fire of his vengeance Pſal.7.13. be kindled vpon vs, but conſider that the ſentẽce therof ſhalbe executed vpon all ỹ deſpiſers of his maieſtie, though they feele nothing of it for a time. Thus ye ſee how we be forbidden to tempt the Lord in the time of proſperitie. To be ſhort, let vs learne to feare God while he beareth with vs. For if we ſay with theſe mockers, what I pray you? Doth not God ſhew himſelfe gracious & fauorable towards vs, in that hee doth vs ſo much good? It is all one as if we ſcorned his power and ſhould ſay, yea, it is true ỹ men threaten vs with Gods puniſhments, but where be they? wee perceiue no likelihood of them. When we ſpeake after ỹ maner, it is a defying of him, as though wee would ſay, Let vs tary a while & ſee what he can do. Yea, it is moreouer as good as a bereauing of him of his power, and a making of him to be an ydoll: and is not ỹ (in effect) a denying that he is the iudge of the world? Wherfore to ỹ intent we may not tempt God, let vs learn to liue humbly and warely. Although we bee at our eaſe & reſt, & although there be no ſhew or likelihood ỹ god wil ſend any aduerſitie or affliction vpon vs: let vs not meaſure his power by our perceiuerance, nor after ỹ which we ſee: but euẽ when his ſcourges ſeeme to be very far of from vs, let vs bee as much afraid of them, as if wee felt the ſtripes of them alredy. Thus ye ſee in effect how we ought to put this text in practiſe.

Now whereas Moſes addeth, Aye tempted him in Maſa: It is all one as if he had ſaid, ſeeing yee haue eſcaped for one brunt, come no more there. For whereas your God ſhewed himſelfe mercifull at that time: his meaning was that yee ſhoulde not vnderſtande, that hee liſted not to be tempted. Wherfore ſeeing he hath withdrawen his hande from you, let it not be an occaſion to deceiue you hereafter, that yee ſhoulde take courage to tempt him any more: for when men prouoke him ſo often, it is not for them to looke for mercy and fauour at his hand.

Nowe

Now we ſee to what purpoſe Moſes alledged the temptation wherewith the Iewes tempted God in Maſa. And thereby we bee taught, that when wee haue done any fault, wee muſt bethinke vs of it, to the intent wee may doe no more ſo. And inſtead of taking occaſion to grudge at GOD through impatience: we muſt humble our ſelues the more vnder his awe. When wee haue offended him after that ſort, and obtained forgiuenes: it is to the ende we ſhould take the better heede all our lyfe after, and that the rememberance of our euil doing ſhould abide printed in our hearts, vntill we haue ſhewed that Gods goodnes hath booted vs as well as his ſcourges and corrections. And therefore, to bee ſhort, when God chaſtiſeth vs, let vs beware that we receiue inſtruction by it: and when he forgiueth vs, let vs looke that wee take ſuch taſte of his goodneſſe, as may inflame our heartes and mindes to honour him the more. Whereas the vnbeleeuers doe mocke God when he ſpareth them, and make no reckening of it, but beare themſelues in hand ỹ they be diſcharged, if he puniſh them not out of hand: ye ſee that the faithfull muſt by all meanes ſtirre vp themſelues to feare & honour God ſo much the more carefully and warely. When he chaſtiſeth the vnbeleeuers, they fret and ſtorme and grinde their teeth at him, and their rebellioufnes increaſeth more and more, euen vntill it come to ſtarke madneſſe. Nowe then, whereas the vnbeleeuers are ſo frowarde, ỹ howſoeuer God deale with them they become ſtill worſe and worſe: let vs thinke well vpon this, euen to returne into the right way, whether it bee that God lift vp his hand to chaſtiſe vs, or that he make delay & pitie our infirmities as not being willing to puniſh them at all: To this purpoſe is Maſa ſpoken of in this place. And ſo, to be ſhort, when we haue cõmitted any grieuous offence I meane publikely, ſo as there is any diſorder among vs and God is offended: let vs bethinke our ſelues thus: Alas, ſeeing that God hath ſhewed himſelfe a father for all our prouoking of him, and yet neuertheleſſe receiued vs to mercie: let vs doe ſo no more. Seeing God hath pitied vs and reached vs his hand, euen when we deſerued to haue beene deſtroyed, which thing he hath not ſuffered to come to paſſe: let vs beware & take heede that wee giue not too much ſcope to our luſtes, ſo as they ſhould make vs to ſlip from him, and to ouerſhoote our ſelues ſo farre, as to run into the way of damnation. After this maner (ſay I) muſt the faithfull quicken vp themſelues, bearing in minde that when they haue once ouerſhot them ſelues, & forſaken the right way: they muſt cal theſelues home againe to walk awefully euer after, and betake theſelues into Gods hand, ỹ he may guide them & not ſuffer thẽ to be ſo ouerſeene any more. Alſo we muſt doe the like particularly. When any man ſhal haue bin ouerleen for a time, and not haue dealt ſo warely as hee ought to haue doone, euen after hee knoweth Gods truth: let him bethinke himſelfe thus: Alas, I haue bene vnthankefull to my God, and for as much as I haue ſtarted away from him, I am worthie to bee vtterly confounded: but yet hath not he ſuffered that to come to paſſe. Now then what is to bee done on my part? It is not meete that I ſhoulde forget the faultes which I haue committed, but that I ſhould thinke vpon them, and beare the bitterneſſe of them ſtill about mee in my heart. After that manner muſt euerie of vs deale, ſay I: not as diſtruſting God, or to prouoke our ſelues to any deſpayre: but to reyne our ſelues the ſhorter, and to holde our ſelues the more in awe. For as ſoone as a man doeth but lift himſelfe vp, by and by he ouerſhooteth himſelfe if God let him alone. That is the thing which wee haue to note in this text, where Moſes ſayeth that they muſt not tempt God, as they tempted him once afore in Maſa. And for the ſame cauſe and to the ſame purpoſe alſo is it ſpoken of in the Pſalme, where it is ſaid, To day if ye heare his voyce harden not your heartes as your fathers did in the wilderneſſe. Pſal. 95. 7. 8

This is ſpoken expreſſely of the temptation that Moſes toucheth here. See how the Prophet warneth the people, yea and that deſirouſly, as if he ſhould ſay, very well, if ye bee ſo teachable as to hearken to your God, ſeeing he doeth now exhort you to come vnto him, refuſe it not: for this benefite ſhal not laſt alwayes to them that make delay and are neuer mooued to obey him, but driue of from day to day when he calleth them. And therefore, if ye heare his voyce (ſayeth he) nowe when God calleth you. He vſeth there a vehemencie as though he could not finde words fit to exhort the people and ſufficiently to prick them forwarde. In that hee ſaieth, Goe to my freindes, bee well aduiſed that you harden not your heartes: he ſheweth what is the cauſe of al miſcheife, and why we profit no better by Gods teaching of vs. Namely that beſides that we bee full of naughtineſſe, and ſo ſinfull by nature, that whereas our heartes ought to be ſuſteined to receaue that which God ſayeth, it may ſeeme that wee intende of ſet purpoſe to harden them againſt him: we doe moreouer fall to ſtomacking againſt him with a certaine ſpitefulneſſe, as if we would ſay, what care I to obey God? Shall I bee brideled of my will like a beaſt? Beware of that ſayeth he: for ye knowe what happened to your Fathers. The Prophet caſteth them in the teeth with the thinges that had beene done by their forefathers in olde time, to the intent they ſhoulde not boaſt of their deſcending from the holy Patriarkes. Beholde ſaieth he, your forefathers were rebels: & how thẽ haue you continued vnto this day? Is it not through Gods mercie? Yes: for ye ſhoulde haue periſhed vtterly. Againe, ſeeing yout God hath pitied you being Abraham his race: thinke not that he will haue ye to runne backe againe, ſo as ye ſhould bee alwayes newe to begin. For when he hath borne with you a while, he muſt bee faine to make you pay your arrerages all at once. Thus ye ſee that the way for vs to put this ſentence in practiſe, is to vnderſtand that when God ſhall haue pardoned our faultes oftentimes, hee ſhall haue iuſt cauſe to puniſh vs the more grieuouſly, if wee ceaſſe not to prouoke him ſtill, but will needes bee the boulder to doe euill, vnder pretence that hee hath not vſed extremity towardes vs. If God ſee that in vs: hee can well call vs to account for all the thinges that hee had pardoned before. For his pardoning of vs is with condition, that we ſhould humble our ſelues, and conſider all our life after, how much we be beholden vnto him. If an offender haue obtained fauour, and thereupon he fall to ſpyting of him to whom he is beholdē for his life, within a day or twaine after: doeth he not deſerue to haue his former lewdneſſe brought to remembrance againe, and to be reckened withall frō point to point, and to haue his vnthankfulnes laid afore him, for his abuſing of the fauour ẏ had bin ſhewed him? Yes: and thinke we that our Lord will haue leſſe right than mortall men? Thinke we then that his ſhewing of fauour vnto vs, is to the intent to make vs bolder to doe euill? No, but rather his dooing of it is to the intent wee ſhoulde all our life after beare our offence in minde and bee ſorie for it: accordingly alſo as wee ſee howe the good king Ezechias ſpeaketh of the bitterneſſe of his heart, when he ſayeth, that he will bee mindefull of the euill and of the offence that he had committed. Not but that he reioyced in Gods goodneſſe, but that yet neuertheleſſe hee would beare it in remembrance, to the intent he might not let himſelfe ſlip any more, nor be any more ſurpriſed by the wylineſſe of Satan.

Eſa. 38.15.

Now after that Moſes hath ſpoken ſo, he addeth: Ye ſhall diligently keepe the commaundements, Statutes, and Lawes of your God which I ſet before you this day, that you may enter into the land which he promiſed to your fathers with an othe, and he driue out all your enemies before you. Here we bee put in minde of the thing that hath beene told vs before: that is to wit, that whereas Moſes vſeth many wordes to expreſſe the Lawe, it is no ſuperfluous ſpeech, but ſerueth to induce folke the better, to profite in the doctrine that is giuē them. As if he ſhould ſay, Giue good eare: for behold, your God taketh paines with you. Like as a ſchoolemaiſter taketh paines to teach the children that are committed to his charge: ſo doth God apply himſelfe to you, giuing you his Law orderly and diſtinctly, to the end ye ſhould not be greatly combered to vnderſtand what he ſaieth concerning his will. Here therfore are his Statutes, Ordinances, & Iudgementes. As if he ſhoulde ſay, the doctrine is ſet foorth vnto you in good order, ſo that if you can finde in your hearts to hearken to your God, and to receiue ẏ which he ſhall ſay, you need not dout but you ſhall be taught faithfully by his word, & haue knowledge of al things ẏ are good and conuenient for you. The firſt thing then which Moſes ment to expreſſe by theſe wordes Iudgemenses ſtatutes, & Ordinances, is ẏ our Lord taketh paine to teach vs whatſoeuer is good for vs, and ẏ he vſeth ſuch order, as we cannot ſay that his word is too high and confuſed for vs. And therewithall his intent is alſo to hold mē wholly to the pure obedience of the lawe, and to the ſimplicitie therein contained, as if he ſhould ſay: My friends, Gods meaning is, not onely ẏ ye ſhould be attentiue in hearing what he ſaith to you, but alſo ẏ your only wiſedome ſhould be to obey him, & not to inuent any noueltie, ſo as ye ſhould think to ſerue him after your owne fantie, according to the cōmon faſhion of mē, who haue alwayes ſome fooliſh deſire to change Gods word. No, ſaieth he. If ye can beare in minde the leſſons of the Law, ye ſhall haue ſtatutes, Iudgements and ordinances, ſo as ye ſhal not want any thing whereby ye may be taught in all perfection. This hath bin expoūded alreadie heretofore: and therefore I ſtande not long vppon it. Neuertheleſſe the repeating of it here againe by the holy Ghoſt, is not without cauſe: and therefore I muſt needes put you briefly in remembrance thereof, as oft as thoſe wordes are ſet downe.

Now Moſes ſaieth expreſſely, That theſe Commaundements, Ordinances and Lawes muſt be done & kept. As if he ſhould ſay, that God will not haue his word to fall to the ground. His ſetting foorth of it, is to the end that we on our ſide ſhould bee attentiue to hearken what he ſaith to vs. And ſo let vs marke well that it is not ynough for vs to allowe Gods worde in ſpeeche, by ſaying it is true: but we muſt alſo bee diligent in keeping it all our life long. And for further proofe of that which he had ſaid, he addeth, Thou ſhalt doe that which is right & good in the ſight of God. Herein he ſheweth vs, that we muſt not doe whatſoeuer ſeemeth good to our ſelues, nor followe our owne good intentes, as they terme them. And he will ſet out this matter yet better in another place which we ſhal ſee hereafter. For there he wil forbid men expreſly to do the things ẏ ſeeme right in their owne eyes: for whatſoeuer ſeemeth excellent vnto vs, ſhalbe condemned for abhominable at Gods hand, as is ſaid in S. Luke. Therefore let vs take good heede ẏ we ouerſhoote not our ſelues in our conceites to ſay, How ſo? Why ſhould not God allow this for good, ſeeing we do it to ſuch a purpoſe? ſeeing wee be deſirous to obey him? Yea, but how will he be obeyed? Not ẏ men ſhould be Iudges & Vmpers of the things ẏ they do, to ſay this is good, or ẏ is euill: he reſerueth ẏ authoritie to himſelf alone. Now then, will we order our life aright? Let vs not open our eyes to be wiſe in our owne conceites, for we ſee that ẏ hath coſt vs deare. Wee ſee (I ſay) ẏ our father Adam ſaw too much, when he could not content himſelfe with the meaſure ẏ was giuen him. And therefore let vs not be too ſharpe ſighted to ſay, I finde ẏ this is good, & therfore it muſt be done. Curſed be ſuch wiſdome: for it is a diueliſh pride. Will we then be allowed of our God? Let vs take good heede to that which he ſpeaketh: for whatſoeuer is right in his eyes, muſt needes be allowed in the end: & the things which we ſhall haue imagined to haue bene beſt, ſhall be condemned when wee bring them before him. For why? He ſeeth more clearely than wee doe: he knoweth things which wee knowe not. And therefore he miſliketh all our imaginations, & will haue vs to followe the thinges which he vttereth with his mouth, ſimply without mingling any thing of our owne. For the verie ſacrifice that he requireth at our handes, is that wee ſhould ſerue him obediently, and therewithall learne to diſtruſt al our owne ſtrength, wit, and reaſon, and not to preſume preſume vppon any thing that wee our ſelues haue inuented: (for all that euer our mindes can conceiue, is but follie, vanitie, and leaſing:) but to bee well aduiſed that we doe the things which are good and right in the eyes of the Lord, that is to ſay, that we frame our whole life according to his commaundements.

1. Sam. 15. 22. 23.

But now let vs come to the promiſe. Thou ſhou maiſt goe into the land (ſaith he) which the Lord hath ſworne to thy fathers, to poſſeſſe it. Here we ſee how God is deſirous to win the heartes of his people by gentleneſſe, in ſetting the poſſeſſion of the land of Chanaan before them, for a reward and inheritance. As if he ſhould ſay, Truth it is that yee bee bounde to ſerue mee: but yet will I not haue yee to ſerue mee for nought: beholde, the recompence that is prepared for you, is that ye ſhall poſſeſſe the land of Chanaan. But yet wee muſt alwayes marke with what condition. It was not ỹ the people ſhould liue there at reſt like ſwine in a ſtie: but ſo as the land might bee as a pledge of the endleſſe lyfe, and that they might conſider thus: God hath adopted vs to bee his heires: and therefore let vs mount vp hygher to the euerlaſting lyfe. See heere how GOD telleth vs, that if wee ſerue him, hee will keepe touche with vs, ſo as wee ſhall poſſeſſe the lande that hee hath promiſed vs. Nowe heere wee ſee firſt the thing that I haue touched already: that is to wit, that God ſtoopeth to mens rudeneſſe and infirmity, in promiſing them recompence though hee bee not bound thereto. Marke that for one poynt. But by the waye wee haue to marke alſo, that God bindeth not himſelfe as though wee could deſerue aught. For he ſaith not, I will giue you the land for the ſeruice you haue doone to mee, as a thing that you haue earned: but, you ſhall goe into the lande which I promiſed to your fathers. Heere are two thinges vttered couertly. The one is that God promiſed the lande of his owne meere goodneſſe, and not as a due debt that had beene deſerued at his hande. For the promiſe thereof had bine made before the people was borne: foure hundred and thyrtie yeeres before their departure out of Egypt, God had ſayd vnto Abraham, this land ſhall be thine and thy ſeedes. Let vs note then that this people had not deſerued aught at Gods hande, and that the rewarde which is mentioned heere, befell them not in reſpect of their workes. Marke that for a ſpecially poynt. And God telleth vs alſo, that hee termeth the thing by the name of Hyre, [Recompence, & Wages,] which he giueth vs onely of his owne free liberalitie, without being bounde thereto by any kind of meanes, and without any deſert at all at our handes. And why? To the intent that men ſhould bee prouoked to ſerue him, and not that they ſhould become proude, or father any thing vpon themſelues which God ſhoulde accept for payment or admit for any recompence. And this wee ſee euen in Abraham himſelfe. For before hee had doone any thing at all God ſayd vnto him, I am thine abundant recompence: Abraham, I haue giuen thee this land: I will bee thy God, and the God of thy ſeede after thee: I will be thy defender. Yee ſee then that all the promiſes which are poſſible to bee wiſhed, were giuen of God vnto Abraham before he had ſhewed any ſigne of faith or of the feare of God. But when he was willing to haue ſacrificed his ſonne Iſaac: our Lorde ſayd I will bleſſe my ſeruaunt Abraham, bicauſe hee hath feared mee, and ſeeing hee hath not ſpared his owne ſonne for the loue of me, I will multiplie my bleſſinges vpon him. And that was ſaide afore. But God giueth ſo much the greater beautie to his goodneſſe, of purpoſe to ſtrengthen Abrahams heart, not that hee intended to exalt Abrahams deſertes that hee might preſume of himſelfe: but to make him know, my God hath of his own mere mercie giuen me the thing ỹ he promiſed me, I had the promiſe of it long agoe, and now he ſheweth that he accepteth my ſeruice, in aſmuch as he performeth the promiſe that he made to me of his owne free goodneſſe. Thus we ſee howe we ought to take the textes of holy ſcripture, where god behighteth vs recompence. We muſt not conclude thereppon that wee deſerue aught, or that our workes are of any valew, or that God is any thing bounde vnto vs: but that he doth it to quicken vs vp & to harten vs the better to ſerue him, in as much as our labours are not loſt before him, but are made account of and redound to our benefit. Nowe then we ſee what is ỹ meaning of theſe wordes where Moſes ſheweth the people that ỹ Lande had bin promiſed to their forefathers by othe, before they whom he ſpeaketh to were borne.

Now for a concluſion let vs come to this ſaying, Thou ſhou maieſt drine out all thine enemies before thee. Herein Moſes doth the people to wit, that no let can hinder them from poſſeſſing the land, ſo they ſerue their God. True it is that the land of Chanaan had people in it at that time to keepe poſſeſſion of it, & we perceiue how ỹ ſpies brought word ỹ they were Giantes, and ſuch as would haue ſwallowed vp the people of God. It ſhold ſeeme therfore to haue bin impoſſible for thē to haue ſet foote within ỹ land. But God told them ỹ although his people were barred from al enterance to mans vnderſtanding: yet would he open them the way by his infinite power, ſo they inclined to ſerue him. Now remaineth that wee apply this to our own vſe. Firſt of all let vs mark, that whenſoeuer God calleth vs to his ſeruice, his promiſing of reward vnto vs, (not onely in this tranſitorie lyfe, but alſo in the kingdome of heauen) is not to puffe vs vp with ſelfweening, or to make vs to beleeue that wee haue deſerued aught: but onely to quicken vp our ſlouthfulneſſe: and bicauſe wee bee ſo laſie in ſeruing him, his intent is to ſpurre vs forewarde by that meanes. Therefore let vs take courage: and ſeeing wee looſe not our labour in imploying our ſelues in Gods ſeruice, let vs goe to it diligently and luſtily. And whereas he behighteth vs reward: let vs aſſure our ſelues it is not bicauſe our workes deſerue it, but bicauſe that he of his own infinite goodneſſe taketh them in good woorth, and giueth that tytle vnto them. Let that ſerue for one poynt.

Rom. 3. 20. Eph 2. 9.

And let vs marke heerewithall, that whereas God calleth vs to his inheritance, although he doe it freely: yet is it with condition that wee behaue our ſelues as trew children towards him, and conſider that hee calleth vs vnto holyneſſe. And in deede the very ende why hee calleth vs to bee his people and of his flocke, is not that he will haue vs to be intangled and held backe ſtill in this worlde: but to ſanctifie our ſelues vnto him that wee may liue holily vnder his obedience, for as much as he hath waſhed and clenſed vs by the blood of our Lorde Ieſus Chriſte. And Gods calling of vs thereunto, is not for our woorkes ſakes, but for his owne mercie. Now if vnder colour heereof, wee will needes ſtand facing with him: I haue tould you already what will come of it. Therefore let vs haue regard to matche the thinges together which are inſeparable: that is to wit, the free goodneſſe of our God, and the condition thereunto annexed, which is that hee be ſerued and honored at our handes. And beſides this, although wee ſee neuer ſo great lettes, which may ſeeme to barre vs from all entraunce into the kingdome of heauen, and that wee be caſt vp heere for a pray vnto Sathan, and we haue ſo many enemies that our life is as it weere in hazarde euery minute of an houre: yet let vs not ceaſe to hope, and to beleeue that our Lorde will keepe vs ſafe and ſure, if wee walke in his feare. Then let vs not paſſe for all the worlde. Although it ſeeme that all thinges ſhould be turned vpſidowne: yet let not all the troubles and incõberances which we ſee in the world, ſtoppe vs frõ going through to the end: but let vs reaſon thus with our ſelues, who is he that hath taken vs into his keeping? Is it not our God? Is it not he which hath promiſed vs the inheritaunce of the kingdome of heauen? Yes. Then is it his office to holde vs by ſtrong hande. True it is that wee on our part are feeble: but yet his onely power will bee ynough to ſtrengthen vs. True it is that we be inuironed with many enemies: but yet our God is a good ſhield, he wilbe an inuincible fortreſſe for vs, ſo wee put our truſt in him. We haue his promiſe that hee will neuer fayle vs. Thus yee ſee that God hauing once begun the worke of our ſaluation, will goe through with it in ſuche ſorte, as wee may glory that his calling of vs vnto him is not in vaine, nor to diſappoint vs of our hope, wherein hee will haue vs to continue vnto the ende.

Now let vs kneele downe in the preſence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him that whereas heeretofore we haue abuſed his power and might too much, we may henſefoorth be more diligent in practiſing his iudgementes and correctiõs, and ſo make our commodity of them, as the warninges which hee hath giuen vs may neuer out of our remembraunce: and that as long as it ſhal pleaſe him to maintaine vs in proſperytie and quiet, we may be watchfull and ſtand vpon our garde, ſo as wee turne not from the right way, ne tary till he powre out his vengeance vpon vs, but indeuour to preuent it, as we bee warned to doe: and alſo that in alour lyfe we may continually ſo repent vs of our ſinnes, as we may ſtill trauell the better towardes him, vntill hee haue gathered vs fully to himſelfe, to frame vs to the perfection of the righteouſneſſe whereunto wee tend as nowe. That it may pleaſe him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs, but alſo to all people and nations of the earth, &c.

On Wedneſday the laſt of Iuly. 1555.

The L. Sermon, which is the ſixth vpon the ſixth Chapter.

20 When thy child asketh thee in time to come, ſaying: What are theſe teſtimonies, Ordinaunces, and lawes which the Lorde our God hath commaunded you?

21 Then ſhalt thou ſay to thy chyld, Wee were Pharaoſe bondfolke in Egypt: but the Lord brought vs out of Egypt with a mightie hand.

22 And the Lord wrought ſignes and miracles great and euill, vppon Egypt, and vpon Pharao and all his houſe before our eyes, 23 And brought vs out thence, to bring vs in [hither,] and to giue vs the land which he had ſworne to our fathers.

24 And the Lorde commaunded vs to keepe all theſe ordinaunces, and to feare the Lorde our God, that wee might alwayes proſper and liue as wee doe this day.

25 And it ſhall bee counted vnto vs for righteouſneſſe, if wee keepe and doe all theſe commaundementes before the Lorde our God, as he hath commaunded vs.

Here

HEere wee haue two reasons to marke why Moses commaundeth, that such as were to come after that time, should be tolde why God gaue his Lawe to the Iewes, and why he woulde haue them gouerned after that maner. The one is, that it is good reason that Gods name should be magnifyed in all ages, and that wee shoulde indeuour to the vttermost of our power, that it decay not with vs, but continue still vnappayred, and florishe and reigne, euen after wee be dead. The other reason is, that hee intended to quicken vp the Iewes to serue God with the better courage, by putting them in minde of the deliuerance which God had wrought for them: for needes must they haue bin too vnthankefull, if that had not prouoked them to serue God. Now then the intent of Moses, is that those to whom he had declared the Lawe, should not onely indeuour themselues to serue GOD during their owne liues: but also finde the meanes that their children and successors should followe them in the same trace. And this lesson belongeth to vs as well as to them. For wee know that God calleth vs with the same condition, not onely that we our selues should serue and honor him to our liues end: but also that we should haue a care to cause them that come after vs to doe the lyke. Verily there are very few that dischardge themselues in that behalfe: but yet are we bound vnto it, and there will be no excuse for vs, if wee doe not our indeuour. Therefore let euery man haue an eye to himselfe, and let vs not thinke it enough to haue serued God so long as wee our selues liue: but [that we must also find ỹ meanes] that his name may continue for euer, and that his trueth may [alwayes] bee knowen, so as although wee bee taken out of the world, yet they that come after vs being taught by our meanes, may linke in with vs into the same fayth, and so fashion themselues thereunto, as God may alwayes be glorifyed & honored vnto the worldes end. And specially they ỹ haue children ought to thinke that it is they to whom this warning is giuen. True it is that euery one of vs is bound thereto for himselfe, yea and we must teach euẽ the most straungers: so as the man needeth not to be my sonne, or my nephew, or my kinseman, whom I should indeuour to cause to serue God & to be of the same faith and religion that I am of: but yet they which haue children ought to consider that they shall yeelde account for it, if they doe not what they can to hold them in the feare of God, and to see them so instructed and stablished in the pure doctrine, as they may continue in it, and as the knowledge of Gods trueth may still be conueied ouer from hand to hand. Thus yee see what we haue to remember vppon this place where Moses sayth, If thy childe aske hereafter what these commaundementes, statutes, and ordinances meane.

Now there is also a second poynt: which is, that Moses intended to stirre vp the people to honor God and to obey him, because they had bin deliuered by his mighty hand. Therefore it is all one as if hee should say, Bethinke your selues well of the good which your GOD hath done for you: for he hath shewed himselfe to be your redeemer: hee hath smitten the realme of Egypt, a people that did set greatly by themselues, yea and which was rich and wealthie, and where was nothing but all maner of pompe and glory to the worldward: and yet notwithstanding, your God hath loued you so dearely, that he hath not spared the Egyptians for your sakes, but hee hath smitten them with plagues, and powred out such vengeance vpon them, as is horrible to thinke of: Hee hath stretched out his strong arme to bring you to this land which hee promised to your fathers. Seeing then that God hath shewed himselfe so gratious and liberall towardes you, and preuented you of purpose to be your father: is it not reason that you should giue your selues to him all your lyfe long, and indeuour to serue him, and at leastwise shew that yee haue not forgotten his so great and inestimable benefites? Yes. And so wee see that forasmuch as the Iewes might bee negligent in keeping Gods lawe: Moses renewed the remembraunce thereof, and set their deliuerance before them, that they might bee the better minded, and consider that they were bound, at leastwise to serue GOD in such wise, as they might acknowledge themselues to bee the same people whome hee had once deliuered after a maruellous fashion, and with wonderful power. Like as at this day, if a man should speake to vs of the Christian religion and say, Beholde, our GOD hath vouchsafed to make vs partakers of the redemption which hee wrought in the person of his Sonne: and therefore it is good reason that wee shoulde bee gathered here together vnder his worde, to take him for our father and Sauour, because hee hath chosen vs to bee his people.

And whereas Moses declareth that the Iewes were deliuered out of Aegypt: hee meaneth to doe vs to witte, that God intended to shoule them out from all other nations, specially by assigning them the inheritaunce of the Lande which hee had promised to their fathers. Yee see then how they should haue sanctifyed themselues to the seruice of God, and haue held thẽselues in obedience to his law, because he suffered them not to be intermingled with ỹ infidels, but made a seuerall nation of them alone by thẽselues. And hereupon we haue to note, ỹ such as seeke counsell at Gods law, doe alwayes finde instruction, & our Lord procureth them ayde & help to bring thẽ to the knowledge of the truth. It is sayd, If thy sonne aske thee, what meane these statutes? He presupposeth that the children are not so brutish, as at leastwise not to be willing & desirous to knowe why they vse such maner of seruing God. And wee see it is Gods ordinance, that the fathers should helpe their children. True it is that the fathers ought not to tary for that, but if they see their children to be despisers of God, or vnruly, and careleſse both of the saluation of their owne soules and of all Christianitie and fayth: they ought to correct such ſuch vices. But the matter which wee treate of as now, is that if children bee willing to learne and to profite, God here aſſigneth them their fathers to be their teachers and ſchoolemaſters, to ſhewe them why the lawe was giuen. Herein then wee ſee, that if wee haue any good will to knowe thie trueth, our Lorde will not ſuffer vs to bee diſappoynted, but wil finde the meanes that wee ſhall know whatſoeuer hee thinketh profitable for our ſaluation. And although hee appoynt not mortall creatures to teach vs: yet will hee worke in ſuch wiſe by his owne power, as wee ſhall not bee deſtitute of knowledge. But our owne ſlothfulneſſe is the cauſe that GOD ſhutteth the gate againſt vs, and that wee abide ſtill in darkneſſe lyke blinde wretches. For what is hee that vouchſafeth, to ſeeke after the will of his GOD? Wee bee giuen to worldly thinges to our owne pleaſures, to our owne vanities, and to all manner of worldly buſineſſes: and in the meane while God is let alone, and his lawe is forgotten. And therefore it is not to bee wondered at, that hee hardeneth vs in ſuch brutiſhnes, and that there is ſo groſſe ignorance in the world, as fewe folke haue the true taſte and ſauor of the doctrine of ſaluation, but rather wee ſee that all men deſpiſe it, and are ſo farre off from hauing any affection and zeale to the knowing of it, that they doe rather thruſt it from them when it is offered them, and when GOD ſeeketh them, they runne from him. Sith wee ſee ſuch vnthankefulneſſe euerywhere, is it any maruell that our Lorde reuealeth not his trueth as hee would doe, if men were well minded towardes it? It is true that God taryeth not till wee come vnto him, but rather performeth that Eſa.65.1. which hee ſayth by his prophet Eſay, namely that hee appeareth to them that aske not after him, and that hee is found of them that ſeeke him not, inſomuch that hee ſayth to them that are farre off from him, Lo, here I am. Yet notwithſtanding, men muſt not vnder this color that God reacheth them his hand, and draweth them out of the dungeons of ignorance before they euer thought vppon him, men (I ſay) muſt not flatter and fode themſelues in their careleſneſſe: but rather wee muſt learne according to this text, that whereas wee bee ignorant of the trueth, wee muſt at leaſtwiſe doe our indeuer to get knowledge of it, and reſorte to ſuch as wee thinke that God hath reuealed more vnto, than to our ſelues. If wee doe ſo, and with all humilitie ſeeke to knowe the thinges that are auaileable to our ſaluation: God will ſhewe himſelfe to vs, and giue vs ſuch meanes and helpes as he knoweth to be expedient for vs. And although mortall men faile vs: yet will hee ſo ſupply our want by the power of his holy ſpirite, as wee ſhall not continue ſtill in darkeneſſe, if wee ſeeke ỹ light: for he wil not ſhut ỹ dore againſt vs if we

Furthermore it behoueth vs to marke, that here God ſheweth not the end of his commandements, what is ment by them and to what vſe he hath appoynted thē. He doth not onely ſhew, that the people were iuſtly bound to keepe the lawe that was giuen them, ſeeing that God had bought them ſo dearly. Here are two things. The one is that inaſmuch as God hath giuen vs his worde, hee doth well deſerue that wee ſhould yeelde him obedience. Why ſo? Becauſe we be his creatures, and hee hath voutſafed to gather vs together vnto him, to bee his people and to fight vnder his ſtandard, and hath made vs to bee of his flocke and of his Church. Marke that for one poynt.

The other is, that wee ſhould know to what end hee hath giuen vs his Sacraments, ſo as we haue the preceptes of his whole Lawe, which pertaine to the exerciſing of vs in his feare and in the hope of our ſaluation: and to what end he hath ſet ſuch order among vs as wee now haue. Wee muſt knowe what is meant by all this. Neuertheleſſe, this briefeneſſe will bee darkeſome, if it be not declared better. When wee conſider how God hath created & ſhaped vs, and moreouer made vs after his owne image, and giuen vs witte and reaſon, and therewithall the hope of a better life, and finally hath voutſafed to take vs as his houſhold folke: it ſheweth vs that wee bee bound to ſubmit our ſelues vnto him. For ſeeing hee is our maker: doe wee not owe him all obedience? Nay there is yet more: namely Act.20.28. that in the perſon of our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt his ſonne, hee hath redeemed vs and made vs
Eph.1.9.10. partakers of his Goſpell, to the ende that wee ſhould bee guided by his hand. Now then, the firſt poynt is that when we haue knowledge, it muſt ſtirre vs vp to ſerue God, & to ſtick to the pure religion that is comprehended in his word. Howbeit this is not enough: but whē we be asked yetneerer, Wherfore ỹ promiſes of ỹ forgiuenes of ſins are giuen vs: [wee muſt anſwere,] Alas, Ro.3.23.24 it is becauſe we be wretched ſinners, & we ſhould be continually in anguiſh and ſorrowe of minde, if we knewe not that God is cōtented to be mercifull vnto vs of his owne meere grace. For heo cannot loue vs except we be righteous: and wee Pſal.32.5.7 ſhall neuer finde any holyneſſe in our lyfe, or perfection in our vertues: but it is through Gods mercie, which ỹ pleaſeth him to extend towards vs. And ſo now yee ſee whereunto the promiſes tend.

Againe, if it be demaunded of vs why hee hath appoynted the order of prayer, as wel publique as priuate: it is for that euery of vs ought to inure himſelfe to ſeeke all his ſuccor at his hand. For wee haue not any good thing, wee Rom.3.23. be deſtitute both of wiſedome, ſtrength, and righteouſneſſe, wee bee woorſe than emptie, vntill our good God doe ſuccor our needes: and the meane thereof, is to flee to him for refuge. To that end hath hee ordeined priuate prayer. And publique or common prayer is ordeined to the intent to aſſure vs the better, that hee will here the common accorde that is among vs, when wee bee come together as it were into one bodie: and therewithall wee make confeſſion of our faith & exerciſe our charitie. By this meanes then we learne, why and to what end our Lorde hath ſet order in his Churche, that is to ſay, what what he meant to betoken thereby, and to what purpose it is to be referred.

If a man aske vs what is meant by Baptisme, and wherefore it was ordeined: it is to the intent wee should know, that euen from our mothers wombe wee bring nothing but all maner of vncleanesse with vs, and that wee be ful of infection and filth before the Lord, so as wee must be faine to bee washed, or else hee will not vouchsafe to auowe vs for his. And wherewithall must wee be washed? With the bloud of our Lord Iesus Christ. That then is the way to make vs cleane. For as long as wee liue in Adam and in our owne nature, wee can doe nothing but euill. Wee bee so marred, as there is nothing in vs but vtter rebelliousnesse against GOD. Therefore wee must enter as it were into death, and into the graue, to bee renewed, and our Lord must bee faine to giue vs a new vnderstanding, and a new heart, and he must so shape vs new againe, as we may no more be the same we were before, but bee (as yee would say) cast in a newe mould, and bee made new creatures, as the scripture vseth to speake of it. Thus yesee how wee may learne what Baptisme is, what it betokeneth, and to what end it was ordeyned.

Eph.5.26. 27. 1.Iohn 1.7. Rom.6.4. Eph.4.23. 24.

As touching the Lordes supper: if it bee inquired of vs why wee come together to receiue a bit of bread: and a draught of wine: it is in way of acknowledgement that our soules haue neede of foode, no lesse than our bodies, and that as there is such frailetie in this present lyfe, as it cannot continue without the helpes of meate and drinke, so must our soules also bee mainteined after lyke sorte, by reason of the infirmitie that is in them. Neuertheleſſe our soules are not nourished with the corruptible meates of this world, but it is the sonne of God that is our foode. Wee then haue Iesus Christ, who is our lyfe, it is hee of whome wee haue sustenance and nourishment, forasmuch as hee was offered in sacrifice for vs, and the bloud that he did shed for our saluation is our drinke. Thus ye see how we nowadayes may learne whereunto ỹ ordinãces do tẽd which God hath stablished in his Church, and to what end they be to be referred.

Iohn 6.53. 54.55.56. Matt.26.26. 28. 1.Cor.11.24

In lyke case was it vnder the lawe. For God ordeyned not the ceremonies without further consideration of some reason in them. It is true that hee meant to separate his people from all the heathen and vnbeleeuers of the earth: but yet in the meane while, the washinges which they vsed were done, to shewe that they were full of naughtinesse as well as wee, and that it stood them in hand to seeke the meanes to bee made cleane. The sacrifices were a witnesse that they were worthy to bee condemned to euerlasting death, and that there was none other shift for them, but to flee to the sacrifice wherby they should bee reconciled to God. The Sanctuary betokened that no man but onely Iesus Christ might enter into Gods kingdome, nor come nye it: and that by his meanes all nations haue accesse thither, and that all such as are vnworthie in respect of their owne persons, are brought in thither by that mediator. To be shorte, all the ceremonies of the Lawe had some certeine vse, and serued to trayne the people to put their trust in the redeemer that was promised them. And that was the cause why Moses was commaunded to make all things according to the spirituall patterne which hee had seene on the mount. For Moses builded not the Tabernacle, otherwise than GOD had giuen him the patterne of it. And all was to shewe, that there was a conformable resemblance betweene the outward thinges, and the trueth which was to bee manifested in our Lord Iesus Christ. But in the text Moses speaketh but of the first, and that is the cause why I sayd, that it behoued vs to haue an eye to his meaning. For it was enough for him to say, go too my friendes, you which haue seene the redemption that GOD hath wrought, you (say I) ought to consider how much you bee bound vnto him. Therefore make account of the doctrine of the Lawe, and frame your whole lyfe therafter, that it may be as an acknowledgement of the deliuerance which you haue receiued at his hand. And when ye shall haue walked thereafter all the time of your lyfe: looke well to it that you teach your children also, so as Gods seruice may continue among you, and neuer decay nor bee abolished. That is the playne meaning of Moses.

Heb.7.19. Heb.8.5. Deut.4.8. Heb.9.10. & 10.3.& 11. 12. Heb.9.7.& 10.18.

Furthermore let vs vnderstand that wee must consider, that the Lawe was not inuented at the pleasure of men, neither was it founded by them: but God was the giuer thereof, who holdeth vs vnder his gouernement, and it is his trueth which we followe, so as wee holde not any whit of thinges inuented by men. That is the thing whereon wee must rest, that we may not bee alwayes wauering and doubtfull. And hereby wee knowe how wretched the state of the papistes is: for they bee stubborne and wilfull in their own imaginations. If a man aske thẽ of whõ they hold their superstitiõs: they alledge their fathers, they alledge long antiquitie, they alledge ỹ common fashion of ỹ whole world: but in ỹ meane while they haue no certeintie ỹ their doinges please God, or ỹ he alloweth thẽ, whereas in very deed the thing ỹ God leadeth vs vnto is ỹ we should be sure that we haue not ne holde not any thing ỹ is brought vs at aladuenture: but ỹ the doctrine of our faith is ỹ pure truth. Seeing then that God commaundeth vs so to doe: let vs assure our selues ỹ to liue as becommeth vs, wee must haue this certeintie ỹ wee be gouerned by Gods word, & that ỹ same is ỹ rule of our fayth, & that ỹ religion which wee sticke vnto is ỹ true religiõ. Now therefore we may profite our selues by this text, sith we se ỹ ỹ meaning of Moses was, ỹ the people should know, ỹ the Law was not deuised by men, but that God was the author of it. And euen at this day the Lawe must beare this sway with vs, ỹ wee must know to what purpose it was giuẽ. Besides this, although there be nothing set down here cõcerning ỹ end whereunto Gods ordinances doe tend: yet must we looke thereat. For all things are not spoken in one place: wee must take things in such order as God hath set them downe. In other places hee will teach vs what marke it behoued the people to shoote at in keeping the lawe: but here the case concerneth the continuall seruing of God with reuerence, so as the people may knowe themselues to bee wholly at his deuotion, and that therwithall he restrueth to himselfe the authoritie of gouerning his people and of holding them in subiection. Those are the thinges which we haue to beare in minde.

Now let vs come to that which hee addeth in the conclusion: that is to wit, That God hauing deliuered his people, and brought them into the land that hee had giuen them, appointed them all his commaundements. Hereby wee see, that when God sheweth vs this grace, to gather vs into his Church, hee calleth vs not to bee idle, but at the least to the ende wee shoulde glorify him, as the thing whereof the whole Scripture speaketh. And these sayings, Behold, I haue purchased a people that shall sing my praise, Behold, I haue planted a vine and I wilbe glorified therby, and such other, are so often beaten into the peoples heads by the Prophets, as it ought to be a doctrine wellinough knowne among them. Nowe therefore Gods speaking after that maner, is to shewe that his intent in chosing that people, was to be honoured at their hands. And this belongeth much more to vs, forasmuch as God hath vttered a farre greater power in deliuering vs from the dungeons of hell in the person of his sonne. Let vs vnderstand then, that wee bee baptised with this condition, to giue our selues wholy to our God: lyke as when Saint Paule treateth thereof, chiefely in the first to the Ephesians: he sayth that God hauing chosen vs before the creation of the world to bee his children, hath also made vs partakers of the saluation that was purchased for vs by our Lord Iesus Christ, to the end that wee shoulde glorifie him which hath shewed himselfe so bountifull towardes vs, and vsed such mercie. As often then as we remember Gods benefites, and specially his vouchsafing to call vs to the knowledge of his trueth: Let vs adde this, namely that it is to the end that our life should bee wholy dedicated to his honor and seruice, or else we doe what wee can to ouerthrowe Gods adoption, and wee labor to disanull it vtterly: lyke as on the contrary part it is sayd that our calling is warranted by our walking in holynesse of lyfe: for after that manner doth Saint Peter speake of it.

2.Pet.1.10.

Finally Moses addeth, It shall bee imputed to thee for righteousnesse afore God, if thou keepe his commaundementes as hee hath appoynted thee. In these wordes hee doth men to wit, that if they bee desirous to bee allowed of God, and that he should accept their seruice: they must not bring any of their owne inuentions, but bee contented to doe simply whatsoeuer Gods worde aforedeth, and whatsoeuer is conteined there. That is the meaning of Moses. And whereas he sayth that the keeping of the commandements which God hath ordeyned, shall beee imputed to men for righteousnesse before God: it is all one as if hee should say, my friendes, tell your children that if they swarue from Gods word conteined in his Lawe, and turne away after their owne fancies, to doe what seemeth good to themselues: God will reiect it euery whit, and it shalbe but as dung before him. For why? Hee alloweth obedience aboue all thinges. He intendeth not to giue mee leaue to deuise and inuent newe Lawes: but hee will haue them to be contented with that pure rule [of his Law], in such sorte as hee hath giuen it. Therefore looke not that God should accept you, or allowe any of all your doinges for righteousnesse, vnlesse it be conformable to his doctrine. For although men would faine haue things to passe in account which they themselues like of: yet wil God crosse them out euery one. For why? Their traueling is in vaine, vnlesse they can say, Lord we haue folowed the way wherin thou diddest set vs. For so sayeth he by his Prophet Esay. Who hath required these thinges at your hand, saith he? When the Hypocrites make their brags, and thinke themselues wel discharged in being willing to serue God after their owne fancie: there needeth no more but this answer to disproue all their doings, who required these thinges at your hands? As if he shoulde say, let him that did set you a worke, pay you: for as for me I will none of you, I disclaime ye, ye haue nothing to doe with me, seeing ye haue not serued me obediently, which is the principal seruice I require And that is the cause also why S. Paul speaking of mens inuentions, addeth no more but this, that they be mennes doctrines. True it is, that they shall haue some faire colour, and some likelihoode of religion, yea and there will seeme to bee in them a perfection of all holynesse: but what for that? Seeing they proceed from men, they be no better than flat mockery.

Col.2.18.

And it is purposely said, Thy righteousnesse before God. Why so? To the intent that menne should no more beguile themselues in their owne opinion, as they be wont to do by hardning their harts when other men sooth them, or by standing in their owne conceites. For then they beare themselues on hand, that God hath no more authoritie to condemne them, but that the fond opinion which they haue conceiued, shalbe as a blocke to cast in his way. To the intent therefore that men should not yeelde to their owne imaginations and to the thinges which they surmise to bee good: Moses sayth here, my friendes, what shall yee winne, by deeming it to bee righteousnesse to doe as the heathen doe, and to intangle your selues in their superstitions? For though the world lyke well of you for so doing: yet must ye come [to an after-reckoning] before the heauenly Iudge: for men bee not competent iudges to giue sentence of that matter. And therefore (to bee short) yee had neede to looke about you how God will accept your doinges. And hee telleth you that he wil not be subiect to mens willes, nor be so plyable as to say: shal this be accounted good? Then must I agree to it. No no, hee will continue alwayes lyke himselfe. Therefore holde yee to that which hee commaundeth: for his worde

muſt bee your whole wiſedome, while the world ſoadeth it ſelfe with it owne inuentions. Thus yee ſee what is meant by theſe wordes where Moſes ſayth, it ſhall be counted to you for righteouſneſſe before God, if yee keepe the commaundementes which hee hath appoynted.

But yet by the way here might bee made a queſtion. For it ſhould ſeeme that God ſendeth men to their owne deſeruinges to bee iuſtified by them. And on the otherſide S. Paul auoucheth that wee bee iuſtified by faith: that is to ſay, that wee bee accepted for righteous before GOD, through his onely free goodneſſe, foraſmuch as hee accepteth vs in our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt. For it is written that Abraham beleeued God, and it was reckoned to him for righteouſneſſe. But here Moſes ſayth, that the keeping of the Lawe is imputed for righteouſneſſe. It ſeemeth then that men are able to purchaſe ſaluation by their owne workes, and ſo by that meanes are not indaungered vnto God. But wee haue two thinges to note here. The firſt is that whereas it is ſayd that the keeping of the Lawe is righteouſneſſe before GOD, it is not meant thereby that men can become righteous by their owne workes: for then muſt they fulfill the lawe throughout in all poyntes. But now was there euer any creature found that diſcharged himſelf toward? No. Yee ſee then that wee be all damned, and ſo bee quite bereſt of the righteouſneſſe that was giuen by the Lawe. Wherefore let vs learne that the Lawe could well iuſtify vs before God, if wee could keepe it from poynt to poynt without any fayling. For it is written, hee that doth theſe thinges ſhall liue in them. If a man (ſay I) coulde ſo order his lyfe, as hee might make his boaſt that hee had fully performed all that GOD hath commaunded him: hee ſhoulde be righteous. And why? For God which cannot lye hath made vs a promiſe, that hee will accept our workes for righteouſneſſe, ſo wee fayle not in the performance of any poynt of his Law. But now is there not any man that diſchargeth himſelfe ſo much as of any one poynt. Therefore are we all tranſgreſſors of the Lawe, and conſequently wee bee all accurſed. And wee muſt not imagine that it deſerueth to bee allowed, when wee haue done but ſome peece of that which GOD commaundeth. No: for hee that miſſeth in any one poynt, is guiltie before God, and there remaineth nothing for him but death and curſedneſſe. For it is written, that whoſoeuer performeth not all the thinges that are conteined in this booke, ſhall be accurſed. Now then let vs learne, that whereas the keeping of the Lawe might bee imputed to vs for righteouſneſſe, if it could bee found in vs: wee bee vtterly depriued and bereft thereof. And why? For there is not that man which tranſgreſſeth not the Lawe in ſome poynt or other: nay, not onely in ſome one poynt, but in all poyntes throughout, when wee haue caſte vp our account. For wee neuer ſerue GOD with all our heart, with all our ſoule, and with all our ſtrength as hath bin ſayd heeretofore. And euen when wee doe any good woorkes to outward appearance, there is alwayes ſome coldeneſſe, ſome ſlothfulneſſe, or ſome one thing or other mingled with them, to hinder vs. And therefore the worke is ſtill faultie. Thus wee ceaſe not to breake Gods Lawe in all poyntes, ſo as wee muſt needes yeelde our ſelues guiltie, cõfeſſing that if God liſted to iudge vs rigorouſly, hee ſhoulde needes reiect vs. Now wee ſee that although the Lawe conteine the true rule of righteouſneſſe: yet can it not make vs righteous, becauſe of the weakeneſſe of our fleſhe, as ſayth Saint Paul in the ſeuenth to the Romans. It remaineth now to knowe, in what ſenſe that is ſpoken: For it ſeemeth to be to no purpoſe, that God ſhould promiſe to accept thẽ for righteous which keepe his lawe: and yet notwithſtanding that all of vs ſhoulde bee bereft thereof.

Howbeit wee muſt marke, that there is a refuge giuen vs which is to reſort to the forgiueneſſe of our ſinnes, which is graunted vs in our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt. Therefore when we haue acknowledged our ſelues to bee vtterly forlorne and damned in our owne nature, and thereupon repayre to our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, ſewing to bee partakers of his righteouſneſſe, and to bee iuſtifyed by vertue of the obedience which hee yeelded to God his father: then GOD not onely receiueth vs to mercy, and coureth vs with the perfection that is in our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt, as with a cloake, to the intent wee ſhoulde obtaine ſaluation: but alſo taketh our workes in good woorth. And although wee performe not the Lawe, but come loytering aloofe after it, ſo as there is great ſtore of vices in vs, wherewith our workes are blemiſhed: yet notwithſtanding GOD accepteth them, and promiſeth that we ſhall not looſe our labor, inſomuch that our workes ſhall be taken for righteous before him. Albeit that they bee worthie to bee taken for ſtarke filth, becauſe there is alwayes ſomewhat in them that God may condemne: yet this keeping of the Law which we performe (vnperfect as it is) ſhall not faile to bee taken for righteouſneſſe. The reaſon is, becauſe Ieſus Chriſt ſupplyeth our default. Then doth not our righteouſneſſe conſiſt in the worthyneſſe of our owne workes: but inaſmuch as they bee ſanctifyed in the name of Gods ſon, & foraſmuch as we be his mẽbers: [both they &] we be admitted for righteous, becauſe of the obediẽce which hee yeelded vnto God. And that obedience is communicated vnto vs, as if it were our owne. Thus yee ſee how the promiſes that are made vnto vs, doe aſſure vs that God will accept the thinges for righteouſneſſe, which we doe in indeuouring to ſerue him. For ſuch promiſes are not vaine nor fruteleſſe, ſo our Lord Ieſus Chriſt bee our mediator, and performe that which wanteth on our behalfe. For without that, all the lawe will ſerue vs to none other purpoſe but to condemne vs, as hath bin ſhewed afore.

Moreouer let vs marke for the ſecond point, that although the people had kept the Lawe of GOD: yet euen the very performance thereof was a record vnto them, that it ſtoode them in hand to bee iuſtifyed by mercie and grace, and not by their owne merites. For their ſacrificing was a kind of proteſting that they were worthie of death. There was neuer any beaſt ſlayne vnder the lawe, but the ſame was an autenticall record that men deſerued to bee damned at Gods hand. And thereby it behoued the faithfull to bee put in minde to reſort vnto God, and that with ſuch humilitie, as they ſought their lyfe elſewhere than in themſelues. In lyke caſe was it with their waſhings, and with all the reſt of their ceremonies. The hauing of light in the Temple, was to ſhew that men are ſtarke blind in themſelues: and their hauing of the holy Lampes, and the oyle that God had ordeined for the ſame, and their anointinges, and ſuch other thinges ought to haue made the people to conſider thus with themſelues: there is neyther vnderſtanding, grace, vertue, nor any thing elſe in our wit, but wee muſt bee faine to borrowe all thinges of the redeemer that was promiſed to our fathers, and of Gods ſpirit who is the fountaine and fulneſſe of all good thinges. So then the keeping of the lawe ſent the people backe to the grace of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, and ſerued for nothing leſſe than to hold them ſtill to thoſe ſhadowes to put their truſt in them. Lykewiſe at this day, ſith wee vnderſtand well which is the right keeping of Gods lawe, wee ſee well enough that it is not for vs to preſume vppon our owne deſeruinges, as theſe mad papiſtes doe, who vphold that they become righteous by keeping of the Lawe. They bee ſo caryed away with that opinion, that they think not any more of Gods grace; neither doe they perceiue that the Lawe was giuen to holde men conuicted, & to driue them to come before their Iudge, as wretched offenders to ſewe for grace. They thinke not of that. Againe, they haue the terme Merit or Deſert, which they vſe like a drunken man that can diſcerne nothing becauſe he is ouerſotted and hath his eyes bleared: euen ſo play theſe wretched vnbeleeuers. But we for our part knowe that we haue to thanke our God for his infinite goodneſſe, in making vs to vnderſtand that the true keeping of the lawe, is for men to condemne themſelues by it, and to take knowledge that they haue nothing in them but vtter frowardneſſe, and that they muſt be faine to reſorte vnto God, and to betake themſelues wholy to his mercy. And foraſmuch as there is none other meane but Ieſus Chriſt: they muſt get them thither, and know that God will bee neither father nor Sauiour vnto them, but by accepting them in the perſon of him in whome hee auoweth all his delight to bee. Thus the thinges which wee haue to remember vpon this text, are, firſt that if we will haue God to allow of our lyfe, wee muſt not doe what wee thinke good of our ſelues, but ſimply follow that which is commaunded vs in his Lawe. Howbeit foraſmuch as it is promiſed vs, that wee ſhall bee taken for righteous before him, if wee keepe his Lawe: and yet notwithſtanding, all of vs are tranſgreſſors of ỹ law, ſo as our whole lyfe condēneth vs, & there is none of vs but hee may iudge by ỹ heartbitings of his owne conſcience, that wee bee full of ſinnes and offences: we muſt flee to ỹ forementioned refuge which is, to beſeech God to iuſtifye vs of his owne free mercie. And beſides this, when wee bee once graffed into the body of our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt, let vs not doube but hee will make vs partakers of the fruite of his death and paſſion, ſo that although our workes be ſinfull, yet God will admit them: for righteous. But yet, that proceedeth of his free goodneſſe, and not of any deſert of ours. Finally foraſmuch as wee knowe that the beſt workes which wee can doe, are worthie to bee condemned: let vs looke well to it that wee preſume not of our ſelues, nor of our owne vertues: but let vs go and ſubmit our ſelues with all humilitie to our God, praying him to worke ſo in vs by his holy ſpirit, as hee make the death and paſſion of his ſonne auaileable, whereby the euerlaſting ſaluation is purchaſed for vs.

On Thurſday the firſt of Auguſt. 1555.

The Lj Sermon which is the firſt vppon the ſeuenth Chapter.

WHen the Lord thy God ſhal haue brought thee into the Land whither thou goeſt to poſſeſſe it, and ſhall haue caſt out manie Nations before thee, namelie the Hethites, the Gergeſites, the Amorrhytes, the Chananites, the Pherezites, the Heuites, and the Iebuſites, ſeuen Nations moe in number and ſtronger than thy ſelfe:

2 And when the Lord thy God ſhal haue deliuered them before thee: thou ſhalt ſmite them, and roote them out, and thou ſhalt make no couenant with them nor ſhewe them any fauour.

dawghter to their sonnes, nor take their dawghter for thy sonne.

4 For shee would make thy sonne to go away from mee, to serue other Gods: and the Lordes wrath would kindle against you, and destroy thee suddenly.

IT shoulde seeme at ỹ first sight, that ỹ cõmãdement which is giuen here to ỹ Iewes was very strãge. For they be charged to dispatch all their enemies, and to put them to death euerychone, yea euen the young children and all, without sparing any of them: and it is God that speaketh it. But wee know that when he intendeth to exhort vs to mildnesse and mercy, hee alledgeth his own example. Ye shal resẽble your heauenly father (sayth our Lord Iesus Christ,) who causeth his daysunne to rise both vppon good and bad: and therefore doe good to such as are not worthie of it. Seeing that GOD hath not a better reason to perswade vs to shewe mercy, than by shewing vs what he himselfe doth: it seemeth not in any wise conuenient, that he should prouoke vs vnto crueltie. For when hee sayth, ye shall kill all, yee shall leaue nothing, euen the young babes shall passe vnder the edge of the sworde: what is to be sayd to it, but that GOD had no pitie nor kindeheartednesse in that behalfe? But although it seeme so to vs: yet let vs learne to glorify him, knowing that the greatest rigor which is in him, is rightful & faultlesse, yea eue although the reason thereof be not manifest vnto vs. And hereby let vs learne to beware, ỹ we be not so bold as to iudge of God or of his doings after our own wit & imagination. For as soon as a thing seemeth good vnto vs, wee take it to bee so in deede: and on the contrary part, if wee fall to iudging of Gods ordinances at aduenture, & deeme them to bee euill because wee perceiue not the reason of them: where is our obedience? Wherefore let vs learne to humble our selues in such wise, that if the thinges which God sayth doe not fitly agree with our vnderstanding: yet neuertheless wee receiue them with all submission and reuerẽce, acknowledging that as there is nothing but all wisedome and righteousnesse in him, so it becommeth vs to yeeld to his good pleasure, and to confesse that whatsoeuer he ordeyneth is the souereine righteousnesse.

Matt. 5.45.

Againe, to the end that the thing which is set downe here may not seeme straunge: wee must marke what maner of people they were of whom mention is made here. It is sayd, Thou shalt destroy the people whom I will deliuer into thy hand. Now if it be demaunded whereof it came that God would haue none of them reserued: Let vs haue an eye to that which had bin spoken foure hundred yeeres afore: namely, The wickednesse of the Amorrhites is not yet come to his full ripenesse. In the time of Abraham these people were so malicious and spitefull in vexing that holy patriarke, as they refused euen to let him haue water. Not that hee went about to borrowe any out of their pondes and fountaines: but that they wold not suffer him to inioy the welles that hee himselfe had digged in the desert places. He did no wrong to any man; and yet they were so cruell, that they would not suffer him to drinke of the water which hee had gotten by his owne skill and trauell. He was hunted from place to place, and yet hee had not done any man wrõg. Againe all the countrie was ful of the contempt of God, all was full of wickednesse, robberie, whoredome, and all maner of vncleanesse. To bee short, God seemed to bee asleepe in that hee punished not those nations which were so giuen ouer to all vngodlynesse and outrage. And if they that grudge at this text had liued in those dayes: they would haue sayd, how now? God promiseth to doe iustice, and to take vengeance vppon all the despisers of his maiestie: but there appeareth no such thing. If hee rule the worlde, and that his prouidence bee aboue all: how is it that hee suffereth so long the wickednesse that is in this people? After that maner doe the wicked alwayes take occasion to repine at GOD, and to complaine of him, and to finde fault with his doinges. For if hee bee patient, they say hee is careleſse to punish mens offences and sinnes. And if hee vse rigor: they say he exceedeth measure, and that there is no reason in his doinges, and that the same hastinesse of his, bewrayeth well that there is no mercy nor pitie in him. Lo how the wicked folke doe blaspheme God euery way. But let vs on our side goe to worke with another maner of modestie.

Gen. 15. 16.

Gẽ. 21. 25. 30

And first of all wee must marke well this sentence, as I sayd afore. Beholde, God telleth vs that although the Amorrhytes and their neighboures were giuen to all euill, and were past amendement, so as there was no more hope to bring them to anie good: yet notwithstanding hee bare with them and made as though hee sawe them not. Hee sawe that they despised him, and were giuen to all idolatrie, and therewithall made no conscience to steale and rob and to commit all maner of wickednesse: and yet for all that, hee sayd hee would not destroy them, [but beare with them yet further.] How long? not for halfe a score yeeres, or for twentie yeres, or for a whole hundred: but euen vntil foure hundred yeres were past & run out. Was not ỹ a taryance long enough? Now in the end of the terme, when GOD had shewed that not onely hee himselfe knew, but also it appeared openly by experience to the whole world, that those nations were vtterly past hope of recouery, and grew woorse and woorse vnder pretence that God handled them not according to their deserts: was it not meete that at length horrible vengeance should light vpon them? They had of all that long time heaped vp the treasure of Gods wrath vppon their heades by abusing his patience: and therefore ought the rigor that he vsed against them, to seeme too excessiue? Can wee say that hee was moued with ouersuddeine choler? Nay. Then let vs learne to restraine our selues in this case, and to keep our mouths shut, that wee vtter not a worde against GOD, but so bridle our mindes as we imagine not any thing of him but al Iustice and vprightnes, confessing that whatsoeuer hee appoynteth to bee done, cannot bee but rightful, and that it becommeth vs to bee contented with his only will.

And let vs marke by the way, that when men take vppon them to repine against God, it is alwayes to their owne confusion. It is true ỹ at the first sight their cause may seeme very fauorable: for wee can so good skill to harpe vppon Gods mercie, that the rigor of his Iustice is alwayes odious to vs. But yet for all that, when men haue pleaded their discourse to the full: is not God able to aunswere them in a word, as I haue declared already? What is ỹ? I wil haue these people vtterly rooted out: for they haue skorned mee. I had giuen thẽ a good & fruitefull land to dwell in, & they haue deuowred my benefites without any acknowledging from whence they came. They haue spited me to the vttermost. I sent thẽ some chastisementes to correct them, but haue they amended for al that? I haue set lookingglasses of my wrath before them: but they stopped their eyes, they hardened their heartes more & more, & yet for all that, I haue bin contented to delay the punishment of thẽ to the ende of foure hundred yeeres. Behold, foure ages are come & gone: and ought they not to haue amended in so long time? Yes: but they be still at one stay. But yet must not this land bee alwayes infected with such filthinesse. I haue dedicated it to mine own seruice, I wil haue my name called vppon there, and I intẽd to plant my people there, that there may be a pure & holy religion: & should I leaue such rifferaffe among them? If there were none other reason but that: ought not Gods seruice to be more deare than the liues of all the men in ỹ world? If we spare mans bloud, & say it is no smal thing that a whole nation shoulde bee so rooted out: I graunt that. But shall wee make so little account of Gods honor, and of the religion whereby wee liue euerlastingly? shall we (say I) haue it in so small estimation, as to preferre mens lyues before it? What a dealing were that? Do we not bewray that there is no loue of God in vs? Vnder color of gentlenesse and mercie, we would pluck God out of his seate, and that men should play mockeholyday with him, so as there should bee no more reuerence nor humilitie yeelded to his seruice: & what a confusion were that? Therefore the way for vs to put this text in vre, is that when wee see that God is patient, and falleth not vpon the wicked at the first dash, nor powreth out his rigor vppon them to confound them: wee must not thinke that hee hath forgotten his duetie, and sitteth still in heauen: but wee must rather consider that hee accomplisheth the saying which I alledged out of Genesis, namely that the wickednesse of the parties is not yet come to full ripenesse. Truely in our iudgement it were time that hee shoulde worke, as soone as the wicked doe passe their boundes. For wee see how impatient wee be, and howe wee breake out into heates when thinges goe amisse: in our owne opinion wee would thinke it good that GOD should thunder vppon them out of hand, and to our seeming he is ouerslow. Nay rather let vs looke vppon God, who taryeth patiently as hee hath done at all times, and is loth to execute his rigor, vntill hee haue shewed that the wicked are vtterly past amendment. True it is that sometime hee maketh no such tariance, for it is not for him to deale alwayes after one sort, neither is it for vs to bind him to any certeine Lawe, hee hath libertie to hasten his iudgements when it pleaseth him. But yet for all that, hee doth commonly delay them and put them off, and for the same cause is hee sayd to bee longsuffering.

Num. 14. 18; & Psal. 103. 8.

And wee must not thinke that GOD will not call them to account whome hee beareth withall: but after as hee winketh at them, so will hee dubble his vengeance vppon them, if they bee not touched with heartie repentance, when hee hath giuen them respit. But on the contrary part, when hee hath waited for the wicked a long time, if hee shewe greater rigor than wee thought hee would haue done, and punishe them with more extremitie because they haue so dalyed with him, and despised his goodnesse, yea and euen turned it into an occasion of greater awelesnesse: I say if he be more wrathfull and sharpe than we thought he would haue bin: Let vs not thinke him to be too excessiue, but let vs assure our selues hee hath iust reason so to doe, although hee make not vs priuie to it. Therefore when wee shall haue marked the examples that are in the holy scripture: wee will make this conclusion: That it is not to be wondered at though GOD vse the greater rigor towardes those whome hee hath spared so long time together. For his goodnesse is too precious a iewell, to bee made a iesting-stocke so of the wicked.

Furthermore let vs marke generally, that God will not be subiect to our surmisings, but he will haue vs to receiue his sayinges and doinges without scanning of them, and to take al thinges for good and rightfull which come of him, yea euen though our reason gainesay it. For we bee too fickle headded to iudge, and therewithall we be so fooliſh and rash, that to our owne seeming it is lawfull for vs to alledge our opinion, not onely to iudge of mens doinges, but also to giue sentence vpon the determinations of our God, & vpon such execution of thẽ as he doth ordinarily. But contrariwise it is shewed vs, both in this place & in all others: ỹ it is not for vs to aduance our selues so high, as to say whatsoeuer cõmeth at our tongues end: but we must receiue whatsoeuer cõmeth from God, wout any replying. Doth God them seeme cruell? Yet neuertheless let vs

confesse that he is righteous, and that he doeth not any thing but in perfect righteousnesse and equitie. Besides this, let vs learne also to obey him in all pointes, by doing the thinges that he commaundeth vs, euen though they goe against our stomackes. Sometimes men may (to their seeming) haue honest excuse, not to do the thing that is commaunded them. But what for that? It will not discharge them before God: for GOD will bee wise for vs, and good reason it is that he should bee so. For what a thing were it if men might alledge, Yea Lord, but what will become of such a thing? Such an inconuenience myght followe of it. If wee fall to scanning after that fashion: is it not as much as if wee should say that God was misaduised, and foresawe not all, & that wee haue a deeper and better settled foreeast than his is? And were not that tootoo diueliſh a blasphemie? Yes. And therefore let vs marke, that to rule our life aright, we must not enter into so many contersayings and disputations: but wee must vnderstand that our wisedome is to obey God simply. When Saul spared the king who he had ouercome, and the Cattel that was fallen into his handes: it seemed to him that he had colour good ynough to doe it. For his intent was to haue led the king in triumph, and that had bin as a spectacle to shewe Gods goodnesse towards his people. In deede so was it to Saules weening. And as for the Cattell, he reserued them to haue made sacrifice withall: and that was a goodly thing to make men vnderstande, that God had giuen so noble and wonderfull a victorie to his people. All this went well then. Yea, if a man might haue beleeued Saul in his owne imagination. But yet in the meane while he is reproued at Gods hand, and both he and his mercie bee condemned togither, and the king is faine to be slaine by another before his face. For he himself was not worthie to be Gods minister, he was bereft of that office, and Samuell was put in his roome. And afterward it was tolde him, that the kingdome which he possessed should not descēd to his children and posteritie, but should be conueyed vnto a straunger. Wee would thinke this geere very straunge, but that it is shewed vs that Saul was ouer arrogant in taking vppon him to bee wiser than he had leaue to bee: and in that as soone as a foolish toy tooke him in the head, he followed that rather than the commaundement of God. And was not that a taking vppon him to bee wiser than God? And was not that a curſed pride? Yes: and therefore the condemnation which Samuel pronounced vppon him was iust. For it is meete that God should be glorified, and that wee should confesse that there is nothing to bee amended in him, but that all mouthes ought to bee opened, and to say: Lord, wisedome, iustice, equitie, and vertue, are not to be sought for elsewhere than in thee. And therfore let vs practise this doctrin in such wise, as we be not more mercifull than God will haue vs to bee, or than the rule which he hath giuen vs will beare. For there are that would faine vse mercy in mingling white and blacke together, and in making a hotchpotch of all things, vnder pretence that wicked persons should goe quite and skotfree. And what remaineth more, but that the righteous and good men should be condemned, if the wicked shoulde bee so maintained? And that is the cause why Salomon sayth, that he which quitteth the offender when hee sees him giltie, is as much to blame before God, as he that oppresseth the innocent. For our Lord hath ordeined, not onely that good cases should bee maintained: but also that euill dealinges should be corrected when they be found. And for the same purpose hath he put his sword into the handes of princes, Magistrates, and all other officers of Iustice, to the intent that leaudnesse should not bee mayntained in the worlde. Then is there no replying against this. And yet notwithstanding yee shall haue some that will complayne of men as bludsuckers, and as soone as any mention is made of the execution of Iustice, it is no better [with them] but crueltie. Let such folke get them to God, and goe pleade against him, to see if they can get the vpper hand. And it is not only the gallowesclappers that say so, I meane those whose faultes and crymes are manifest: but these Tauernhaunters or Alehouſknightes which counterfeit the preachers. O they haue great skill to alledge gentleneſse and mercie: and it seemeth to them that I doe no more spare bloud than they do the wyne, which they gussel and quaffe vp without measure or reason. But such blasphemies or raylinges doe touche God, and not men. For I heare what is spoken. Let those mastife dogs barke and gnarre as much as they list: yet is this doctrine which proceded out of Gods mouth, sufficient to make them ashamed.

Prou. 17. 15.

1. Sam. 15. 21 22.

And herewithall let vs marke, that the mercy which God commandeth, is to haue pitie of such as are going to destruction. Let that serue for one point. So as if it lay in vs, wee should bee mindefull how to drawe them out of the ditch. And when wee see them vtterly wilfull, so as there is no hope nor meane to bring them backe againe: wee must be sory for them, for as much as we see they bee wretched damned creatures. Marke that for another poynt. Againe, let vs beare with such as fall to repentaunce. But when wee see folkes hardharted and desperate, so as they haue conspired to fight against God to the vttermoste: what mercie were it to mayntayne that? Lo heere another blasphemie, which is when men wil needes be more pitifull than God. He is the wellspring of all goodnesse, and hee sayth that we be euil, and that although we haue the greateſt shew of goodnesse that is possible to bee had: yet is it but a spark of the great and infinite perfection that is in him. But nowe, behold, there are newe Diuines which wil needes haue men to be mercifull. And how? Although a man be wicked, and the world seeth that he is full of venim against God, and ceaseth not to do euil, but the more he is borne withall the more he is still inflamed with malice: Yet [say they] why should hee not bee borne withall still? Let them aske that of God, and hee will tell them that there is no place for his mercie, but where

Ezec 18.21. Act.11.18. 2.Tim.2.25 there is repentance. True it is, that it is in him to giue repentance. But howsoeuer the worlde goe, when his will is to vtter his goodnesse towardes any man, he toucheth his heart that he may returne vnto him. Now then, shall we looke vpon such as are fully bent to blaspheme God to the vttermost, and yet in the meane while talke to them of mercie still? Ought we not rather to spit in the faces of such villaines, which mocke God and his word to the full? Yes: and therfore let vs beare simply in minde, that wee must followe the things which God commaundeth, and that it is not for vs to alledge any thing at all in that behalfe.

Deut.32.35. Rom.12.19. Heb.10.30. And on the otherside let vs marke also, that God meant not to resigne his vengeaunce vnto men, & to giue them leaue to hurt their enemies when they shall haue offended them. Then if we do the worst we can to mē when they haue grieued vs or done vs any wrong, vnder colour that God hath told vs that he would haue the vngodly rooted out: it is a taking of a false couert from the word of God. Therefore let vs note that wee must not be led with any affection, neither must we passe whether any wrong or hinderance haue bin wrought vs or no: for as long as mens minds run vppon their priuate griefes, they shall neuer serue God: but we must haue this consideration with vs, of doing that which God commaundeth vs, without being mooued by any fleshly moode. Marke that for a speciall point.

Deut.12.8. 32. Againe, let vs not deale further than God biddeth vs, but let vs bee faithfull executers of his words, & not stir one finger further than he saith, do thus or thus. To be short, he ỹ giueth his enemy but a fillup, is giltie of murder before god. But he that putteth a wicked mā to death, not being led thereto by any wicked affection, but bicause his office requireth it: is iust and allowed of God, and his executing of such punishment is a sacrifice vnto him. According as wee see that Moses speaketh therof, specially when the idolatrie that the people had committed was to bee punished, in which case he saieth, Sanctifie your hands vnto ỹ Lord. And how? What maner of holines was it wherof Moses spake there? It was ỹ they should kill all the idolaters that had defiled themselues, & put the corrupters of ỹ true religion to death. And whom commanded he to doe it? Euen ỹ Leuites, euen those which ought to haue bin ỹ mirrors of al pitie & louingkindnes. Euen the Priests whō God had dedicated ro himselfe were neuertheless appointed to be the executers of ỹ rigor. And vppon whom? Euen vppon their owne kinsfolke, and they might not beare with them. Seeing then that we see this: let vs learne that such as do Iustice, (condicionally that they intermingle not their owne affections and reuenges, but indeuour to serue God & to execute the charge that is committed vnto them,) do sanctifie their hands in so doing, and the rigour which they vse is cōmendable. That is to say, if they haue compassion vpon ỹ poore creatures that perish: then ỹ rigour of theirs being so qualified, is an acceptable sacrifice vnto God. And on the contrarie part, if we doe but stirre one finger vpon displeasure for any wrong that is done vnto vs, yea or be but prouoked to grunt at them ỹ shall haue misvsed vs: by and by it is murther before God. And so let vs learne, not to seeke fond excuses to reuenge our selues, vnder pretēce ỹ God hath told vs that the wicked must be destroyed and rooted out: but let vs haue a good and well stayed zeale, so as we ouershoot not our selues to say that mē may step forth to do this or ỹ on their own heads, but ỹ they must tarie til God haue giuē sentence, and then execute the same, as we see is said of it in this text. Thus we see in effect what we haue to remember, cōcerning the rooting out of those whō God knowing to be past amendment, would not suffer to welter any lōger in their own dung, bicause he had borne with them ynough and too much alreadie.

Exod.32.29 And it is said expresly, God hath delinered them into thy hand to put them to death. This is a watchword which he giueth to his people, to the intent they should the willinglier obey this commandement. As if he should say, he that will giue you the victorie, willeth you to deale so. And is it not reason [then that ye should do it?] Yes, for howe should wee vse Gods giftes, but according to his will? So then, Moses confirmeth the doctrine that he setteth forth to the people: as if he should say, Looke about thee, thou must not dispose after thine owne pleasure, of them whō thou shalt ouercome. For if thou spare them vnder colour ỹ thou hast subdued them, and that they be in thy hand, & that ỹ hast conquered thē: it wil cost thee right deare. For commeth the victorie of thy self? No: but it is thy God which hath deliuered them into thy hand. And for proose therof, these natiōs are stronger and mightier than thou, yea and mo in nomber. How then could you discomfit them, if your God ouermaistred them not, & were not your Captain, & fought not for you? If the victorie were not giuen you from heauen: how could you obtaine it? Nowe then, come not heere to make your vauntes, and to say, wee may now dispose of the victorie as wee list our selues. For it commeth of God, and therefore he must beare all the sway, and you must vse such humilitie, as he may bee obeyed, and honoured for the thing which you knowe to come of him. Thus we see now the intent of Moses.

And hereby we be warned, that in all thinges which GOD putteth into our handes, wee must beware that wee take not too great libertie, to vse his benefites at our owne pleasure. For it is good reason that hee shoulde alwayes haue so much credite with vs, as to shewe vs the lawfull vse of his benefites. As howe? Let vs take ỹ commoneste example of eating and drinking. When God hath giuen a man abundance of worldly goods, hee must not forget him to whom he is beholdē for them. For if he say, this is mine, I will doe with it as I list: it is a defrauding of God of the right that hee reserueth to himselfe. It is true that wee may well terme the thinges ours which he hath giuen vs: howbeit, that is with condition that they must alwaies remaine at his deuotion, and wee vse them soberly and modestly as I haue saide afore, so as hee may

Nowe were this well obſerued, wee woulde not vnhallowe Gods benefites after ſuch ſort as wee ſee moſt men doe. For there is no queſtioning whether GOD haue permitted or forbidden ſuch a thing: but as ſoone as men haue power ouer it, by and by they thinke it is lawfull to doe with it what they liſt. And who ſhall let vs, ſay they? If thou finde none vppon earth to ſet himſelfe againſt thee and to let thee: GOD can well ynough skill to call thee to account for thy ſtatelineſſe, in that thou ſubmitteſt not thy ſelfe vnto him, nor referreſt to him the thinges that he hath giuen thee, to ſay that he ſhall alwayes ouerrule thee. So then let vs mark well this doctrine, namely that for as much as GOD ſheweth himſelfe liberall towardes vs, and beſtoweth his benefites vppon vs: wee bee tyed and bound with ſo much the ſtraiter bond, to doe him homage for the thinges that he hath put into our handes, that is to ſay, to vſe them accordingly as his word will beare. That is another point.

Now Moſes addeth immediatly, Thou ſhalt not make any Alyance with them. Thou ſhalt not giue them thy Children in mariage. For if thou giue thy ſonne in maryage to a daughter of the enemie, or to any of thyne enimies: ſhee will turne away his hart, and drawe him to ſuperſtition and idolatrie: & then will the wrath of thy God be kindled vppon thee, and thou ſhalt bee rooted out. Heere our Lorde addeth an other commaundement, which is that the Amorrhytes ſhould not haue any league or alliance with his people. Hee had ſaide afore, Thou ſhalt deſtroy all. And why? Becauſe hee had tolde them howeit was his will (as I ſaide afore) that that Land ſhould be reſerued to himſelfe. And ſurely we ſee what befell his people, when they became negligent in executing this commaundement. For notwithſtanding any thing that GOD had ſpoken to them, yet they forbore to conquer the Land which hee had promiſed them. This is ynough (quoth they), let vs holde our ſelues quiet, and let vs not ſpend al our life in warre. And ſo by that meanes they left a great number of that people aliue. But what came of it? They became as thorns in their ſides, Ioſua 23.13 yea and as pricks in their eys. Now then the reward which the Iſralites had for not dooing the thing which God had commaunded them: was, that by leauing thoſe idolatrous people aliue, and by intermingling themſelues with thé, they felt them to bee as thornes to pricke them and to pricke out their eyes. For the enemies of God did bring the wretched Iewes into ſuch captiuitie, that they were ouerloded with the yoke of bondage, and there was no man that ſuccoured them, vntill they had languiſhed long time therein. And it is good reaſon that GOD ſhoulde pay vs in ſuch coyne, when wee will needes bee more louing and friendly than hee. Wee ſee what was ſayde to Achab concerning 1.Kin.20.42 Benhadad King of Syria, that bycauſe he had not puniſhed the partie whome GOD had commaunded to bee puniſhed, hee ſhould receyue the puniſhment vppon his owne head. Thou wouldeſt not puniſh him (ſayth the Prophet,) and therefore muſt thou anſwere for him in his ſtead, and bee his borrowe. And in deede, it is not for nought that men doe commonly vſe this prouerbe, Saue a theefe from the gallowes, and he will helpe to hang thee. This prouerbe ſerueth not onely to condemne the vnthankefulneſſe of ſuch as haue receyued good at mens hands: but alſo to verifie the iuſt puniſhment of GOD: that is to wit, that if a man haue ſaued an offender by ſome wicked practiſes eyther for fauour, or for fond pitie, or for vaine glorie, and ſo hindered Iuſtice: he himſelfe muſt anſwere in his ſtead, and the partie that was ſaued from the gibbet, muſt helpe to leade him thither from whence himſelfe was diſcharged. And when it falleth out ſo: wee muſt vnderſtande that it it of Gods woorking. So then yee ſee howe GOD hath ſhewed by effect, that it was no ſmall offence, that the Lande which hee had dedicated to his owne ſeruice ſhoulde be ſtill defyled with ſuch abhominations, and that Idolaters ſhould bee mingled with the people which ought to haue bin holy.

Howbeit although the doctrine that hath beene ſet downe alreadye, might ſuffice: yet notwithſtanding here GOD ſheweth moreouer, that his commaunding that thoſe Nations ſhoulde not bee reſerued nor ſuffered to liue, was not for naught. Why ſo? For if they liue with you (ſayeth hee) you may acquaint your ſelues with them, and if yee make any allyaunce with them, beholde it is a plague, beholde it is a contageous diſeaſe that will come vppon you and your offſpring, ſo as ye ſhalbe corrupted and growe out of kind: and in the ende that will cauſe you to bee rooted out, and GODS vengeaunce which lay vppon that people will lyghte vppon you, bycauſe ye haue not executed his iudgement as hee commaunded you. That in effect is the thing that is conteyned heere. And wee haue a good leſſon to gather vppon this text: that is to wit, not to haue to doe with the wicked ſorte, and with the deſpyſers of God, according to this ſaying of Saynct Paules, 2.Cor.6.14 that wee muſt not drawe the yoke with the vnbeleeuers. For hee vſeth the ſimilitude of Oxen cuppled together. The yoke holdeth them ſo together, that looke which way the one draweth, the other muſt needes followe. In like caſe is it with men: They that fall into familiaritie with the wicked, Doe cupple themſelues with them, ſo as they bee led out of the way and maried by them, inſomuch that whereas they weere as little Godes beefore, nowe they become ſtarke Diuelles. Therefore let vs beware wee mingle not our ſelues with the deſpyſers of GOD and with the wicked, vnleſſe wee intende to become lyke them. Yet notwithſtanding theire are ſome to bee ſeene which are ſo fine headded, that they will make God a lyer.

For they beare mē in hand that they may haunt the company of wicked men,& yet keepe themselues sound from all corruption. Yea, but it is a token that they doe ill knowe themselues, when they beare themselues in hand that they be far other than God hath reported them to bee. Behold,God warneth vs of our frailtie, and telleth vs that if wee keepe companie with the wicked, they shall rather drawe vs to euill, than we shall bring them backe to good: and therefore it behoueth vs to keepe vs outof their companie.And if we thinke the contrarie: what wil come of it? In the ende wee shall finde that all our weening was but fondnesse and follie: and therefore let vs rather learne to obey God.

But heere it might be demaunded whether it be not lawfull for the faithfull to haue any company with the wicked. I told yee already that we must not goe beyond the bondes that God hath set. God giueth vs leaue to indeuour as much as is possible for vs, to bring them backe againe which are out of ỹ way of salnatió. For as for the thinges that were spoken concerning the Amorrhytes and the people that were their neighbours: they take not place so rigorously nowedayes, as though God gaue vs the sworde in our hand, to slea all that were against vs: but euery of vs must haue an eye to his owne state, and to the chardge which God hath committed vnto him. Magistrates are armed with the sworde, to punish those whom God bringeth to their handes, and to put this doctrine in vre. Let vs looke among vs what the holy Scripture telleth vs: namely that wee should bee fayne to get vs out of the world, if wee shoulde not in any wise bee conuersant with the wicked. For why? The whole earth is full of them, and therefore we must nedes dwell with them. But after what maner? In such sort as we haue neither acquaintaunce nor familiaritie with them. For those are the yokes that cupple vs togither. When men fall to eating and drinking with the wicked, and creepe into acquaintance with them, and become friendes to them: it is not possible but that they must be corrupted, and God offended with it. That is a thing which we haue to marke concerning this text. Neuertheless, if we be in companie with the wicked: let it be for necessities sake, and so soberly as they may not bee able to infect vs with their naughtines, nor by any meanes turne vs aside from the right way, or frō the feare of God and honest behauiour of lyfe. Lo how farre foorth we may be conuersant with the wicked.But to intangle our selues with them, and to haue familiar acquaintance with them, is a manifest tẽpting of God. And if we say there is such strength & stedfastnes in vs as they can not winne vs: wee deceiue our selues. Verily as who should say that God knoweth vs not better than wee our selues doe. Is it not a diuelish ouerweening when wee goe to worke after that fashion? And specially when wee fall to contracting of mariages with them, is it not as it were a plundging of our selues into naughtinesse? If a man see a dispiser of God which hath a daughter like hir father, and hee goes and matcheth himselfe with hir: is it not as good as an vtter renouncing of God? I goe and giue my daughter: and to whome? To a wicked man, to a naughtipacke that hath not one sparke of honestie in him, whose life is wholy out of order. I make the silly shepe a pray,and cast it into the wolues throte: and what a crueltie is that? Is it not all one, as if I sacrificed my daughter vnto Moloch? Yes: for he draweth hir away from obedience to God, to put hir into the hand of the deuill, and to turne hir vnto all naughtinesse. Againe, if a man match his sonne with a yong woman that is euill conditioned and an idolatresse, in whome hee seeth no religion nor vertue: is it not as good as if he should goe poison his sonne? True it is that the wife (to mennes seeming) hath not authoritie ouer her husband: But yet it is a deadly plague for a man to be matched with a wicked wife.For surely one woman of naughty behauiour, shall rather mar ten men, than ten good husbands shall win one leawd woman that is set vpon wickednesse. And that doth experience shewe. The wife shall sooner marre hir husband by hir allurementes and temptations I wot not how: than the husband shal reclaime his wyfe, and bring hir backe againe to good. And therefore let vs not thinke it straunge, that God should tell the Iewes heere, that if they giue their sonnes and daughters to the Amorrhytes, Hethites, Chananites, Heuites, Iebusites, and such like people: they should by and by bee turned away to idolatry.

Rom.13 4. & 1,Pet.2.14

And heereunto he addeth a threat, That they shalbe rooted out: and that is according to that which I haue sayde already. For it doeth them to vnderstand, that God will be continually among them. In deede it was a woord of singular ioy, that God would dwell among them: for they might call vppon him at their neede, and when they were distressed they might feele that he was at hande with them, and therefore that they needed not to feare their enemies. But yet for all that, it behoued them to know, that God being so neere vnto them, would not suffer himselfe to be dispised. And therefore let vs beare away this lesson, that now specially seeing God hath vouchsafed to giue vs his word, whereby he assureth vs that he wil be neere at hand to vs, yea and that he will haue vs to bee his temples to dwell in by his holy spirite: let vs learne I say, to giue our selues in such wise vnto him, that whereas there are sinnes and infirmities in vs,(as in deede there are mo than is requisite) it may please him to correct them, and rid vs of them from day to day. And forasmuch as hee hath taken vs vnder his protection, yea and made his dwelling place among vs: let vs bee stirred vp by meanes thereof, to liue in so much the greater awe, seeing he is become so neighbourly and familiar vnto vs.

Mat.1.23. & 1,Cor.3,16.

Now let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to make vs so to feele thē, as wee may learne to mislike of our selues for them, and as this cursed ouerweening may no more beare sway in vs to make vs liue after our owne owne liking, but that we may forsake our owne fleshly reason and wisedome, and couet nothing but to please him in all pointes and all respectes: and that seeing he hath vouchsafed to shoule vs out from the wicked, and to deliuer vs from their corruptions, wee may learne to sanctifie our selues wholly vnto him, and to profite more and more in his feare, to the end that his glorie may shine forth in vs, & we be more & more confirmed in his free adoption, wherethrough hee hath chosen vs to be his childrē & heires for our Lord Iesus Christs sake. That it may please him to grant this grace, not onely to vs but also to all people and Nations of the earth, &c.

On Friday the second day of August. 1555.

The Lij. Sermon which is the seconde vpon the seuenth Chapter.

5 But thus shall yee doe vnto them. You shall beate downe their altars, and breake their pillours: yee shall heawe downe their groues, and burne their Images with fire.

6 For thou art a holy people to the Lord thy God. The Lord thy God hath chosen thee to be his peculiar people aboue al the nations of the earth.

7 The Lord hath not set his loue vppon you, nor chosen you bycause ye were moe in number than all other nations, seeing you be the least of all nations.

8 But for the loue which the Lord beareth you, to keepe the othe which hee sware to your fathers, the Lord hath brought you foorth with a strong hand, and deliuered you from the house of bondage, euen from the hand of Pharao King of Egypt.

YEsterday wee sawe howe God forbad his people to aly themselues in any wise with the Infidels, and specially with ỹ people that dwelt in the lande of Chanaan. Forasmuch as it was said that God had chosen that lande to the intent that his name should be worshipped there: it was his will to haue it purged from all the filthinesse and infections, which had reigned there too long time afore. And after hee hath spoken of the folke, he addeth also that he will haue all ỹ tokens and markes of ydolatrie that were in the countrie put quite away. For like as it behoued the Iewes to worship God purely, without intermedling any of the superstitions of the heathen: so did it also behoue them to keepe the order in such wise as God had set it downe, and to put away al things that were contrarie to the true religion and seruice of God, so as there might bee no mingling nor corruption. Wee see now in effect, that the doctrine which is conteined here, is that forasmuch as God had giuen his people the land of Chanaan: hee would haue it cleare from all abhominations, and his seruice to be so set vp, as all the ceremonies of the heathen and vnbeleeuers might be taken away, and nothing be mingled with it besides his owne Lawe. And ỹ is the cause why hee speaketh expresly of Altars and Groues. For as wee see that men haue no end nor measure in deuising of fashions to serue God withall: there was not that Groue but they made some deuotion in it. And like as men builded Abbeyes, Pryories, and Chappels in the Popedome: so went the worlde among the paynims, and the Iewes followed the same trade, as we see. But that was not for want of warning: for God had prouided sufficiently for them, that they might not set their minds vpon such paltry. But what? Hereby it appeareth howe harde it is to holde men in the pure simplicitie of Gods seruice. Neuertheless, howsoeuer men fare, it is tolde vs here, that such as will serue God vncorruptly, must abstaine from the thinges that are deuised and forged by ydolaters, and stick to the pure doctrin which God hath ordeined, and not adde any thing to it of their owne, or which they find here & there, or which ỹ world hath folishly brought in: All those thinges must bee laide down, if we will serue God purely. But yet let vs mark ỹ there were two reasons why God commanded the Iewes to break downe the heathen mens altars, & to destroy their ydols. The one was to the ende that his people shoulde not bee prouoked and tempted to wickednes & superstition by looking vpon them: for we bee so fraile, ỹ we be caried away as soone as we spie any mark of superstition. I said euen now that it is a harde thing to hold men fast in pure obedience to god as in respect of his seruice. Why so? For their eares doe alwayes itch to heare some newe doctrine: & although none be brought them from elsewhere, yet their minds are so rouing, ỹ they euer couet some newe thing or other. Now then if wee haue any occasion to tempt vs vnto euill, or to any corruption of Gods seruice: wee bee ouertaken by and by. God therefore perceiuing that his people might bee inclined to ydolatrie, and that they would yeelde to it out of hand assoone as they spied any occasion: willed them to wipe away all such thinges. Beware (saieth hee) that yee suffer not anye of the markes of the ydolaydolatries that haue reigned hitherto there: for if any of them come in your sight, ye shalbe as it were rauished, and ye will be following of them. So then, suffer not any thing that may make you to stumble, or that may comber you, so as the way shoulde not be leuell before you. Haue you none other signes than those which I haue appointed you, and let them serue to confirme you in my worde. Let the thinges which I haue taught you bee as a burning Lampe to giue you light: and if yee haue neede of helpes, let the Sacraments and Ceremonies conteined in my Lawe suffice you: but take heede to your selues that yee haue no stumblingblocke. For though ye haue nothing to hinder your going on in the right way: yet may yee euen of your owne nature turne aside from it: and what will yee then doe, if any occasion of euill be offered you? That is one point.

Another is, That Gods will was to haue that Lande as it were dedicated to himselfe, and y his people should shew how much they abhorred ydols, by suffering none of the things to remaine which the heathen men had kept before. God then ment to trie the zeale of the Iewes, when he commaunded them to make cleane riddance of the ydols: and by that meanes he intended to inure them to abhorre ydols, and all things that belonged to them: so as they might shewe not onely that they purposed to worship the onely one God, but also that they could not abide his glorie to bee any whit abated. Nowe we see the two reasons that God had an eye vnto in this place. And nowe must wee apply them to our owne benefite. For although some woulde restraine this to the Iewes, as though it belonged not to vs in these dayes: yet was it not Gods intent to speake for any one time onely. And indeede, (as hath beene declared in the fifth chapter,) let vs looke into our owne hartes, and euery man examine himselfe, whether hee finde himselfe more stedfast and strong to withstande ydolatrie, than the Iewes and other Nations were. For surely that cursed seede is so rooted in all men, as there is none of vs all but hee may keepe a schoole of superstition, without hauing any schoolemaster to teach him. Wee be so froward, that although no bodie seduce vs, yet we rather tende still to some corruption, than holde our selues in the pureneſse of gods seruice. What is to bee done then, seeing that ydolatrie is so rooted in our nature? If occasions be offered to drawe vs away, is it not like as when nettes are spred before birds? And wee bee so vnconstant, that we tumble into them immediatly. And therefore as for them that thinke themselues to haue such constancie & strength, that although they haue images, Chappels, and such other thinges, yet they shall not hurt them at all: they tempt God, and experience shewes it to bee so. Therefore there is no better way, than to know our infirmitie, and vpon the knowledge thereof, to vse the remedie that God hath giuen vs. If a man perceiue himselfe to haue a weake heade, so as he is not able to beare three glasses of wine but he shall be ouertaken: if hee drinke without discretion, is he not as badde as a swine? Doeth he not tempt God? Ought he not to thinke vpon the default that is in him, and to preuent it? Yes. Nowe it is certaine that in this behalfe we haue so weake braines, that we shal by and by be made dronke with superstition, yea and as good as bewitched with superstition, so as there wilbe no discretion in vs, but wee shall goe on still to seeke further occasions and meanes of it: and is not that a manifest spiting of God? It is a point therefore which ought to bee well marked, that GOD knowing the weakeneſse which is in vs, is not willing that wee shoulde haue images, altars, and such other thinges to seduce vs, but that all such thinges shoulde bee wyped out from among vs, to the intent there may not bee any thing to hinder vs from giuing our selues simplie vnto God.

But nowe let vs come to the seconde reason. It is not ynough for the faithful to refreine from all ydolatrie: but they must also shewe that they abhorre and hate all thinges that are against Gods seruice: And to the vttermost of their power they must indeuour to haue them all wyped away, so as the rememberance of them may be rooted out, that they may neuer bee spoken of any more. For else what zeale haue we to the honour of God, when we see ydols set vp in steed of him, and looke vpon thinges that serue to corrupt and deface the true and pure religion? If wee doe but laugh at them, and take them as small trifles, or as childrens games: is it not a token that we esteem the honour of our God no more than a thing of nothing? For if our desire to haue God glorified, were as earneſt as itought to be: surely it would wound our hearts to see ydols so set vp in his place, and to see men bereaue him of his maiestie to attribute the same to deade creatures, and that so precious and holy a thing as religion is, should be so marred, corrupted & turned vpsidedown. When these marks come before our eyes, surely if we haue any one droppe of good zeale, it must needes vex vs and greeue vs: and wee must to the vttermost of our power deface all those signes and marks of ydolatrie, and cause Gods honour to be maintained vnappayred. And indeede, when hee requireth that wee shoulde make confession of our faith vnto him: this also is comprehended therein. For as the mouth ought to vtter what is in our hart, Rom.10.10. that is to wit, that wee haue but the onely one God which hath redeemed vs: if wee yeeld him such record with our mouth: our outward doings must also bee answerable thereunto, so as both feete and handes tende that way. [If we were at that point,] wee woulde not wittingly and willingly suffer any superstitions, if it lay in vs to abolish them. But yet there is a thing in it, which is that Moses commaundeth the people expreſly, to doe it when they bee come into the Lande which God had appointed thē to inioy for their inheritance. For if we be in a straunge Countrie where wee haue no authoritie: it is not in our power to put downe ydols, neither doeth this commaundement stretch thereunto. It is true that in passing through places where ydolatrie is vſed, we muſt ſigh and mourne, and thinke our eyes to bee as it were defiled with the ſight of ſuch wickednesse contrary to the honour of god, ſo as it muſt greeue vs and vex vs at the heart that we bee driuen to ſee ſuch ſights. And for aſmuch as our hands be tyed, and we haue not any ſoueraintie or authoritie in the place or Countrie where ſuch ſuperſtitions reigne: wee haue no more to doe, but to pray God to put to his mightie hande, and to deſtroye it euerywhit: and in the meane while to holde our ſelues quiet. But if we haue authoritie: then behold, Gods voyce crieth out, vp vp, ſuch abhominations muſt not reigne any longer. When yee bee come to the Countrie which your God giueth you to poſſeſſe: then let all ſuch geere bee put downe.

Nowe then, out of this text wee muſt drawe a rule: which is that according as God giueth abilitie, wee muſt indeuour to haue all ydolatrie and all the tokens therof vtterly aboliſhed both publikely and priuately. As howe? When a Countrie is at libertie, and our Lorde hath planted his word there: ſuch as beare ſway and haue autoritie, muſt find ỹ meanes that al ſuch things as haue corrupted the true religion, may be aboliſhed & brought to nought. If they doe it not: it is a negligence which God condemneth. And if a man will put downe ydolatrie: it is not ynough to ſaye, no man ſhall worſhippe ydolles anye more: but all thinges which imbaced the pureneſſe of the Religion, muſt bee quite and cleane wyped away. As for example, if men ſhould keepe ſtill the Altars that were in the time of the diueliſh Maſſe: what a thing were it? Wherto ſerued they, but to committe abhominable trecherie againſt God, ſo as there ſhoulde remaine neither faith nor feare towardes him, ſo long as ſuch abhomination indured? The Altars ſerued to ſing their Maſſes on. By meanes whereof the death and paſſion of our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt was vtterly defaced, in ſpyte of the redemption that he had wrought. Inſomuch that if it bee admitted that Ieſus Chriſt was ſacrificed dayly: it is all one as to reiect the benefite that was purchaſed vs by his death and paſſion. Heb. 9. 26.

Nowe then if the Altars were ſuffered to ſtande ſtill: were it not a reteyning ſtill of ſome memoriall of the leawdneſſe which ought to miſlike vs? Yes: for otherwiſe what were our zeale? When wee call to rememberance that wee haue hearde Maſſe in times paſt, and had caſt our ſelues into that dungeon: wee ought to bee ſorie and to craue pardon for it, and to bee abaſhed at the blindneſſe whereinto wee were falne, wherethrough wee became ſo beaſtlie, as to goe ſeeke our ſaluation by renouncing the redemption that was purchaled for vs long agoe by our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt, and to make our ſelues partakers of ſo diueliſh a thing: I ſay wee ought to bee afraide in our ſelues to thinke of it. And if the Altars ſhoulde haue ſtoode ſtil, had it not beene as it were a ſpiting of God to play mockeholyday with him after that faſhion, that whereas wee had ſhrunke away from Chriſtianitie, wee bee neuer a whit ſorie for it, no nor greeued at all to ſee the badges thereof? And in verie deede the Iewes were caſt in the teeth with their reteyning ſtill of thoſe thinges, as who ſhoulde ſay they weltered ſtill in their owne filthineſſe. And if a leawde woman that had giuen her bodie to diſhoneſtie for a time, ſhoulde afterwarde reioyce to ſee ſtill the markes of her whooredome: were it not a ſigne that ſhee repented not at all? Yes: and euen that is the cauſe why this exception is purpoſely added, that when the kinges went about to ſerue God, and had beaten downe the ydolles, yet they helde ſtill ſome relikes of them, and this blemiſh ſticketh expreſſly vppon them, that God miſlyked them: as if hee ſhoulde ſaye, they were not worthy to bee allowed without exception, but bee driuen to beare this marke of reproch alwayes in their faces, that they had not throughly clenſed the lande from the former ſuperſtitions, when they left the groues ſtanding ſtill. If a man ſay, why, and was that ſo euill a thing? Are not trees the creatures of God? Yes: but when men ſhall haue miſuſed them and put them to ſuch heatheniſh vncleannes as to ſpyte God with them: then muſt they bee wyped quite and cleane away. Men muſt not take ouermuch libertie in that caſe: for our nature is too much giuen to euill of it ſelfe, (as I ſaide afore) without anye intycing of it thereunto. Thus yee ſee howe wee ought generally to indeuour to aboliſhe all ſuperſtitions, and all things that may ſerue thereto. 1. Kin. 15. 14 and 22. 44. & 2. king. 12 3. & 14. 4.

And likewiſe particularly, let euerie man looke well to his owne houſe, that hee retaine not any thing which may couer any wickedneſſe, or which is not fully agreeable and conformable to the ſimplicitie of Gods worde. For as manie as diſpence with themſelues in that caſe, ſhall feele it turne to their ruine in their ende. Wee ſee howe it befell to Gedeon who was choſen of God, and by whom ſo many noble deedes were done. Onely becauſe he made an Ephod and cauſed a certaine deuotion to be ſet vp: there inſued great deſtruction after his death. And after the ſame manner wee ſee howe a great number doe keepe ſtill their chappels. If they haue any Caſtle or great houſe, there muſt bee a chappell for a memoriall of their aunceters, in remembera nce that there was ſuch a thing, and ſuch an antiquitie. They then which will needes haue ſome remnant after that faſhion for vaineglorie, muſt feele at length that they haue couered a fire, which ſhall conſume themſelues and their children, as the deede of Gedeon was the cauſe of the vndoing and deſtruction of his linage, as I ſaide afore. And therefore let vs beare in minde, that whereſoeuer GOD giueth vs power, wee muſte ſo hate all the markes of ſuperſtition, as wee muſt doe what wee can to wype them out, ỹ they may no more be had in remembrance. And let vs alwayes bethinke vs of the two reaſons which I alledged before. Iudg. 8. 27.

the people of the Iewes are holy, and that they ought to dedicate themselues wholly vnto God: euen because they had beene chosen (saith he) to bee a peculiar people in the whole worlde. Whereas he saith that the Iewes are a holy people: hee meaneth that they ought to be separated from the Heathē and Infidels. For if wee take example at those to whom God hath not graunted such grace as hee hath done to vs: is it not as good as a thrusting of the priuiledge vnder foote which hee hath giuen vs? Beholde, God sheweth vs his will, and hee vouchsafeth to haue his worde preached vnto vs: and is that to no purpose? is it for nought? Whereas God commeth downe vnto vs, and communicateth himselfe so familiarly vnto vs: doeth that honour which he doth vs, and that grace which hee vouchsafeth to vse towards vs, serue to no vse nor profite? Surely it ought at leastwise to sanctifie vs vnto him, that is to say, to make vs redy to say, Alas Lord, we were miserable creatures, and thou vouchsafest to retaine vs to thy selfe: therefore behold, we be here, gouerne thou vs, and let vs be thy flocke. But nowe if we fall to defiling of our selues with the superstitions of the heathen: is it not a renouncing of the priuiledge that God had giuen vs? Is it not a forsaking of the couenant whereby hee had knit and vnited himselfe vnto vs? Yes. That then is the cause why Moses addeth heere, that the Iewes are a holy people. As if hee should say, Looke to your selues, for God hath shouled you out from all Nations, and hee hath called you, euen by shewing you that you shall bee his heritage, accordingly also as he hath giuen him selfe to you. Nowe then if yee goe and take example at these blinde wretches, so as ye alledge, Our neighbours doe so and so: what a thing is that? Your neighbours are straungers to God, they be as wilde beasts, God hath not vouchsafed to behold them with pitie and mercy, to deliuer them from the brutish ignorance wherein they be. To be short, yee haue them as mirrors of Gods wrath and rigour. Al they that perish do shewe you what you were, and what you shoulde be stil, if god had not reached you his hand. Now therefore acknowledge that benefite, and take no more example at those whom God hath forsaken, and to whom he hath not granted the like fauour as he hath done to you. Thus much concerning the Iewes. Now remaineth that we apply this doctrine to our owne vse.

Eph. 2. 12.

What is it that maketh vs a holy people to our God? Euen his worde. For it is saide, you be cleane becatse of the worde which I haue preached vnto you. Yesee then that the mean whereby God sanctifieth vs to himselfe, that is to say, draweth vs out of the common perdition of all the children of Adam, and taketh vs to be of his owne housholde: is his vttering of his will vnto vs. And so to bee short, it is (as yee woulde saye) a solemne consecration or hallowing of a people by God, when hee vouchsafeth to haue his worde preached vnto them. Wee neede not goe seeke the gewgawes of poperie to make a dedication or hallowing: for the meane whereby God dedicateth his temples, is by sending his ministers to preach his doctrine faithfully: and it is also the meane wherby we be hallowed vnto him. Nowe he hath graunted vs this grace: Wee see howe the wretched Papistes are gone astray, and runne gadding ouer the fields without keeping of any way. They hop, they trippe, they stumble, and all to their owne ruine. They haue no light, but are as blinde wretches in the mids of darkenesse: and in the meane while, behold, the Lord our God maketh his daysonne of righteousnes to shine vppon vs, for Iesus Christ sheweth himselfe to bee our redeemer. Sith it is so; what ought we to doe? Ought we not at leastwise to consider, to what end and purpose Gods worde is preached vnto vs, and euery of vs to gather vnder his hande to say, Lord, rule thou vs? Yes: but what? There are verie fewe which thinke vpon that. For we would be more afraide to defile our selues with the filthinesse of papistrie than we bee, if this doctrine were well printed in vs, that seing God hath separated vs from them, if wee intermedle our selues with them newagaine, it is all one as if wee mingled heauen and earth together, of purpose to turne the whole order of nature vpside downe, & to make a hotchpotch of all things, that there might bee a horrible confusion. For surely there ought to bee a greater difference betweene Gods children and the vnbeleeuers, than there is distance betweene heauen and earth.

Mal. 4. 2.

True it is that we must be faine to be mingled together one with another as long as we liue in this worlde: but yet is it not saide for nought, that Gods children are citizens of heauen and pilgrims in the worlde. Although they bee conuersant here beneath: yet must they not be tyed to it, but they must goe on still as in a straunge countrie, knowing that their abidingplace is aboue, and that God hath chosen thē with condition that they should goe thither. Therefore when such as haue knowen Gods trueth, doe fall to mingling themselues with ydolaters, and will not bee separated from them: it is all one as if they went about to peruert the whole order of nature. But this doctrine hath more neede to bee throughly well minded, than to bee preached with long speech. The thing then which Moses ment by these wordes, is this: Yee bee a people that is hallowed to the Lorde: that is to say, Although we were of Adams cursed race, although we came of wretched Infidels: yet notwithstanding our Lorde hath vouchsafed to drawe vs to him, and to choose vs to bee of his housholde: and therefore it is good reason that wee shoulde be separated from the rest. Hath hee done so, by making vs partakers of the doctrine of his Gospel? Then his wil is to haue vs dedicated to himselfe, and that wee shoulde bee his temples. So then let vs looke well to it, that wee continue in this state, and that we doe not wilfully disanull Gods adopting of vs, nor consent to any thing that may put vs out of his house. For when wee forsake Gods Gospell through falshood, wee doe what wee can to cut our selues off from the bodie of Iesus Christ, and to disherite our selues of the heauenly kingdom,

2. Cor. 5. 6.

and to baniſhe our ſelues from it, when wee make no conſcience nor remorſe of intermingling our ſelues with ydolaters and with their defilings. Whatſoeuer hee is that giueth himſelfe the bridle to goe to the ſuperſtitions of the Papiſtes, and to communicate with them: it is al one as if he canceled the deede of the inheritance which God hath giuen him. And ỹ deede is not written in paper nor in parchment: but it is
Eph.1.13. & 4.30. ſealed by God in our harts, and it is his will that ſeales and markes therof ſhould alſo bee in our bodies. Then [in ſo doing] we blot out the writing wherby God adopted vs for his children & heires, and (as I ſaid) we baniſh our ſelues out of his kingdom, and cut off our ſelues from the body of our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt. For if we be members of Gods ſon, we muſt not goe & do homage to ydols, nor defile our bodies (which are ỹ temples of the holy ghoſt,) with ſuch filthines & abhomination. But as oft as we com to heare Gods
2.Cor.6.16 word, we muſt thinke thus with our ſelues: Behold, my God hath made me holy, that is to ſay, he hath ſeparated me from ſuch as are ouerwhelmed in their owne vncleannes: and ſhall I nowe worke him ſpite? What a condemnation wil it be to me, ỹ my God hath ſo hallowed me, and I on the otherſide doe vnhallowe and defile my ſelfe with all leawdnes, reiecting ỹ priuiledge that he hath giuen me? Is it not a making of war againſt him, when I will needs after that ſort diſappoint the good, which hee had offered me of his owne infinite mercy? Yes.

And Moſes addeth expreſly yet further, That it was to the intent that this people ſhould be ſeparated from all the reſt of the world. If God graunted his grace commonly & without exception to al people, to haue his worde preached euerywhere: yet ought we to be ſanctified vnto him, bicauſe he taketh vs out of the corruption of Adam, and from the ruine wherin al of vs are by nature. But when as he choſeth one Nation, and alyeth himſelf to ỹ ſame, and in the meane while letteth all ỹ reſt goe: it ſerueth to giue the greater beauty to his goodnes: like as nowadayes, our hauing of ỹ pure doctrine of ỹ Goſpel, is as a corde whereby God draweth vs to him, and whereby he vouchſafeth to be made one ẅ vs, as I ſaid afore. The worlde ſeeth how he letteth the wretched papiſts run at rouers, ſo as their eys be ſtopped & they ſee not one whit, nay rather they turne quite & cleane away from the way of ſaluation. We ſee it. And what is to be done, but ỹ inaſmuch as god ſetteth ſuch beawty vpon his mercy: ſuch compariſon ſhould make vs the willinger to ſerue him, & to liue the more warely, for feare of turning away from him, ſeeing he hath vochſafed to prefer vs before others, though wee haue not deſerued it? But what? So farre are we vnable to profite our ſelues by ſuch goodnes of God: ỹ we rather make it an occaſion to take leaue & libertie to do euill. For whē we haue ỹ examples of the vnbeleeuers before our eyes: we thinke we may do the ſame things that they do. But that is far of from thinking vpon that which Moſes ſaith here. Your god (ſaith he) hath ſanctified you aboue al other nations of ỹ earth. As if he ſhould ſay, Who be you? For ye be no better than other Nations: and yet neuertheles, your god hath vouchſafed to ſanctifie you. Now therefore, be you the more carefull to bridle your ſelues, & to keepe you vndefiled, and meddle no more with the wretched vnbeleeuers ỹ are wholly giuen ouer to their owne vncleannes, becauſe your God neuer drew them vnto him. Thus yee ſee why Moſes compareth here ỹ Iewes expreſly with ỹ heathen. Likewiſe in theſe days, foraſmuch as God hath preferred vs before ỹ wretched papiſts, we muſt beware ỹ we walke the more circumſpectly vnder his obedience, aſſuring our ſelues ỹ he wil not haue ſuch a benefite deſpiſed, as is his vouchſafing to take vs into his houſe, and to communicate himſelfe ſo familiarly vnto vs as he doth. But yet to expreſſe this grace ỹ better, Moſes addeth that this people was choſen. As if he ſhould ſay, indeede it is an ineſtimable dignitie and nobleneſſe for you to bee choſen to be the people of God, ſo as no Nation of the earth can boaſt themſelues to haue beene exalted to ſuch degree of honor: but yet beware that you be not proud of it. For your ſanctifying at Gods hand, came not of your owne purchaſe, but of Gods chooſing of you: it came of him. Therefore let the praiſe thereof be yeelded vnto him: & aſſure your ſelues ye be the more beholden to him, in that he hath ſhewed ſuch mercy towards you. Wee ſee then ỹ the word Chooſe which Moſes ſetteth down here, ſetteth to magnifie Gods grace ỹ was ſpoken of before, to ỹ intent ỹ the people ſhould be the more prouoked, & (as it were) rauiſhed to ſerue God. And for the ſame purpoſe he ſetteth down a long diſcourſe. Wherfore is it (ſaith he) that your God hath loued you, & knit himſelfe to you? For this maner of ſpeeche, (namely ỹ God knitteth himſelf to men) importeth very much. And why doeth he ſo, ſaieth he? What hath moued him therto? Was it for your owne ſakes? Or did you put your ſelues foreward vnto it? Was it bicauſe ye were a greater nation than any other? Was it in reſpect of ỹ, that God was moued to chooſe you rather thā any of the others? Had you deſerued it on your part? No no: but it was (ſaieth he) bicauſe hee loued you. Nowe this worde Loue importeth here, firſt that God reſpected not any thing in men why hee ſhould chooſe them, but that his owne free loue ſufficed him in that behalfe. He loued you, that is to ſay, ſeeke not any cauſe or worthineſſe in your ſelues: bee contented that our Lorde hath choſen you of his owne free goodneſſe before al others, though ye were no better thā they. Now we ſee all Moſeſes meaning.

And although this matter cannot be diſcourſed throughout: yet muſt we note, ỹ Moſes ſpake here of Gods election, to the intent ỹ the people ſhould be ỹ more humbled, and ỹ the ſame humbling of them ſhould ingender an affection and zeale to ſerue God according as he was knowen to thē. Therefore when there is any talke of the grace ỹ God hath ſhewed vs in inlightening vs, & it is told vs that he hath adopted vs to bee his children & of his Church: wee muſt needes match this with it, ỹ our hauing of al theſe things is not by our owne purchaſe, nor for putting of our ſelues foorth by any vertue or good minde ỹ was in vs: but through Gods ſeeking of vs at ſuch time as we turned our backs vpon him. Now by this meanes we be hũbled, & we haue need of it. For as ſoon as men haue any incling of any goodneſſe ỹ is in themſelues: they like wel of it & ſtand gaſing at their owne fethers like Peacockes: but in the meane while they conſider not, that they rob and bereaue God of the praiſe that is due to him. Therfore whenſoeuer there is any ſpeaking of Gods grace, it is requiſite for vs to bee put in mind of this matter, to ỹ end we may not imagin our ſelues to haue deſerued aught on our owne ſide, or that God reſpected any good diſpoſition that was in vs: but aſſure our ſelues that nothing but his free loue moued him to doe it. When we be ſo humbled: then muſt we needs be ſpoyled of our owne reaſon, or elſe become ſtarke beaſts, if wee take not corage to ſerue God and to dedicate our ſelues wholly vnto him, to ſay, How happeneth it that wheras we were curſed and damned creatures, our God hath ſought vs out, yea euen from the dungeons of death, & hath opened vs the gate of the kingdom of heauẽ, calling and drawing vs dayly thither: & yet in the mean while we be ſlothful in ſeruing him? And ſpecialy ſith we ſee ỹ whereas the moſt part of the world goeth to deſtruction, and the wretched Infidels are ſo blinded that they be let alone in the darkneſſe of their ignorance, God in the mean while watcheth early and late ouer vs: what ought we to do, when hee vſeth ſuch ſpeciall loue towards vs? Ye ſee then that this humility muſt leade vs to a care and warenes to ſerue God, and to gather our ſelues wholly vnder his wings, acknowledging ỹ the more we be bounde vnto him, the more we muſt ſhew by our deeds that we impute all to his mere goodnes, and are willing to yeeld him the praiſe thereof as he deſerueth. Thus yee ſee wherunto the things are to be referred which Moſes ſpeaketh heere.

Ier. 31, 28.

And herewithall let vs marke, that whereas it is ſaid, that the people [of Iſrael] were not the greateſt of other Nations: vnder one kinde, he comprehended al the reſt. As if he ſhould ſay, there was neither dignitie nor worthineſſe in you, why God ſhoulde chooſe you rather than any other Nation. For it muſt be vtterly rooted out of our hearts, to imagine that God findeth any thing in vs, which may moue him to loue vs. For vntill ſuch time as men bee quite rid of ſelfeweening, they ſhall neuer be able to glorifie God as they ought to do. And although wee blaſe it not with open mouth, that there is ſome deſert or excellencie in vs: yet notwithſtanding we fall aſleepe in ſuch ſelfeſoothing, as we imagine that there is ſtill ſome value in our ſelues. And therfore it behoueth vs to enter purpoſely into our conſciences, and to clenſe them in ſuch wiſe as wee leaue not any one drop of pride & preſumption there: to ỹ intent that whẽ we haue throughly ſerched and ſifted all that is in vs of our nature, wee may know there is not any thing that may purchace vs grace and fauor at Gods hand, nor that can be acceptable vnto him, but that wee be naked and vnpurueyed of all goodnes and glorie, and finally that we haue nothing in vs but vtter filth and vncleanneſſe. When examination is made after ỹ maner: then ſhall men bee diſpoſed to receiue Gods grace, and to glorifie him for it when they ſhall haue receiued it. Then let vs learne to vnderſtand wel, that the ſearching of all that euer is in vs to the hard bottome, (ſo as we foſter not any imagination of ſelfworthineſſe, but perceiue that God findeth vs vtterly vnhappy and accurſed, ſo as we might be vtterly forlorne and damned, and wee haue not any thing of our own but ſuch as prouoketh Gods wrath and vengeance againſt vs:) commeth of the grace that god hath graunted vnto vs. When we be come to ỹ point: then muſt we come alſo to the loue that Moſes ſpeakes of here.

And to the intent to ſhewe the better, that the ſaid loue is freely beſtowed; he ſheweth out of what fountaine it ſpringeth. Euen of this (ſaith he), that it is Gods will to performe the othe which he made to thy fathers. And hereafter he wil ſay, that their fathers alſo were choſen freely. But let it ſuffice vs that in this place God putteth the people in minde of the couenant that was made with Abraham, before the people, to whom he ſpeaketh, were borne. Hereby he ſheweth that the cauſe of our election, came not of our owne deſeruing. For what is it that wee did before wee were borne? If it bee ſaide that God foreſawe what manner a ones we would be: yet did none of all that moue God to chooſe this people: for they were ſo hardhearted & ſtubborn a people, as hee could neuer weald them. What manner of ones did they ſhew themſelues to be at their going out of Egypt? Howe did they acknowledge Gods grace in ỹ deliuerance that he had wrought for them? The ſcripture yeeldeth vs record good ynough of it. And yet notwithſtãding God ceaſed not to take them ſtill for his people. Wherein he ment to ſhew vs, that his vttering of his goodnes towardes vs, is not in any reſpect of our deſeruings. And indeede, the holy ghoſt was not ſo ill minded, as to haue concealed ſuch a thing from vs, but that if our Lord had foreſeene any goodnes in vs, and ỹ the ſame had cauſed him to chooſe vs: hee woulde ſurely haue told vs of it. But what? As for ſuch as bable that God choſe vs according to his foreknowledge, & that he knew we ſhould haue ſome good diſpoſition in vs: they ſhew themſelues to be worſe thã beaſtes, for aſmuch as they conſider not that all men are alike, ſauing that God putteth his grace more into one than into another, and ỹ we muſt not imagine that we haue ſome thing I wote not what of our own. Who is he (ſaith S. Paul) which putteth the difference, to make thee excellenter than other men? It commeth not of our ſelues: then muſt we needs haue that making of God. And ſo it is not for nought, that Moſes telleth ỹ people, ỹ the onely cauſe why they were choſen was for ỹ God loued them, which loue made him to vtter ỹ ſame loue, euẽ before ſuch time as they to whõ he ſpak, were born or bred, ſo as he ſware aforehand to their fathers, ỹ he would take them for his people. Seeing it is ſo then, let vs know ỹ when we be beaten downe in our ſelues, we muſt consider that the welspring and fountaine of our ſaluation, is the infinite goodneſſe of our God, & that he ment not to regard our deſerts, but to vſe his owne free goodnes as we cal it, that is to ſay, not to ſell any thing vnto vs. Neuertheleſſe it was his will to loue vs. And wherefore? Becauſe it pleaſed him. Nowe let men goe and ſurmiſe I wote not what cauſes in this caſe, for they ſhall confound all by it: but let vs take hold of the only good wil of God, in ỹ it pleaſed him to chooſe vs and to leaue others.

And now let vs kneele downe in the preſence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faults, praying him to make vs feele them more and more, and to indeuour dayly to know them, that we may be ſory for them and amend them: and that therewithal we may haue an eye to the couenant which he hath made with vs, to ỹ end to anſwere to his call, that we wander not heare and there like ſtraye beaſts, but that ſeeing he is willing to hold vs vnder his obedience, and to gather vs into his flock, wee may be ſatiſfied vnto him by meanes of his word, which benefite it maye pleaſe him to make to preuaile in ſuch wiſe in vs, as it may bee a furtherance to his glory, and wee be brought more & more to forſake the luſts of our fleſh and of the worlde, & to offer our ſelues vnto him in ſacrifice both aliue and dead: Aliue, that the power of his holy ſpirit may vtter it ſelfe in vs [by making vs] to followe his commaundements cheerefully: and deade, that we may be ready to goe out of this world, whenſoeuer it ſhall pleaſe him to call vs hence. That it may pleaſe him to grant this grace, not onely to vs but alſo to all people and Nations of the earth, &c.

On Saturday the third of Auguſt. 1555.

The Liij. Sermon, which is the third vpon the ſeuenth Chapter.

7.& 8. The Lord &c.

9 Knowe yee therefore that the Lord thy God is the God, [euen] the faithfull God which keepeth couenant and mercie with a thouſand generations, to ſuch as loue him and keepe his commaundements.

10 And yeeldeth payment vnto ſuch as hate him before his face, to make them periſhe. And hee will not forſlowe to recompence him that hateth him [euen] to his face.

WE ſaw yeſterday, that the cauſe why Moſes ſaith here expreſly, that God choſe one certain people, & made not that grace common to all the world: was to humble thoſe to whom god vttered himſelfe, to the ende they ſhould knowe that it befell them not for their deſertes, nor through their owne purchaſe: but through the onely goodneſſe of God. And that is the cauſe alſo why Dauid ſpeaking of this people, ſaith, the ſonne of Abraham Gods welbeloued, the ſeede of Iacob his choſen. Thoſe two wordes are matched together, to ſhew that that people was ſhou led out from all other Nations, not for any worthineſſe that was in them: but by reaſon of free election, and to expreſſe Gods goodneſſe and loue towards vs the better: and therefore doeth he ſend vs wholly thither. Truth it is that in this place he ſpeaketh of the generall election of the whole people, in that God had adopted them. And that is well worth the marking. For in calling Abraham, God extended the promiſe of ſaluation vnto his whole linage. Hee ſaid vnto Abraham, I wilbe the God of thy linage after thee. Heere then is a generall election (as they terme it) of the whole people, inaſmuch as God ſeparated them from the reſt of the world, telling them that hee tooke them for his inheritance and Church. And in very deede, the ſigne of circumciſion was as a ſeale, to warrant al the offſpring of that race, that God was their ſauior: and ſo, that was ſuch a grace as was common to all the children of Abraham. Howbeit, there is another ſecond election or choſing, which is (as ye would ſay) ſtreiter: namely, that out of ỹ ſame linage god chooſeth whom he thinks good. And herein there is no contrariety. For we muſt conſider ỹ degrees which the holy ſcripture ſetteth downe, when it ſpeaketh of all mankind. It ſheweth ỹ they be alienated or eſtranged from God, and conſequently from the hope of ſaluation: by meanes wherof all men euen from ỹ greateſt to the leaſt, are damned. Now God draweth out of them whom he liſteth. And to the intẽt his grace ſhould be ỹ better knowen, he choſe one linage. And whoſe linage? Euen the linage of one man in whom there was no hope of iſſue. For when God ſaid to Abraham, I wilbe ỹ God of thy ſeede after thee: how many children & childrens children had he? He had not one, neither ſonne nor daughter. He liued a long time after ere hee begate Iſaac. He was old and drooping, and his wife was barren, ſo as there was no more hope of iſſue. And for ỹ ſame cauſe, whẽ the prophet Eſay intẽded to vpbraid the Iſraelits w̃ their vnthankfulnes, & with their pride & luſtines which they were in, by reaſon ỹ they were growen to ſo great a multitude: & contrariwiſe with their vnbeliefe when they were fewe in number: Looke backe

(ſaith he) to ỹ ſtone which you were hewen out of, look back to your wel head. What people had Abraham? He was all alone. And was your mother Sara fruitfull? Nay contrariwiſe God was faine to giue her a childe by myracle which ſhee neuer looked for, inſomuch that it ſeemed incredible to her when ſhe was told it. Seeing it is ſo: aſſure your ſelues (ſaith ỹ prophet) yee haue no cauſe to make any bragges, foraſmuch as God hath ſhouled you out after that faſhion. And for the ſame cauſe alſo doth Moſes ſay in this text, If a man compare your ſtate with the ſtate of other Nations, he ſhall finde ỹ the other Nations are multiplyed by ỹ order of nature: but your father Abraham was all alone by himſelf, yea and an old man & drooping, & readie to creepe into his graue. Ye ſee then ỹ god choſe a people which was not, of purpoſe to magnifie his free fauor & to make it the more manifeſt. Verily he accom-
Rom.4.17. pliſhed ỹ thing which S. Paul ſpeakes of in treating of the ſame Abraham: ỹ is to wit, God choſe the thinges which were not, & called them forth to giue them their being. S. Paul telleth vs ỹ wee haue (as ye would ſay) a liuely picture in ỹ perſon of Abraham, to ſhew vs howe it is ỹ God maketh vs any thing, and exalteth vs to honor. For (ſaith he) what was Abraham? A poore creature halfe dead. Was his linage in any ſtate? Did it floriſh at that time? No, but it was more likely that hee ſhould neuer haue had any iſſue at all. Then let vs learn ỹ god guideth the things which are not, and bringeth them forth to giue them being: and ſo ỹ hope of the faith full concerning their ſaluation, lieth not in themſelues, but they look for it at Gods hand. As touching our ſelues, truely we be nothing: but God vttereth his power to giue vs being. And ſo ye ſee, ỹ through his goodnes we begin to hope for life euerlaſtingly in his kingdome. Thus then ỹ firſt degree of election, is ỹ God choſe the linage of Abraham, notwithſtanding ỹ it was forlorne as wel as all the reſt of the world. And hauing done ſo, he ſtayed not with that grace: but foraſmuch as a great nũber were eſtranged & as it were cut off frõ ỹ line of Abraham: he pulled backe alſo whom it pleaſed him.
Rom.9.6.7. And that is the cauſe why S. Paul ſaieth, that all they which come of Abraham according to the fleſh, are not reckened for his lawful children, I mean to Godward, in reſpect of ỹ ſpiritual inheritance ỹ was promiſed to the true linage. And for ỹ ſame cauſe S. Paul alledgeth ỹ ſaying ỹ is writ-
Rom.9.12. & Gen.25. 22. & Mala. 1.2. ten in the 25. of Geneſis, namely that the elder ſhall ſerue the yonger, accordingly alſo as it is ſaid by ỹ prophet Malachie, Iacob & Eſaw were both of them the children of Abraham: & what is the cauſe why Iacob was receiued, and Eſaw refuſed ſo as god diſherited him, and vouchſafed not to eſtabliſh any Church in his ofspring, but that as many as came of the line were mingled with the heathen, and belonged not at all to the body of Chriſt? Whereof came this? To whom ſhal a man impute it? It is to be vnderſtood, that (as ſaieth S. Paul) God had giuen ſentence of them before they were borne. For Iacob and Eſaw were twinnes, and their Mother Rebecka bare them both at one burthen: and at that time what could the one deſerue more than the other? God refuſed the elder to whom belonged the honor of firſt borne, yea, by order of nature: but God ſhewed that his grace was aboue nature. So then, Iacob was choſen, and Eſaw refuſed. To whom ſhal a mã impute al this? Brought they any ſtrength and vertue of their owne (as ſaith the prophet Micheas) for the which God eſteemed the one more than the other? Should the Iewes (which came of Iacob) ſet vp their briſtles againſt God, to ſaye that they were nobler than other men? No, but they ought to yeeld the honor to Gods free fauour, acknowledging that to be ỹ onely cauſe of their ſaluation, and ỹ they haue not any thing of their owne wherfore they ſhoulde be preferred before other men. Heerein we ſee that God hauing choſen a people in generall, doeth notwithſtanding reſerue libertie to himſelfe, to chooſe out of that people whomſoeuer he liſteth, & to refuſe ỹ reſt. And ſo as I haue declared alredy, there is one election which god maketh generally: and another [particularly] of thoſe whom he vouchſafeth to take for his children & heires. Nowe then, it is of Gods free election, ỹ we haue his word purely preached vnto Eph.1.9. vs, and ỹ we haue his goſpel & Sacraments. And euen therein we haue cauſe to confeſſe ỹ he hath ſhewed himſelf liberal vnto vs. For by what title is ỹ goſpel giuen to vs, rather thã to ſuch as make greater account of themſelues than we doe, and which are not inferiour to vs as in reſpect of the world? Why doth God leaue great kingdomes & principalities, and nations of renowne: & chooſe a little nooke, & a ſmal number of people, to ſay that his worde ſhalbe preached there? When it raineth ſo vpon vs, and al ỹ reſt of the world abideth ſtill in drought: is it not to bee concluded that God hath liberty to doe good to whom hee liſteth? And is it not his only loue, wherto we be beholden for it? Yes. So then, when the Goſpel is preached in a place, and it hath the warrantes ỹ God giueth men ſaluation: (as when wee haue baptiſme & the Lords holy ſupper miniſtred vncorruptly:) we may ſay it is an election that God maketh. But yet for all ỹ, in the meane time hee reteineth to himſelfe whom he thinketh good, to the end that men ſhold not truſt to the outward ſignes without faith & obedience, knowing that although we haue bin choſen to be of the bodie of the Church, yet if we make not our profite of that election, God can welynough cut vs off againe, & reſerue a ſmal number to himſelfe. And although there bee ſome great multitude of vs which confeſs al w̃ one mouth ỹ God hath choſẽ vs: yet can we not therefore ſay ỹ he auoweth vs for his childrẽ, except we liue in purenes of faith, & haue ratified ỹ couenãt which god hath made with vs. And ſo let vs vnderſtand ỹ Gods liberality ſheweth it ſelf after al ſorts to vs, and ỹ therfore wee haue the iuſter cauſe to loue him more and more, & to yeeld him all praiſe. For haue we Rom.6.4. his word? It is a free gift aforehand, whereby he Col.2.12. hath bound vs vnto him. Haue we his ſacramẽts? They be the badges of his fatherly election: we haue not deſerued any of all theſe thinges. But aboue all, when it pleaſeth him to imprint the Eph.1.13.

certainetie of his promises in our heartes by his holy spirite: then is it a speciall adoption, then doeth hee shewe vs that wee bee of the little nomber whome hee hath reserued to himselfe. And so (as I sayde afore,) wee see that in all respectes wee must keepe our mouthes shut from bragging of any thing: and on the other side haue it open to magnifie Gods goodnesse which he vttereth towardes vs.

Nowe herevpon Moses addeth, That God will keepe couenaunt to a thousande generations of them that lone him: yea through his mercie, saieth he. For as much as he treateth of the generall election: therefore he exhorteth the people to bethinke themselues aduisedly. Note ye (saith he) that for as much as God hath promised your father Abraham to be the God of his seede after him: he wil not faile you. But yet for all that, looke ỹ ye walk warely, for the couenant is made with condition, that ye must be found and haue a right meaning heart. Therefore thinke not but that your God can driue you out of his house and out of his Church, if he finde you vnworthie of the benefit which he hath offred vnto you. With ỹ meaning doeth Moses speake, when he putteth here a difference betweene them that loue him and keepe his commaundements, and them that hate him. Now by these wordes we be taught, ỹ when God offereth vs his word, it is alreadie an allying of himself to vs, & a giuing of vs a record of our saluation: but yet doth it not follow ỹ we may therfore be careless. Nay rather we must be quickened vp to imbrace ỹ promises which he sendeth vs, so as we may rest wholly vpon them, and bee stedfastly setled in them all our life long. That is a thing wherevpon it behoueth vs to think. True it is that God layeth open his heart vnto vs whē his word is preached vnto vs: there we beput in minde of his loue, and also haue full assurance of our saluation. But yet must ỹ word enter in vnto our heart, & preuaile with vs: which thing is not done but through faith. And so let vs vnderstād ỹ Gods electiō is as it were defeated by vs, vnlesse we be cōstant & continue stedfastly in it to ỹ end.

Rom.10.7.

But yet Moses noteth here againe, that this Couenant which God maketh with them ỹ beleeue him and obey him, is of his owne Mercie, least we should imagine that God respecteth our deseruings, as we see that men are commonly giuen to think: in so much ỹ if they meete but with a syllable which seemeth to tell them ỹ they may deserue I wote not what: they be puffed vp with pride, and beleeue wonders of themselues. That is the cause why Moses saieth expresly, ỹ God wil performe his couenāt & mercy. And he sheweth wherein this couenant consisteth. It is not ỹ wee on our side do bring him any thing why he shold loue vs: but ỹ he is mercifull vnto vs, as we see is said in the hundred & third Psalme. True it is ỹ euen there God requireth that wee should feare him, & indeuour to keepe his commandements. But yet howsoeuer the world go, he sheweth vs alwayes that the thing which wee must vnderstand of him, is that he vseth pitie in handling vs gently through his grace, and not according to our deseruing. Therefore let vs beare this saying well in minde and weigh it throughly, where Moses telleth vs that the couenant which God maketh with vs, lieth wholly in his goodnes and no where elsse: and that it is not for vs to puffe vp our selues with fooliſh presumption, as though we were worthie of such a benefite, or as though God did but recompence vs: but that wee must alwayes looke vp to his goodnesse, so as when wee come vnto him, wee doe nothing else but say, Alas Lord, we be sure that thou receiuest vs to mercy as wretched creatures, and therefore vouchsafe to haue regard of our miseries, by shedding out thy mercy vpon vs. That is the thing whereof we be put in minde in this text.

Pſal.103.13 & 14.

Nowe furthermore Moses sheweth howe wee may keepe Gods commandements: ỹ is to wit, by hauing ỹ things which haue bin treated of heretofore. And they be maner of speeches which import so profitable doctrine, ỹ it is good to renue ỹ remembrance of them, whē the text offereth occasion therof. Moses therefore ment to do vs to vnderstand, that to abstaine frō doing of euill, & to keepe the things contained in the law to outward show, is not all ỹ we haue to doe. As for example, if a mā haue not blasphemed the name of God, if he haue not led a disordered lyfe, if he haue not bin an adulterer, a theefe, a quareller, or a periured person, but haue liued honestly: all this will not suffice him. For why? Such seruice may be by constraint, so as the partie shall not obey of his owne free will, nor delight in submitting himselfe to Gods righteousnesse, to frame his life thereafter. That is the cause why Moses beginneth here with loue. As if he should say, that ỹ beginning of good obedience to Godward, and of liuing according to his Law: is to determine ẅ our selues to delight in nothing more, thā to yeld our selues to him with al obedientnes, & to make that our whole pleasure, accordingly as wee see how Dauid protesteth, that Gods Law was more sweete and pleasant vnto him than honnie: and not only that he did set more store by it, than by gold & siluer: but also that he imbraced it ẅ such loue, as he gaue not himselfe to the pleasures of the world, nor was caried away with wicked affections to doe euill: but gaue himselfe wholly to well doing, and to walke according to Gods wil. So then, to offer willing sacrifices vnto God, let vs remember what is said in this text, and what hath bin treated of alreadie heretofore: namely that before there is any speech of the keeping of Gods commandements, Loue is set downe in the first place, bicause wee haue neede to giue our selues first vnto GOD, and to haue our hearts (as ye woulde say) fast tyed and knit vnto him, ere we can indeuour to behaue our selues according to his lawe and righteousnesse.

Deut.5.10. & 6,5.

But nowe let vs returne to the matter that was touched before. Moses sayeth That GOD will keepe Couenant, yea euen with a thousand generations of them that lone him. As if hee shoulde say, When God hath once planted his worde: hee continueth that grace, not onely till the decease of those to whome he speaketh, but also to their children and their offspring. Nowe then let vs looke about vs, and whereas wee perceiue Gods grace in that he hath vouchſafed to reſerue vnto vs his word which was in maner aboliſhed, and will haue the ſame now preached vnto vs: if wee (I ſay) perceiue his goodneſſe in that behalfe: let vs alſo hope that hee will continue the ſame towardes our children which hee hath begunne towardes vs, if wee ſerue him by dooing the thinges that hee commaundeth vs. Ye ſee then that the goodneſſe which God ſheweth vs in his word, muſt not make vs ſlouthfull and careleſſe: but rather bee as a ſpurre to pricke vs foreward vnto him, that his holy couenant bee not broken on our part and through our default.

Furthermore whereas he ſayeth, Knowe thou that thy God is God, yea and a ſtrong God: thereby he meant to ſeparate the liuing God from all the idols which the world hath forged in al ages. And it is a text well woorth the noting. For wee ſhall neuer ſerue God with all our heart, neither ſhall wee be able to truſt in him and to reſt vpon him, vnleſſe we be ſure that he is almightie, and that he onely is God. No doubt but the vnbeleeuers may well beare themſelues in hand for a time that their religion is good, and the worlde ſeeth how wilfull they be in that behalfe: but yet all is but ſtubbornneſſe whatſoeuer they make of it. And therefore it behoueth vs to be fully reſolued and perſwaded of this, that wee muſt not haue a flying faith, ſo as our hoping to be ſaued is but at al aduenture. For we muſt alwayes beare in minde, how S. Paule ſaieth that we muſt know whom wee beleeue, and that God is a faithfull keeper of that which wee haue committed vnto him. Then if we know not that our God is one, and that he is alone, and that he is the verie true God: we ſhal be alwayes wauering and our faith ſhall haue no ſtedineſſe. That is the cauſe why Moſes ſaieth expreſly, Know thou that thy God is the God. As if he ſhould ſay, Conſider in what ſtate the wretched heathen mē and ſuch as giue ouer themſelues to ſuperſtition are. It is true that they wil talk ynough of God: howbeit, ỹ is but rouingly, they knowe not who he is. But it is not ſo with you. For ſeeing that your God hath taught you, and diſcouered himſelf to you: he hath certified you of his wil, and ſhewed you that ye need not doubt but your religion is ſuch as you ought to ſticke to. Now then, ſwarue neither one way nor other, neither halt ye, but go on right forth, ſeeing you bee ſure of your religion. Marke that for one point.

2. Tim. 1. 12.

Howbeit, for as much as we ſee men giuen to follow their own fanſies, which notwithſtanding doe but tend to their owne deſtruction: we muſt remember by this text of Moſes, that vntill ſuch time as we be ſure that the God whō we worſhip is the true God: wee ſhall euer bee intangled in ſome one thing or other. And albeit that we doe our indeuor to ſerue him, at leaſtwiſe to our ſeeming: yet is it nothing, it is but faining, and that hope or truſt is but a beſotting of our ſelues. Wel may we haue ſome opinion: but as for to haue a ſetled faith, ſo as we may glorie that our ſaluation is laidē vp in God, and that he will keepe it ſafely bicauſe he hath taken vs to himſelf: it is vnpoſſible that we ſhould haue any ſuch certaintie, vnleſſe wee can ſay with Saint Paule, I knowe whom I haue beleeued, and he will be a faithfull keeper of that which I haue committed vnto him. So then, let vs put ſuch difference betweene the liuing God, and all the idols which men haue forged of their owne braine: as he may be knowē alone aboue all others. And that we may ſo doe, let vs learne to deuiſe nothing of our own head. For as ſoone as wee father any thing vpon God which is not in his owne word: it is all one as if wee did ſet vp an idoll: for by that meane we diſguiſe him. Therefore wee muſt ſo ſticke to the liuing God, to the ende we may bee his people, and hearken quietly to ſo much of his will as he ſheweth vs by his worde: as it may ſuffice vs to haue ſo much knowledge of him as he hath reuealed by his word, without ſeeking any further. For as for thoſe that are ſo bolde as to take leaue to ſay, I weene this is good, and why ſhould not God take this or that in good worth? and in the meane while haue no warrant of the holy ſcripture: I ſay they forſake the liuing GOD, and turne away after idoles. For what elſe are the imaginations of men, but verie idoles to deface the true Maieſtie of the onely God? Thus much concerning this place.

Moreouer Moſes termeth God Faithfull, to ſhewe that like as afore, he attributed ſtrength vnto him, (for the Hebrewe worde that he vſeth commeth therof:) ſo muſt we alſo haue his truth before our eyes and in our remembraunce, to the end to leane vnto him & to referre our ſelues wholly vnto him, knowing that Gods ſtrength ſerueth not to abaſh vs, but that whenſoeuer it is ſpoken of, it is matched immediatly with mercy, to the intent we ſhould be drawen vnto him, and come to him with a cheerefuller courage. Then is it not without cauſe that Moſes hath ſet down Gods trueth heere, of purpoſe to hold the people in obedience to him. And heereby wee bee taught, not to preace into Gods priuities, and to diſpute of thinges that are too high for vs, yea and vtterly vncomprehenſible: but rather that wee muſt reſt vppon his word and trueth, which he hath reuealed vnto vs. True it is that we muſt bee fully perſwaded of this point, that GOD choſe vs in his euerlaſting purpoſe, not bicauſe wee were woorthie of it, but bicauſe it pleaſed him ſo to doe: and that there is none other cauſe thereof but onely his good pleaſure, as the holy Scripture ſheweth vs. And ſo let vs vnderſtande, that although wee haue Gods worde: yet will God haue pitie on whome hee will haue pitie, according to Saint Paules alledging of the ſame text, to ſhewe that albeit the multitude of people to whome the Goſpell is preached bee neuer ſo great, yet God reſerueth whome he liſteth to himſelfe, and it is meete he ſhoulde ſo doe, and yet notwithſtanding we haue cauſe to glorifie him howſoeuer thinges goe, without attempting in any wiſe to grudge at it. But haue we knowē that? Would we be aſſured of our ſaluation? We muſt reſort not only to Gods grace, but alſo chiefely to ỹ promiſes wherby he vttereth his loue towardes vs, as is ſaid alreadie.

Eph. 1. 4. 5.

Yee

Yee ſee then that the cauſe why Moſes doth in this place attribute the title of Faithful vnto God, is to the end that when folke will be ſure of their ſaluation, they ſhould not enter into fooliſh imaginations, but looke vnto Gods woord which is before their eyes, whereupon they may be bold to reſt. So then let it content vs that our Lorde allureth vs to him, and that the death & paſſion of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt together with his righteouſneſſe is ſet afore vs, ſo as wee know that by that meanes we may bee reconciled vnto God, to the end ỹ our ſins be not imputed vnto vs, but that we may be acceptable vnto him. Seing that this is ſet down vnto vs: let vs take hold of Gods faithfulneſſe which Moſes ſpeaks of here, and let vs not thinke that God offereth vs ſuch a benefite to deceiue vs, but that he doth it to the ende that we ſhould glorifie him in the middes of our miſeries, and that although wee bee ſilie fraile creatures: yet we may ſay that the life of Ieſus Chriſt belongeth vnto vs, and that we be already lifted vp to ſit with him in the kingdome of heauen. Thus ye ſee what we haue to beare in mind concerning the woord Faithfull.

Ro.5.10.18. Eph.1.7.

Now for a concluſion Moſes addeth a threat, ſaying: that God alſo will requite like for like to ſuche as hate him, yea euen to their faces, & that he wil not foreſlow. In this place there is ſome darkſomneſſe in the woordes of Moſes: for hee interchaungeth the number. God (ſaith hee) will yeild recompence to ſuch as hate him to his face, or before his face. Then doth he ſhift the number, & it ſeemeth that whereas he ſayth they hate him to his face, he ment to ſay that wee ſpyte God or hate God to his face when wee fall out into diſorder and are ſo rebellious, as it ſhould ſeeme that we would run againſt him, and defie him to be at open warre with him. But for as much as that woord is repeted twice, and in the end it appeareth that Moſes ſpake of the faces of the tranſgreſſors: no doubt but it is a chaunging of the number, as the holy Scripture is commonly wont to doe. Therefore the very meaning of it, is that God will requite them to their faces, by making the hatred to turne backe vppon themſelues. Otherſome take it as though it were ſpoken of their lifetime, that God will not only puniſh the wicked and the deſpiſers of his Lawe, after this preſent life: but alſo execute his vengeance vppon them aforehande to the ſight of mens eys, ſo as we ſhalbe prouoked to feare him, by ỹ ſight of ỹ puniſhments which he wil ſo execute vppon the diſobedient. Otherſome take it that God will requite it to his face, as though it were ſayd ỹ wheras he ſpareth the wicked in this world, it is to the ende to ouerthrowe them and deſtroy them vtterly afterward, according as it is ſayde by the prophet, that God pampereth thoſe whom he puniſheth not out of hand, like as men doe fatte an Ox or a ſwine when they intend to kill him. And the prophet vſeth that ſimilitude, to the intent wee ſhould not enuy the wicked, when we ſee them proſper. For is an Ox or a Swine to bee enuied, which is fatted but to the ſlaughter? and which ſhall haue his throte cut when he is once fatte? Now then, God handleth the wicked and the deſpiſers of his maieſtie after ſuch a ſort, as he may ſeeme to loue them: but it is to haſten them the ſooner to their deſtruction. And truly this is a good and profitable leſſon: but as touching the preſent place, if wee read all the wordes of Moſes throughout, there is no darkeneſſe at all in them. For why? he addeth, God wil not foreſlowe to requite them that hate him, euery man in his face. And ſo Moſes ment in effect to ſhewe, that men may be paſt ſhame in rebelling againſt God: but yet in the end they ſhal find that they haue too rough an aduerſarie: and therefore God muſt be faine to pull them by the beardes to make them ỹ more aſhamed. It is true ỹ as now they vtter great brags, and it ſhold ſeeme that they would make God aſhamed, and put him to the foyle: but he can well skill to ouermatch them in ſuch wiſe, as they ſhalbe faine to receiue their payment in their owne perſons, yea and euen in their faces, according as it is ſayd in the fifteeth pſalme, I wil reproue thee to thy face. And in that place God pleadeth expreſly againſt hypocrites. How now, ſayth hee? Becommeth it thee to take my name in thy mouth? Thou boaſteſt thy ſelfe to bee myne: and thou wilt needes play the preacher, and defile my holy law with thy ſtinking mouth. Now when thou doeſt me ſuch iniurie as to take vpon thee to be a prophet, and to ſpeake in my name, and in the meane while doeſt match and accõpany thy ſelfe with whoremongers, quarelers, and raylers: what will come of it in the ende? When I haue borne with thee a while, I will reproue thee to thy teeth, ſaieth he. Hee vſeth there the woord Face as he doth here in this text: but it is a common ſpeeche in our language, to ſay that it is ſpoken to a mans teeth, face or heade. That then is the naturall ſenſe of Moſes.

Pſal.50.16. 21.

Ier.12.3.

And heere we be warned to humble our ſelues before God, and to ſtoop in ſuch wiſe as we prouoke him not to wrath through our hardneſſe & ſhameleſneſſe, ſo as he ſhould ſhewe himſelfe to be our aduerſarie, to requite vs to our face, that is to ſay in our owne perſons, by being driuen to come before him to bee puniſhed according to our deſertes. Then let vs not harden our hearts againſt our God, but let vs learne to caſt downe our eyes when he ſpeaketh vnto vs. It is true indeed that wee ought to lift vp our heades when wee heare the promiſes of his goodneſſe, ſo as faith muſt make vs to ſtie aboue the cloudes. But yet doth not this let vs that wee ſhould not ſtill bee aſhamed in our ſelues, and haue an eye to our owne wretchednеſſe, and learne to bee ſory for it, and thereupon labour to liue in the feare of God, bowing downe our neckes continually to receiue his yoke, and to beare it patiently. Thus ye ſee what we haue to marke as in reſpect of this word face, where it is ſayd ỹ God wil recompence them all to their faces, which doe hate him.

But heere by the way a man might make a queſtion, concerning this ſaying of Moſes, that God wil not foreſlowe to pay them to their faces, which hate him. For it is commonly ſeene that the wicked doe ſpend all their daies and all their whole life in proſperitie, ſo as it ſhoulde ſeeme that God is willing to pleaſe them in all thinges; in ſo much that it is ſayd of them in the Pſal.73.12. pſalme, that they goe on in continuall proſperitie vnto their death, and pine not away as the children of God doe. Howe then is it ſaide that Num.14.18. God wil not forſlowe, ſeeing hee is long ſuffering? And men may ſee it with their eyes, though it were not toulde them in woordes. Theſe Pſal.103.8. two thinges agree very well. For although God winke at thinges for a tyme, and puniſh not the wicked out of hand: when all is welreckened, the reſpite that hee giueth them will not bee ſo long, but that it ſhall euer bee true, that ſuddain deſtruction ſhall ouerwhelme them. And for proofe thereof, when the wicked ſay, Peace, 1.Theſſ.5.3. all is ſafe: then ſhall the ſuddeine ſtorme fall Eſa.28.15. vppon their heades. When they thinke themſelues to haue made a compoſition with death: then ſhall they bee ouertaken as a woman that falleth in labour of child dre ſhee bee aware, bicauſe ſhee miſtruſted not that the houre or inſtant of hir trauell had bin ſo neere at hand. Euē after the ſame maner doth God ouerwhelme all ſuch as ſhall haue abuſed his patience, when he hath borne with them for a time. Now then although God ſhew not himſelfe a iudge to them ſo ſoone as we would: yet doeth he not faile to deſtroy them without foreſlowing. Therefore let vs haue an eye to the ſhortneſſe of our life, leaſt we fall aſleepe: and let vs vnderſtand, that although God make not haſt after our opinion: yet notwithſtanding he foreſloweth not, bicauſe he forgetteth not the offences which he winketh at, and which he puniſheth not out of hand. Let that ſerue for one point.

And let vs mark further, that God hath not indented with vs ſo as wee may ſay he ought to let vs alone vnpuniſhed vntill death. For although hee execute not his iudgements all after one rate: yet doth he often puniſh the wicked euen heere, and ſhewe vs examples before our eyes, to teach vs to ſtande in awe of him, as the pro- Eſa.59.19. phet ſpeaketh of it. Seeing then that God will alwayes ſhew himſelfe to be our Iudge, both during this mortal life, & after our death: Let vs not delay our returning vnto him from day to day, but let euery man quicken vp himſelfe, & walke carefully, forasmuch as if any man fall aſleepe, if he wil be wel wakened againe, he muſt be faine to ſet this ſaying of Moſes before his face, That God will pay them all home which do hate him. Truely ỹ wickedeſt creatures that be will not ſay they hate God: but yet it is ſo in deede. And for proofe therof, all ſuch as are deſirous to haue liberty to liue naughtily, to giue themſelues to all iniquitie, could find in their heartes that there were no God in heauen to iudge them. To bee ſhort, if we loue God, wee take pleaſure in goodneſſe. But we cannot loue him without his Iuſtice: for they be things which cannot goe aſunder. Therefore let vs conclude, that as long as wee doe euill wee hate God. And why? For inaſmuch as we bee loth there ſhould bee any order or gouernment in the world: wee would not that he ſhould be acknowledged with his righteouſnes and goodnes. Now then, when the wicked doe giue themſelues the brydle to deſpiſe God and to tranſgreſſe his commaundementes: they coulde finde in their heartes to haue him plucked out of heauen if it were poſſible. Wherefore let vs marke well, that God doeth not without cauſe auow, that al ſuch as breake his commaundementes are his deadly enemies, inaſmuch as they be againſt his Iuſtice, without the which he cannot be God. And therefore let vs beare in minde the thing that hath beene declared already, namely that if wee purpoſe to obey God, we muſt honour him in ſuch ſorte, as we may like well of his Iuſtice and miſlike of euil dealing: & that although we fall into it through infirmitie, yet we may pray God to lift vs out againe, and ſo to holde vs vp by his power, as our whole ſeeking may be to ſubmit our ſelues vnto him, and to forſake all our owne affections and euill luſtes in ſuch wiſe, as we may bee reformed according to his righteouſnes, and conſequently obey his holy Law.

Now let vs caſt our ſelues downe in ỹ preſence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faults, praying him ſo to beare with vs in thē, as he vſe not ỹ rigor towards vs which we haue deſerued: but ỹ of his infinite goodnes he reache vs his hand, & print his word after ſuch ſort in our hearts, as it may take roote there, and wee neuer ſwarue any way from it, nor he ſuffer ſuch bleſſing to become vnprofitable through our fault & vnthankfulnes: but that we may make it auailable, by receiuing the promiſes of our ſaluation, to continue ſtedfaſtly in them vnto the end, and by ſhewing our ſelues willing to bring to paſſe ỹ God may be honored & ſerued, not only as long as we liue, but alſo after our deceaſe, ſo as they ỹ come after vs may continue in exalting & magnifying his glorie, that he may be worſhipped on all hands with one cōmon accord, vntill he haue rid vs quite and cleane from all the vanities and corruptions of this world, & made vs partakers of the glorious immortalitie which wee poſſeſſe not as yet but by hope. That it may pleaſe him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs but alſo, &c.

The Liiij. Sermon which is the fourth vpon the ſeuenth Chapter.

command thee this day to doe them.

12 And it will come to passe, that because yee haue heard these Lawes and kept them and done them, the Lord thy God wil also performe the couenant and mercie vnto thee, which he sware to thy Fathers.

13 And he will loue thee, and blesse thee, and multiply thee: & he wil blesse the fruite of thy wombe, and the fruite of thy land: thy corne and thy wine, and thine oyle, and the increase of thy kine and the flocks of thy sheepe, in the Lande which he sware to thy Fathers to giue thee.

14 Thou shalt bee blessed aboue all nations, and there shall not bee either male or female barren among you, or among thy Cattell.

15 The Lord will take from thee all diseases, and all the euill plagues of Egypt which thou hast knowen. Hee will not lay them vpon thee, but vpon all those that hate thee.

WE see here againe the thing that hath bin treated of alredy heretofore: namely that God indeuoreth to drawe vs to him by gentleneſſe. It were enough for him to shew vs his will: howbeit forasmuch as our nature draweth the cleane cõtrary way, he setteth his promises afore vs to win vs withall, & to prouoke vs to serue him the better. Therefore whensoeuer God promiseth to blesse vs, & to mak vs to prosper so we serue him: thereby we be put in minde of ỹ singular goodneſſe & loue which he beareth towardes vs. For is he bound to doe it? Nay, ought not euery of vs to streine our selues, (yea euẽ aboue our power,) to serue him? Are we not bounde thereto by nature? Yes: and therefore let vs marke well, that whereas God voutsafeth to tel vs that if we serue him he will be fauorable and mercifull vnto vs: his so dooing proceedeth of his own meere free-goodneſſe. And if that moue vs not: the worlde may see what our vnthankfulneſſe is. But yet by the way let vs marke well, ỹ his promises should stand vs in no stead, if our Lord supplyed not our defaults, I mean euen whẽ we be best minded to serue him, for else should we come farre short of ỹ perfection ỹ is required of vs. All his promises then should nothing boote vs, if he did not beare with vs: and so is he faine to vse dubble grace towardes vs. Howbeit to ỹ intent ỹ things may be the better vnderstoode: let vs see first of all how it may agree, ỹ God should blesse vs of his owne free goodneſſe, & make vs to prosper: & yet notwithstanding match it with this condition, ỹ we serue & honor him. For at the first sight there seemeth to be some disagreement in it. If God loue vs without respect of our deseruinges: there ought to be no iffes nor conditions in the matter.

But he putteth them to it, as we see in this text: yea & all the whole scripture is full of the same doctrine, namely that God recompenceth euery man as they shall haue serued him. How can it thẽ be, that God should both haue respect of our life: & also loue vs of his owne free mercy? Let vs marke well the wordes that Moses vseth here. For he sayth that God will performe his couenant and mercy according as he hath promised, if he be honored and serued. In saying that God will performe his couenant and mercie, he sheweth vs well that we must not begin at our owne seruice, as though we would bring any thing vnto God to moue him to loue vs: For whereupon is his couenant grounded? Euen vppon his mercie. Now thẽ let vs see what his mercie is, & whereto it ought to be referred. First of all, it is his chosing of vs. Although wee be vtterly froward, & deserue to be shaken off at his hand: yet doth he take vs into his fauor. Thus is it already a great and inestimable mercie, that although God find vs lost and damned creatures: yet he vouchsafeth to take vs for his people, aduauncing vs to such dignitie as to be of his housholde and Church. Now when he hath so begun, he must be faine to hold out still: that is to say, he must be faine to like well of vs continually by reason of the same free fauor which he beareth vs, and all for our Lorde Iesus Christes sake. So then, God maintaineth his mercy towards vs, bycause he pitieth our wretchednesse and miserie. And although we be not wortyie to be receiued: yet doeth he accept vs. And wherefore? Becauſe he loueth vs in the person of his only son. But there is yet more: that is to wit ỹ he vseth mercy towards vs, in bearing with our imperfections, and by that meanes accepteth our seruice, so that although it be faultie and haue always some blemish in it: yet notwithstanding he admitteth it of his owne goodneſſe. Now we see what the couenant importeth, which Moses speaketh of here: namely that first and foremost God receiueth vs to mercye, euen without finding any thing but vtter cursednesse in vs. And secondly, that he continueth his fauour towards vs for loue of his only son, notwithstanding ỹ he might find iust cause in vs, to shake vs off and to hate vs. And thirdly, that he accepteth our workes & taketh them for good, so as although they be (as ye would say) but halfe done, and haue alwayes some faulte mingled with them: yet notwithstanding he ceaseth not to admit them as if they were righteous and sound, and all by vertue of the said couenaunt, as I saide afore. Now then we see it is no incõuenience, ỹ God should blesse vs and make vs to prosper when wee haue serued him: and yet notwithstanding that his loving of

vs ſhould bee, not for any woorthineſſe or deſertes of ours: but for his owne free goodneſſe ſake, without any other reaſon that wee can alledge, than that he hath choſen vs and made vs partakers of the righteouſneſſe that is in our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, that thereby all our filthineſſe may be couered and hidden.

But as ſoone as the ignoraunt ſort doe heare of the woord Condition, they beare themſelues in hand that God maketh ſome payment, & that when he ſheweth vs any fauour, he doth it in recompence of our deſertes. And by that meanes the wretched Papiſts doe blind themſelues with vain preſumption, & quite ouerthrow thēſelues by perking vp after that faſhion againſt God, & therefore they muſt at length be caſt downe in their ouerloftines. For whereunto do they leane? Beholde (ſay they,) God telleth vs that he will bleſſe vs if we ſerue him: therefore it followeth that all the promiſes which he maketh are conditionall. Yea, but they haue ill ſtudied the holy ſcripture, when they cannot diſcerne betweene the promiſes as they be ſet downe in the Lawe, and the thinges that God addeth to thē to ſupply our default. For if wee take the promiſes ſo rawely: that is to wit, that God will bleſſe none but them that ſerue him: wee ſhall all of vs bee ſhut out from hope. For which of vs ſerueth God with all his heart and with all his ſoule as God hath expreſſely commaunded vs? Nay contrariwiſe we drag backward, and by nature wee be deadly enemies vnto him, becauſe all ỹ thoughts and affections that are in vs doe fight againſt his will. Then are wee ſo farre of from being able to ſerue him as wee ſhould doe, that wee make war againſt him, and ceaſe not to prouoke his wrath againſt vs. Nay verily, euen when God hath reformed vs by his holy ſpirit, ſo as he hath giuen vs ſome good diſpoſition, wherethrough wee be inclyned to ſerue him, and to be ſhort, wee ſhew that his ſpirit reigneth in vs by ſubduing of our vices and of the wicked luſtes which are in vs by nature: yet come we ſtil far ſhort of the marke which wee ſhould tend vnto. It is true that wee will trauell thitherward, as all the faithfull doe, whoſe chiefe regard and principall deſire is to ſerue God: but yet doe they finde themſelues ſo ſore combered as maketh them to ſhudder at it. When they bee about to ſtirre one finger foreward, the reſt of their body drawes backward. It is much if they can but trayne themſelues: that is to ſay, if they can get forward a little & coldely. And therefore they be driuen to ſigh & grone, and to condemne themſelues, beſeeching God to vouchſafe to hearten them better, and to take away all the lets that are in themſelues. For he that is perfecteſt, condemneth himſelfe moſt: inſomuch that the true perfection that is in mē during this mortall lyfe, is to knowe the euill that is in vs and how wretched we be.

Rom. 8. 7.

On the contrary part, as for thoſe that make themſelues idols, bearing themſelues in hand that they bee come already to the higheſt toppe of perfection: they burſt themſelues with pride, and doe but ſhroude a ſeeret filthineſſe within, whereby they bewray that they knowe not yet what it is to loue God and to ſerue him. For otherwiſe they ſhould neuer bee ſo blinded with madſelfetruſt, as to beare themſelues in hand that they bee throughly righteous. Seeing then that although we indeuer neuer ſo much to ſerue God, we ſhall go limping and dragge our legges after vs: let vs bee ſure that God ſhall neuer bee in daunger or det to any of vs, but rather wee ſhall be condemned in all our workes. We may well alledge, I was willing, and I did mine indeuer: but that is not all that wee haue to doe. For the will ſhall alwayes be found very weake, ſo as if wee haue one good affection, there ſhall be a doſen euil ones for it. And ſo by that meanes al of vs ſhould be diſappoynted of the hope that God giueth vs by his promiſes, if they ſhould be taken ſo rawely & according to the naked letter where it is ſayd: If yee ſerue mee, I will doe yee good. But nowe let men ſtreine themſelues as much as they liſt: when they come to their audit there will bee ſo many abatements, as wil ſhewe that all Gods promiſes can ſtand them in no ſtead. And therefore they muſt come to ỹ ſecond remedie, which is that God ſupplieth our defaultes: and that although all our workes deſerue naught elſe but condemnation, yet notwithſtanding God accepteth them and taketh them for good, of his owne fatherly goodneſſe: and not of any duetie that hee is bounde vnto. Then let vs not bee ſo blinde as the wretched papiſtes, who when they heare that God addeth any condition to his promiſes, doe by & by ſtep vp with their ergoes, and fall to deſcanting of their owne free will and deſeruinges. But contrariwiſe, let vs aſſure our ſelues that when God ſpeaketh to vs in ſuch order of ſpeach as is ſhewed vs here, although hee come to vs with gentleneſſe: yet doth it nothing auaile vs, vntill he vſe his own meere mercie to ſaue vs throughout, not for any deſert of ours, but becauſe it pleſeth him ſo to doe. Marke ỹ for a ſpecial poynt.

And therewithall let vs marke alſo, that if the good which God doth to men in the thinges that concerne this tranſitory lyfe, doe proceede of his mercie: much more reaſon is it that the immortall heritage cannot bee gotten by our owne ſtrength, but that God muſt be faine to giue it vs of his owne meere liberalitie or free gift. And whereof ſpeaketh Moſes in this place? He ſayth, God will bleſſe thy Cattell, God will bleſſe thy Corne, Wine, and Oyle. All theſe are tranſitory thinges: and how is it that God proſpereth vs in them? By his mercie, ſaith he. And he ſheweth expreſſly that Gods couenant proceedeth not from any other ſpring, nor hath any other roote than that, no not euen in caſes concerning this flightfull lyfe and theſe tranſitorie thinges. Now if in promiſing to proſper vs in our Cattell, in our Landes, & in the bread which we eate, God haue not an eye to any worthineſſe of ours, but onely vouchſafeth to ſhew himſelfe a liberall & kindehearted father towardes vs: what will hee doe in caſes concerning the making of vs partakers of the heauenly glory? I beſeech you, can wee alledge any deſertes in that behalfe? No: for then ſhold Oxen & kine be of more eſtimation with him than than mens ſoules. Therefore let vs marke well the thinges that I haue touched: namely that wee may well vnderſtand aforehand howe greatly God loueth vs, by his promiſing of reward & recompence for our workes. For he doth it not of any duetie, but to win vs by gentlenesſe and louingneſſe. Yet notwithſtanding let vs vnderſtand moreouer, ỹ the ſame ſhall neuer boote vs a whit, vnleſſe our Lord proceede yet further in ſhewing himſelfe liberall towards vs: namely ỹ after he hath receiued vs to mercie, euẽ vs which were vtterly loſt & damned, he doe alſo loue vs for our Lord Ieſus Chriſtes ſake, and thereupon beare with all the imperfections ỹ are in vs without intẽding to impute thẽ to vs, ſo as our workes may pleaſe him, although they deſerue it not. For that is verifyed euen in theſe baſe thinges beneath. When we take our repaſt of the bread wherewith we be ſuſteined: wee muſt acknowledge that the ſame commeth of ỹ meere goodneſſe of our God. And lykewiſe when wee haue done our indeuour to ſerue him, [wee muſt acknowledge] that he is not any whit beholden vnto vs for it, but (which more is) that the good affection which we haue, is giuen vs of him, and yet that all this is nothing, becauſe there is ſome faultineſſe in it. Therefore it muſt needs be, that Gods receiuing of vs into fauor, is not for that he oweth vs any thing, but for that he loueth vs. Now ſeeing that God wil haue his mercy knowẽ in theſe corruptible thinges: what will hee haue done in the euerlaſting ſaluation of our ſoules?

But here might a queſtion bee moued, that ſeeing God reſpecteth not our merites when he doth vs good: why vſeth he this maner of ſpeach which we reade here in Moſes? There are two reaſons. The one is, that he intendeth to make vs feele his grace ỹ better, by driuing vs to graſt that none of al ỹ things which he behighteth vs could take effect, if our workes ſhould be reſpected, & therefore that he muſt be faine to bury all our ſinnes, & to accept vs of his owne free goodneſſe. This would be ſomewhat with ỹ darkeſt, if it ſhould not be layd forth more at lẽgth. His ſaying (in effect,) is that wheras God telleth vs, that if we ſerue him, he wil bleſſe vs and proſper vs: his intent is that euery of vs ſhould examine himſelfe, and conſider at what point wee be with him. And when we once know ỹ in ſtead of ſeruing him, we doe prouoke him againſt vs & greeue him, as though wee had conſpired to doe ſo of wilful malice: & when we once knowe that we bee ſo greatly in his daunger euen by nature; then will all vaine ſelfetruſt bee beaten downe in vs, & we wil haue none other minde, than to reſort to ỹ mercy that is promiſed vs, and to flee thither for refuge, ſo as we ſhalbe quite & cleane bereft of ỹ fonde opiniõ which we had cõceiued of our owne workes, & not thinke thẽ any more to be meritorious. Thus ye ſee what we haue to note for the firſt reaſon.

The ſecond is ỹ foraſmuch as God hath pitied vs, he beareth with our workes, & intendeth not to ſift them with rigor, but admitteth thẽ for good & auaileable, though there be many infirmities & vices in thẽ. But yet for all ỹ, wee muſt vnderſtand ỹ he will not ſo beare w̃ our infirmities, ỹ we ſhould take leaue to abuſe his mercies: for then ſhould we deale too lewdly. And yet neuertheleſſe it appeareth by experiẽce, ỹ as ſoone as men heare ỹ God forgiueth thẽ their ſinnes, & ſaueth them of his owne goodneſſe, they diſpence w̃ themſelues, & take leaue to doe euil: & vnder colour ỹ they bee freed frõ ỹ bondage and curſedneſſe wherin they were by nature, they ouerſhoot thẽſelues into all diſorder. But God wil not be ſo mocked, he wil not haue the goodneſſe which he vſeth towardes vs, to be made an occaſiõ of ſinning. For our Lord Ieſus Chriſt is come to deſtroy ỹ kingdome of Satan, as it is ſhewed vs. So then, although God wil haue vs to impute al ỹ good which he doth vs, vnto his free mercie: yet doth he put this cõditiõ to it, ỹ he wil haue vs to ſerue him. Although the inheritãce which is promiſed vs depẽd not vpon our owne workes: yet will hee haue vs to be his children for it, ſeeing he ſheweth himſelfe to bee our father. Although it become vs not to looke for any thing in reſpect of all ỹ ſeruice ỹ wee doe him, foraſmuch as we be well aſſured that they be not of ſuch value as we can reſt vpon thẽ: yet notwithſtanding inaſmuch as God hath called vs to him into ỹ way of ſaluatiõ: he wil not haue vs to ſal to kicking againſt him. His Church muſt not bee a Hoggeſcote, but a tẽple dedicated to his honor. So then, ſeeing God hath adopted vs, wee muſt liue as his childrẽ, ſo as wee may ſhew ỹ he hath not called & inuited vs to ỹ inheritãce of ỹ heauẽly life in vaine. For if we can finde no ſauor in it, are we not worthie to be baniſhed & ſhut out of it? Yes. Again, if we go thitherward, ought we not to deſpiſe theſe tranſitory thinges, and to paſſe through this world as ſtraũgers, & not to be wedded to this earthly traſh? That thẽ is the ſecond reaſon why our Lord addeth ỹ cõdition that he will be ſerued & honoured at our handes. And therefore let vs learne in fewe wordes, ỹ when we haue done homage to our God for our euerlaſting ſaluatiõ, & for al the tẽporall & tranſitory goods ỹ he beſtoweth vpon vs in this worlde: it behoueth vs to vnderſtãd, ỹ his adopting of vs to be his children, is to ỹ intẽt to be honored by vs, & his calling of vs into his Church is to the end we ſhould be as his houſholdfolke & not as wild beaſtes, ſeeing we be of his flock. For he wil haue ſuch ſheepe as ſhall hearken to his voyce. And ỹ is the cauſe why it is ſayd expreſly in this text, Yee ſhall keepe all the ſtatutes, cõmandements & lawes which I ſet before you to doe them. As if hee ſhould ſay, among the other giftes of God, wẽ haue his word which is an excellẽt treaſure. And it is not giuen vs onely to ỹ end we ſhould but heare it & allow it in our wordes: but to the ende we ſhould frame our liues thereafter. Seeing then ỹ God vouchſafeth to teach vs, & ſtoopeth ſo lowe as to do ỹ office of a ſcholemaiſter & teacher towards vs: are not we too vnthãkful if we hearkẽ not vnto him? And let vs marke wel, that wee bee none of his diſciples, vnleſſe wee obey his doctrine, and make it auaileable to vs. For otherwiſe it is but as if we heard a ſong ỹ delighted our eares, as is ſayd of it in Ezechiel. And ſurely it is a goodly worſhipping of God, for vs to ſay that he hath ſong well. Nay his will is that wee ſhould vtter another melodie correſponder to his voice which is, that wee ſhoulde ſhewe by our whole lyfe, that hee hath not taken paynes with vs in vaine, nor loſt his time, in declaring his will vnto vs.

And now furthermore Moſes addeth, keepe them: yea (ſayth hee,) and God will bleſſe you: and afterward hee addeth againe, that hee will loue vs. Surely by theſe wordes it may be deemed at the firſt ſight, ỹ God looketh whether men wil do their ductie or not, ere hee loue them. But I haue tolde yee already how the promiſes of the Lawe doe ſerue firſt of all to bring men to right humilitie, that they may know themſelues to bee as they bee, and quite rid and diſcharge themſelues of all ſelfetruſt. When that is done, then know they ỹ Gods calling of them is with condition, that they ſhould ſerue him: and that if they inforce themſelues ſo to doe, they pleaſe him, ſo that alchough their doinges be vnperfect, yet will hee not faile to accept them, becauſe hee imputeth not the vices vnto them wherewith they bee interlaced. And moreouer wee may gather vpon theſe wordes of Moſes, that the ſeruice whereof hee ſpeaketh here, goeth not before Gods bleſſing and the fauor that hee promiſeth vs: for doe wee loue him before hee loued vs? Wee cannot make the holy Ghoſt a lyar which ſpeaketh by the mouth of Saint Iohn. It is not (ſayth hee) for that wee loued God firſt: but God vouchſafed to receiue vs into his fauor, at ſuch time as wee were his enemies. And all the ſcripture is full of this. Now then, ſeeing it is told vs here that God will loue his people, if they haue a care to keepe his commaundementes: let vs note that it is not meant, that men can preuent God and drawe him to them firſt of all: but that (as is declared vnto vs here) it is all one as if hee ſhould ſay, I haue loued you freely, and I will loue you ſtill, and yee ſhall feele my loue in ſuch wiſe, as yee may inioy it and poſſeſſe it for euer. But yet for all that, let vs beware that wee deceiue not our ſelues, as they doe which confeſſe that God loueth vs of his owne free goodneſſe, but yet we muſt ſecondly bee worthie of it. For wee muſt alwayes come backe againe to that which I haue touched already: namely that vnleſſe God beare with vs, and skowre away al the ſpottes that are in our workes, the thing that is ſpoken of here, ſhall neuer bee accompliſhed in vs: but contrariwiſe it ſhall alwayes turne vs to ſome greater ſhame, to ſhewe vs, Go to, behold, your God hath abaced himſelfe ſo much as to tell you that if yee ſerue him, hee will be fauorable and mercifull to you. For of whom is it long now, that you be vnhappie, that hee curſeth you, that he refuſeth you, and that he perſecuteth you? commeth it not of your owne fault? yes: You your ſelues then, are to be blamed for this, that you be not beloued of your God. It ſhould (ſay I) be layde to our reproche, if God pardoned not the faultes that are in our workes. So then let vs mark that his loue is alwayes free in our workes, howbeit that hee will not bee mocked, nor haue his goodneſſe abuſed, nor abide that men ſhould take libertie to doe euill when they ſee him ſo gentle and freehearted towardes them: but contrariwiſe will haue vs to bee anſwerable againe on our ſide, ſo as we giue not deafe eare to him when hee ſpeaketh to vs: but that when he hath bin ſo gratious to vs as to declare his will vnto vs, we alſo ſhould ſhew that his ſo doing is not in vaine, & ỹ he is not diſappointed of his purpoſe. But what? We ſee how ſtubborne men are for all that: and whatſoeuer God tel them or ſhew thẽ, although they haue their eares beaten dayly w such warninges, yet notwithſtanding they continue ſtil lyke themſelues in their wilfulneſſe. Beholde, God promiſeth to bleſſe vs, ſo wee ſerue him. Now there is no man but hee woulde faine proſper. We could well finde in our heartes that God ſhould ſted all our neceſſities, and that hee ſhould giue vs meate and drinke: we could finde in our heartes to be cloathed at his coſt. But in ỹ meane while, who is he that bethinketh himſelfe thus: this is ỹ meane whereby I muſt inioy Gods bleſſing? Nay we drawe cleane backe, and it ſhould ſeeme that our whole ſeeking is to bereaue our ſelues therof, and to cut off God by ỹ way, or rather ſo to ſtoppe the entries & iſſewes of his grace, as it may neuer come at vs. Behold, God wil haue vs firſt of al to liue vprightly, faithfully & in his feare: & thereupon hee promiſeth to bleſſe vs. On the contrary part, men giue thẽſelues to filching, ſtealing, robbing, & crueltie, ſeeking by all meanes to pick out one anothers eys. There is no mention of the feare of God: to be ſhort, they would ỹ all might goe to hauocke. In ſo doing we renounce Gods bleſſing, ſo farre as in vs lyeth, and it ſeemeth to vs ỹ we cannot take a better way to proſper, than by ſeruing the diuell. Wherin it appeareth in how curſed plight we be. And whence ſpringeth it, but of that we giue no credit to Gods promiſes? For if we beleued God to be ſoothfaſt in good earneſt: ſurely we would be rauiſhed at this ſaying of his, I will make you to proſper. But foraſmuch as our vanities doe carry vs headlong the contrary way: it maketh vs to imagin that we win more by doing euill, than by ſeruing God. Neuertheleſſe this vnbeleefe of ours ſhal be right deerely paied for, ſpeacially when it is matched with ſuch blaſphemie, and wee doe our God ſo much wrong as not to beleeue his word: & moreouer, when as in ſtead of acknowledging him to be the Author of all goodneſſe, and comming to drawe of the fulneſſe of his grace, we doe nothing elſe but make our ſelues ſtrangers to him. Seeing then that we fall to prouoking of him ſo by all meanes: what remaineth for vs, but to bebereft of his bleſſings, yea and that he, as though he were our enemy, purſue vs euen to the vttermoſt? But truly a man may ſtill perceiue an ineſtimable goodneſſe, in ỹ he ceaſeth not to doe vs good, when hee is ſo prouoked by vs, & that wee ceaſe not to kindle ỹ fire of his wrath: but yet in the end we ſhall finde that this doctrine was not in vaine. It is true that a man ſhall not alwayes perceiue the thing that Moſes ſayth here: that is to wit, that God proſpereth them that ſerue him. For yee ſhal ſee ỹ ſuch as are deſirous to doe beſt, and imploy thẽſelues ſelues in the trueth, are miſerable folkes, afflicted diuers wayes at Gods hand, and haue not halfe their fil wherwith to ſuſteine them. Again, they ſhall be torméted with diſeaſes, or elſe they ſhall haue many reproches & iniuries wrought them in this world, & (to be ſhort) they ſhall be in continual languiſhing. On the contrarie part, ye ſhall ſee the wicked proſper: ye ſhall ſee them in credit and eſtimation: they ſhall cram themſelues with all exceſſe: and they ſhall haue ſuch abundance, as may make euen their heires to burſt. Theſe thinges are to be ſeene. Howbeit we must note, that when the good are ſo afflicted, it is firſt becauſe they haue not yet ſerued God as they ought to doe. But why doth God ſcourge them, more than the wicked which ruſh out into all naughtineſſe? it is becauſe he intendeth to chaſtice thé fatherly. To ŷ end that their ſoules may be ſaued, he chaſtiſeth them in their bodies. Againe, in ſending afflictiõs, Gods intent is not alwayes to puniſh men according to their miſdeedes: but alſo to try their patiéce, and to withdrawe them from the world, to the intent they ſhould not be too much intangled in it: and his will is to humble them, that they may know théſelues as they be, & be ſory for it. So then foraſmuch as God hath many cauſes to afflict ŷ faithfull: he will not haue vs to make one egall rule of it, & to ſay that he puniſheth them according to their miſdeedes. But whereforeſoeuer he doe it, let vs note that if God ſhould vtterly deſtroy thé he had iuſt cauſe ſo to doe, & hee ſhould doe thé no wrong. Neuertheleſſe we muſt haue an eye to that which Saint Paul ſayth in the eight to the Romans, and be contented with it: namely ŷ all thinges turne to the welfare of them that loue God, ſo as they ſerue not to turne them aſide, or to pluck them away from their ſaluation, but rather be as helpes to further it. Marke ŷ for one poynt. And yet notwithſtanding it is euidently ſeene, that Gods grace faileth thé not in the afflictions and miſeries which they indure. True it is that they finde théſelues in paine, & the things are harde and grieuous for them to beare: but yet there is alwayes ſomewhat to ſweeten them, they haue ſtill ſome cõfort at Gods hand, which ſerueth to make them vnderſtand ŷ hee bleſſeth and proſpereth them. If he ſhould giue them no more but one bit of bread: yet haue they ſuch an inward ioy, as they can better thanke God for it, than ŷ wicked can doe [for great abundance,] who fret themſelues inwardly, inſomuch that although they labor to bring théſelues a ſleepe that they might not haue any remorſe of conſciéce to trouble them, & ſtriue euen againſt nature, that they might be as it were ſenſeleſſe: Yet doeth not GOD let them ſo reſt, that they can be ſo mery at the heart euen with their abũdance, as the ſilie faithful ones are with their pouertie, who holde themſelues contented from morrowe to morrowe, waiting to be fed at Gods hand, & referring themſelues wholy vnto him, & calling vppon him. And againe, although they haue not all that they would wiſh: yet thinke thy thus ẅ themſelues, well, yet doth not my God ceaſe to watch ouer me, & therfore I betake me to his prouidence, and reſt my ſelfe vppon him. Thus yee ſee howe the faithfull ceaſe not to bee bleſſed of God, though the world ſee not Gods benefites ſo apparantly in them.

1. Cor. 5. 5.

Rom. 8. 26.

But let vs come now to the vnbeleuers. It is true that God ſheddeth out his temporall benefites vpon them, ſo as they be healthie, & haue aboundance of goods, and ſo forth: but yet ſhall all theſe thinges be turned into a curſe to them: If a man demaund whether the hauing of bodily health, & alſo wherewith to finde a mans ſelfe, be not the bleſſinges of God: yes verily be they. But yet muſt wee note that as in reſpecte of the faithleſſe, & of the deſpiſers of God, they turne to their harme, becauſe they be foule & vnclean, & doe defile Gods benefites with their handling of them. Needes muſt it bee then that the order of nature is turned vpſide downe in this behalfe. For inaſmuch as the wicked & the vnbeleeuers are full of filth & vncleanneſſe: they can not touch any of Gods benefites, but they muſt needes beray them and marre them. And therefore all muſt needes turne to their condemnation. Againe, we ſee how the world goeth. Haue theeues (I meane ſuch as are giué to deceite & fleecing) haue they gathered much together? They haue tormented themſelues all the time of their lyfe: & what ioy haue they had of them? God taketh vengeance on them: for they be inflamed ẅ ſuch greedineſſe of them, as they be neuer in quiet: & beſides ŷ, they cannot doe good ẅ their euilgotten goods. But in the end, doe they once dye? Then goes all to hauock againe. For the worlde ſees how the diuell hath libertie to ouerthrowe, euen ſuch as a man would haue thought to haue bin well grounded, & that they ſhold neuer haue decayed to the worldes end. A man would wonder to ſee how they be deſtroyed in ŷ turning of a hand. Yea and moreouer, the goods which they haue raked together for their children, become as halters to hang them withall, ſo as they become miſerable euen in the ſight of the world, & men behold the ſignes of Gods wrath & vengeance in thé, whereby it is well knowen that he neuer leaueth men vnpuniſhed for the contépt & wrong which they doe to his maieſtie, in ruſhing foorth into all diſorder. inſomuch ŷ if hee puniſh not the fathers themſelues, he layeth the execution of it vpon their children, how long ſoeuer he make delay. So then let vs marke that it is not without cauſe that God telleth vs hee will bleſſe ſuch as ſerue him, yea euen to the worldward. And that is ŷ cauſe why Saint Paul ſaith, that the feare of God hath promiſes, not onely of ŷ euerlaſting life, but alſo of this earthly life: ſo as if we liue in the feare of God, wee ſhall not onely be ſure of the inheritance which hee hath prepared for vs aboue: but alſo, ŷ euen as long as we liue in this world he will guide vs and keep vs vnder his protection, & not ſuffer vs to want any thing whereof hee knoweth vs to haue neede. Trueth it is that God wil alwayes be our karuer, becauſe he knoweth we bee too much giuen to theſe earthly thinges, from the which he intendeth to pull vs away, to the ende we ſhould haue the better skill to lift vp our heades to heauen, and to seeke after the goods that are prepared for vs there. Therfore whē God restreineth his benefites as we see he doth, that is to say, when he giueth vs them in smal & slender portion: it is to the intent we should not be hindred to keepe on our way stil in going right foorth vnto him. Thus ye see what we haue to marke in this text. And therfore if we serue our God, let vs not dout but he wil blesse vs euen to the worldwarde, and make vs to prosper better than ẏ wicked, yea and although we see them puffed vp with pride, although we see thē tryumph in pomp & brauery, & although we see thē swimming in their pleasures: let vs tary patiently a litle while, & we shal find ẏ God dalied not ẇ vs, whē he promised his blessing to such as ar willing to serue & loue him.

And specially let vs marke well howe he telleth vs here expressly, that he will blesse vs in our issue, and in the increase of our Cattell. I pray you, if the fauor which God sheweth vs do extend euen to the brute beastes, so as the marke of his fatherly good will towardes vs shall bee printed in them: what wil he doe to our selues & to our childrē, and to the things ẏ touch vs much neerer? For in deed me must make this cōparison of our bodies with our soules. If God haue a care to feede these wretched carkesses heere: what will hee doe for vs when we be restored into his glorie? If he haue a care of our mortall bodies: what will he haue of our soules, which are fashioned after his owne image? But let vs returne to the present matter. If God voutsafe to haue care of our cattell, as of our Oxen, our Asses, and our sheepe for our sakes: what care will hee haue of our persons? What care will he haue of our children, which are heires of the promised saluation, and are adopted to belong to his couenant, seeing it pleaseth him to choose and adopt vs to be his people? For hee doth not onely say, come vnto me: but also I will be the God of thy children after thee vnto a thowsand generations. But what? we be worthie to be left destitute of al Gods promises: and it were much to, if we could by that meane bee brought to right repentance. Let vs see if Gods blessing be to be found among vs nowadayes as it is promised. In deede it is to bee marueled (as I haue declared alreadie) that God is so patient towardes vs. For are we woorthie to be maintained here one minute of an houre, considering the outrageous offences which we commit dayly against him? No: and yet notwithstanding, although he spare vs, although he tarie for vs, and although he scourge vs not as we haue deserued: yet neuertheleſſe, we see how we doe partly languishe. Some decay and consume thēselues by little & little: some perish vtterly out of hand: & other some pine away as if they were almost dead of cold, as men terme it. And what is ẏ cause hereof but our driuing away of Gods grace & blessing? Again we need not to go to our Oxen, our horses and our sheep to weet whether God ẇdraw his hand & grace frō vs or no: Let vs but looke vpō our children in what plight they be. Gods receiuing of their fathers into his fauor, ought to bee as a lookingglasse of his goodnesse towards thē: but yet ought it to be much better knowē in the children, so as it might be sayd, Lo here a blessed seede. For Gods voutsafing to take ẏ fathers vnto him, was of purpose to vtter his mercie yet more in their childrē. But cōtrariwise, let a man looke vpon their children, & he shall be driuē to conclude, ẏ we be as good as banished frō Gods blessing, & from all ẏ prosperitie which he promised to his people. And no maruel though it be so: for ẏ world seeth wherat ẏ fathers ame. Their intent is not to edify thē in the feare of God: for it should seeme that they be loth ẏ their childrē should shame them by becomming honester mē than they. And to say ẏ trueth, they bring thē vp in all lewdnesse: and is it not meete then ẏ God should shew himself a iudge? Where are ẏ fathers nowadayes, ẏ make ẏ feare of God their mark to ame at in teaching their children? In deede they be willing enough to haue their childrē aduaunced to ẏ worldward, & to lay for thē ẏ they may want no wealth: but in the meane while, as for to haue an eye vnto God, to say, I will dedicate my childrē vnto him, I will haue them so brought vp as he may be rightly honored by them: it is the furthest end of all their thought. Needes therefore must we be bereft of the benefites that are promised here, and banished from them.

Furthermore, whensoeuer it is told vs ẏ our Lord prouoketh vs to returne vnto him: let vs vnderstād ẏ seeing he loued vs freely when wee were yet his enemies: it must needes be ẏ he will much rather loue vs now ẏ he is reconciled vnto vs. Yea, but yet must ẏ be in respect of our Lorde Iesus Christ, & for his sake. We must not seeke any worthinesse out of ẏ person of him ẏ is called Gods welbeloued son: for it is only he ẏ hath satisfied ẏ paimēt of all our dets, which thing it lay not in any creature to do. Yet notwithstādingilet vs assure our selues ẏ it behoueth vs to indeuer to doe wel, knowing ẏ God wil not haue vs to abuse his mercie. For seeing he hath adopted vs to be his childrē: let vs yeeld him ẏ honor ẏ is due to our father. And besides ẏ, although our workes be vnperfect, and wee doe but offer him thinges which are not worth ẏ accepting at his hād: yet doth not he cease to lyke wel of vs in ẏ thinges ẏ we do to serue & honor him ẇall, & we shall not be disappointed of ẏ benefits ẏ he hath promised vs. But yet must we impute all to his mercie, and we must liue in such sort in this world, as we may be out of doubt ẏ he wil haue regard to maintein vs euē in this present lyfe, & to giue vs whatsoeuer he knoweth to be meet for vs. Therefore let ẏ serue to make vs to finde such tast in his goodnesse, as it may tolle vs on stil further & further, so as we may be able to goe through ẇ a cheareful heart, to the spirituall blessednesse that taryeth for vs aboue, whereof we haue but onely a taste as now by faith and hope.

Nowe let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faults, praying him to make vs so to feele them, as we may learne to be sory for them better than wee haue beene, and to turne wholy vnto him, and to reforme our whole lyfe after such a sorte, as wee may seeke nothing but to giue ouer ouer our ſelues all wholy vnto him, and to frame our ſelues to his holy will as he hath declared it in his worde. And ſo let vs all ſay, Almightie God heauenly father, &c.

On Munday the twelfth of Auguſt. 1555.

The Lv. Sermon, which is the fift vpon the ſeuenth Chapter.

16 Thou ſhalt conſume all the nations which the Lorde thy God giueth thee: Thine eye ſhall not pardon them: neither ſhalt thou ſerue their Gods: for that wilbe thy decay.

17 If thou ſay in thine hart, theſe nations are moe in number than I, how may I driue them out?

18 Be not afraide of them: but remember what the Lorde thy God did to Pharao, and to all the Egyptians.

19 That is to wit, the great tryals which thine eyes haue ſeene, and the ſignes and wonders, and the ſtrong hand and ſtretched out arme, wherewith the Lorde thy God brought thee out. So will the Lord thy God doe to all the nations of whoſe face thou art afraid.

Matt. 5.44. 45.

FOraſmuch as we bee exhorted to become lyke God in gentleneſſe & mildneſſe, and that he wil haue his children knowen thereby in this world: it ſhould ſeeme ẏ the thing which Moſes ſayth here, is not agreeable thereunto. For euen the heathen could well skill to ſay, that there is nothing wherein men reſemble God more, thã in gentlenes and louingkindnes, when they giue themſelues to doe good. But in this place heere is nothing but rigor. God will haue them to kill all without ſparing of any thing: it ſeemeth then ẏ there is ſome contrarietie in this matter. No: but (as I haue declared heretofore) although God execute his iudgements, and appoint men to be the doers thereof: Yet is that no let, but that we may in the meane while bee kindehearted in our ſelues, and haue pitie and compaſſion euen vppon them that periſh. Nowe on the one ſide, if God inioyne a thing to be done: it muſt be done without gaineſaying. And yet in the meane while we muſt followe the rule that is giuen vs generally: namely to loue our neighbors though they be not worthie of it, yea euen ſuch as hate vs, and to indeuour to doe them good, & to ouercome them by doing good for euill. But this will be the better vnderſtoode, if wee take the matter by partes.

Deut. 6, 1. 2.

First we muſt cal to minde here what hath bin declared vpon the ſixth chapter, that is to wit, that it is not for vs to meaſure Gods iudgemẽts after our fancie, for we muſt needes graunt, that ſometimes they bee as a bottomleſſe pit: but yet for all that, they ceaſe not to bee rightfull ſtill. Then ſhal we not always ſee the reaſon of Gods doinges: but yet muſt we lyke well of them without gainſaying. For it is good reaſon that all creatures ſhould ſtoope to him, and that he ſhould not be bound to yeeld any account. And therefore when the thing that God commaundeth vs ſeemeth ſtraunge: let vs hold our mindes in awe and ſubiection, and yeelde God ſo much honor, as to confeſſe that he is righteous & iuſt though we perceiue it not. Let that ſerue for one point.

Againe when we ſee him vtter ſuch rigor towardes others, as to vs may ſeeme exceſſiue: therein let vs acknowledge his goodneſſe and mercie towardes vs: for hee might doe the lyke to vs. Of what or of whom is it long that wee periſh not, as well as they vpon whome God powreth out the extremitie of his rigor? It is certeine that our ſinnes haue well deſerued that as much ſhould befall vs: but God beareth with vs of his infinite goodneſſe. Therefore let vs ſtand in awe. For though God vſe goodneſſe and patience towardes vs as now: yet hath not he forgotten our faultes, except wee our ſelues doe beare them in minde. And therefore let vs vnderſtand ẏ God might iuſtly deſtroy vs, and thereupon let vs cal our ſelues home to him, and preuent the thing ẏ is to be feared, ẏ is to wit, leaſt he ſhould ſtretch forth his arme to cõfounde vs. So then, the executions of Gods iudgements ought to be as warninges vnto vs, to enter into the knowledge of our ſinnes, ẏ when we haue giuen God thankes for bearing with vs, wee may learne to returne home to him againe.

But yet notwithſtanding, when we haue well conſidered all thinges: [wee ſhall finde that] it was not without cauſe that God cõmanded his people to roote out all the folk that dwelt in the land of Chanaan. For he had already born with them a long time, as hath bin declared. Shall we thinke it ſtrange, ẏ after God had taryed foure hundred yeeres for men ẏ were deſpiſers of his maieſtie, & giuen to all naughtineſſe: he ſhould in the end haue no more pitie vpõ them, but wil them to be vtterly wiped out of the world? But ſuch were all thoſe nations. For although they were malicious and froward already in the time of Abraham, and it was apparant that the land was infected with their filthineſſe: yet did God auow, that their wickedneſſe was not yet come to the full grouth. And therefore hee delayed his wrath, not for the ſpace of halfe a ſcore yeeres only, but full foure hundred yeeres together. He let them alone in eaſe and reſt: and they waxed ſtil woorſe and worſe, and hardened more and more. It ſeemeth that Gods goodneſſe gaue the more libertie to doe euill. Therefore it was high time for God to put forth his mighty hand then or neuer to deſtroy them, ſeeing hee found them ſo farre paſt grace. And in deed, we can well skil to deſire God to puniſh the wicked, and it greeueth vs that he ſhould beare with thē, & if he make delay, we thinke hee is too patient. Againe, if hee vſe rigor after his long tariance: thē we cry out that he is too ſeuere, and we ask if he could not deale otherwiſe thā ſo. To be plain, there is no meaſure in vs. For if God ſatiſfy not our deſires, we fal to cōplayning, one while of his ouergreat gentleneſſe, & another while of his ouergreat ſeueritie. And if he execute not ſuch vengeance at ỹ firſt daſh as we would wiſhe, we thinke he is a ſleepe, & that hee diſſembleth too much. And dayly we here ſuch murmuringes as theſe: What meanes he by this? Why doth hee forbeare ſo long? Againe on the otherſide, if God come with his power to puniſh men according to their deſeruing: then, alas howe comes it to paſſe ỹ God (who reporteth himſelfe to be ſo patient & pitifull,) doth now ſhewe himſelfe ſo rigorous againſt vs? Yea, but we conſider not that while our ſinnes prouoke his wrath, & while we Rom. 2. 5. ſtack vp wood to kindle the fire of it, he allureth vs to repentance by gentleneſſe. For he giueth vs leaſure to return vnto him, to the end we ſhould aske him forgiuenes. And if we doe not ſo, muſt he not then ſhew himſelf to be our iudge? In like taking were the people of whom Moſes maketh mentiō here. For Gods intent was not to puniſh thē wout iuſt cauſe: ſentence was giuē vppon thē aforehand in ỹ time of Abrahā. And now there are foure hundred yeeres runne out ſince: and is not ỹ a terme long enough? did theſe nations amend of all that time? Nay, contrariwiſe they ceſed not to giue thēſelues ouerto al naughtines, & becauſe they were not corrected, they became the worſe & ỹ more ſtubborne, & their malaperneſſe increaſed more & more. Now thē God executeth ỹ ſentence which he had giuen vpon thē foure hundered yeere before: for hee knoweth ỹ they be paſt remedie. And therefore let vs learn to glorify him in his iudgements, & whereas we ſee ỹ reaſon of thē here, let vs not ceaſe to conclude wout diſputing (yea euē when we perceiue Pſal. 111. 7. not ỹ reaſon of thē) ỹ he is iuſt & righteous, and ỹ he weieth his workes in ſuch balance, as there is no fault to bee found in them, and that if wee chaunce to checke againſt them, we ſhalbe confounded in our blaſphemie. And ſo ye ſee what we haue to remember.

Againe, whē God liſteth to execute his rigor: let not vs allege his mercie to him. True it is ỹ in reſorting vnto him we muſt alwayes beſeech him to voutſafe to receiue vs to mercie, & al our prayers muſt begin & end wth this confeſſion, ỹ if God vſed not his goodneſſe wee ſhoulde be vndone, & there would be no more hope of ſaluation for vs: & therefore it ſtandeth vs in hand to flee for refuge to Gods meere mercie. But the thing ỹ I ſpeake of as now, is ỹ we muſt not reply againſt God when he liſteth to deale rigorouſly wth vs: for there is none of vs al, but he could finde in his heart to make God to ſtoope to his lure. Let vs beware of ſuch preſumptuouſneſſe, & rather doe him the honor to ſay ỹ his iuſtice is vnblameable in all points & all reſpectes. And foraſmuch as it is ſo: we haue to note, ỹ whenſoeuer God puniſheth ỹ wicked, it is not enough for vs to confeſſe ỹ he doth it iuſtly: but alſo if he commaūd vs to execute his iudgemēts, wee muſt doe it, & we muſt ſhut our eyes at all thinges. For as for him ỹ will be more pitiful thā God: although he be cōmended of men, & that his doing haue ſome ſhewe of vertue: Yet doth he moſt leawdly blaſpheme him which is ỹ fountaine of all goodneſſe. The man ỹ pretendeth to be more mercifull than God: is worſe than the diuell. For why? What are we? Let vs make compariſon betweeu God & vs. Behold, God will haue vs to execute rigor: & we will needes call him back to mercie: now is not that a ſpiting of him, as though wee would ſpit in his face if we could? Yes: for there is nothing more peculiar to him than his goodneſſe. Let vs take away his goodneſſe from him, & he is no longer God. Shal we imagine God to be but ſome dead thing? Nay, when we ſpeake of God, we muſt vnderſtād ỹ al goodneſſe is in him, & that we haue none at al in vs, but by ſmal peeces, ſuch as it pleaſeth him to beſtowe vppon vs. Now then, if a man wil needes ſay, I wil vſe mercie, when God forbiddeth him: what a preſumptuouſneſſe is ỹ? So then, let vs marke well in this text, that it is not enough for vs to confeſſe that God doth iuſtly puniſh whom he liſteth, but alſo ỹ if he liſt to giue vs the charge & cōmiſſion to execute his iudgements, we muſt goe through wth it wout ſkanning or gainſaying. And therefore in matters of Iuſtice, men muſt forbeare their own opinions & wils, & not be ſo ouerweening, as to take leaue to do what they think good, or to turn aſide one way or other: but haue a regard to followe the rule that our Lord giueth them, aſſuring themſelues that the authoritie of Iuſtice is tyed to the thing which he ſheweth, and that his putting of them in that commiſſion, is to the intent they ſhould repreſſe & puniſh euil doers, and maintaine & defend good folke. Seeing it is ſo: it is meete ỹ ỹ vſe therof ſhould be thereafter.

Moreouer, as cōcerning theſe nations whom Moſes ſpeaketh of: Let vs marke that beſides the other crimes & enormities which they had cōmitted: there was alſo a contempt of God, which was vtterly intollerable. In deede, wee will make no great reckoning of that: but yet doth GOD make reckoning of it, and hee paſſeth not what we haue imagined: for all our imaginations are corrupted. Whē God doth once ſet vp his iudgment ſeate: we may well put forth our opinion, but ỹ thing which God hath ordeyned muſt ſtād, & not be repealed. Now thē let vs note, ỹ whenſoeuer Gods honor is lightly eſtemed, then muſt rigor be vſed rather thā mercie in ỹ behalf. And we muſt call to minde ỹ example ỹ is rehearſed in ỹ firſt booke of kinges: namely of Achab who would needs ſhewe mercy to Benhadad king of Syria. 1. Kin. 20. 33

Syria. And there is expreſly this ſaying, that whē Benhadad came to him to ſew for mercie, al that euer he ſaid vnto him was no more but this, that the kings of Iſrael were merciſull and kind hearted. And behold, that goodly vertue of clemencie ouercame his heart: by meanes wherof wheras God commaunded him to execute rigour, he ſhewed mercie. But it happened vnto him as he had deſerued. And why? For the Syrians had cōmitted horrible blaſphemie againſt God & ſcorned him, ſaying: He is ỹ God of ỹ mountains, but if we come into ỹ plain grounds, we ſhal haue victorie, he can do nothing there. Thus were idols ſet vp in Gods place. And therefore it was ſaide to Achab, that the king of Syria ſhould bee vanquiſhed & rooted out. Now it came to paſſe that his aray was put to flight: but yet they founde a ſhift by & by to make peace. And why? For this goodly commendation liked Achabs eares well, when they called him a merciſull Prince. By meanes wherof he was dandled a ſleepe, ſo as he made ſale of the blaſphemie ỹ was committed againſt God, as it is a common matter with vs to bee pitifull in caſes where God is offended. For this cauſe a Prophet was ſent vnto him, bringing his badge with him, that is to wit, that he had bin woūded by the commandement of God: and the firſt man, (who had refuſed to do it,) was deuoured of a Lion out of hand. Yet notwithſtāding the Prophet came to Achab wounded and diſfigured and ſaid vnto him: I tooke a man to keepe, and he that deliuered him to mee bad mee I ſhould not let him goe vpon paine of my life. Neuerthelеſſe while I turned mee too & fro, he ſcaped from me. And thou muſt anſwere him vpon thy life, quoth Achab. Then anſwered the Prophet vnto Achab: it is thy ſelfe that this toucheth. This meſſage is ſent to thee of God, to ſhewe thee that for as much as thou haſt ſpared the king of Syria, whom God had put into thy hand to be reuenged of him for the outrage done to his Maieſtie: thou muſt anſwere for him lyfe for life, and thy people with thee. So then we ſee that if Gods honor be impeached, it is not for vs to let things ſlip, but we muſt vnderſtand that if wee make light of ſuch a crime, God will ſurely make the vengeance to light vpon our ſelues. To be ſhort, let vs marke well, that if ſuch as haue commiſſion to puniſh offenders doe it not: there will bee no excuſe for them. For ỹ which is written will not be repealed for mens pleaſures: that is to wit, that he which iuſtifieth or acquitteth ỹ guiltie perſon, is as abhominable before God, as he that condemneth the innocent. If a poore innocent bee oppreſſed, men can skill to ſay, there is no reaſon in it, and that the matter muſt come to account before God. And here God addeth the ſecond part, that is to wit, that if an offender be quit, and Iuſtice and equitie ſo turned vpſide downe: it muſt come to account as well as the other. Yee ſee then howe it is a leſſon which all thoſe ought to beare in minde, whom God hath commanded to puniſh mens offences: that they muſt bee well ware to vſe one rule and one egall meaſure. For if a man puniſh one offender and pardon another, and thinke to goe halfe quit for it before GOD: it is cleane contrarie. And for proofe thereof, let vs conſider the example that is ſet downe in Hoſeas concerning king Iehu. God commaunded him to deſtroy all Idolaters: he did it partly but not altogither: for hee deſtroyed thoſe whom he ſtoode in feare of, and he did it for his owne vaine glory and ſuertie. God did him the honour to make him king, & he conſidered it not. But when he came once to ỹ kingdome, O he muſt maintaine himſelfe in it. And what did he? He executed rigor ynough vppon thoſe whom he liſted, and ſpecially vpon ſuch as he wiſt might doe him harme: but when he had ſo begun, he let the reſt go vnpuniſhed, he cared not what came of it, ſo he might reigne peaceably. Now at the firſt ſight a man might well ſay it was a vertue worthie of commendation, that he puniſhed thoſe whom God had commanded him. Verily and ſo was it, if he had held on that trade ſtill. But for as much as he deſtroyed one ſort and ſpared another ſort: it is ſaid that God will puniſh the māſlaughter that Iehu had committed. And how may that be? Is it manſlaughter to haue executed the cōmandement of God? Yea, after the maner that he went to worke. He is ſaid to bee a manſlear, bicauſe he had not an eye to the thing that God commanded him. For he ſhould haue gone through as he began. But he ſtayed in the middes of his way. For as for thoſe whom he puniſhed, he puniſhed thē in reſpect of his owne peculiar profit. He had no regard of Gods honour, ſo the Crowne of the kingdome continued with him. Therefore is he iuſtly accoūted for a manſlear and not a iudge. And therefore let vs beware that we take not more libertie than God giueth vs. For he can well skill to moderate his own doings, though we take not vpon vs to be more pitifull than he. And if wee make our hand of his honor, we muſt pay dearely for it when we come to our reckening before him. But if this ſeeme ſtraunge vnto vs: let vs go a litle by degrees, & ſee if nature might not be a ſchoolemy ſtreſſe good enough for vs, if we were not blinded by our wicked affectiōs. If a mā haue children, he knoweth well ynough that it is his duetie to teach them, and to chaſtiſe them whē they doe amiſſe. For if he beare with his childrē, and dare not touch them, but cockereth them, and in the meane while they bee of euill nature: may it not bee ſaide that he is worthie that his children ſhould picke out his eyes, and pluck his noſe from his face? And on the contrarie part, if children were teachable & meeke of themſelues: it were not meete that they ſhould bee touched. But when a father perceiues his children to bee curſt and vnruly: if he ſpare them then, men will ſay that he marreth them, and that he ſendeth them to the gallowes, and that he is the cauſe of their vndoing. Now let vs compare a father with a iudge. Whereas a father ought to chaſtiſe his children with roddes: a iudge hath an office that paſſeth yet further. Therefore he muſt haue an eye thereunto: and if he doe not, he is worthy to haue his eyes put out with the miſchiefe, as Moſes ſpeaketh here of theſe people, ſaying: They ſhall be as thornes to prick thee on all ſides, and to put out thine eyes: they shall be as waspes to sting thee in such sort as ỹ shalt not know which way to turne thee. Lo what reward ỹ Israelites had for their retchlesnesse in that they were not stout in putting the sentence in execution, which God had vttered with his own mouth. But howsoeuer the case stoode with them: let vs learne still to be pitifull. For the rigour that is spoken of here, must not make vs to forget how God com-

Matt.5.44. mandeth vs to loue euen our enemies, & them that persecute vs, and to indeuour to doe them good to the vttermost of our power, that we may bring them into the right way of saluation. Then must we needes haue that. Yea and euen when a Iudge vseth rigour, his heart must mourne and lament, to see a creature that is made after the image of God so dealt withall: but yet must he go on still, and execute the office which GOD hath committed vnto him. These two thinges then are not vnmatchable: that is to wit, that gentlenesse should bee vsed in the executing of Iustice, so as our wicked moode should not carie vs away, but that we should alwayes hold vs still to this point, of louing euen those that shall haue done vs the worst they could. Thus ye see howe we ought to put this doctrine in vre. Gods intent is not to stirre vp his people to crueltie, his meaning is not to bereaue them vtterly of all compassion: and yet notwithstanding he will haue misdeedes to be punished.

And furthermore as touching the lande of Chanaan which hee had purposely appointed to his honour: hee woulde not haue it any longer so defyled with such infections. For the Nations that had dwelled therein before, had as it were defiled the land. Nowe Gods intent is to stablish his kingdome there, he will bee worshipped vncorruptly there: and therefore all abhominations must be rid away. For seeing that God will haue his righteousnesse put in vre through the whole world: whensoeuer he is knowen in any place, so as his trueth is there preached, and he hath set his Church in some good order and state: men must looke well about them that no offences, or defylinges may raigne there. For wheresoeuer God is worshipped and serued: that place is as a temple dedicated to his Maiestie,
1.Cor.3. and Gods temple must be kept holy as it ought to bee. Then is it the greatest and intollerablest treacherie to Godward that can bee, when euill doings and crimes are fostered in his Churche. Therefore it is not said without cause, Thine eye shall not pardon any of all these Nations, they must bee consumed vtterly. And why? first the wickednesse that was among them was ouergreat, they were despisers of God, and therefore he was faine to be reuenged of them in the end. Againe, he hath an eye to the benefit and welfare of his Church, so as he woulde not haue his children intangled with such as might draw them to euill, & consequently to their ruine and destruction. God then wil haue his people rid of all stumbling blocks. Marke that for the second point. Moreouer for the third point, it was conuenient ỹ God should shewe himselfe a Iudge, to the intent that by beholding such vengeance, they might take warning to thinke thus with themselues: seeing that God hath done vs the honour to punish such as haue offended vs, to giue vs example by themilet vs beware ỹ wee fall not into the same offences: for then shall we be dubble to blame. Thus ye see how Gods committing of his vengeaunce vnto his owne people, to punish such as had bin giuen ouer to all naughtinesse, ought to serue all folkes for an example.

After he hath said so, he addeth now, Thou shalt not serue their Gods, for that would turne to thy decay. Deut.6.6.14 15. Although this saying haue bin set downe by Moses alreadie heretofore: yet is it not without cause ỹ he setteth it downe here againe. For we soone forget what God commandeth vs, if wee bee not quickened vp to put it in execution. We crie out dayly to haue iustice executed: but how do men discharge themselues therof? Let their eares be neuer so much beaten, it is to no purpose, they passe not much for it: but they be the more forgetfull from day to day. Therefore doeth Moses put them in minde of the things that he had told them before, to the intent that the people should in any wise refraine from seruing the idols of the heathen. And he addeth a threate, It would turne to thy decay. In deede the Hebrew word which he vseth is commonly taken for cordes or lines, but here by a similitude it is taken for snares or nets, and for ruine, decay, downfal, or stumbling. Then if thou fall into idolatrie: it will be a deadly fall to thee, saith he. Keepe thee from that. Thus we see that when God punisheth ỹ wicked, we must alwayes learne at their cost, to liue in his feare. For our condemning of other folkes wil not iustifie our selues, if we follow them or become like them: but rather they shalbe witnesses against vs to bereaue vs of al excuse. Therfore let vs thinke vpon that which is added here, that when God had commanded his people to destroy the idolaters: he addeth, beware ye meddle not ẅ their superstitions, for then shall ye bee ouerthrowen out of hand. Yea & we see also that God did not beare with the people of Israel any long time after they had offended. For the heathen might yet haue some excuse, bicause they had not had any teaching: but the Israelites sinned wilfully, & their dooing was a manifest rebellion, bicause they had bin sufficiently warned thereof before, specially for as much as God had done them so great honor, as to put the sword into their hand, as if he should say, Thou shalt punish the misdoings of others. Seeing then ỹ God had so honored that people: was it not an increasing of their euill much more, whē they happened to become like those whom they punished? Yes: for ỹ punishment which they had executed vpon others, serued to bereaue thē of al colour of ignorance, and to dubble their owne fault. For after as God honoreth men: they ought to take ỹ more heede to liue in all pureness before him. That is the cause thē why those two things are matched together.

And hereupon wee may gather, that all such as haue the executing of Iustice, must lay away their owne fleshly passions, and looke that they be quite and cleare from all desire of reuenge, hatred and rancor. And this must be regarded
